Last October the Senate passed 77–0 a comprehensive Veterans Education and Training bill, which included the provisions of 9 bills. In the form of a substitute amendment to the House-passed H.R. 11959, it is now pending in conference with the House.

The Senate version of this bill contains a much-needed 46 percent increase in G.I. bill rates, retroactive to last September, to restore comparability with Korean G.I. bill coverage. It also contains several new programs to make education available to those who need it most—the high school drop-outs. Drop-outs represent about 25 percent of all men separated from the service. Yet, sadly, less than one-tenth of them take advantage of their G.I. bill benefits.

Our society cannot afford to waste these resources, to "turn-off" again men who have been turned off once already. These new programs, drawn from three bills I introduced last summer, will help the veteran student who is in academic difficulty or who needs part-time work. It also is aimed at helping the serviceman who doesn't have either a marketable skill or a college degree.

The great need for these programs is made clear by recent studies of 109,000 army veterans discharged in 1968. They show that a veteran's likelihood of taking advantage of G.I. bill benefits is determined almost entirely by his pre-service educational achievement rather than by his aptitude. For example, three times more veterans with some prior college experience returned to school than those who hadn't gone to college. Yet both groups were found to be equally intelligent.

Similarly, high school drop-outs are four times less likely to take any further education or training than men who have had two or three years of college. Men of average intelligence who complete high school are twice as likely to further their education as high school drop-outs with the same aptitude. These participation rates, which seem virtually inverse to need, are what Title 2 of the Senate bill seeks to correct.

This bill was the subject of a conference with the House on February 5. At the direction of the conferees, the two committee staffs have worked together intensively to boil down and reconcile the differences, and find common ground to resolve disputed statistics. They have been quite successful in laying valuable groundwork for agreement. Mr. Teague and his most able and experienced Committee staff director, Oliver Meadows, have been most cooperative, and I can tell you that the conference is now scheduled to reconvene on March 10. I shall continue to do all in my power to see that a fair and equitable bill is agreed to and sent to the President as quickly as possible.

Next in the Subcommittee's activities were our oversight hearings into the quality and quantity of medical and hospital care in VA facilities. I announced the hearings on Veterans Day as the most meaningful tribute I could pay to the war dead and the war maimed.

That very same day, appropriately enough, the Senate considered the VA fiscal year 1970 appropriation. I offered an amendment to restore the full amount cut by the administration from President Johnson's budget. The House had already restored one-half. I withdrew that amendment only after Senator Pastore, chairman of the Independent Offices Appropriations Subcommittee, assured me he would sympathetically consider my recommendations after the hearings.

We then held six days of oversight hearings, which we completed in January. Testimony should be published in about a week and my specific recommendations will be forthcoming shortly. I intend to urge significantly more money not only in the 1970 VA supplemental appropriation, but also in the 1971 budget request.

The Subcommittee has received over 500 pages of testimony from some of the country's most outstanding medical experts in medical schools, hospitals, service organizations, the VA residents and interns, and from individual veterans themselves. They have given clear and convincing evidence that we are facing a crisis in VA medicine; that staffing ratios are at dangerously low levels, and that much needed renovations, equipment purchases and construction have been put off far too long.

All this is happening at a time of increasing strain on VA facilities because of the influx of wounded Vietnam veterans.

They are victims of what is probably our nation's most crippling war. At least 10 percent of the men surviving severe wounds in Vietnam would have died in earlier wars. We must ensure that the crisis medical attention they receive at the battlefield that enables them to survive is continued with the same urgency when they are transferred to VA hospitals for longer term care.

More money is an answer to many of the VA's problems. In a coordinated effort with "Tiger" Teague, who we all know is performing an outstanding service, as always, I plan to press for substantially more VA funding so Vietnam veterans will receive the high quality of care to which they are entitled. We will fight to see that all veterans of all wars receive the highest possible quality and quantity of care.

The VA's supplemental budget request has not yet been submitted to the Congress. Hence, final Congressional action is unlikely until late April. That means we may be dealing with only the last two or three months of this fiscal year. Thus, the amounts to be requested and ultimately expended will be only a portion of a full year's needs.

But it is urgent to add supplemental funds in a number of areas not only to ensure adequate continuation of vital FY 1970 programs, but to enable the VA to finance these programs at a supplemented level when it begins to operate under a FY 1971 continuing resolution. That will undoubtedly occur beginning July 1 prior to passage of the FY '71 appropriation. Otherwise, under the terms of the continuing resolution, the VA will be restricted to the FY '70 level, and needed expansions in care will be deferred still further. This underscores the need for immediate action on the supplemental appropriation before this fiscal year ends.

With this background, I will mention a few of the specific recommendations I am considering.

First, as is being illustrated by the state-by-state press releases of the House Veterans Affairs Committee, there are numerous VA hospital budgetary deficiencies, just in maintaining the level of FY '69 care. And that care, of course, now costs much more to deliver than it did a year ago. We thus must supplement the VA's budget to hold the line in the most critical areas. Some of the most glaring shortages are in the community nursing home care field, in the Vietnam veterans' dental care programs, and in hospital maintenance and essential equipment replacement costs.

Supplemental funds are also needed to open and fully operate as soon as possible most of the 61 specialized medical programs in VA hospitals which are not planned for activation in FY 1970 at all. Also, we will seek funds to permit understaffed spinal cord injury units to operate at the staffing ratios recommended by the VA's advisory group.

Also under consideration are additional supplemental funds for veterans' benefits personnel to help cut into mounting application backlogs across the country, backlogs that many of you who work in this field are well aware of. Finally, there will have to be supplemental funds added to meet the costs of G.I. bill legislation eventually passed by Congress.

Unfortunately, the VA FY '71 budget really offers no increased resources to meet the dimensions of the needs we have been uncovering. A great deal more money is needed to move the VA medical care staffing ratio to an adequate level, to construct new facilities and renovate the old, particularly to begin air conditioning the 33 VA hospitals in the hottest parts of the country.

I also will recommend substantial increases for funding the VA health personnel training and education program, and I shall seek to make that item a separate figure in the appropriation bill to permit and expanded, on-going effort. I also think the same separate appropriations treatment should be accorded the research budget, rather than lumping it with education and training in the medical care appropriation item.

But I do not think even substantial appropriations increases will make the VA hospital and medical care system what it really should be. I am convinced that much new legislative authority is needed for the VA health care program, and I would like to outline some of the legislation I hope to introduce in the next several weeks.

I believe several principles should guide the VA medical program in producing first quality care for our veterans.

First, the VA system must be viewed as part of a larger pattern of community medical care if it is to prosper as a modern, high-quality health system. Now, I am not suggesting diluting the VA system or its distinctive veterans orientation. But the VA cannot share in innovations and new techniques if it is not involved in planning the health activities of the communities where its facilities are located.

Time and again, our hearings have shown the VA health care crisis to be symptomatic of a massive nationwide medical care crisis. The VA's problems cannot be resolved in isolation. In virtually every community, there are shortages of doctors, nurses, allied health professionals, medical equipment, physical facilities, and outpatient care.

Thus, I will shortly introduce legislation to build upon the present VA relationship with regional medical programs and other community health planning efforts. The bill would require that both the VA and the Department of Defense be represented on the national and area-wide regional medical program advisory councils. I am also asking that they be represented on the state advisory groups of comprehensive health planning agencies and community mental health centers. This should increase coordination and promote an interchange of ideas to improve the VA's and the community's capacity to deliver quality medical care.

I will also introduce, with some modifications, an administration proposal to permit VA hospitals to participate more actively in regional medical programs. It will also authorize the VA to receive direct grants for multi-program projects, and to enter into subcontracts with regional medical grantees for coordinated improvements in VA programs, on heart, cancer or stroke.

Another principle of which I am convinced is that the VA system should be more fully responsive to the medical needs of all veterans and their families. The system is dedicated to them. If there is a lessening demand for hospital beds as the VA contends—although restrictive admission policies could very well be the cause of reduced inpatient levels—then we must change eligibility requirements if we don't want to dangerously weaken the whole system. I plan to introduce a number of bills to meet this crisis.

One is a "Family Bill" to provide full VA medical and hospital care for the dependents of totally and permanently disabled living veterans, as well as survivors receiving disability and indemnity compensation. Caring for the dependents of sick or deceased service-connected veterans surely should be a vital purpose of the VA.

Existing personnel capacities, especially at VA hospitals affiliated with medical schools, appear adequate for this job. And broadening the variety of cases to include children and women should help the VA recruit higher calibre medical personnel.

This "family" bill will also enable the VA to treat a veteran's family where that is necessary for the veteran's total care and rehabilitation. Two examples will illustrate my intention.

Eminent psychiatrists have pointed out that most patients with psychological disturbances cannot be properly treated apart from their family situation. But the law doesn't permit family treatment and so it is often bootlegged. I maintain that when the veteran's total care requires that his family be treated with him, he should be entitled to such total care for his condition through his family.

Similarly, total care of a physically disabled veteran may require that his family be fully oriented on the philosophy of his rehabilitation program. The VA should be able to bring key family members to the hospital for this orientation, as is done now on a limited basis at the blind centers, with non-appropriated funds.

This "family" bill also would provide specific authority for the VA to stress home care programs for any hospitalized veteran. Although a start has been made by the VA in home kidney dialysis, much more needs to be done, especially in the psychiatric field. Most medical experts agree that institutional care is the least desirable. Alternatives should be fully explored.

"Home care", employing mobile teams to train families and conduct post-hospital follow-up, can in many cases provide more compassionate, more effective and far more economical care.

In line with the idea of total care, I am considering another bill to amend present restrictions on care for a non-service-connected condition unrelated to the condition for which a veteran was hospitalized. Clearly, a physician cannot ethically assume responsibility for only a portion of his patient's health, and we should stop asking doctors to walk this impossible line. Instead, we should authorize necessary medical care for any illness of a hospitalized veteran.

Along these same lines, I am exploring expanding prehospital outpatient care for non-service-connected conditions to include reasonably necessary care to prevent hospitalization, as well as to prepare for it.

Another bill I am working on would insert into VA law a full definition of rehabilitative services.

It would stress the right of a severely disabled veteran to a comprehensive program aimed at restoring him to his family and community as a productive, self-respecting, and self-sustaining member of our society. The VA is hampered by many difficulties in this area, and new legal definitions will not resolve all of them. But at least the goal would be clearly and authoritatively established. Moreover, I plan other steps to implement it, such as fighting for necessary appropriations for staffing spinal cord injury units.

Another bill I plan to introduce would establish nursing home care as a clear part of hospital care, thereby permitting veterans to apply for direct admission to a VA nursing home without prior VA hospitalization. This bill would also raise the present statutory minimum of 4,000 VA nursing home beds to 6,000. There is an unmet demand for VA nursing home beds by World War I veterans which will expand as our World War II veterans grow older. We should consider converting hospital beds not being fully utilized into VA nursing home beds. Community nursing homes are already greatly in demand among the aging non-veteran.

Another bill I will shortly offer would deal with psychiatric disturbances, alcoholism and drug abuse among Vietnam veterans. These problems may prove to be enormous in the years ahead. I propose expanding the present presumption of service-connection for mental conditions, which now applies only to an active psychosis occurring within two years of discharge, to include any psychosis, neurosis or character disorder or chronic alcoholism or drug abuse problem arising within three years of separation. That would make outpatient treatment available to men whose problems were accelerated or aggravated, if not caused, by their service. Outpatient care is often the most appropriate for low-grade emotional disturbances and drug abuse. Vietnam veterans seem especially likely to suffer from these problems.

Also being developed is a bill to provide the VA with new responsibilities to train and employ more doctors, nurses, and allied health professionals, especially so-called physicians assistants. It would also revise personnel authorities to enable the VA to compete more effectively for scarce health professionals. The VA must be able to enlarge its training program if it is ever going to make up its personnel shortages. The VA should perhaps be authorized to pay special salary differentials for posts they are having difficulty filling. And the VA should be able to peg general salaries geographically to an index community hospital.

Such a personnel system bill would also require that every VA facility reach a comparable staff-to-patient ratio with an index community hospital within three years. The present disparities are shocking: 1.5 for the VA general hospital, 2.7 for the average community hospital, and 3.5 to 4.0 for the university hospital; and that means inadequate care, inadequate attention, and inadequate time for the veterans in those hospitals.

Legislation I plan to introduce for Armed Services Committee consideration in related fields would require the military to consider chronic alcoholism a disease. Rehabilitative services and disability retirement, when indicated, would be provided for chronic alcoholics. I might add that Senator Harold Hughes of Iowa, Chairman of the Special Subcommittee on Alcoholism and Narcotics, and I are both convinced that the armed services are doing a very inadequate job in dealing with the alcoholic problem at present.

Another bill would enable a doctor to satisfy his military obligation by serving as a VA hospital staff physician. That proposal would be written in a way that would not detract from the Defense Department's needs for physicians.

It would merely give VA medical service at least the same national priority as the Public Health Service. And why they should not have that same priority is a mystery which we intend to unravel. Hundreds of doctors meet their military obligation through the P.H.S. every year. I don't think the VA is any less essential to our national security.

I hope you will agree that this is an ambitious and comprehensive veterans legislation medical program for one session.

And I will also be introducing at least three other pieces of veterans legislation in different fields. One will eliminate the delay of several months in the arrival of the first G.I. bill allowance check. I will probably propose an immediate automatic $200 educational assistance allowance advance, interest-free, to any eligible veteran certifying his intention to enroll in an approved course. The advance would be repaid through withholdings from his monthly G.I. bill payments. He could also pay off his advance payment by doing special work for the VA, such as helping in G.I., bill registration and processing or serving in the VA outreach and veteran benefit program.

Another piece of legislation, which I have already announced in the Senate, would amend the administration's proposed manpower training act to stress job training opportunities for veterans. That provision was recommended by your national economic commission director in testimony February 9 before the Employment, Manpower and Poverty Subcommittee.

A third bill will incorporate the administration's proposal to cede concurrent jurisdiction over VA installations to the states on an across-the-board basis rather than waiting for jurisdictional problems to occur and then proceeding legislatively in piecemeal fashion as we have in the past.

Before closing, I want to comment on the outstanding work being done for our veterans by Senators Talmadge and Long on the Finance Committee. I was privileged to join with Senator Talmadge last session in sponsoring the D.I.C. program bill which recently became law, as well as the bill, which passed the Senate last session, to increase S.G.L.I. insurance coverage.

This session I have been delighted again to join with Senator Talmadge in introducing bills to improve and expand benefits under both the compensation and pension programs. Senator Talmadge, for his part, has closely cooperated with me in our recent VA medical care investigation and will work with me to obtain the appropriations and new legislative authorities needed for the VA.

That, then, is the past record and the prognosis of my veterans legislation program that I am working on. I solicit your views and suggestions. I urge your support. The program needs it.

And I welcome your assistance in the critical days ahead to help me improve and expand health care, education and training for the men and women who serve our nation.

WE OFTEN FORGET THE IMPORTANCE OF VETERINARIANS

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, last week I discussed a letter I received from Dean Price, College of Veterinary Medicine, Texas A. & M. University, on the role of veterinary medicine in our society. I invite the attention of the Senators to an article I read sometime ago on the subject of veterinary medicine which I feel is equally applicable. The article, written by Frank B. Berry, M.D., is entitled "We Often Forget the Importance of Veterinarians," and was published in the Resident Physician of June 1968.

As the title indicates, Dr. Berry discusses the important contributions of veterinary medicine to the betterment of American society. Clearly, veterinary medicine is vital to the health and welfare of man. Unfortunately this fact is often overlooked by the general public.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Dr. Berry's article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WE OFTEN FORGET THE IMPORTANCE OF VETERINARIANS

(By Frank B. Berry, M.D.)

In 1904, the Regius Professor of Physic at the University of Cambridge, T. Clifford Allbutt, M.A., M.D., delivered an address at the St. Louis Congress, on the "Historical Relations of Medicine and Surgery." In it he stated, "One cause of the poverty and defect of medieval medicine lay in the jealous secretiveness of its practitioners, a reticence which they carried even into their private consultations." And in a footnote: "A veterinary surgeon, who flourished greatly in Yorkshire some hundred years ago as a marvelously successful operator, astutely evaded all prying and questioning into his secret, even when in imminent peril on a bed of sickness. He survived to carry all before him for many years longer. At length, bowed down by old age and decreptitude, he was again implored by his son to tell what he did in the secret half hour before operating. Life was ebbing at last, and the worn out old man whispered with his passing breath 'I biles my tools'."

One may be almost sure that he washed his hands and the animal also. Thus this old veterinary surgeon was more than half a century ahead of his brothers, in both human and veterinary surgery, in the realization that cleanliness and sterilization of instruments meant better results and saving of lives following surgery, thus anticipating the revolutionary work of Lister.

When I was in medical school in the early years of World War I, little attention was given to veterinary medicine and its close relation to human medicine. Of course, we heard about vectors, parasites, rabies, anthrax, glanders and a few other diseases of animal origin; the risk of rats, certain snakes, and animals; and the great work of Walter Reed in Cuba and Gorgas in Panama. But these were all regarded as a branch of human medicine, which of course they are, but little attention was given to the veterinary aspect.

Fortunately, however, Dr. Theobald Smith met with us during part of our course in bacteriology. He was an extraordinary person and one of the leaders of his time in both human and animal bacteriology. It was he who introduced us to the close relationship between animal and human diseases and their bacteriology and pathology. He had demonstrated some years previously that filtrates of the bacillus of hog cholera conferred immunity on injected animals, and that the cattle tick was the vector in causing Texas cattle fever. Both of these were major contributions to veterinary medicine. And, furthermore, he differentiated the bovine from the human tubercle bacilli; and in 1903 he had discovered the sensitization to specific proteins on re-inoculation.

Over the years, the veterinary profession has played an ever increasing role in our food inspection: livestock, poultry, dairy products, and processed and canned foods. This is performed incredibly well and with little fanfare by veterinarians in the Department of Agriculture, the Army, Air Force, and Public Health Service, as well as by veterinarians in state and municipal employ. And now also, with the large numbers of all sorts of animals used in medical, toxicological, and aerospace research, the demand for veterinary pathologists is increasing. There is likewise a growing need in large animals husbandry and research in animal genetics.

At present, there are somewhat over 100 diseases that are transmissible from animals, insects, and parasites to man; and with the increase in communications and travel (both in speed and numbers), and in the many exotic animals, birds, and reptiles that are benig imported for various purposes, the veterinary load and responsibilities are greatly augmented.

In the February 1, 1968 issue of the "Journal of the American Veterinary Medical Association," there is a letter from Dr. Robert B. Northway, D.V.M., in which he describes a boa constrictor "loaded" with ticks that was brought to him for riddance of the ticks. He stated that these ticks were very similar to two species that transmit Rocky Mountain spotted fever, and then remarked that heartwater (Nairobi) sheep disease could readily enter this country in a similar manner. He made a sound plea for careful veterinary inspection for all such animal "immigrants" both at the port of embarkation and again as they enter the United States.

Some years ago, when I was at Bellevue Hospital, New York City, a patient was shown at a combined chest conference with many tiny cysterceri scattered throughout his lungs. He was a professional snake handler and it was thought that these were the intermediate stage of a tapeworm acquired from the snakes.

THE VET AND PUBLIC HEALTH

At the annual meeting of the American Veterinary Medical Association in Dallas last July, both President H. E. Furgeson and President-elect Robert J. Schroeder emphasized the need for more schools of veterinary medicine. Dr. Furgeson said that expansion of veterinary medical education meant more than a building program; it meant also bringing it in step with the times and demanded constant critical examination. He then spoke of the importance of the veterinarian in the large animal industry, where the vet's "chief stock in trade will be the tools of the diagnostician, the epizootiologist, and the expert in preventive medicine, and (where he) is likely to apply these tools as a member of a team of highly skilled specialists."

Dr. Schroeder spoke of the present lack of control of advertising of veterinary foods and nostrums, and the present lack of adequate regulations and screening for those desiring to run animal laboratories. He then made a cogent criticism: "Despite our close relations with agriculture, we all insist that we are a medical profession. However, by and large, I believe that our insistence that we are a part of medicine has fallen on deaf or at least indifferent ears. It seems that whenever recommendations are made concerning the medical sciences, physicians and dentists are invariably named, while veterinarians often are not. This happens particularly in legislation involving such things as educational facilities, public health activities, recognition of military status, and salary considerations. It is often only after considerable effort on the part of AVMA and our constituent associations that we are added to the medical team. I intend to speak out for more recognition of veterinarians as major partners in our national and state health activities."

And so they are.

THE AIR FORCE B–111

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, once again the Air Force's B–111 is coming under investigation of the McClellan subcommittee. I sincerely hope that this effort is carried through to a final decision because a lot of things should be made known about this aircraft, although its modern-day performance is not the chief point.

What should be thoroughly investigated, in my opinion, is the way the contract was handled which was given to the highest bidder at a time when the Pentagon was supposedly cost conscious. I have flown this aircraft myself, and I find it wonderfully adapted for tactical bombing and for strategic bombing, but under no manner of judgment could it be called a fighter, which is why I have labeled it the B–111, or, if we want to be exact, we could call it the AB–111.

This airplane was really a sort of dream of Gen. F. F. Everest when he became Commander of the Tactical Air Command in 1959.

Mr. Orr Kelly has written a most interesting article on this subject, which was published in the Sunday Washington Post. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE IMPOSSIBLE DREAM FOR THE F–111 IS COMING TRUE

(By Orr Kelly)

Gen. F. F. Everest had an impossible dream when he became commander of the Tactical Air Command early in 1959.

His dream was an airplane that could cross the ocean without refueling and yet fly supersonic speeds when it got close to its target; a plane that could fly high and slow or low and fast; a plane that could find its own way in and out of increasingly sophisticated defenses.

The dream has come true. But it also has, in many ways, become a nightmare.

The plane is the F–111, once known as the TFX.

Sen. John J. McClellan, D-Ark., will resume hearings Tuesday on the TFX program that filled the headlines for 10 months in 1963 and then went into hibernation after the assassination of President Kennedy.

Ironically, after all the controversy surrounding the program, the F–111 now is almost exactly what Everest dreamed of in 1959—and almost all the other factors that made the program so controversial have faded away.

One of the major issues about the plane was the decision of Robert S. McNamara, in one of his earliest actions after taking office as defense secretary, to push the Air Force and Navy into developing the same plane to serve them both.

Since the Air Force first dreamed of its plane, the program has gone through five transformations—and is now back essentially to the original Air Force concept.

But, largely because of the long controversy, the Air Force will get far fewer of the planes than it had hoped for. Air Force officials have told Congress in recent days that the money requested in the 1971 budget will be used both to carry out an expensive inspection program to avoid problems with the wing structure and to buy enough planes to fill out a fourth wing of F–111 fighter-bombers. This will end the construction program, at least as things stand now.

This is a far cry from the plans in 1964 when a total purchase of 2,411 planes for the Air Force and Navy was approved.

The Navy dropped out of the program in early 1968, shortly after McNamara left the Pentagon, and is now developing its own plane, the F–14, as it had wanted to do all along. The British, who had originally hoped to buy their own F–111 fleet, dropped out and the Australians are talking, as if they, too, want to get out.

The result is that, of six different models of the plane to be developed and built, only two will go into service. There will be 77 strategic bomber versions for the Air Force and the remainder will be tactical fighter-bombers.

The McClellan Committee, in its renewed hearings, thus will find that the cost of each plane has risen far above the original estimates.

In recent testimony, Gen. James Ferguson, commander of the Air Force Systems Command, outlined the reasons for the increase in costs, which included technical problems and inflation.

"However," he added, "the biggest single cause of the increase in unit flyaway cost has been caused by the decrease in the total quantity procured and the extended time frame in which the remaining aircraft were to be produced.

"For this reason, we have seen the estimated average unit flyaway cost rise from $2.8 million to just over $8 million."

The decision to cut back on production of the plane is a source of considerable frustration for both Air Force officers and officials of General Dynamics, which won the contract over Boeing in a bitterly contested competition in the early 1960s.

According to an analysis done by the company, 58 percent of the work done by fighter-bombers in World War I, Korea and Vietnam has been interdiction—hitting military and transportation targets behind the enemy's front lines. This, according to the analysis, is exactly what the F–111 is designed to do best.

The analysis also shows that the decision to cut off F–111 production has come when the cost for each additional plane could be expected to drop sharply.

If the number of planes to be produced under present plans is divided into the program's total cost, the amount for each plane comes to $13.3 million. (Ferguson's figure of $8 million included only the airframe, engines and electronic equipment for each plane and not a share of the research and development costs.)

But the company's analysis shows that most of the money to be invested in the program already has been spent and that the cost of additional planes could drop to as little as $1.8 million apiece if construction were continued.

As things stand now, the total number of planes to be built probably will work out to 552. Of these, 77 are strategic bombers; two are the British version, now used for testing; seven are the Navy versions, also used for testing and 24 are the Australian version, which could end up in the U.S. Air Force. The remaining 442, which include 18 research and development planes, are the tactical fighter version.

The McClellan hearings are expected to last as long as two weeks, with a break for the Easter recess.

In the more than six years that have elapsed since they attracted such attention, much of the heat has left the F–111 controversy.

McNamara has moved on to the World Bank, the contract has turned out to be something less than a golden bonanza for General Dynamics and the plane, despite the wing problem that has grounded most of the fleet, has a good safety and performance record.

When the hearings end, it is unlikely that an answer will have been found to one of the most intriguing questions surrounding the whole F–111 program. That is whether or not the fight over the F–111 was a necessary and desirable part of McNamara's effort to exert civilian control over the Pentagon and whether, after all the controversy and cost, that effort was successful and worth the cost.

PRISONERS OF PRINCIPLE

Mr. HART. Mr. President, a number of weeks ago, Chief Justice Burger advocated a massive reform be undertaken of our Nation's prison facilities and activities. At that time, Chief Justice Burger was quoted as saying that "to put a man behind walls and not to try to change him is to deny him his humanity—and ours." He was quoted as going on to say that he would like to consider prison sentences "a period of enforced education" rather than a period of "enforced and frustrating idleness."

Mr. President, it is with these thoughts in mind that I invite the attention of Senators to an article published in Christianity and Crisis for December 22, 1969. Willard Gaylin, who is a practicing psychoanalyst in New York City and an associate professor of psychiatry at Columbia University, has done a study on what happens to some of our young men during their stay in prison. On the group which Mr. Gaylin chose to study, he found that prison causes a "hardening, an increasing hostility toward the environment, combined with an increasing distrust of self."

Mr. President, I believe that Mr. Gaylin documents the statements made by Chief Justice Burger about our need for prison reform. I ask unanimous consent that the article entitled "Prisoners of Principle" be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRISONERS OF PRINCIPLE

(By Willard M. Gaylin)

In September, 1967, I was approached by a friend who was concerned about his son, a graduate student. When the draft was revised to deny deferment for graduate study he dropped out, his sole motivation for advanced study having been eliminated. He was now eligible for induction and unalterably opposed to the war. He was not a religious objector in the sense defined by law, nor a pacifist opposed to wars in general. He would not lie (he later did) and, therefore, realized that the only courses open to him were to go to jail or to flee the country.

The father approached me as both a friend and an expert. He wanted facts or at least a professional estimation as to the potentially harmful effects of the two alternatives. It was a reasonable question logically directed to precisely the person who should be expected to know. In fact, I was totally unequipped to present any intelligent answer.

Although one of my special interests had been the borderline area of psychiatry and the law, I had never spent one hour within the walls of any penal institution. My subjective impression of prison had been formed at an early age by watching too many Warner Bros. movies at Saturday matinees. Balancing this was a limited intellectual conception based on those few articles on prison reform or rehabilitation that I had chanced upon.

Being so personally ignorant I began to wonder on what facts a 19-year-old boy bases his decision, particularly since the problem for him is not a theoretical one but a matter of survival.

Examination of the literature uncovered no papers published on the imprisoned war resister. Assuming that many incomplete studies must be ongoing, I inquired at the Bureau of Prisons. To my amazement I found that no one, at least officially, was currently doing research in this area. Even such pertinent information as the number of imprisoned objectors and their stated reasons for choosing prison had not been tabulated.

I felt that it was urgent that some understanding of who these men are, why they chose to go to prison and what became of them while in prison be made part of the public record. To this end I requested the permission of the Bureau of Prisons to start a pilot study of a sample of these youth, perhaps 20 to 25, to be interviewed over the period of their prison stay. I have been involved in this research now for two years. Since the research is still on-going many of my conclusions are still tentative, although certain things have emerged with absolute clarity.

ALIENS IN A HOSTILE ENVIRONMENT

Neither the prisons nor the prisoners were what I expected. It is not within the scope of this article to go into the nature of the prisons, but I might say that if the Warner Bros. picture of "screws" and "cons" and clanking tin cups is an inaccurate one, so are the official publications of the Bureau of Prisons with their emphasis on rehabilitation, educational opportunities, etc.

The feel, the pressure, the tensions of the typical prison are hard to describe and contain elements of both the above reports. It is true that there are no tin cups (there is a cafeteria); on the other hand, it is still true that there are homosexual rapes, physical violence, personal intimidation and humiliation of prisoners by personnel.

I began to find that my ignorance of conditions in prison was shared by most of my friends in the professions. Physicians, lawyers, ministers—all of the major groups from whom the young would seek counsel—might be expected to have some authoritative knowledge of conditions of prison life. This is, of course, not the case. The professions in general are servants of the middle class in our society; for the most part, prisons are a working-class institution.

The political prisoners, however, are from the middle class, and this immediately creates a problem. Automatically, there is a de facto, unintended discrimination exercised against them. They cannot learn or advance themselves in their professions, they cannot utilize the facilities of the library, they cannot educate themselves—their level in all of these things is beyond the ordinary scope of facilities of the prison. Instead, they are often found in the scullery or shovelling manure.

In addition, they are aliens in a hostile environment where their middle-class manner is resented and arouses hostility, or is interpreted as weakness and invites exploitation. To some degree they are protected by being put in minimal custody camps. Here their fellow prisoners expect discharge relatively soon and are presumed to have sufficient self-control not to attempt escape or misbehave. Despite this (though my research has been of short duration and with a fairly small group) there were two physical assaults of a nonsexual nature, one rape and one serious group-rape attempt.

The special nature of these prisoners makes them susceptible to a unique kind of discipline—if they do not toe the line, they can always be transferred to the parent institution, a maximum security prison. The implications are obvious. Few punishments that the administration can do directly are as potentially severe as what might be done by a general prison population. Even if they manage to avoid direct assault, it is at the cost of constant vigilance and constant terror.

SERVING CONSCIENCE RATHER THAN A CAUSE

Who are these men who find themselves in this position? When I began my actual visits to the prison on June 20, 1968, there were 739 imprisoned violators of the Selective Service law. This is an artificial figure because over three-fourths of them are Jehovah's Witnesses; their primary objection is not necessarily on a political or moral ground to this or any war; it is in terms of allegiance. They refuse to serve the government in any form. The decision was made for them; they are men obedient to authority—in this case, their church rather than their country.

Eliminated also are those who were not opposed to the war but who had been involved in conflict with law in general. They registered for nothing, were chronic criminals, and not registering for the draft was merely one of many crimes committed. I was not interested in either of these groups but in those who had made a decision of conscience to enter prison. Thus, I was left with somewhere between 60 and 70 men. Therefore, my small sample ended up being close to one-third of the total imprisoned population of war resisters.

Most people will visualize the war resister in prison in terms of the college radical. The imprisoned war resister is not this at all. He is generally less political, less self-dramatizing or self-serving, quieter, more withdrawn, more idealistic, more introspective and not generally an aggressive leader type. He is someone who is primarily serving his conscience rather than a cause. This, of course, is a generalization that is only partially true, for the most striking feature of the group is this heterogeneity.

An interesting aspect is that about 40 percent of these boys were eligible for draft deferments. Some were seminarians. Some were 4-F: one limped badly from childhood polio, one had severe asthma, another was almost blind. Invariably they refused to take this course, and the reasons most often given were twofold. First, if they are to preach or counsel against the war, what respect could a person receiving such counsel have for someone protected by a 4-F status. Second, they felt it would be an abandonment of all those who shared their emotional beliefs but had no built-in excuse for avoiding this crucial decision.

A SCAPEGOAT GROUP

In essence then, what we have, as demonstrated by the small number and nature of these men, is a testament of the effectiveness of the draft law. The United States Government has assumed that if you punish people severely for not going to the army, they will go—and, indeed, for the most part they do.

Not all of them though, because there are thousands who emigrate to Canada. More important, however, are the devices available—if the conscience of the individual permits—for avoiding the draft besides going to jail. You can lie and claim to be a religious objector, which will be effective in some cases; you can manufacture false medical records; you can claim to be a homosexual; you can claim to be a drug addict; you can become a drug addict.

All of these dodges are readily used, for while there are only a litle over 700 imprisoned war resisters, there are estimates of 25,000 to 30,000 draft evaders. And draft evaders do not include those who have legitimate deferments for illegitimate reasons, i.e., those who have developed physical or psychological ailments for purposes of evasion.

In addition, until recent years, the perpetual graduate student role became a way out. Prison authorities expected a flood of Selective Service violators when draft deferment was not allowed for graduate studies. The flood has not materialized. What has been flooded instead are the teaching professions. Draft deferment is offered by many larger cities in critical and often not so critical areas. In New York City alone, with the changing of the draft laws, there was an increase of 20,000 in the number of applications for teaching positions, primarily from men under the age of 26. So there are many ways to beat the draft.

What we have in prison, then, is a population that chooses not to "beat the draft" but chooses instead to bear witness against it. In essence it is a scapegoat group because under the broader interpretation of the law most of these prisoners are sincere conscientious objectors. It is presumed that their imprisonment will serve as a deterrent to others who may not have the same idealism.

Society may find it necessary to have such scapegoats in order to function, but one would think that there might be some recognition of this role and a consequent tempering of justice with mercy. The opposite seems to be the effect. The political war resisters are discriminated against in every way. Whereas Jehovah's Witnesses can expect parole after 12 to 15 months imprisonment, the political war resisters or moral objectors cannot. Up until recently they have not been granted parole at all. And as the frustration with the war increases to do the sentences—up to four and five years now.

ONE SEES A HARDENING

What happens to these young men when they enter the prison? Prison is both easy and hard—easy in the sense of the rawness of life, hard in the psychological sense. There is less brutality and more humiliation. A serious deterioration often occurs, a marked increase in depression, a loss of self-confidence, a sense of despair. These men feel they are isolated from the world about them, that they are forgotten men, and indeed they are. There is very little hue and cry in the community. They find few allies within the prison (the conventional prison chaplain and the chaplaincy service in general does not do credit to the churches).

These young men are struggling through a difficult period of their lives. Because of their youth their sense of identity has not yet been established, and they are put into a situation where individuality and identity are discouraged. They are treated as property to be moved around. The result is an arrest in that self-pride and self-confidence normally consolidated in this period.

This situation is particularly destructive in the sexual area. When you take a 19-year-old who has not yet completely established his sexual identity, who is not firmly in command of himself as a man, deprive him of his normal sexual outlets and then expose him constantly to homosexual seduction you run the risk of crippling or distorting his normal sexual development.

Another aspect of these men is their coarsening in all areas. They become less gentle and considerate, more survival oriented, more paranoid. They are keenly aware of this and are frightened that the changes may not be reversible after release. Their thought is also directed away from pacifism and idealism. They learn to hate the country and its institutions because, as represented by the prison, they warrant hatred.

Almost to a man they describe their change as a reconsideration of the idea of nonviolent resistance. A former Catholic seminarian said to me: "When I came in here I knew precisely where I stood. I would have called myself a Christian pacifist. Now all that is changed."

"Which has changed," I asked, "the Christian or the pacifist?"

"Both, I'm afraid, the pacifist as an act of reason, the Christian as an act of despair."

In every direction, therefore, what one sees is a hardening: an increasing hostility toward the environment, combined with an increasing distrust of self.

It is an enormous price we extract, not just from these men but from all prisoners. This country has ruled out cruel and unusual punishments. We no longer flog a man, cut off an ear or brand him for crimes; we merely "imprison." But the problem with imprisonment is that it becomes a word and words become institutionalized, and the vast majority of thinking men have never visited a prison. (How many readers of this journal have spent any appreciable time in a prison?)

What is cruel and what is unusual? We are taking from these youths two to five years of their lives. If a man is given an option whether he will sacrifice a lung that has become malignant to guarantee a continuation of life for a few more years, it is a rare person who refuses it. And this usually occurs in the middle or late years. What, then, is the value of these irreplacable years of youth, vigor and virility? What severity of crime warrants this punishment?

Yet how readily does society deprive these young men of this most precious and rarest of commodities, and how readily do the normal watchdogs of our society, the keepers of morality, the defenders of right close their eyes, maintain their silence, and sleep with conscience.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. EAGLETON). In executive session, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending question, which the clerk will state.

The ASSISTANT LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of George Harrold Carswell to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CUSTOMARY CONFIRMATION TEST IS NOT SUITABLE FOR SUPREME COURT NOMINEES

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, the Senate is being asked to advise and consent to the appointment of Judge George Harrold Carswell as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. If he is to be given the benefit of every reasonable doubt, which is the usual practice of the Senate in passing on Presidential appointments, then Judge Carswell should be confirmed. The question is, Whether the usual practice should be followed when it comes to filling vacancies on the Supreme Court.

I believe that it should not.

The Supreme Court, a separate and coordinate branch of the Federal Government, plays too vital a role in our national life to allow for the appointment of men whose qualifications are subject to serious doubt. During the 1968 presidential campaign, Richard Nixon said that he would appoint only men of high distinction to the Supreme Court. The record clearly reveals that Judge Carswell fails to meet such an exacting test.

If he were being nominated for a legal position in the executive branch of the Government, there is no question but that Judge Carswell should be confirmed. In such cases, the Senate quite properly gives the President wide latitude in the exercise of his discretion. As the Nation's Chief Executive, it has long been recognized that the President is entitled to have in his administration men and women of his own choice. Except on those rare occasions when the evidence points to immoral or unethical conduct on the part of the nominee, the consent of the Senate is given in a routine manner for the purpose of accommodating the President.

After all, executive branch officials, from the highest to the lowest, act on behalf of the President. The most important among them form his executive "team." Whether they serve as members of his Cabinet, as directors of Federal agencies, or as his ambassadors abroad, they must be individuals in whom the President can repose personal confidence, with whom he can easily work, and from whom he can expect full political support.

For example, a Secretary of State, though charged with great responsibility in the conduct of American foreign policy, remains, nevertheless no more than an arm of the Presidency. He may offer advice which the President is free to accept or reject. However, once the President makes his decision, the Secretary of State is obliged both to accept and to implement the decision to the best of his ability.

Typically, a Secretary of State might urge the President to submit a larger foreign aid bill to the Congress. Taking his entire budget into account, the President might decide against it, thereby overruling his principal foreign policy adviser. It then becomes the duty of the Secretary to publicly defend the smaller bill as if never a doubt had crossed his mind.

A treaty may be waiting submission to the Senate. The Secretary of State privately urges the President to delay moving it, owing to the delicacy of current negotiations on another front. But the President feels that other considerations are of greater importance. Despite the Secretary's dissent, the President instructs that the treaty be submitted to the Senate. That settles the matter.

Presidential primacy over the executive branch is too well settled for argument. Abraham Lincoln once dramatized it when he submitted a proposition to his Cabinet and called for a vote. Every member of the Cabinet voted "No." The President voted "aye," and announced "The 'ayes' have it." Those who act as the President's agents—no matter how highly placed in the executive branch—draw their authority from Presidential writ. They act upon the direction of the President and they serve at his pleasure.

Now, I submit that this principal-and-agent relationship which exists within the executive branch has no applicability whatever to the Supreme Court. An Associate Justice of the Supreme Court is not a subordinate of the President. Unlike executive officials, a Justice is part of no political administration. He takes no directions from the President. Indeed, he is expected to stay aloof. Mr. Abe Fortas, although a longtime friend of President Johnson, learned how ill advised it is to remain a White House confidant, once appointed to the Supreme Court.

The framers of the Constitution took special precautions to safeguard the independence of the Federal judiciary. The Federal courts are protected against being bent to the will of Congress or the President by specific constitutional guarantees for maintenance of salary and lifetime tenure. Moreover, the Founding Fathers implicitly recognized the gulf which separates Federal judges from the appointive officers in the executive branch. The latter generally may be removed from office on order of the President. But a Supreme Court Justice, like the President himself, can be removed from the bench only by Congress through the difficult procedure of impeachment.

There is yet another striking contrast between nominees for judicial and executive branch positions, even though both are filled by Presidential appointment subject to senatorial confirmation. When a President leaves office, he is customarily joined by members of his executive team who had served under him in appointive posts during his administration. But this is certainly not true of the men he has appointed to the Federal judiciary. Least of all is it true of the Supreme Court.

In fact, we have today, as sitting members of the Supreme Court, two Associate Justices who have rendered decisions while six Presidents occupied the White House—Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, and Nixon. There are three other Associate Justices who first took their seats on the Supreme Court during Dwight Eisenhower's term, four Presidencies ago. It must be clearly understood, consequently, that a nomination to the Supreme Court is "for the ages," not merely for the duration of the administration of that President who makes the appointment. It should be a sobering point to reflect upon, as we deliberate the nomination of Judge Carswell, that his expectancy in office is not limited to the 1970's but might last through the 1980's and extend into the 1990's as well.

Surely, the reasons why the Senate customarily applies a lenient standard to Executive appointments, giving the President so much latitude in the selection of his own official family, are utterly lacking in relevance when applied to the Supreme Court of the United States. Under our Constitution, the Supreme Court, highest tribunal in the land, presides over an independent judiciary, separate and apart from the legislative and executive branches of the Federal Government.

As the institution of the Supreme Court is unique, so the standard applied by the Senate in passing on appointments to the Supreme Court should be unique. If the test is to fit the office, it must be one of singular excellence.

A nomination to the Supreme Court belongs in the highest category of Presidential appointments. Such is the stature of the Court that it has been graced through the years with men of great distinction—John Marshall of Virginia and John Harlan of Kentucky; Charles Evans Hughes of New York and Earl Warren of California; Oliver Wendell Holmes and Felix Frankfurter of Massachusetts and Benjamin Cardozo of New York. These were men of differing political and philosophical inclinations, but they possessed probing intellects, profound insights and sensitive perceptions. These and others have represented all sections of the Nation—North, West, East, and South.

President Nixon has indicated a desire to fill the pending vacancy on the Court with a southerner. There are many fine legal minds in the South. There are Senators in this Chamber representing the South, serving today, whom I would willingly support for a seat on the Supreme Court. There are others already serving with distinction on the Federal judiciary in the South. But the President does not send us the nomination of one of these. Instead, he sends us a man of little depth and breadth.

In the course of the hearings, two distinguished law school scholars addressed themselves to the question of Judge Carswell's qualifications.

Louis Pollak, dean of the Yale University Law School, testified that Judge Carswell has "more slender credentials than any other nominee for the Supreme Court put forth in this century."

Prof. William Van Alstyne, who we should remember publicly supported the nomination of Clement Haynsworth to the Supreme Court, stated that Judge Carswell has shown nothing in the performance of his profession "to warrant any expectation whatever that he could serve with distinction on the Supreme Court of the United States."

In earlier times, such damning testimony from expert witnesses would surely have resulted in rejection of the nominee. During the last century, the Senate refused to "rubberstamp" Presidential nominations to the Supreme Court. On the average, one out of four were defeated prior to 1900. The Senate exercised its confirmation role in a far more responsible way during the first 110 years of our Nation's existence than it has in the last 70. The time has come for us to begin once more to perform properly our constitutional duty.

In examining Judge Carswell's record on the Federal bench, one searches in vain for a mark of excellence. We have yet to be shown a single decision he has handed down that reveals any exceptional qualities of learning, any flash of brilliance, or any special insight. Taken altogether, Judge Carswell's service has been utterly pedestrian in character.

Even his suporters make no claim that Judge Carswell's career has been particularly distinguished. The strangest argument of all delivered in his behalf comes from Senator HRUSKA, of Nebraska, who was recorded in a radio interview as having said:

He is a good judge, has been and has great potential. But suppose he isn't a good judge? Even if he were mediocre, there are a lot of mediocre judges and people and lawyers. Aren't they entitled to a little representation and a little chance?

In all charity, this extraordinary statement should serve as a fitting epitaph in the Carswell nomination.

The Supreme Court, our tribunal of last resort, calls for jurists of the highest caliber, who will dispense justice with fine impartiality and keen intelligence. Above all, the Court calls for jurists whose comprehension of the Constitution is as profound as their duty to uphold it is imperative.

As measured against these criteria, George Harrold Carswell is indubitably deficient. I must vote against his confirmation.

Mr. President, in the course of the last few weeks I have received a number of letters and telegrams from Idaho, from constituents who have voiced their opposition to the confirmation of Judge Carswell. I have selected a few of these letters as a representative sampling of this opinion. I have not had an opportunity to secure the consent of these correspondents to include their names in the RECORD. Rather than do so without their permission, I would prefer to read from their letters and to withhold their names, at this time. But, taken together, these letters do represent a cross-section of opinion in my State against the confirmation of Judge Carswell.

Here is a letter from Boise, Idaho. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR CHURCH: All I know about Carswell is what has been brought out in the news media. His record on civil rights and racism—alone would be enough to disqualify him from serving on the Supreme Court but I do not think his ability and stature as a Judge and Attorney warrant his confirmation to this high post.

I know you will vote as you think best—but it is my hope that you will vote against his confirmation. If he is confirmed we will have him for 30 years.

Here is a telegram from Moscow, Idaho:

Please vote against Judge Carswell's nomination for the Supreme Court.

Here is a letter from the AFL–CIO in Boise, Idaho. It reads:

DEAR FRANK: We urge you to vote against the nomination of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to be an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

We feel his record reflects a lack of reasoning, care, or judicial sensitivity overall, and nothing in the quality of the nominee's work to warrant any expectation whatever that he could serve with distinction in the Supreme Court of the United States. Further, that the Administration's sole guide in making its selection was its southern political strategy.

We feel that for the senate to allow a nomination that is a calculated political attack on the responsible Negro leadership of this country would be a national tragedy. The Idaho State AFL–CIO urges the Senate to refuse to confirm the nomination.

Here is another letter which comes from Nampa, Idaho. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR: I have been asked as the executive officer of our Local to ask you to oppose the appointment of Judge Carswell to the Supreme Court.

We certainly felt that you took the proper stand when you opposed Judge Haynsworth and feel that Judge Carswell should be opposed for the same reasons.

We want to take this opportunity to thank you for your assistance and your concern so often in the past, and look forward to continued cooperation.

Here is a letter from a constituent in Pocatello, Idaho. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR CHURCH: Hopefully you will carefully consider the qualifications of Judge Carswell. His past history suggests a lack of competence and a tendency to conduct himself in a bigoted manner where minority races are concerned.

Here is another letter from Pocatello, Idaho. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR CHURCH: It seems like every time Nixon nominates another nobody to the Supreme Court you get a letter from me. In comparison to Mr. Carswell, Judge Haynsworth was by far the better man. In any event, I urge you to consider what the mediocrity of Mr. Carswell can do to the progressive ideas supported by the U.S. Supreme Court. It is truly amazing that out of several thousand qualified people Nixon would choose a man of such lack-lustre qualifications. Think about it!

Here is another letter from Moscow, Idaho, It reads:

SIRS: The nomination of G. Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court is surrounded by conflicting testimony. If this man is not outstanding as a jurist and as a citizen, I urge you to vote against his confirmation. Mediocrity and expediency will accelerate the national divisiveness originated by the last administration and promoted by the present one. Confirmation of this man as a simple courtesy to the President would be a tragic neglection of responsibility at a time when people like myself are looking to see if the government can and will act to develop the nation so that life can be worthwhile for everyone.

A further letter from Boise, Idaho. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR CHURCH: I commend your rejection of the nomination of Judge Clement Haynsworth to the Supreme Court, and heartily support your conservation measures.

Now I strongly urge you to reject the nomination of Judge Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court. Fatigue and harassment do not justify his confirmation: his presence would be an offense to the Blacks of the nation, and to anyone who opposes mediocrity on the bench.

Here is another letter from Boise, Idaho. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR: I would like to voice my opinion against the appointment of Judge G. Harrold Carswell.

The Supreme Court decides the most important cases in the nation in all legal fields, including labor law, civil rights, and civil liberties. If confirmed, Judge Carswell will sit on the Court for life, or until he resigns. His term is, therefore, likely to be several decades. The decisions he makes could affect the ability of Unions to organize and bargain collectively as much as any act of Congress. His treatment of lawyers appearing before him, his advice to sheriffs on how to re-arrest men whom he had freed, his aid to prosecutors to keep people in jail and counter his own decisions from the bench make him a dangerous addition to the U.S. Supreme Court.

I ask you to oppose the confirmation of Judge Carswell.

Here is another letter from Nampa, Idaho. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR CHURCH: As an Idaho citizen, I want to ask that you oppose the appointment of Judge Carswell to the Supreme Court.

I know that you opposed the appointment of Judge Haynsworth, and I feel that Carswell is even less qualified for this high position.

I know that we in Idaho can expect you to give this your most serious consideration and know that we can count on you to always have our best interests at heart.

Here is a letter from Osburn, Idaho. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR: I am writing to ask you to vote against the appointment of Judge Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court. When the now famous "White Supremacy" speech of 1949 was publicized, I was willing to give Judge Carswell the benefit of the doubt (I, too, am a native Southerner who has changed his mind), but just yesterday I read newspaper reports that Judge Carswell has, in very recent years, sold residential property with racially restrictive clauses in the deed. I am not so charitable about that. If these latest allegations are true, then, perhaps the Judge's attitudes about the races have not changed so much after all, and if this is so, he is not qualified to sit on the highest court in the land.

Here is a letter from Coeur D'Alene, Idaho. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR CHURCH: I still feel, as I mentioned to you in my letter of November 26, that the appointment of a strict constructionist to the Supreme Court is a mistake, especially since below the Mason-Dixon line, "strict constructionist" is only another of the many euphemisms which boil down to "anti-Negro." Although I would personally favor a liberal judge, such as Judge Traynor of the California Supreme Court, probably the best choice for the country would be someone whose philosophy is midway between his and that of the latest nominee, Judge Carswell. Feeling as I do, it is my hope that you will oppose the Carswell nomination if you can do so in good conscience.

Here is a letter from Bovill, Idaho. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR CHURCH: The enclosed clippings say so much better than I can what is a serious problem in government today. We can not have the best when political bartering makes us accept mediocrity. Please vote against Carswell and speak out against him. Yours is a voice that is heard.

Finally, a letter from Pocatello, Idaho. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR CHURCH: My husband and I wish to ask you to vote against confirmation of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to the U.S. Supreme Court.

After reading many reports about him in the newspapers and several newsweeklies, we can not see how it is possible for him to be qualified to sit in the seat that was too good for Abe Fortas.

The low esteem the judicial system in the U.S. is held in now will not be helped by a Carswell.

(At this point Mr. PELL took the chair as Presiding Officer.)

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, these are representative samples of opinions from many of my constituents against the confirmation of Judge Carswell.

Let me sum up the reasons why I shall vote against this nominee: In doing so I should like, once again, to stress the special responsibility that falls upon the Senate where nominations to the Supreme Court of the United States are concerned.

As I have attempted to point out, there is a vast difference between confirming appointees to the executive branch of the Government and confirming judges who will sit as members of an independent and coordinate branch of Government, a branch which is neither subject to direction by the President nor within his administrative jurisdiction.

As I mentioned earlier, the Senate, in the last century, used to recognize this distinction. It did not regard its responsibility to pass upon an appointment to the Supreme Court as comparable to the confirmation role of the Senate when it came to other Presidential appointees. As a result, one out of four nominations to the Court, on the average, was rejected by the Senate prior to 1900.

I think it is unfortunate that the Senate has tended, in more recent years, to blend all Presidential appointments together, and to assume that considerations which are applicable to the executive branch, where the President is entitled to wide latitude in the selection of his own official family, are also applicable to every other Presidential appointment. There is no logical reason why this should be so. Least of all, is there any reason why it should be so when it comes to men who will sit on the highest court of the land. Here, it seems to me, a special test is required, a test of unusual excellence.

When that test is applied to the nomination now before the Senate for confirmation, the nominee simply does not meet it. I have looked at the record. I have reviewed the hearings. I have carefully examined the committee report, fully weighed the arguments of those who favor the nomination and those who oppose it. I cannot find anywhere any evidence which would suggest that Judge Carswell has served on the Federal bench with that measure of distinction which ought properly to obtain when it comes to elevating him to the highest court of the land. If there is evidence, then let someone present it. If there is anyone with evidence that this high standard of excellence which should apply to the Supreme Court is met, in one way or another, and can be found in an examination and review of Judge Carswell's record on the Federal bench, then let it be presented now. No such evidence has been forthcoming, because no such evidence exists.

I have been handed a paper entitled "A Note on Senatorial Consideration of Supreme Court Nominees," a paper which will appear in the Yale Law School Review. It is a scholarly and careful examination of the question that is now before us.

I should like to read a portion of that article, because it bears out so strongly the argument I have made this morning.

The author writes:

I shall, however, open the discussion by taking strongly the position that a Senator voting on a presidential nomination to the court not only may, but generally ought to, vote in the negative if he firmly believes on reasonable grounds that the nominee's views on the large issues of the day will make it harmful to the country for him to sit and vote on the court, and that on the other hand no Senator is obligated simply to follow a presidential lead in this regard or can really discharge his own duty by doing so.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator is acquainted with this matter, but let me refresh his recollection.

Does the Senator recall the circumstances confronting the Committee of Detail of the Constitutional Convention of the United States with respect to the selection of Supreme Court Justices?

Mr. CHURCH. I am generally acquainted with that discussion. And I think it is particularly pertinent to the question of whether the Senate should confirm the pending nomination.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is my recollection correct that the original draft or proposal prepared for the Constitutional Convention provided that the members of the Supreme Court were not to be selected by the President, but by the Senate of the United States?

Mr. CHURCH. The Senator is correct. As I recall, the reason for that proposal was to provide an additional check and balance, and also to fortify the independence of the judiciary and protect it against the possibility of executive control.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me ask the Senator if it was not as a result of a compromise between those who felt that the President should nominate Justices of the Supreme Court and those who felt that the power should be retained in the hands of the Senate that the final terms of article II as they appear today were agreed upon—namely, that although the President would select a nominee, and send to the Senate the name of a candidate to fill a vacancy on the Supreme Court, that nominee would not sit on the Supreme Court until the Members of the Senate had seen fit to advise and consent on it.

Mr. CHURCH. The Senator is correct. And both roles were regarded as equally important. The President was to nominate; the Senate was then to pass judgment on the qualifications of the nominee to sit on the Supreme Court of the United States. And the confirmation power was viewed by the Founding Fathers as equally important as the appointive power.

Mr. TYDINGS. As a matter of fact, the relevant Federalist Papers, which were authored by Mr. Hamilton, spelled out the Senate's responsibility of advising and consenting and indicated that unwise choices of men who represented purely sectional or political nominations would not be permitted because the Senate would intervene.

Mr. CHURCH. The Senator is absolutely correct. It was contemplated that the Senate should exercise a checkrein on nominations to the Supreme Court to avoid this kind of possible abuse.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the Senator agree that there is considerable difference between the responsibility and the function of the Senate of the United States in advising and consenting to the nomination of a member of the President's own personal Cabinet and the responsibility and the function of the Senate in advising and consenting to the nomination of what amounts to a lifetime position on the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. CHURCH. I not only agree, but I also endeavored in the course of my prepared remarks this morning to point out the great gulf that separates highly placed officers in the executive branch of the Government from Justices of the Supreme Court.

One can point to so many basic differences, but I suppose the most important of all is that anyone who serves as a Presidential appointee in the executive branch of the Government serves as an agent of the President. These executive officers are subordinates of the President. They take their instructions from the President. Their judgment can readily be, and often is, overruled by the President.

They serve at the President's pleasure and are subject to his dismissal. They are, in every sense of the word, Presidential agents, a part of his own administration, for which ultimately the President himself must assume responsibility.

Now, none of this is true—none of it—concerning a Justice of the Supreme Court. He is not a part of the President's administration. He is not subject to the President's direction or control. While he holds office, his salary may not be reduced. He holds lifetime tenure. When he makes a decision, he does not consult with the President concerning it. Indeed, he associates with the President, even in an informal way, at his peril—as the sad experience of Justice Abe Fortas so well bears out.

Everything about the Supreme Court, every specific provision contained in the Constitution intended to strengthen and fortify the independence of the judiciary, makes it clear that appointees to the court were to be treated differently from those who serve under the President in the executive branch of Government. So the lenient standard we use in the latter case should not be applied to the former. Indeed, the importance of the Court is such that the Senate ought to insist upon a standard of the highest excellence, in passing judgment upon Presidential nominees to the Supreme Court. Many of them, as I earlier pointed out, serve during the terms of many Presidents. Two of them today served with six different Presidents. In a very real sense, an appointment to the Supreme Court is an appointment for the ages.

I want to underscore what the Senator from Maryland had in mind in asking me this question. When it comes to Supreme Court nominees, it is the duty of the Senate to apply an exacting standard. That standard simply is not met by this nominee; and no Member of this body has produced any evidence to suggest otherwise.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Idaho would permit me to read to him from some very pertinent pages of Federalist Papers Nos. 76 and 77, which deal directly with the responsibility of the Senate to advise and consent on nominations to the Supreme Court. Before quoting from Federalist Papers 76 and 77, again I wish to point out, as we have discussed and as the distinguished Senator discussed earlier, in the Constitutional Convention there was much support for appointment of Judges by the Senate alone, a mode which was approved on July 21, 1787, and carried through into the draft of the Committee of Detail. The change to the present mode came on September 4 in the report of the Committee of Eleven and was agreed to nem. con. on September 7.

This last part, I think it can be reasonably concluded, must have meant that those who wanted appointment by the Senate alone, and in some cases by the whole Congress, were satisfied that a compromise had been reached and did not think the legislative part in the process had been reduced to the minimum, as some of our colleagues in the Senate would have us believe today.

The whole process today suggests a very reverse of the idea that the Senate was to have a confined role. I think these passages from Federalist 76 and 77, written by Alexander Hamilton, are to the point. I now quote from Federalist No. 76:

> But might not his nomination be overruled? I grant it might, yet this could only be to make place for another nomination by himself. The person ultimately appointed must be the object of his preference, though perhaps not in the first degree. It is also not very probable that his nomination would often be overruled. The Senate could not be tempted, by the preference they might feel to another, to reject the one proposed; because they could not assure themselves, that the person they might wish would be brought forward by a second or by any subsequent nomination. They could not even be certain, that a future nomination would present a candidate in any degree more acceptable to them; and as their dissent might cast a kind of stigma upon the individual rejected, and might have the appearance of a reflection upon the judgment of the chief magistrate, it is not likely that their sanction would often be refused, where there were not special and strong reasons for the refusal.
>
> To what purpose then require the cooperation of the Senate? I answer, that the necessity of their concurrence would have a powerful, though, in general, a silent operation. It would be an excellent check upon a spirit of favoritism in the President, and would tend greatly to prevent the appointment of unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity. In addition to this, it would be an efficacious source of stability in the administration.
>
> It will readily be comprehended, that a man who had himself the sole disposition of offices, would be governed much more by his private inclinations and interests, than when he was bound to submit the propriety of his choice to the discussion and determination of a different and independent body, and that body an entire branch of the legislature. The possibility of rejection would be a strong motive to care in proposing. The danger to his own reputation, and, in the case of an elective magistrate, to his political existence, from betraying a spirit of favoritism, or an unbecoming pursuit of popularity, to the observation of a body whose opinion would have great weight in forming that of the public, could not fail to operate as a barrier to the one and to the other. He would be both ashamed and afraid to bring forward, for the most distinguished or lucrative stations, candidates who had no other merit than that of coming from the same State to which he particularly belonged, or of being in some way or other personally allied to him, or of possessing the necessary insignificance and pliancy to render them the obsequious instruments of his pleasure.
>
> * * * * *
>
> If it be said they might sometimes gratify him by an acquiescence in a favorable choice, when public motives might dictate a different conduct, I answer, that the instances in which the President could be personally interested in the result, would be too few to admit of his being materially affected by the compliances of the Senate. The power which can originate the disposition of honors and emoulments, is more likely to attract than to be attracted by the power which can merely obstruct their course. If by influencing the President be meant restraining him, this is precisely what must have been intended.

I think the language in the Federalist Papers stating:

> He [the President] would be both ashamed and afraid to bring forward, for the most distinguished or lucrative stations, candidates who had no other merit than that of coming from the same State to which he particularly belonged, or of being in some way or other personally allied to him, or of possessing the necessary insignificance and pliancy to render them the obsequious instruments of his pleasure.

The paper almost could have been written having in mind the debate on the present nomination now before the Senate.

Mr. CHURCH. I agree with the Senator completely. I think that the extracts he has read into the RECORD from the Federalist Papers establish beyond refutation that the Founding Fathers believed the confirmation role of the Senate to be of the most serious and important character. As I mentioned a moment ago, it was the equivalent in every way of the appointive power itself.

It was meant, particularly where the Supreme Court is concerned, to hold the President to a high standard.

If we are not going to do what the Founding Fathers intended, if we are not going to be mindful of our responsibility, or the way the Senate exercised it during the last century; if we are going to make our standards ever more lenient so that the President can do pretty much as he pleases, even when it comes to the appointment of the highest Justices of the land; then we fail in our duty and we do not give effect to the role that was intended for the Senate by the Founding Fathers.

I know that the Senator shares with me an apprehension about the declining role that the Congress of the United States plays in the Government. Nearly every serious student of government today has observed that the Congress is, and has for a long period of years been, in decline. I think that is a tragic development. I know that there are many Members of this body so greatly exercised about it that an attempt is now being made to reassert senatorial prerogatives in many fields—in the field of foreign policy, where we have largely abdicated our role to the Presidency to the point where Presidential powers have become practically plenary in deciding on war or peace. I know that an attempt is being made to restudy the function of the Congress in the matter of regaining the control that the Constitution intended us to wield over the public money.

More and more, the purse strings have fallen into the hands of the President.

If we are to uphold the Senate, if we are to keep faith with what the Constitution of the United States intended, then the time has come for us to begin to give substance once more to the confirmation role of the Senate. Otherwise, our powers will continue to erode, the Presidency will loom ever larger until, at last, it becomes a Caesardom.

Anyone weighing the trend of power over the past 50 years who is unconcerned about the declining role of Congress has little regard for the checks and balances which were written into the Consitution to preserve the Republic.

As the Senator well knows, every representative government is jeopardized by the growth of excessive executive power. That is what happened to the Roman Republic. Let it not happen to ours.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder if I could address another line of questioning to the distinguished Senator from Idaho. I wonder if the Senator would agree with me that in the function of a judge, whether he be a police magistrate in a small West Virginia county, or whether it be a judge in a U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Florida sitting in Tallahassee, or whether he be a judge for the circuit court of Harford County sitting in Bel Air, Md. There is no more vital or important requisite than the ability to give every person before him a fair trial, no matter how poor or unpopular.

Would the Senator comment on that?

Mr. CHURCH. I agree fully.

Mr. TYDINGS. I know the Senator from Idaho has been very busy, but has the Senator, by any chance, been aware of the testimony of a young Department of Justice lawyer named Knopf, who, after subpena, came before the Judiciary Committee of the U.S. Senate and told what to me was a shocking story of judicial intemperance and unfairness that would have been unbecoming for a trial magistrate in the poorest county in my State or in any other State, but, coming from a U.S. district judge, was unbelievable.

Mr. CHURCH. As a member of the committee who heard that testimony, I was going to suggest to the Senator that he read it into the record.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me, first of all, tell how Mr. Knopf, who was a young lawyer for the Department of Justice, came to testify before the Judiciary Committee of the U.S. Senate.

After the first several days of the hearings, he called my office—I had never heard of Mr. Knopf before—and said that he had material relating to the Carswell nomination that he felt was important. This was a man who was employed at the will of the present Attorney General of the United States. I said I would see him. I did see him.

I could scarcely believe what he told me, except that it correlated or confirmed the testimony given Thursday by another lawyer from New York City.

I asked Mr. Knopf whether or not he would be willing to testify. He said he was fearful, and he felt that he could only testify if he were to receive a subpena from the Senate of the United States.

So he was served with a subpena from the Senate of the United States, and he came to testify. Although the national news media had little to say about his testimony, and although there were very few members of the Judiciary Committee present when he testified, I was present and heard what he said, and it is in the record; and it is absolutely incredible that a man nominated to the Supreme Court of the United States should have engaged in the intemperate that Mr. Carswell did when he was a judge of the U.S. district court for the Northern District of Florida.

Let me read now from his testimony. I am particularly interested in the testimony that appears on pages 175 and 177, I will be quite frank with Senators, until this testimony came in I was not as deeply disturbed by this nomination as I have been since the testimony came into the record.

Mr. Knopf, by way of background, attended Columbia law school. When he graduated from law school and passed the bar, he volunteered to work with the law students civil rights research council. This was an organization of law students who wished to assist civil rights lawyers. Being law students or recent gradutes, they did no try any cases. They went down to assist various lawyers, who had volunteered for 1-week or 2-week periods to work with a voter registration project in the South, including the panhandle of Florida.

Mr. Knopf went down to Florida and was there in August, and part of September. He was assigned to a CORE voter registration project to register black people in the northern area of Florida.

The CORE volunteer workers, many of whom were from Florida itself, some of whom came from the North, did assist in the registration of black people so that they could vote in the Federal elections in November.

I shall now quote directly from the testimony of Mr. Knopf, on page 175:

As I stated, the town, the whole general area was extremely hostile. We were harassed by the police. We were harassed by the white populace in general. We felt that there was no chance of a fair trial in the local courts. I believe the courtrooms were still segregated. Negroes did not use—they had special rest room facilities and so on. We believe there hadn't been Negroes serving on the jury. This was our understanding anyway, and we were under the belief that Federal law permitted these registration workers, gave them the right to go and solicit, constitutional right and statutory right to go and help black people register in Federal elections, and we felt that this right would be thwarted, if it had to be, if workers were to be tried in a court where it was felt they could not be assured of impartial treatment.

Therefore, the attorneys instructed me to file removal papers, believing that it was a Federal matter, since these workers were operating under Federal law, there were Federal statutes regarding the right to vote, and that perhaps they would get a fairer trial within the Federal court.

Now, he is referring to a specific instance when several volunteers, the majority of them from Florida, went on to a plantation to suggest that black sharecroppers register to vote. One of those black sharecroppers was a relative of one of the young people endeavoring to get them to register. The property that they were on was reached by a road leading from the public highway and was not posted and not fenced.

The overseer of the farm or plantation heard about it, came along, and asked them what their purpose was in being on the property. They explained to him that they were encouraging the people to register and vote. He told them that they were trespassing, it was on private property. They said they did not realize it, that they would walk right to the road and get off.

He said, "Oh, no, you are going to be arrested."

He had them arrested, and he took them into a local court, where the local judge refused to permit them to be represented by counsel, because the counsel was not admitted to the bar in Florida, and even had the counsel thrown out of the courtroom. He refused to honor their removal petition to the U.S. district court, although under the law the filing of the removal petition automatically divests the State court of jurisdiction. The mere filing of the removal paper is all that is necessary.

These young people were thrown in jail, and they were fearful for their physical safety. So they filed a writ of habeas corpus in Judge Carswell's court to insure the removal of their case, as was their statutory right, to the U.S. district court in Judge Carswell's district.

Let me read to you from Mr. Knopf's own testimony—and remember that by his mere presence at the hearing, he was risking his job with the Department of Justice.

I asked him:

Tell the committee to the best of your memory what you observed.

Mr. KNOPF. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. And we are particularly interested in Judge Carswell's attitude.

Now, remember, this is not some lawyer from New York, or some lawyer from Minnesota or Maryland or somewhere else. This was an employee of the Department of Justice, testifying under subpena before the Committee on the Judiciary of the U.S. Senate. I am only sorry that more of my colleagues were not there to listen to him.

I quote, now, from the testimony of Mr. Knopf. Senators will find this on page 177 of the hearings record:

Mr. KNOPF. It is relatively clear in my mind. I remember this. This was my first court room experience—

Any lawyer in this body knows he remembers his first court room experience very well.

This was my first courtroom experience, really, out of law school, and I remember quite clearly Judge Carswell. He didn't talk to me directly. He addressed himself to the lawyer, of course, Mr. Lowenthal, who explained what the habeas corpus writ was about, and I can only say that there was extreme hostility between the judge and Mr. Lowenthal. Judge Carswell made clear, when he found out that he was a northern volunteer and that there were some northern volunteers down, that he did not approve of any of this voter registration going on and he was especially critical of Mr. Lowenthal in fact he lectured him for a long time in a high voice that made me start thinking I was glad I filed a bond for protection in case I got thrown in jail.

How is that? How is that for judicial temperament, for a starter?

I really thought we were all going to be held in contempt of court. It was a very long strict lecture about northern lawyers coming down and not members of the Florida Bar and meddling down here and arousing the local people against—rather just arousing the local people, and he in effect didn't want any part of this, and he made it quite clear that he was going to deny all relief that we requested.

I ask the Senator from Idaho, is it not the basic requisite of any judge, whether he is a people's court magistrate or a judge of the U.S. district court, that he is basically fair, and does not prejudge a case on the basis of his own personal biases and prejudices?

Mr. CHURCH. The Senator is quite right. The capacity for objectivity is one of the most important attributes that a judge can have, as well as a capacity to pass upon questions that are brought before him in a calm and unimpassioned manner.

Mr. TYDINGS. If this were the only instance in the record where this man, nominated to be a Justice of the Supreme Court, had permitted his prejudices, his hostility, and his biases to show and to influence his conduct as a judge, perhaps we might forgive him. But this record is replete with instances of that kind.

When I hear that some of my colleagues are tired and fatigued, worn out because they have had one fight on a nomination from the President, which was turned down, and that even though this nominee is much less fit than the former, they are too worn out or too fatigued to make a fight, I am concerned.

Mr. CHURCH. That is just a confession of abdication of our responsibilities.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to another witness we had, Professor Clark, who was responsible for the entire civil rights litigation in the State of Florida.

His testimony is equally strong, or even stronger than Mr. Knopf's. I refer the Senator particularly to page 227 of the record.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all of Professor Clark's testimony, beginning on page 221, be printed in the RECORD, at this point.

There being no objection the testimony was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TESTIMONY OF LEROY D. CLARK, ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR, NEW YORK UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL

Mr. CLARK. My name is Leroy D. Clark, and I am an associate professor at the New York University School of Law. I have been on the faculty at New York University for approximately the last 2 years. From 1962 through 1968, I was staff counsel to the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, and in that capacity after the now Judge Motley left our office, I was put in charge of the entire civil rights litigation in the State of Florida, and I come to make a statement with that background, because I would suggest that there is not a lawyer in the country today who has appeared before Judge Carswell on more cases with specific reference to civil rights matters, and indeed on each occasion on which I appeared before Judge Carswell, it was in connection with a civil rights case.

I come here, however, not as a staff member of the NAACP legal defense fund, but to represent the National Conference of Black Lawyers. Our organization was founded in Virginia in December of 1968, to challenge the racism in our legal system, to articulate the needs of the black community, and to provide the legal expertise necessary in the black American's struggle for equality. We number in our ranks attorneys representing the entire spectrum of both the private and public sectors, as well as elected governmental officials from the local, State and national levels.

On behalf of the National Conference of Black Lawyers, I come before you today to speak in opposition to the confirmation of Judge G. Harrold Carswell. In the view of our organization, Judge Carswell is fit neither professionally nor personally to sit as an Associate Justice of the U S. Supreme Court. The acquisition of equal rights of citizenship for black people in this country has been a long and difficult task and in numerous instances almost totally dependent upon rulings by the Federal courts. As a Federal district judge prior to his recent elevation to the court of appeals, Judge Carswell was in a position to fulfill some of the American promise of equal rights under law. However, in disregard of the civil rights pronouncements of the Supreme Court, Judge Carswell frequently announced prosegregationist rulings which were then reversed by the court of appeals.

Moreover, repeatedly through the use of procedural devices, in cases in which I appeared before him, and the exercise of his broad judicial discretion, Judge Carswell caused unconscionable delay in civil rights cases, and limited their holdings to the narrowest possible scope.

In Augustus v. Board of Public Instruction of Escambia County, Florida, 306 F. 2d 862 (1962) the court of appeals unanimously rejected the school desegregation plan approved by Judge Carswell and required the school board to take further action toward desegregating the public schools. In that case, the court of appeals also unanimously reversed Judge Carswell's procedural ruling which had eliminated the claims of racial discrimination in the assignment of teachers and other school personnel.

Whether as a question of law or one of fact, we do not think that a matter of such importance should be decided on a motion to strike. (306 F2d at 868.)

I would suggest that no competent unbiased judge could have made that kind of blatantly inappropriate ruling which as a matter of Federal procedure was long settled.

In Due v. Tallahassee Theaters Inc., an action against theater managers, city officials, and the county sheriff alleging a conspiracy to enforce segregation, Judge Carswell again dismissed the complaint against some of the defendants and granted summary judgment as to another.

The court of appeals again reversed Judge Carswell, and in many of these cases you will note that no elaborate description of the law is given because none is needed, because the law was firmly settled on these procedural points at that time. Judge Carswell took these procedural devices, I would suggest, as a means of delaying the civil rights goal.

The court in that case said:

"The orders of the trial court dismissing the complaint for failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted can be quickly disposed of. These orders were clearly in error. (333 F. 2d 630 (1964) at 631.)"

Singleton v. Board of Commissioners of State Institutions was a case in which I was counsel. This was a case which arose out of the St. Augustine demonstration. We had four young black children ranging in age from 14 to 16 years old, who were incarcerated in the State reformatory for participation in a sit-in demonstration which subsequently was found to be unconstitutional. We were trying to get the children released from the reformatory. We filed a writ of habeas corpus asserting that the incarceration was illegal.

At this time the children had not even been convicted. We were simply trying to get them out of the reformatory prior to their trials. The trial judge in St. Augustine held children were not entitled to bail, so that adults who were arrested in the same demonstration were released and these four children were put into the State reformatory.

We tried all sorts of collateral proceedings in the State court to have the children released. We then decided that tactically the only way we could get those children out of that reformatory was to take the risk of filing a suit to desegregate that reformatory.

The reformatory was in fact segregated from top to bottom, with the black children being kept in what I can only describe as shacks, while the white children were put in the new buildings on the grounds.

We were running one of two risks: That the children would be kept in the reformatory and subjected to harassment, or that the reformatory officials would want to get these troublemakers out. Fortunately, they did the latter, and within 2 weeks after filing our complaint in the Federal district court, the children were released from the reformatory.

I note also they were released prior to the time they were supposed to be released. I anticipated that Judge Carswell would at that point dismiss our complaint to desegregate the reformatories. That is precisely what Judge Carswell did. And, I took Judge Carswell up on appeal, and he was reversed.

He asserted that the case was moot because our four plaintiffs were no longer in the reformatory. Again, I suggest to you that it was either one of two things, either judicial incompetence or bias, because the law was fairly settled that when a major public institution such as those State reformatories were proven to be segregated, that the case was not moot on the set of facts which Judge Carswell had before him.

I will not repeat the long period of delay and dilatory tactics which Judge Carswell adopted in the Steele case.

Senator TYDINGS. What case?

Mr. CLARK. The Steele case, Steele v. Board of Public Instruction of Leon Country, which Congressman Conyers has given you the details on. It took me, and I was counsel in that case, from May of 1964 until May of 1967 to secure a change in a desegregation plan where I was prepared to prove in 1964 that in a black school population of 16,000 students, only four students were attending white schools, and Judge Carswell did not see fit to revise that desegregation plan.

Senator TYDINGS. Would you tell us a little bit about it? I think that the Steele case is a very important case. You go into a little more detail in your statement, and I think it would be interesting for the Senators to hear a little bit more about how that case was delayed for 3 years.

Mr. CLARK. We followed the typical process after a suit has already been filed in a county, as had been done in this county. It was to bring on a motion for further relief.

At the point where it was clear that the desegregation plan was not working, and in 1964 it was impossible for any judge sitting anywhere in the Fifth Circuit to not know that four children out of 16,000 was an inadequate plan, we filed a motion for further relief.

This was the appropriate form to revise the desegregation plan. We could not get a hearing, and I finally had to file a motion for a hearing. These hearings in other courts and before other judges, when they were filed were granted as a matter of course. That is, the filing of the motion meant you got a hearing date, and I would suggest also that the periods of time that it took to get a hearing before Judge Carswell were inordinately long, if I compared it to my appearance before other judges in the State of Florida, and I appeared before practically every judge in that State, including a few who are now on the Court of Appeals.

When we got our hearing, then there was another delay before you get a ruling, and then when the ruling came, it did not address itself to the basic issue in the motion, namely, a revision of the plan.

Judge Carswell at that point told us that the defendants were complying with his previous order, which was not the point of the motion at all. We were saying, look, this plan is not working, and it must be revised. So we don't get a ruling.

Now, I suggest that that, again, is either one of two things, either it is judge who has not read your papers, and therefore does not know what your basic allegations are, or has deliberately ignored your basic allegations, because as any lawyer who knows anything about procedural matters would know, at that point you could not take an appeal; because if you took an appeal, the appellate court would say: But the judge has not addressed himself to your basic allegations, so therefore we don't know what his ruling is.

So you could bounce up, get essentially a meaningless kind of statement from the court of appeals, and you would be right back in the district court and, again, you would have lost 5 or 6 months, and I suggest that from my view Carswell knew that.

We then had to file a motion asking him: Would you please rule on our motion, and finally we got from Judge Carswell this statement, because I asked for a ruling on a motion or at least a hearing, so we could produce evidence to show him how this desegregation plan was operating.

Judge Carswell's statement in ruling on my motion was that no evidence could persuade the court to reorganize a desegregation plan, and evidence to that end "would just be an idle gesture regardless of the nature of the testimony."

Now, I can only read that as a statement that no matter what we showed Judge Carswell about the inadequacy of the desegregation plan, some 7 or 8 years after the Brown decision, that he was not going to review that case.

Now, one can view that as strict construction, literal construction, or one can view it as a deliberate attempt to rule against plaintiffs with limited resources and limited amounts of money, and limited numbers of lawyers, and say: All right, take me up. Get me reversed.

If I had had time, I could document now at least 12 or 13 other instances in which Judge Carswell ruled against us on subsidiary motions for subsidiary points of law, in which he was wrong, but in which we could not take an appeal because we literally did not have the money and the time, and we had to devote our energies to other priorities.

For example: in NAACP v. The State Board of Parks, I filed a suit to desegregate the State Parks. In 1964, all of the State Parks in the State of Florida were segregated. Brochures were sent out announcing to black people as to which parks they could attend and which parks whites could attend. There were racial signs up at entrances.

We could prove this. It was a very simple matter of proof. We had photographs, we had witnesses, and indeed when the other side came in, they admitted that the parks were segregated and had been segregated. They did not assert that they had at that moment any plan for desegregation. They said that: Well, we will start on it.

So I said to Judge Carswell: But we would like an injunction. I know that they say they are going to start to desegragate the parks, but we would like an injunction. And I believe that under the law we are entitled to it, and indeed we were, because if at that point you prove your case, the defendant cannot come in and say: Oh, I am sorry, I am going to do better in the future.

You have a right to be protected by an injunction of a court of law, so that if the defendant continues this behavior in the future, you have the right to come back in on a contempt proceedings, from which other kinds of consequences flow.

Need I say that Judge Carswell refused the injunction in that case, and asserted that, well, the defendants say they are going to desegregate. We had no way under those circumstances, really, to require reporting from the defendants, which we would have required if there were an injunction.

They could have been made to come back 6 months later and say: We have taken down the signs, we have revised the brochures, we have informed our employees that this is the policy of this board.

We were totally unprotected in that circumstance. We had to rely on the good faith of people who did not see the need to desegregate their institution until we filed suit.

Now, this unfortunately occurred at the time of the St. Augustine demonstrations, with three to four hundred people being arrested every week. There was absolutely no time or energy to spend on that kind of appeal, so we could not take the appeal. But Judge Carswell was wrong.

I do not want to belabor this with the committee; I know you have heard many witnesses today, and a great deal of rhetoric.

Senator TYDINGS. Professor, you take the time. We want to hear everything you have to say.

Mr. CLARK. In closing, let me say this. That the National Conference of Black Lawyers urges this committee to weigh carefully, the analysis we have made of Judge Carswell's suitability for the United States Supreme Court and weigh it along with those others that will be and have been made on his professional and other qualifications.

The constitutional requirement of confirmation by the Senate must mean more than a perfunctory ratification of the President's choice. The Supreme Court plays a unique role in the shaping and growth of our institutions. It describes the contours of freedom and sets the course of national direction. It is the court from which there is no appeal—the last resort of the man who accepts and believes in our system of law.

Whatever may have been Judge Carswell's suitability to serve on a lower Federal court, completely different considerations must come into play when the question is one of a seat on the highest court in the land. We are not in the realm of a simple "liberalism" versus "conservatism" debate. We are in the altogether different dimension of questions concerning our national destiny. Black people do not want their destinies in the hands of G. Harrold Carswell; nor can the Nation as a whole—black and white—afford to have any part of its destiny there.

Black people have long been the victims of the law in this society. It was the law which created, protected and enhanced the institution of American chattel slavery. It was the law which provided the onerous slave codes to govern in oppressive detail the lives of millions of blacks before their emancipation, and which returned to perform the same function through the notorious Black codes after emancipation.

The Report of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders, May 1, 1968, told the Nation that we live in a racist society. Black people—and in particular, black lawyers—have known this for some time. Thus far, the law has proved inadequate in attempts to remedy this condition, but some advance has been made.

If, relying on the legal system, we are to continue to give our people hope, then that system must give us cause for hope. If we are to continue growing into health as a Nation of free and diverse men, we cannot afford a retreat now from the struggle for racial justice. The ascendance of Judge Carswell to the Bench of the U.S. Supreme Court, as the first step in such a retreat, would dim the light of hope for change through legal means in the hearts of millions of Americans and diminish, worldwide, confidence in the American system of justice.

For all of the foregoing reasons, the National Conference of Black Lawyers respectfully, but vigorously, urges this august committee to disapprove the nomination of George Harrold Carswell to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Senator BURDICK. Thank you, Professor Clark.

Senator Kennedy?

Senator KENNEDY. Professor, while I missed the earlier part of your testimony, I did come in at the time that you were describing your own personal experience in trying cases before Judge Carswell. You testified to that, I believe.

Mr. CLARK. Yes, I did.

Senator KENNEDY. And you have practiced quite extensively in the other Districts of Florida, as well?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct. Perhaps I should describe that in some detail. I was on the staff of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund. The senior lawyers had areas, geographical areas, which they were to supervise, and Florida was one of the States that was under my supervision. Now that meant that I knew every single lawyer in the State of Florida who practiced civil rights law, white and black, and indeed I know what their evaluation of Carswell was. In a sense I tried to manage the flow, you know, the ebb and flow of litigation, what was to be filed, what appeals would be taken, trying to deploy lawyers in areas where there were few lawyers who would handle civil rights matters, so that in that capacity I not only got to know the civil rights lawyers but I had to appear in practically every district court in the State of Florida.

Senator KENNEDY. How many times did you appear before Judge Carswell?

Mr. CLARK. I would say at least nine or 10 times.

Senator KENNEDY. And as far as the other districts in Florida, this was an area of prime responsibility for you. Did you appear in the middle district nine or 10 times?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, that is true.

Senator KENNEDY. And in other districts as well in the State of Florida about a similar number of times, or did the nature of your practice bring you more often in front of Judge Carswell?

Mr. CLARK. I would say my practice or appearances in Jacksonville, Fla., and Tallahassee were roughly equal. I appeared before Judge Brian Simpson when he was on the Federal district bench at that time, and before Judge McRae in Jacksonville. To some extent in Tampa, Fla., to a lesser extent in a place like Miami. They had fewer segregation problems in that area of the State.

Senator KENNEDY. And your comment regarding the judge's attitude on civil rights questions is really based upon your own extensive personal experience in terms of appearances before the judge, as well as preparing your appearances before the judges, and his attitudes on these questions, and your appearances before other Federal judges and their attitudes as well?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct.

Senator KENNEDY. And based upon that experience over how many years?

Mr. CLARK. From 1962 through 1968, roughly 6 years.

Senator KENNEDY. And it is based upon that personal experience, plus your own rather unique background, that you express the serious reservations for yourself and the group which you represent in terms of the attitude of the nominee toward civil rights cases and attorneys?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct. I have said this before to the press, and I will repeat it for the benefit of this committee.

Judge Carswell was the most hostile Federal District Court judge I have ever appeared before with respect to civil rights matters.

Senator KENNEDY. That is a very serious charge, and I hope you would be prepared to justify that claim and that charge.

Mr. CLARK. Well, let me say I have gone through in my testimony many of the cases, and I am sure there will be other persons who will appear before you who privy to Mary Kurzan's doctoral thesis. I, by the way, was probably the first to receive the thesis. Mary Kurzan was a friend of my wife when she was at the Yale Law School, and so I saw the document, but I had had by that time extensive experience with Carswell.

Let me talk a bit about his demeanor with respect to lawyers. And I say that with this caveat: I believe that the documentation as to his judicial performance is much more important than his demeanor with respect to myself and other civil rights attorneys.

Judge Carswell was insulting and hostile, I have been in Judge Carswell's court on at least one occasion in which he turned his chair away from me when I was arguing. I have said for publication, and I repeat it here, that it is not, it was not an infrequent experience for Judge Carswell to deliberately disrupt your argument and cut across you, while according, by the way, to opposing counsel every courtesy possible.

It was not unusual for Judge Carswell to shout at a black lawyer who appeared before him while using a civil tone to opposing counsel. But I mention those as asides, really, and I don't think them important because I am sophisticated enough, and other lawyers, black lawyers who appeared before him, were sophisticated enough to sustain that kind of personal insult.

What I am concerned about is whether it indicates that Judge Carswell is not only a political segregationist but is a personal segregationist, because that will have a great deal to do with whether or not this man can change when he is in a different environment.

Is Carswell, a man who really, personally, does not like black people? That is the question which you will have to answer, it seems to me.

With respect to what happened to us, to some extent we expect that kind of thing. And I don't think it is as important as his record, but I put it before you for whatever it is worth.

Senator KENNEDY. How many Federal district judges have you appeared before or practiced before?

Mr. CLARK. I would say I have appeared before, maybe, 10, 11, 12 district court judges, ranging from Florida to Alabama and Mississippi. I have appeared before Judge Clayton when he was in Senator Eastland's State. I have appeared before Judge Algood in Birmingham, Ala.; Frank Johnson in Alabama; so that I have had a fair contact with men functioning at that level of the district.

Senator KENNEDY. No further questions.

Senator BURDICK. Senator Hruska?

Senator HRUSKA. No questions.

Senator TYDINGS. In response to Senator Kennedy's question, you said you had appeared before other judges in the South such as Frank Johnson of Alabama. Have you ever been insulted or treated rudely in any other Federal District Court?

Mr. CLARK. No.

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Kennedy was interrogating you about your overall supervision of the lawyers involved in voting rights and other civil rights litigation. You said because of your work and supervision, that you knew personally and were in contact with lawyers, black and white, who handled civil rights litigation in Florida. Is that true?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. What was their evaluation of Judge Carswell insofar as his ability to be fair and unbiased toward black and white lawyers representing civil rights petitioners?

Mr. CLARK. I have not polled them since this nomination became a possibility, but I can tell you on the basis of general conversation with them that it was the view of the lawyers in the State that Carswell was the most difficult judge you could appear before, and indeed whenever I took a young lawyer into the State, and he or she was to appear before Carswell, I usually spent the evening before making them go through their argument while I harassed them, as preparation for what they would meet the following day.

Senator TYDINGS. You mentioned a treatise by a woman named Kurzan. Would you describe for the committee that treatise to which you referred?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, Mary Kurzan is the young woman who is married to Mike Kurzan, an attorney here in Washington, D.C., and she did her doctoral thesis at Yale University on a performance of Federal District Court judges from 1953 through 1963, so that essentially her document is a supplement to the testimony I have given here.

I have talked only about cases occurring after 1963. And indeed I was not involved in the cases that she used for her thesis. She used a number of indices of essentially whether or not a decision was pro-civil rights or anti-civil rights, and she used the more crucial index, that is the number of times the man had been reversed on appeal, and her study included 31 district court judges throughout the South, and their performance in the civil rights area.

Using these two indices of a pro- or anti-civil rights decision and the number of reversals, she found that Judge Carswell was 23d on a spectrum of 31 judges, moving toward the segregationist spectrum. She also found that his reversal record was above 50 percent, and she had private anonymous evaluations from men at the court of appeals level that if a given Federal district court judge was reversed over 50 percent of the time in any given area of the law, they would consider that poor performance.

Senator TYDINGS. Did you ever discuss with Mrs. Kurzan her evaluation of Judge Carswell?

Mr. CLARK. No, I did not. She was working solely from documents, recorded cases in the Federal supplements or through the Race Relations Law Reporter, so I would imagine that her evaluation really would arise out of her report.

It is a fairly long document, I would say some 35 or 40 pages, in which, by the way, I think one of her conclusions was that many of the Republican judges in the South were the best men in the civil rights area, so that on the basis of her documents, and certainly my experience in the South, those men who were Republicans were quite often the most liberal on the civil rights issue, and it would seem to me that even if the President had to choose a Republican and had to choose a southerner, that he had a spectrum of judges who functioned with integrity around that issue, which is very crucial.

Senator TYDINGS. Professor Clark, you are quoted in Time magazine of February 2, 1970, at page 9, and I just want to ask you if this quote is correct that, "He," referring to Carswell, "was probably the most hostile judge I have ever appeared before. He was insulting to black lawyers, and he rarely would let me finish a sentence."

Is that quote correct?

Mr. CLARK. Surprisingly, yes.

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that Professor Clark's entire statement be incorporated in the record at this point.

Senator BURDICK. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATEMENT OF THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF BLACK LAWYERS BEFORE THE UNITED STATES SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

I represent the National Conference of Black Lawyers. Our organization was founded in Capahosic, Virginia in December, 1968 to challenge the racism in our legal system, to articulate the needs of the black community and to provide the legal expertise necessary in the black American's struggle for equality. We number in our ranks attorneys representing the entire spectrum of both the private and public sectors, as well as elected governmental officials from the local, state and national levels.

On behalf of the National Conference of Black Lawyers, I come before you today to speak in opposition to the confirmation of Judge G. Harrold Carswell. In the view of our organization, Judge Carswell is fit neither professionally nor personally to sit as an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court. The acquisition of equal rights of citizenship for black people in this country has been a long and difficult task and in numerous instances almost totally dependent upon rulings by the federal courts. As a federal district judge prior to his recent elevation to the Court of Appeals, Judge Carswell was in a position to fulfill some of the American promise of equal rights under law. However, in disregard of the civil rights pronouncements of the Supreme Court, Judge Carswell frequently announced pro-segregationist rulings which were then reversed by the Court of Appeals. Moreover, repeatedly through the use of procedural devices and the exercise of his broad judicial discretion, Judge Carswell caused unconscionable delay in civil rights cases, and limited their holdings to the narrowest possible scope.

In Augustus v. Board of Public Instruction of Escambia County, Fla., 306 F2d862 [1962] the Court of Appeals unanimously rejected the school desegregation plan approved by Judge Carswell and required the school board to take further action toward desegregating the public schools. In that case, the Court of Appeals also unanimously reversed Judge Carswell's procedural ruling which had eliminated the claims of racial discrimination in the assignment of teachers and other school personnel.

Whether as a question of law or one of fact, we do not think that a matter of such importance should be decided on a motion to strike, 306 F2d at 868.

In Due v. Tallahassee Theaters Inc., an action against theater managers, city officials and the county sheriff alleging a conspiracy to enforce segregation, Judge Carswell dismissed the complaint against some of the defendants and granted summary judgment as to another. The Court of Appeals unanimously reversed and stated:

The orders of the trial court dismissing the complaint for failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted can be quickly disposed of. These orders were clearly in error. 333 F.2d 630 [1964] at 631.

In Singleton v. Board of Commissioners of State Institutions, an action to desegregate Florida reform schools, Judge Carswell again dismissed the complaint and again the Court of Appeals reversed unanimously. 356 F2d771 [1966].

The school desegregation case, Steele v. Board of Public Instruction of Leon County, graphically illustrates Judge Carswell's practice of delaying civil rights litigation for extraordinary periods of time, giving defendants additional time under a segregated system.

In this case black plaintiffs filed a motion for further relief on May 7, 1964. May 26, 1964 the court sustained defendants school boards objections to interrogatories inquiring into teacher segregation. No further hearings were ordered before school opened and September 28, 1964 plaintiffs filed a motion for a hearing. January 20, 1965 the court found defendants to be in compliance with the outstanding order entered in 1963. February 15, 1965, plaintiffs filed a motion for hearing requesting an opportunity to present evidence on the motion for further relief noting that the January 20, 1965 order made no mention of the additional relief requested in the motion for further relief filed the previous May. April 5, 1965, plaintiff renewed the motion for further relief and asked for clarification as to whether the court intended to deny the motion for further relief by its order of January 20th. April 7, 1965, the court granted the motion for clarification declaring that the motion for further relief was denied, as it sought to change the basic structure of the desegregation plan.

A hearing was set for April 20th to determine if there was any necessity for an evidentiary hearing to reexamine the ruling on the motion for further relief. April 20th, the court reaffirmed its denial of the motion for further relief stating that no evidence could persuade the court to reorganize the desegregation plan and evidence to that end "would just be an idle gesture regardless of the nature of the testimony." Plaintiffs appealed to the Court of Appeals which remanded the case on January 18, 1967 for consideration in the light of its decision in United States v. Jefferson County Board of Education, 372 F2d 836. This was tantamount to a reversal. It was not until May 1, 1967 that Judge Carswell finally entered a Jefferson decree, requiring the school board to follow the standard as enunciated by the Supreme Court. At the time of filing the motion for further relief, in early 1964, there were already at that time, several Fifth Circuit and Supreme Court decisions entitling plaintiffs to the relief sought.

Nor has Judge Carswell's failure to follow the dictates of the Supreme Court in civil rights cases been limited to the distant past. In 1968, the Supreme Court ruled unanimously that school desegregation plans must offer a realistic promise of immediately integrating the schools in order to comply with the school boards duty to eliminate the racially segregated school systems created under segregation laws and practices. The Court particularly criticized the freedom of choice method of school desegregation then in widespread use throughout the South.

Green vs. County School Board of New Kent County, Va., 391 U.S. 430 (1968). Black plaintiffs filed motions for relief consistent with Green in the three school cases pending before Judge Carswell. Despite the Green decision, Judge Carswell entered orders allowing the continued use of freedom of choice in all three cases. The Court of Appeals unanimously reversed all three of Judge Carswell's rulings. Wright vs. Board of Public Instruction of Alachua County, Fla.; and Youngblood vs. Board of Public Instruction of Bay County, Fla., (both decided en banc sub nom Singleton vs. Jackson Municipal Separate School System 5th Cir. No. 25285 Dec. 1, 1969). Steele vs. Board of Public Instruction of Leon County, Fla., No. 28143 5th Cir decided Dec. 12, 1969.

In his entire record as a district court judge, Judge Carswell was affirmed in only one of the seven appeals taken from his rulings on civil rights cases—his denial of relief to a Negro teacher seeking the opportunity to teach in an integrated school. Knowles vs. Board of Public Instruction of Leon County, Fla., 405 F. 2d 1206 (1969). We submit that this record evidences a strong judicial bias against blacks asserting civil rights claims which should not be rewarded with confirmation as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

In recent times, we have become increasingly aware of the importance of scrutinizing a judge's conduct off the bench as well as his judicial craftsmanship. In this regard, Judge Carswell must be found severely deficient.

In 1948, Mr. Carswell, while seeking public office, appealed for public support on the basis of some of the most blatantly racist assertions imaginable. His speech contained the following remarks:

I am a Southerner by ancestry, birth, training, inclination, belief and practice. And I believe that segregation of the races is proper and the only practical and correct way of life in our states. I have always so believed and I shall always so act.

If my own brother were to advocate such a program [of integration], I would be compelled to take issue with him and to oppose him to the limit of my ability.

I yield to no man, as a fellow citizen, in the firm, vigorous belief in the principles of white supremacy, and I shall always be so governed. (Taken from New York Times, January 22, 1970, p. 15)

More recently in 1956, while serving as United States Attorney, Judge Carswell participated as an incorporator, in the conversion of a municipally controlled golf club to a privately controlled country club which excludes blacks from membership or guest privileges.

A person with the types of segregationists personal involvements and demonstrated judicial hostility to blacks is simply not suited to sit on the nation's highest court. Surely in 1970 a non-white litigant should not be forced to plead his case before a Supreme Court which includes a jurist who has made and acted upon such blatant racial assertions.

The National Conference of Black Lawyers urges this Committee to weigh carefully the analysis we have made of Judge Carswell's suitability for the United States Supreme Court and weigh it along with those others that will be and have been made on his professional and other qualifications. The constitutional requirement of confirmation by the Senate must mean more than a perfunctory ratification of the President's choice. The Supreme Court plays a unique role in the shaping and growth of our institutions. It describes the contours of freedom and sets the course of national direction. It is the court from which there is no appeal—the last resort of the man who accepts and believes in our system of law. Its impact and influence transcends administrations to determine and characterize whole eras of our history as a people. Whatever may have been Judge Carswell's suitability to serve on a lower federal court, completely different considerations must come into play when the question is one of a seat on the highest court in the land. We are not in the realm of a simple "liberalism" versus "conservatism" debate. We are in the all together different dimension of questions concerning our national destiny. Black people do not want their destinies in the hands of G. Harrold Carswell; nor can the nation as a whole—black and white—afford to have any part of its destiny there.

Black people have long been the victims of the law in this society. It was the law which created, protected and enhanced the institution of American chattel slavery. It was the law which provided the onerous slave codes to govern in oppressive detail the lives of millions of blacks before their emancipation, and which returned to perform the same function through the notorious Black Codes after emancipation. It was with the law that the racist architects of segregation built a Jim Crow society which is still intact a decade and a half after Brown vs. Board of Education and more than a century after the Emancipation Proclamation.

The Report of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders (May 1, 1968) told the nation that we live in a racist society. Black people—and in particular, black lawyers—have known this for some time. Thus far the law has proved inadequate in attempts to remedy this condition, but some advance has been made. If, relying on the legal system, we are to continue to give our people hope, then that system must give us cause for hope. If we are to continue growing into health as a nation of free and diverse men, we cannot afford a retreat now from the struggle for racial justice. The ascendance of Judge Carswell to the bench of the United States Supreme Court, as the first step in such a retreat, would dim the light of hope for change through legal means in the hearts of millions of Americans and diminish, worldwide, confidence in the American system of justice.

For all of the foregoing reasons, the National Conference of Black Lawyers respectfully, but vigorously, urges this august Committee to disapprove the nomination of George Harrold Carswell to the United States Supreme Court.

CONTINUATION OF TESTIMONY

Senator KENNEDY. Thank you very much.

Mr. CLARK. Thank you.

Senator BURDICK. Senator Thurmond.

Senator THURMOND. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. No question.

Senator BURDICK. Senator Cook?

Senator COOK. No questions. Thank you for appearing.

Senator BURDICK. Senator Mathias?

Senator MATHIAS. I would like to thank Dr. Clark for his conclusive testimony. It is very impressive.

Senator BURDICK. I believe that I have just a few questions.

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

Senator BURDICK. You referred to some situations where you deemed Judge Carswell had decided wrongly but that for various reasons there was no appeal taken, so that we had no judicial determination whether he was right or wrong?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct, and indeed perhaps I shouldn't have referred to that.

Senator BURDICK. What appeals did you take during your experience down there in Florida? Can you name the cases?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Senator BURDICK. Do you have them in the record?

Mr. CLARK. I don't remember them all, but Singleton v. The Board of Commissioners of State Institutions, Steele v. Board of Public Instruction of Leon County. I am not sure but the Steele case might have gone up twice. And I was involved in the Augustus case, but I was not included on the brief at that time. I did research, but I had not been admitted to the bar.

Senator BURDICK. These two you handled, though?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, in Singleton and Steele, I was the prime lawyer.

Senator BURDICK. How far did those cases go?

Mr. CLARK. Singleton went to the court of appeals, and Steele went to the court of appeals.

Senator BURDICK. And what was the result?

Mr. CLARK. In Singleton, Judge Carswell was reversed. In Steele, so much time had gone by that the court had gone beyond even what I was requesting in my early relief in 1964, and they remanded the case and ordered the judge to revise the order in the light of the Jefferson case, which occurred at 372 F. 2d 836, but during the entire course of the proceedings from 1964 until May of 1967 there was absolutely no move made with respect to the court order in that case.

Senator BURDICK. The Singleton case was reversed?

Mr. CLARK. That is right.

Senator BURDICK. Are there any other cases?

Mr. CLARK. As I say, I worked on Augustus and that was reversed.

Senator BURDICK. And this is in your full statement, is it?

Mr. CLARK. That is right.

Senator BURDICK. Are there further questions?

Senator MATHIAS. Mr. Chairman, just one further thing, following up the question that you raised.

Senator BURDICK. Proceed.

Senator MATHIAS. You say there were a number of motions that, for lack of money, time, or people, you had to let go by the board. Can you estimate the number?

Mr. CLARK. It would be a loose statement, but I would say that, given the fact that I handled about nine or 10 cases in his court, and we were constantly trying to get revisions of the segregation plans, it must have occurred maybe 10 or 12 times, something like that, in which I took no appeal, so perhaps it is not appropriate to comment, but I felt that the judge had ruled against us on subsidiary issues of law, and it was clear that we had a right to get the relief which was requested.

In many instances, it was questions about the scope of discovery, how much could we inquire into the extent of teacher segregation, and the judge would cut off or limit the scope of the inquiry, things like that.

Senator MATHIAS. Were these matters which you felt were substantial?

Mr. CLARK. No.

Senator MATHIAS. Or would they have had an ultimate impact on the outcome of the litigation?

Mr. CLARK. They had an impact of slowing down litigation, but we had to make judgments in terms of priorities, so that if we felt that there was a major impediment to be created by a decision, then we took an appeal.

For instance, if a complaint were dismissed, which meant we would get no relief whatsoever, then in those instances we would take an appeal, but if it simply meant you would lose 6 months, or even sometimes a year, then we sometimes did not take an appeal.

Senator MATHIAS. Your feeling is that, taken as a body, that this amounted to a dilatory tactic?

Mr. CLARK. That was my impression, that that was the effect of it.

Senator MATHIAS. If you had been counsel for a large corporation with a big legal staff and plenty of money, would you have advised appeal?

Mr. CLARK. Then my testimony might here have gone on all day.

Senator BURDICK. Any other questions?

(No response.)

Senator BURDICK. Thank you.

The next witness will be Mr. Thomas Harris. I presume you have to be sworn, Mr. Harris.

Do you swear on this matter before the committee that you will tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you, God?

Mr. CHURCH. Does the Senator have reference to page 227?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

In response to a question from the Senator from Massachusetts with respect to a public statement Mr. Clark had made, Mr. Clark responded in the following manner:

Mr. CLARK. That is correct. I have said this before to the press, and I will repeat it for the benefit of this committee.

Judge Carswell was the most hostile Federal District Court judge I have ever appeared before with respect to civil rights matters.

Senator Kennedy said:

That is a very serious charge.

Which indeed it was, particularly in view of the fact that Mr. Clark tried cases before judges throughout the South, not just in the State of Florida.

Mr. CLARK. Well, let me say I have gone through in my testimony many of the cases, and I am sure there will be other persons who will appear before you who are privy to Mary Kurzan's doctoral thesis.

He is referring now to a thesis prepared by a Yale law student which shows Mr. Carswell very, very low on a proficiency rating. Back to Mr. Clark's testimony.

Let me talk a bit about his demeanor with respect to lawyers. And I say that with this caveat: I believe that the documentation as to his judicial performance is much more important than his demeanor with respect to myself and other civil rights attorneys.

I do not necessarily agree with Mr. Clark on that point, but let us concede that point.

Judge Carswell was insulting and hostile. I have been in Judge Carswell's court on at least one occasion in which he turned his chair away from me when I was arguing. I have said for publication, and I repeat it here, that it is not, it was not an infrequent experience for Judge Carswell to deliberately disrupt your argument and cut across you, while according, by the way, to opposing counsel every courtesy possible.

As a lawyer who has tried many cases, in my judgment, there is no more despicable conduct a judge can engage in than showing outright preference to one lawyer over another lawyer in the trial of a case. This undermines the fundamental constitutional system of judicial fairness under our system of law.

Let me go on:

It was not unusual for Judge Carswell to shout at a black lawyer who appeared before him while using a civil tone to opposing counsel. But I mentioned those as asides, really, and I don't think them important, because I am sophisticated enough, and other lawyers, black lawyers who appeared before him, were sophisticated enough to sustain that kind of personal insult.

What I am concerned about is whether it indicates that Judge Carswell is not only a political segregationist but is a personal segregationist, because that will have a great deal to do with whether or not this man can change when he is in a different environment.

Is Carswell a man who really, personally, does not like black people? That is the question which you will have to answer, it seems to me.

With respect to what happened to us, to some extent we expect that kind of thing. And I don't think it is as important as his record, but I put it before you for whatever it is worth.

I would have to ask the Senator from Idaho whether or not the Senator agrees with me, and perhaps disagrees with Mr. Clark, that the manner in which a judge treats litigants, particularly poor and unpopular litigants in his court, is a fundamental sign of his basic judicial temperament and his ability to be a judge.

Mr. CHURCH. Of course it is. His demeanor is a mirror of his own deeply held personal feelings. If he is unable, while sitting on the court, to restrain himself, it is a serious reflection on his capacity as a judge.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me just direct the Senator's attention to one other paragraph in the testimony of Mr. Clark. He responded to a question I directed to him.

Mr. CHURCH. On what page?

Mr. TYDINGS. Page 228. This is directed to Mr. Clark:

Senator TYDINGS. Senator Kennedy was interrogating you about your overall supervision of the lawyers involved in voting rights and other civil rights litigation. You said because of your work and supervision, that you knew personally and were in contact with lawyers, black and white, who handled civil rights litigation in Florida. Is that true?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct.

Senator TYDINGS. What was their evaluation of Judge Carswell insofar as his ability to be fair and unbiased toward black and white lawyers representing civil rights petitioners?

Mr. CLARK. I have not polled them since this nomination became a possibility, but I can tell you on the basis of general conversation with them that it was the view of the lawyers in that State that Carswell was the most difficult judge you could appear before, and indeed whenever I took a young lawyer into the State, and he or she was to appear before Carswell, I usually spent the evening before making them go through their argument while I harassed them, as preparation for what they would meet the following day.)

Would the Senator agree that the ability to give a fair trial and not to prejudge because of your personal biases or prejudices is as important as whether or not you have owned a security or have failed to mention a security which you owned in a company that was involved in litigation or matter before your court?

Mr. CHURCH. I think that the attribute to which the Senator refers is really indispensable in a man who would be a competent judge.

Let me say that implicit in the Senator's question is the assumption many Members of the Senate have come to make, which is that when it comes to passing upon a Presidential nominee, it is somehow bad form to vote against him unless there is some evidence of illegal or unethical conduct on the part of the nominee that has cropped up in the course of the hearing. If we are going to exercise our confirmation power only in those rare, unusual cases where that kind of evidence is uncovered, then we have narrowed it almost to the point where it becomes meaningless.

I can understand why Presidents want us to view our powers in this restricted way, because it naturally tends to reduce the importance of the Senate in our political life. But I find it hard to understand how readily Senators acquiesce in this demeaning definition of the senatorial role. Yet, this has happened to us—even though our history shows that it was not so intended by the Founding Fathers, and that it was not so practiced by the Senate in the last century; and I would hope——

Mr. TYDINGS. It will not be.

Mr. CHURCH. That as a result of this debate, and as a result of the earlier deliberation of the Senate on the nomination of Judge Haynsworth, that finally we are awakening again to our constitutional duty.

I think that the questions which the distinguished Senator from Maryland has raised have been penetrating questions and have been very helpful in making the record against the confirmation of the nomination of Judge Carswell.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that the distinguished Senator from Idaho has made a great contribution. I think it is important that the people of the United States know that the man whose name has been sent to the Senate for confirmation as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States is, as Dean Pollak described him, a man of the most slender credentials. I think it is important that they know his entire record. I think that before this debate is over they will know that entire record. I think that when the time comes, the Senate will vote against the nomination and discharge its responsibilities to the American people and will not be a rubber-stamp of the President of the United States.

Mr. CHURCH. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I join the distinguished Senator from Maryland and others in commending the distinguished Senator from Idaho for an excellent and helpful address with regard to the confirmation of Judge Carswell.

Particularly do I commend the Senator for his commentary upon the constitutional responsibilities of the Senate, especially in regard to confirmation of appointments by the President. I think the distinguished Senator from Idaho has pointed out usefully and well the extra importance of appointment to the Supreme Court as distinguished from other appointments of the President.

In recent days, I have heard a report which I thought I might ask the Senator from Idaho to comment upon; namely, an article in the Philadelphia Enquirer recently which reported that President Nixon was supposed to have said that if the Senate should reject the nomination of Judge Carswell, he might thereafter appoint another person who would be even less to the liking of those of us who oppose this nomination.

I have also heard from sincerely concerned Members of the Senate from time to time the question: What, if we were to turn down this nomination, and get one that we like even less.

What would be the response of the Senator in that regard?

Mr. CHURCH. I have seen this commentary in the press. I think it needs to be rebutted. I cannot think of a less persuasive argument than that we should confirm the present nominee because, if we do not, then the next one may be worse.

The answer to that specious argument is simple enough: If the President keeps sending us nominees who rate lower and lower on the scale of qualifications that should properly apply to the Supreme Court, then the Senate should continue to reject them, and should go on rejecting them until the President sends us a man who qualifies to serve on the Supreme Court of the United States.

That is what our power is for. That is why it is in the Constitution. We are duty bound as Senators to discharge that power in a responsible way.

If the Senate were to reject this nomination, I have no doubt the President would get the message, and the next nomination he would make would be one that meets the high standards that should apply to so important a post.

The Senate had no difficulty confirming the new Chief Justice of the United States. He was nominated by President Nixon. We found him fully to qualify and we confirmed the appointment.

There is nothing of a partisan character in our opposition to Judge Carswell, but clearly this man lacks those elements of distinction in his own career as a judge on the Federal bench that should be necessary to qualify him for service on the Supreme Court of the United States.

Thus the answer is, Keep rejecting nominations which are deficient until the President sends up here the name of a man who meets the criteria that properly should apply to the Supreme Court of the United States.

If we reject Judge Carswell, I do not think that we will get a worse nomination. I think that we will get a much better one. The next nomination, in all likelihood, will be one that we can readily confirm.

Mr. HARRIS. I certainly agree with the response of the distinguished Senator from Idaho. I think that his comments should set at rest what has been a spurious argument used by some and the concern expressed by others. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Idaho. I think that we must presume, if the Senate makes its position clear, that that message will be received clearly by the President of the United States. I also think that fear of a repeated error by the President is not the proper basis upon which the Senate should exercise its constitutional responsibilities. I think, instead, that we should presume that the error will not be persisted in, if it is so labeled by the Senate in the pursuance of its duties.

Again I commend the Senator for an excellent address. I hope that it will be heard throughout the country as well as in the Senate.

Mr. CHURCH. I thank the Senator very much for his comments.

(At this point Mr. GRAVEL took the chair as Presiding Officer.)

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I yield.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I had the good fortune to be sitting in the chair as the Senator from Idaho was advancing his ideas. There is great merit in his thought that when it comes to confirmation, there is one set of rules which should apply for the executive branch, which is under the President, but it is not the same thing when we are dealing with confirmation to office in the third branch of Government, the judiciary, which is not under the direction of the President. But, I must add here, we have already confirmed Judge Carswell twice for the courts.

How would the Senator from Idaho equate those confirmations with the present, strong views held against him? Should not those views have come to light before? Should not they have surfaced earlier?

Mr. CHURCH. There is no question that they should and would have surfaced earlier if the Senate had the time to make a searching inquiry into every appointment made by the President to the district and appellate courts. Then, I am sure, those objections to Judge Carswell would have surfaced earlier.

But, as the Senator knows, we are so burdened with our workload here that we cannot possibly spread ourselves over the entire appointive field. I think that this is unfortunate but, nonetheless, we must recognize that it is true. As the Constitution prescribes our confirmation role, it covers a vast array of appointive offices. Every time a second lieutenant in Armed Forces of the United States is promoted to a first lieutenant, the confirmation of the Senate is required. We have long lists of appointments that come in here as thick as these hearings on Judge Carswell, and we are asked to confirm them. Naturally, the Government has grown so large, and the Nation so big, that we cannot give the scrutiny we might like to each appointment. But when it comes to the Supreme Court, our duty is plain, because here we are dealing with Justices of great importance on the court of last resort, whose decisions will have a lasting and indelible effect upon the country. As to them, we cannot discharge our duty in a perfunctory way. It is incumbent upon us to make a searching examination of each nominee.

As the Senator has pointed out, twice we failed to do this in the case of Judge Carswell, but in the earlier cases he was not being urged upon us as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. That makes a big difference.

Mr. PELL. I thank the Senator. I think his argument is compelling. I had not properly considered it until it was being advanced at this time, that there is this peculiar situation applying to that small number of people who are appointed to the third branch of the Government.

In connection with the Senator's statement that he thought if Judge Carswell is rejected, we might hope for a nominee of a higher caliber. I gather that the Senator discounts the press reports that the administration was giving thought to sending General LeMay to law school. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Of course, it is true that Senators do not have time to give complete consideration to judges nominated to the lower courts. It happens, however, that Judge Carswell is from my State.

I gave very careful consideration to his nomination both at the time he was appointed to the district court and at the time he was appointed to the circuit court of appeals. In neither case was he my nominee, because he was appointed both times under a Republican administration. On both occasions there were good judges, whom I nominated, who came from the other side of the political scene and who were just as competent.

I did, however, give careful consideration to Judge Carswell. And I would not want the record to be in such a state as to indicate that the two Senators from Florida, simply because a judge came from their State, would be willing to confirm just anyone.

That is not the case. The Senator from Florida was offered a district judgeship himself many years ago, and he turned it down. And he was offered a circuit court judgeship, and he turned it down.

I know something of what is required of judges. And I know that Judge Carswell has a fine record. He was named by all of the judges of the fifth circuit to represent them on the Judicial Conference, which is a matter of great honor and would not have happened unless they regarded him highly.

I had occasion to testify in Judge Carswell's court a number of years ago in the largest case ever tried there. The case was very hotly contested, with some 20 or 30 lawyers involved, some of them lawyers from outside of Florida, one of them a former Attorney General. I sat there all day and answered questions, and many times there were objections to those questions.

I felt and feel now that Judge Carswell handled himself in a careful and fair manner. That was the case of Crummer against du Pont, and others. It involved, as I recall, a $39 million claim for damages and involved alleged gross violations of the antitrust laws of the United States.

After that case was tried and the jury rendered a verdict, the attorneys on the losing side—and there were many and they were capable—both from my State and outside of my State, decided that the record was so clean that they would not appeal the case. That is unusual in a case of that size and of that degree of controversy.

I do not want the record to stand upon the mere statement that we simply gave a rubberstamp approval to Judge Carswell when he was named to the district court, not as my nominee, and when he was named to the circuit court of appeals, not as my nominee, because quite the contrary is true.

On both occasions, I had strong recommendations regarding him, aside from what I knew from my own observation. I had strong nominations from members of the Circuit Court of Florida and of the district court of appeals, which is next to the circuit court, and from circuit court judges as well as some officers of the bar association and numerous other outstanding lawyers.

I would not want the record to appear as some of these columnists and television speakers like to put it, that here is a man who is unqualified, who has not done good work, and who is not entitled to be considered as a candidate for a judgeship on a sound basis.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments of the Senator from Florida. I would be the last to suggest or even intimate that he would support the nomination of Judge Carswell simply because he comes from Florida.

If the Senator from Florida were persuaded that Judge Carswell were not fit to sit on the Supreme Court, the fact that he is a Floridian would have no effect upon him.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for that statement, which I hope is true, and I believe it to be true.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, in conclusion, I ask unanimous consent that the article to which I referred, by Charles L. Black, Jr., Luce professor of law, Yale University Law School, entitled "A Note on Senatorial Consideration of Supreme Court Nominees," which will appear in the April issue of the Yale University Law Journal, be printed here in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A NOTE ON SENATORIAL CONSIDERATION OF SUPREME COURT NOMINEES

(By Charles L. Black, Jr.)

If a President should desire, and if chance should give him the opportunity, to change entirely the character of the Supreme Court, shaping it after his own political image, nothing would stand in his way except the United States Senate. Few constitutional questions are then of more moment than the question whether a Senator properly may, or even at some times in duty must, vote against a nominee to that Court, on the ground that the nominee holds views which, when transposed into judicial judgments, are likely, in the Senator's judgment, to be very bad for the country. It is the purpose of this piece to open discussion of this question; I shall make no pretense of exhausting that discussion, for my own researches have not proceeded for enough to enable me to make that pretense [1] I shall, however, open the discussion by taking, strongly, the position that a Senator, voting on a presidential nomination to the Court, not only may but generally ought to vote in the negative, if he firmly believes, on reasonable grounds, that the nominee's views on the large issues of the day will make it harmful to the country for him to sit and vote on the Court, and that, on the other hand, no Senator is obligated simply to follow the President's lead in this regard, or can rightly discharge his own duty by so doing.

I will open with two prefatory observations.

First, it has been a very long time since anybody who thought about the subject to any effect has been possessed by the illusion that a judge's judicial work is not influenced and formed by his whole lifeview, by his economic and political comprehensions, and by his sense, sharp or vague, or where justice lies in respect of the great questions of his time. The loci classici for this insight, now a platitude, are in such writers as Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., Felix Frankfurter, and Learned Hand. It would be hard to find a well-regarded modern thinker who asserted the contrary. The things which I contend are both proper and indispensable for a Senator's consideration, if he would fully discharge his duty, are things that have definitely to do with the performance of the judicial function. The factors I contend are for the Senator's weighing are factors that go into composing the quality of a judge. The contention that they may not properly be considered therefore amounts to the contention that some things which make a good or bad judge may be considered—unless the Senator is to consider nothing—while others may not.

Secondly, a certain paradox would be involved in a negative answer to the question I have put. For those considerations which I contend are proper for the Senator are considerations which certainly, notoriously, play (and always have played) a large, often a crucial, role in the President's choice of his nominee; the assertion, therefore, that they should play no part in the Senator's decision amounts to an assertion that the authority that must "advise and consent" to a nomination ought not to be guided by considerations which are hugely important in the making of the nomination. One has to ask, "Why?" I am not suggesting now that there can be no answer; I only say that an answer must be given. In the normal case, he who lies under the obligation of making up his mind whether to advise and consent to a step considers the same things that go into the decision whether to take that step. In the normal case, if he does not do this, he is derelict in his duty.

I have called this a constitutional question, and it is that (though it could never reach a court), for it is a question about the allocation of power and responsibility in government. It is natural, then, for American lawyers to look first at the applicable text, for what light it may cast. What expectation seems to be projected by the words, "The President . . . shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate shall appoint . . . Judges of the Supreme Court . . ."? [2] Do these words suggest a rubber-stamp function, confined to screening out proven malefactors? I submit that they do not. I submit that the word "advice," unless its meaning has radically changed since 1787, makes next to impossible that conclusion.

Procedurally, the stage of "advice" has been short-circuited.[3] Nobody could keep the President from doing that, for obvious practical reasons. But why should this procedural short-circuiting have any effect on the substance so strongly suggested by the word "advice"? He who merely consents might do so perfunctorily, though that is not a necessary but merely a possible gloss. He who advises gives or withholds his advice on the basis of all the relevant considerations bearing on decision. Am I wrong about this usage? Can you conceive of sound "advice" which is given by an advisor who has deliberately barred himself from considering some of the things that the person he is advising ought to consider, and does consider? If not, then can the Presidents, by their unreviewable short-circuiting of the "advice" stage, magically have caused to vanish the Senate's responsibility to consider what it must surely consider in "advising"? Or is it not more reasonable to say that, in deciding upon his vote at the single point now left him, every Senator ought to consider everything he would have considered if, procedurally, he were "advising"? Does not the word "advice" permanently and inescapably define the scope of Senatorial consideration?

It is characteristic of our legal culture both to insist upon the textual reference-point, and to be impatient when much is made of it, so I will leave what I have said about this to the reader's consideration, and pass on to ask whether there is anything else in the Constitution itself which compels or suggests a restriction of Senatorial consideration to a few rather than to all of the factors which go to making a good judge. I say there is not; I do not know what it would be. The President has to concur in legislation, unless his veto be overridden. The Senate has to concur in judicial nominations. That is the simple plan. Nothing anywhere suggests that some duty rests on the Senator to vote for a nomination he thinks unwise, any more than a duty rests on the President to sign bills he thinks unwise.

Is there something, then, in the whole structure of the situation, something unwritten, that makes it the duty of a Senator to vote for a man whose views on great questions the Senator believes to make him dangerous as a judge? I think there is not, and I believe I can best make my point by a contrast. The Senate has to confirm—advise and consent to—nominations to posts in the executive department, including cabinet posts. Here, I think, there is a clear structural reason for a Senator's letting the President have pretty much anybody he wants, and certainly for letting him have people of any political views that appeal to him. These are his people; they are to work with him. Wisdom and fairness would give him great latitude, if strict constitutional obligation would not.

Just the reverse, just exactly the reverse, is true of the judiciary. The judges are not the President's people. God forbid! They are not to work with him or for him. They are to be as independent of him as they are of the Senate, neither more nor less. Insofar as their policy-orientations are material—and, as I have said above, these can no longer be regarded as immaterial by anybody who wants to be taken seriously, and are certainly not regarded as immaterial by the President—it is just as important that the Senate think them not harmful as that the President think them not harmful. If this is not true, why is it not? I confess here I cannot so much as anticipate a rational argument to which to address a rebuttal.

I can, however, offer one further argument tending in the same direction. The Supreme Court is a body of great power. Once on the Court, a Justice wields that power without democratic check. This is as it should be. But is it not wise, before that power is put in his hands for life, that a nominee be screened by the democracy in the fullest manner possible, rather than in the narrowest manner possible, under the Constitution? He is appointed by the President (when the President is acting at his best) because the President believes his worldview will be good for the country, as reflected in his judicial performance. The Constitution certainly permits, if it does not compel, the taking of a second opinion on this crucial question, from a body just as responsible to the electorate, and just as close to the electorate, as is the President. Is it not wisdom to take that second opinion in all fullness of scope? If not, again, why not? If so, on the other hand, then the Senator's duty is to vote on his whole estimate of the nominee, for that is what constitutes the taking of the second opinion.

Footnotes at end of article.

Textual considerations, then, and high-political considerations, seem to me strongly to thrust toward the conclusion that a Senator both may and ought to consider the life-view and philosophy of a nominee, before casting his vote. Is there anything definite in history tending in the contrary direction?

In the Constitutional Convention, there was much support for appointment of judges by the Senate alone—a mode which was approved on July 21, 1787.[4] and was carried through into the draft of the Committee of Detail.[5] The change to the present mode came on September 4th, in the report of the Committee of Eleven[6] and was agreed to nem. con. on September 7th.[7] This last vote must have meant that those who wanted appointment by the Senate alone—and in some cases by the whole Congress—were satisfied that a compromise had been reached, and did not think the legislative part in the process had been reduced to the minimum. The whole process, to me, suggests the very reverse of the idea that the Senate is to have a confined role.

I have not reread every word of The Federalist for this opening-gun piece, but I quote here what seem to be the most apposite passages, from Numbers 76 and 77:

"But might not his nomination be overruled? I grant it might, yet this could only be to make place for another nomination by himself. The person ultimately appointed must be the object of his preference, though perhaps not in the first degree. It is also not very probable that his nomination would often be overruled. The Senate could not be tempted, by the preference they might feel to another, to reject the one proposed; because they could not assure themselves, that the person they might wish would be brought forward by a second or by any subsequent nomination. They could not even be certain, that a future nomination would present a candidate in any degree more acceptable to them; and as their dissent might cast a kind of stigma upon the individual rejected, and might have the appearance of a reflection upon the judgment of the chief magistrate, it is not likely that their sanction would often be refused, where there were not special and strong reasons for the refusal.

"To what purpose then require the cooperation of the Senate? I answer, that the necessity of their concurrence would have a powerful, though, in general, a silent operation. It would be an excellent check upon a spirit of favoritism in the President, and would tend greatly to prevent the appointment of unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity. In addition to this, it would be an efficacious source of stability in the administration.

"It will readily be comprehended, that a man who had himself the sole disposition of offices, would be governed much more by his private inclinations and interests, than when he was bound to submit the propriety of his choice to the discussion and determination of a different and independent body, and that body an entire branch of the legislature. The possibility of rejection would be a strong motive to care in proposing. The danger to his own reputation, and, in the case of an elective magistrate, to his political existence, from betraying a spirit of favoritism, or an unbecoming pursuit of popularity, to the observation of a body whose opinion would have great weight in forming that of the public, could not fail to operate as a barrier to the one and to the other. He would be both ashamed and afraid to bring forward, for the most distinguished or lucrative stations, candidates who had no other merit than that of coming from the same State to which he particularly belonged, or of being in some way or other personally allied to him, or of possessing the necessary insignificance and pliancy to render them the obsequious instruments of his pleasure."

If it be said they might sometimes gratify him by an acquiescence in a favorite choice, when public motives might dictate a different conduct, I answer, that the instances in which the President could be personally interested in the result, would be too few to admit of his being materially affected by the compliances of the Senate. The power which can originate the disposition of honors and emoluments, is more likely to attract than to be attracted by the power which can merely obstruct their course. If my influencing the President be meant restraining him, this is precisely what must have been intended. [emphasis supplied] And it has been shown that the restraint would be salutary, at the same time that it would not be such as to destroy a single advantage to be looked for from the uncontrolled agency of that Magistrate. The right of nomination would produce all the good of that of appointment, and would in a great measure avoid as evils.[9]

I cannot see, in these passages, any hint that the Senators may not or ought not, in voting on a nominee, take into account anything that they, as serious and public-spirited men, think to bear on the wisdom of the appointment. It is predicted, as a mere probability, that Presidential nominations will not often be "overruled." But "special and strong reasons," thus generally characterized, are to suffice. Is a Senator's belief that a nominee holds skewed and purblind views on social justice not a "special and strong reason"? Is it not as "special and strong" as a Senator's belief that an appointment has been made "from a view to popularity"—a reason which by clear implication is to suffice as support for a negative vote? If there is anything in The Federalist Papers neutralizing this inference, I should be glad to see it.

When we turn to history, the record is, as always, confusing and multifarious. One can say with confidence, however, that a good many nominations have been rejected by the Senate for repugnancy of the nominee's views on great issues, or for mediocrity, or for other reasons no more involving moral turpitude than these. Jeremiah Sullivan Black, an eminent lawyer and judge, seems to have been rejected in 1861 because of his views on slavery and secession.[10] John J. Crittenden was refused confirmation in 1829 on strictly partisan grounds.[11] Wolcott was rejected partly on political grounds, and partly on grounds of competence, in 1811.[12] There is the celebrated Parker case of this century.[13] The perusal of Warren[14] will multiply instances.

I am very far from undertaking any defense of each of these actions severally. I am not writing about the wisdom, on the merits, of particular votes, but of the claim to historical authenticity of the supposed "tradition" of the Senators' refraining from taking into account a very wide range of factors, from which the nominees' views on great public questions cannot, excepted arbitrarily, be excluded. Such a "tradition," if it exists, exists somewhere else than in recorded history. Of course, all these instances may be dismissed as improprieties, but then one must go on and say why it is improper for the Senate, and each Senator, to ask himself, before he votes, every question which heavily bears on the issue whether the nominee's sitting on the Court will be good for the country.

I submit that this "tradition" is just a part of the twentieth-century mystique about the Presidency. That mystique, having led us into disastrous undeclared war, is surely due for reexamination. I do not suggest that it can be or should be totally rejected. I am writing here only about a little part of its consequences.

To me, there is just no reason at all for a Senator's not voting, in regard to confirmation of a Supreme Court nominee, on the basis of a full and unrestricted review, not embarrassed by any presumption, of the nominee's fitness for the office. In a world that knows that a man's social philosophy shapes his judicial behavior, that philosophy is a factor in his fitness. If it is a philosophy the Senator thinks will make a judge whose service on the Bench will hurt the country, then the Senator can do right only by treating this judgment of his, unencumbered by deference to the President's, as a satisfactory basis in itself for a negative vote. I have as yet seen nothing textual, nothing structural, nothing prudential, nothing historical, that tells against this view. Will someone please enlighten me?

FOOTNOTES

[1] I shall not provide this discussion with an elaborate footnote apparatus. I am sorry to say that I cannot acknowledge debt, for I am writing from my mind; experience teaches that, when one does this, one unconsciously draws on much reading consciously forgotten; for all such obligations unwittingly incurred I give thanks. I have had the benefit of discussion of many of the points made herein with students at the Yale Law School, of whom I specifically recollect Donald Paulding Irwin; I have also had the benefit of talking to him about the piece after it was written. A specific addendum in proof: Harris, "The Advice and Consent of the Senate" (1963) came to my attention and hands, after the present piece had gone to the printer. This excellent and full account of the whole function would doubtless have fleshed out my own thoughts, but I see nothing in the book that would make me alter the position taken here, and I hope a single-shot thesis like the present may be useful.

[2] U.S. Const. art. II. § 2. cl. 2.

[3] Even this short-circuiting is not complete. First, the President's "appointment," after the Senate's action, is still voluntary (Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 155 (1803)), so that in a sense the action of the Senate even under settled practice may be looked on as only "advisory" with respect to a step from which the President may still withdraw. Secondly, nominations are occasionally withdrawn after public indications of Senate sentiment (and probable action) which may be thought to amount to "advice."

[4] "2 Records of the Federal Convention of 1787" at 83 (M. Farrand ed. 1911).

[5] Id. at 132, 146, 155, 169. 183.

[6] Id. at 498.

[7] Id. at 539.

[8] "The Federalist No. 76," at 494–495 (Modern Library 1937) (Alexander Hamilton).

[9] Id. No. 77, at 498 (Alexander Hamilton).

[10] 2 C. Warren, "The Supreme Court in United States History" 364 (rev. ed. 1926).

[11] 1 Id. at 704.

[12] Id. at 413.

[13] L. Pfeffer, "This Honorable Court, a History of the United States Supreme Court" 288 (1965).

[14] C. Warren, "The Supreme Court in United States History" (rev. ed. 1926).

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, under our Constitution the Senate is assigned responsibility for confirming or rejecting the Supreme Court nominations of the President. This is one of our most important duties, for Justices of the Supreme Court occupy a unique position in the judicial system. They sit over more than 300 district judges and nearly 100 appellate judges. The cases which come before them involve more than technical questions of law. Inevitably they involve sensitive questions of constitutional law, economic and social policy. In deciding them a Justice cannot always rigidly apply past precedents. Life does not stand still, neither can the law. The legal rules which were adequate for an earlier day may be inappropriate today or tomorrow. The Supreme Court, at the pinnacle of the judicial system, often must lead the way.

Nearly 170 years ago Marbury against Madison established the position of the Supreme Court under our Constitution. Since that time, the Court has played a major role in developing the rules by which our society lives.

It would be very difficult to overestimate the importance of the Supreme Court in our system of government. It is the final authority on all questions of Federal law—antitrust, labor, and taxation—to name just a few. It is also the arbiter of relations between the States and the Federal Government, defining and adjusting their respective roles to keep them in tune with the times.

However, the heart of the Court's work is interpretation of the Constitution. This is a demanding task. As Judge Learned Hand aptly said:

> The words (a Justice) must construe are empty vessels into which he can pour nearly anything he will.

Accordingly, we must be sure that the men appointed to the Court meet the highest intellectual and moral standards. They must have more than knowledge. They must possess wisdom, which is knowledge tempered with judgment. They must demonstrate a sensitive understanding of the major issues confronting society. And they must show by sustained superior performance that they are worthy of elevation to a seat of great trust and responsibility.

In examining Judge Carswell's credentials, one should properly begin with the objective record he compiled on the bench. The Ripon Society has made a comprehensive study of his 11 years as a district judge. Using five relevant criteria—reversals on appeal, reversals in general, citation by other courts, elaboration of opinions and use of authority—the Ripon Society concluded that "they form a most impressive indictment of Judge Carswell's judicial competence."

Let me quote from the Ripon Society paper:

> 1. Reversals on Appeal: During the eleven years (1958–1969) in which Judge Carswell sat on the federal district court in Tallahassee, 58.8% of all of those cases where he wrote printed opinions (as reported by West) and which were appealed resulted ultimately in reversals by higher courts. By contrast in a random sample of 400 district court opinions the average rate of reversals among all federal district judges during the same time period was 20.2% of all printed opinions on appeal. In a random sample of 100 district court cases from the Fifth Circuit during the 1958–1969 time period the average rate of reversals was 24.0% of all printed opinions on appeal.
>
> 2. Reversals in General: Carswell's rate of reversals for all of his printed cases was 11.9% as compared to a rate of 5.3% for all federal district cases and 6% for all district cases within the Fifth Circuit during the same time period.
>
> The majority of cases before any federal district judge ordinarily do not result in appeals, hence precluding the possibility of reversals in those cases. It is significant however, that Carswell's overall reversal record for his printed cases is more than twice the average for federal district judges. When additional unprinted opinions are included, Carswell is found to have an overall reversal rate of 21.6%.
>
> 3. Citation by Others: Carswell's 84 printed opinions while he was serving as a district court judge were cited significantly less often by all other U.S. judges than is the average for the opinions of federal district judges. Carswell's first 42 opinions during his first five years on the federal judiciary (1958–1963) have been cited an average of 1.8 times per opinion. Two hundred opinions of other district judges randomly chosen from district court cases spanning this same time period have been cited an average of 3.75 times per opinion. The 42 most recent of Carswell's printed district court opinions have been cited an average of 0.77 times per opinion.
>
> Two hundred opinions of other district judges randomly chosen from cases spanning the same 1964–1969 time period have been cited an average of 1.57 times per opinion.
>
> 4. Elaboration of opinions: Carswell's printed district court opinions average 2.0 pages. The average length of printed opinions for all federal district judges during the time period in which Carswell sat on the district bench was 4.2 pages.
>
> 5. Use of authority: In the 84 abovementioned Carswell opinions the average number of citations of cases is 4.07 per opinion, and the average number of citations of secondary source material is 0.49 per opinion. The average for all district judges during the 1958–1968 time period was 9.93 case citations per opinion and 1.56 citations of secondary source material per opinion.

At the Senate hearing on Judge Carswell's nomination several noted authorities on constitutional law reviewed Judge Carswell's opinions and found that he lacks the necessary qualifications for appointment to the Court. Louis Pollak, dean of Yale Law School, said:

> I am forced to conclude that the nominee has not demonstrated the professional skills and the larger Constitutional wisdom which fits a lawyer for elevation to our highest Court.

Prof. William Van Alystyne, who had testified in favor of Judge Haynsworth's nomination, told the committee:

> There is, in candor, nothing in the quality of the nominee's work to warrant any expectation that he could serve with distinction on the Supreme Court.

Later, after considering the full printed hearings, Professor Van Alystyne wrote me a letter expanding his views. He said:

> A particular President can serve for no more than eight years, but one whom the Senate confirms to serve on the Supreme Court may influence the quality of American life for more than thirty years. The Constitution provides that the Senate shall advise the President on the appropriateness of such an appointment, rather than that it simply defer or acquiesce. In this instance, the need for advice rather than consent is surely compelling.
>
> No one appearing in behalf of Mr. Carswell was able to identify or commend any piece of work whatever during his eleven years on the federal bench as reflecting evidence of judicial stature. Nothing at all could be cited to contrast with Dean Pollak's observation 'that the nominee presents more slender credentials than any nominee for the Supreme Court put forth in this century,' and that 'as my mind ran and my eye ran back through all of the men who have sat on the Court in this past 70 years, it did seem to me striking the paucity of this nominee's qualifications as compared with all of the others.' Nothing was offered in derogation of my own reluctant conclusion, in contrast to what I was able to say of Judge Haynsworth, that:
>
> "More disturbing in the cases generally, and by generally I mean not to restrict myself to the area of race relations at all, although intrinsically far more difficult to illustrate in the nature of the shortcoming, there is simply a lack of reasoning, care, or judicial sensitivity overall, in the nominee's opinions."
>
> The testimony by Mr. (Thomas E.) Harris, moreover, closely reviewed the comparison of this appointment which the President had sought to make with previous judicial figures including Holmes, Hughes, Brandeis, and Frankfurter, adequately underscoring the near ludicrousness of such comparisons. It was repeatedly observed as well that these are not partisan concerns—that there are a number of judges including many in the South of Republican affiliation whom the President might nominate and of whom no similar criticism would have been made.

Judge Carswell's proposed appointment has evoked criticism from lawyers throughout the country. A statement signed by 457 prominent lawyers concluded:

> He does not have the legal or mental qualifications essential for service on the Supreme Court.

Never in history has there been such an outpouring of disapproval of a nominee from the most notable and respected members of the bar.

I can find nothing in Judge Carswell's record to convince me that he is qualified for the Supreme Court.

One searches his entire career, as a lawyer, U.S. attorney, and Federal judge for a significant contribution to the law, but there is none. His record is barren of accomplishment.

He was not highly regarded as a lawyer or a scholar before his appointment to public office. He introduced no innovations in law enforcement when U.S. attorney. As a judge his record has been unimpressive. His opinions have not been notably enlightening or clear sighted, nor has he shown particular moral courage. Overall, Judge Carswell's performance can be rated no better than mediocre, hardly qualifying him for the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, so far, I have discussed only Judge Carswell's general qualifications for appointment to the Supreme Court. I want to turn now to his civil rights record.

Inscribed across the facade of the Supreme Court building are the words, "Equal Justice Under Law." In the past 16 years the Supreme Court has led the way in transforming them from cold stone into a living reality for millions of Negroes across the land. By any standard, race relations is a major issue of our time. Any judge qualified for the Supreme Court must, at a minimum, show that he has followed the law in this area. Even more, he must demonstrate a commitment to the principle of a single society, with equal opportunity open to all.

But Judge Carswell's civil rights opinions remind one of King Canute, who tried to hold back the tide. For like him, Judge Carswell has tried to forestall and delay compliance with the law.

At the hearings, Prof. Gary Orfield said:

The record of Carswell's stewardship during the ordeal of school desegregation was one of magnificent inaction. While other judges were exploring ways to dismantle the system of separate schools, Carswell granted time for local delays. The results were clear. Two of the three districts under his supervision were among the only four reported Florida districts maintaining totally segregated faculties into 1967. More than 90 percent of the black children in the Tallahassee schools were still in separate and completely segregated schools that same year . . . Judge Carswell had put local values above his responsibility to uphold the Constitution.

And on this point Prof. Van Alystyne wrote me:

Finally, then, with the failure of any affirmative reason to confirm this appointment, must you not agree that the evidence otherwise brought forward makes this appointment singularly inappropriate and impossible to accept? Not until his very appearance twenty-two years later before the Committee did Mr. Carswell express a single word of regret for his avowal of white supremacy as an adult, lawyer, businessman, World War II veteran, and candidate for national office. Nothing in the course of the hearings furnished evidence of more reassuring events to keep the Court hereafter from reasonable suspicion of bias. To the contrary, first hand testimony from several attorneys, including one still with the Justice Department, attested to a conscious or unconscious hostility to Negro plaintiffs, volunteer attorneys in race cases, and Northern lawyers willing to furnish representation in a community described even by a long time resident as hostile and somewhat to the right of Louis XIV. The pattern of reversals by the court of appeals in the many cases where civil rights complaints were dismissed out of hand without a hearing must surely trouble you . . .

Mr. President, the nomination of Judge Carswell has impelled many individuals and organizations to speak out in opposition who are not normally heard on such matters. One of these is the National Education Association.

The NEA has furnished me with a penetrating analysis of Judge Carswell's school desegregation opinions.

I should like to read from it:

1. On June 24, 1960, Judge Carswell summarily struck portions of a school desegregation complain involving Pensacola, Florida seeking desegregation of teachers and principals, without even holding a hearing to determine the effects of faculty segregation on the rights of black students to an integrated education. Augustus v. Board of Public Instruction of Escambia County, Fla., 185 F. Supp. 450 (N.D. Fla. 1960)

The black children claimed that "assignment of school personnel on the basis of race and color is . . . predicated on the theory that Negro teachers, Negro principals and other Negro school personnel are inferior . . . and, therefore, may not teach white children." 185 F. Supp. at 451. The intent of the 1954 decision, they argued, was the creation of a non-racial school system which they contended was impossible so long as completely segregated faculties signalled to the community and the children that one set of schools was "Negro" and another "White."

Judge Carswell not only dealt with this serious issue in an arbitarary manner, but treated it mockingly, stating: "Students herein can no more complain of injury to themselves of (sic) the selection or assignment of teachers than they can bring action to enjoin the assignment to the school of teachers who were too strict or too lenient." 185 F. Supp. at 43.

The Fifth Circuit unanimously reversed this decision, stating ". . . we do not think that a matter of such importance should be decided on motion to strike" and that Judge Carswell had erred in using a "drastic remedy" appropriate only where the question "has no possible relation to the controversy." 306 F.2d 862, 868 (5th Cir. 1962)

2. Judge Carswell did not obtain a desegregation plan from the defendants in the Pensacola suit until a year and a half had elapsed from the filing of the complaint. Then, in 1961, he entered a desegregation order which required only that the school board continue assigning students under the Florida Pupil Assignment Law. Under that law, every black student desiring to attend a white school had to pass a battery of tests that no white child wishing to remain in his segregated white school had to undergo. Judge Carswell's plan allowed the school board to assign every pupil to a segregated school at the start of each school year, and placed the burden of integration on the shoulders of black students asking for reassignment and willing to undertake the tests. Up to the time of Judge Carswell's order, the Florida Pupil Assignment Law had resulted in the perpetuation of a fully segregated school system. 6 Race Rel. L. Rep. 689.

This action of Judge Carswell in 1961 was taken in the face of an explicit decision of the Fifth Circuit in 1959, reaffirmed in 1960, that a school board's adoption of the Florida Pupil Assignment Law did not meet the requirements of a plan of school desegregation or constitute a "reasonable start toward full compliance" with the Brown decision. Gibson v. Board of Public Instruction of Dade County, Fla., 272 F. 2d 763, 766 (5th Cir. 1959); Mannings v. Board of Public Instruction of Hillsborough County, Fla., 277 F. 2d 370, 372, (5th Cir. 1960).

The 1961 order of Judge Carswell, being in clear conflict with prior decisions of the Fifth Circuit, was unanimously reversed by that court, which required that additional steps be taken. 306 F. 2d 862, 869. Yet Judge Carswell—notwithstanding the clearly enunciated contrary position of the Fifth Circuit—subsequently approved other desegregation plans under which pupils were assigned to the segregated schools they were then attending and black pupils seeking to attend an integrated school were required to go through the procedures of the Florida Pupil Assignment Law, Steele v. Board of Public Instruction of Leon County, Fla., 8 Race Rel. L. Rep. 932, 933–34; 8 Race Rel L. Rep. 934; Youngblood v. Board of Public Instruction of Bay County, Fla., 9 Race Rel. L. Rep. 1206, 1208–09.

It is instructive to compare Judge Carswell's treatment of the pupil assignment issue with that of Judge Skelly Wright, then sitting in the Eastern District of Louisiana. In Bush v. Orleans Parish School Board, 204 F. Supp. 568, 570–71 (E.D.La. 1962), Judge Wright concluded that: "To assign children to a segregated school system and then require them to pass muster under a pupil placement laws is discrimination in its rawest form." (emphasis added). This language was quoted with approval by Judge Wisdom of the Fifth Circuit in affirming this part of Judge Wright's decision. 308 F. 2d 491, 495.

3. In addition to flouting controlling precedents by approving plans based on the Florida Pupil Assignment Law, Judge Carswell continued to order grade-a-year desegregation and to refuse to modify such orders in the teeth of Fifth Circuit decisions expressly holding this rate of school desegregation inadequate.

After the Fifth Circuit had reversed his earlier order in Augustus v. Board of Public Instruction of Escambia County, Judge Carswell ordered elimination of dual attendance zones at the rate of a grade a year. 8 Race Rel. L. Rep. 58. On April 20, 1965, Judge Carswell denied plaintiffs' motion for changes in the plan, and entered a further order denying plaintiffs relief in October 1965. 11 Race Rel. L. Rep. 148.

On April 22, 1963, Judge Carswell ordered grade-a-year elimination of such dual attendance zones in Steele v. Board of Public Instruction of Leon County, 8 Race Rel. L. Rep. 934. On three separate occasions in 1965, he denied plaintiffs' motions for changes in this plan. 10 Race Rel. L. Rep. 607.

On July 20, 1964, Judge Carswell ordered grade-a-year elimination of such dual attendance zones in Youngblood v. Board of Public Instruction of Bay County, 9 Race Rel. L. Rep. 1206.

At the desegregation rate decreed by Judge Carswell, dual attendance zones based on race would not have been completely eliminated in Escambia County until the 1973–74 school year; in Leon County until the 1974–75 school year, and in Bay County until the 1975–76 school year—twenty-one years after the Brown decision.

On June 18, 1964—a month before Judge Carswell ordered grade-a-desegregation in the Bay County case—the Fifth Circuit held that a grade-a-year plan was impermissible even though, in the case pending before it, a large metropolitan school system was involved. Rejecting the view that the size of the system justified such a slow rate of desegregation, the court said:

"Plans providing for the integration of only one grade a year are now rare; and the possibility of judicial approval of such a grade-a-year plan has become increasingly remote due to the passage of time since the Brown decisions." Armstrong v. Board of Education of the City of Birmingham, Alabama, 333 F. 2d 47, 51 (5th Cir. 1964).

This was clear enough, but the Fifth Circuit made its position even clearer on February 24, 1965, months before Judge Carswell denied motions to change the grade-a-year plans in Escambia County and Leon County. On that date the Fifth Circuit handed down its decision in Lockett v. Board of Education of Muscogee County School District, Ga., 342 F. 2d 225 (5th Cir. 1965), which outlawed any use of grade-a-year plans in the circuit. The court specifically traced the judicial decisions putting grade-a-year plans to rest, concluding that it had become clear "beyond peradventure that a shortening of the transition period was mandatory." 342 F. 2d at 227. The court noted that in five cases it had decided the previous summer, it had ruled that all grades in the school system had to be desegregated by September 1969," . . . or earlier, as we pointed out, if the school boards are unable to justify the delay on a future complaint." 342 F. 2d at 228. The court expressly noted that these decisions had laid out "minimal standards" to be applied in other cases. Id. at 229. Accord, Bivins v. Board of Public Education and Orphanage for Bibb County, Georgia, 342 F. 2d 229 (5th Cir. 1965).

4. Examination of the Carswell record in handling school desegregation cases also indicates that Judge Carswell engaged in protracted delays in processing cases.

An analysis by the Washington Research Project Action Council notes that in the Pensacola case, Judge Carswell, after striking the portions of the complaint seeking desegregation of faculties, denied plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. 5 Race Rel. L. Rep. 645. On October 26, 1960, he set a date three months later for a factual hearing 6 Race Rel L. Rep. 73. The hearing was held on January 16, 1961. He waited until March 16, 1961—two months after the hearing—to write a two-paragraph order requiring the school board to develop a plan of desegregation. Id. The order gave the school board 90 days to develop its plan. Taking the full time allotted, the board, on June 14, 1961, submitted a two-paragraph plan with an accompanying letter to be sent to parents informing them that students could transfer to other schools under the Pupil Placement Law, and that the school administration would consider such applications without regard to race, 6 Race Rel. L. Rep. 689.

Judge Carswell waited two months before holding a hearing on this "plan." The hearing eventually was held on August 17, 1961. On September 8, 1961, shortly after the start of the 1961–62 school year, he accepted the plan with minor modifications. Since it was so late, the effective date of the plan was postponed until the 1962–63 school year.

The Fifth Circuit reversed Judge Carswell's September 8 decision on July 24, 1962, before it was to become effective. In its opinion, the Court of Appeals noted that it was too late to order changes in the plan for the 1962–63 school year, but indicated that the district court should examine the problem of time and implement the changes for that year if possible. 306 F. 2d at 869.

Judge Carswell, however, made no attempt to determine whether time permitted implementation of the changes for the 1962–63 school year. He waited until November 29, 1962—more than four months after the Fifth Circuit had cautioned him on the time problem—to order implementation of the Fifth Circuit's mandate. He then postponed its effective date until the 1963–64 school year. 8 Race Rel. L. Rep. 58.

5. Judge Carswell's attitude towards school desegregation is reflected in his actions when sitting by designation on a school desegregation case as a member of a three-judge panel on the Fifth Circuit. In Gaines v. Dougherty County Board of Education, 334 F. 2d 983 (5th Cir. 1964)—decided ten years after Brown—the court of appeals ruled that a minimum requirement was desegregation of the first two grades of school plus desegregation of the twelfth grade, "in order that every Negro child in the . . . school system have at least an opportunity to enjoy a desegregated education during his school career." 334 F. 2d at 984. The majority was concerned that a decade of children would otherwise have gone to school since Brown in completely segregated schools.

Judge Carswell found it impossible to go along with this not very radical doctrine. In an angry dissent, he used the following odd terminology in characterizing the action of the court of appeals: "In my view, this simply violates the long-standing, and wise, view that no court should rain down injunctions unless there be some demonstrated factual necessity to insure compliance with the law" (emphasis added). Judge Carswell apparently could see no basis for the limited injunction ordered by the court of appeals notwithstanding ten years of total segregation in the system following the Brown decision. On the contrary, he thought the local officials were "entitled to a presumption of good faith when they represent, as here, an intention to effectuate the law." 334 F. 2d at 986.

6. In assessing Judge Carswell's posture in these school desegregation cases, it is significant that the counties with which he was dealing were not black belt counties with large black majorities. The problems in these countries were manageable. Judge Carswell sat in a state which at the time was under relatively responsible political leadership. Florida, moreover, was the first state in the South to have all school districts not under court order in compliance with HEW's school desegregation guidelines. Most Florida school districts, in fact, opened all grades to freedom of choice desegregation in September 1965.

It is also significant that other Federal district judges in Florida were rendering contemporaneous decisions in marked contrast with those of Judge Carswell. For example, Judge Simpson, in the adjoining district, ordered two school districts, on August 21, 1962, to submit plans for the complete desegregation of teachers and other school personnel. Braxton v. Board of Public Instruction of Duval County, Florida, 7 Race Rel. L. Rep. 675; Tillman v. Board of Public Instruction of Duval County, Fla., 7 Race Rel. L. Rep. 687. The Fifth Circuit affirmed Judge Simpson in an appeal from this portion of the Duval County order. 326 F. 2d 616 (1964) cert, den., 377 U.S. 924 (1964). Another Florida district judge ordered Indian River County to complete free choice desegregation by 1967. Sharpton v. Board of Public Instruction of Indiana River County, 11 Race Rel. L. Rep. 702.

Judge Carswell's actions in these cases throw light on his underlying attitude toward racial questions. Taken together, they show that he did everything possible to evade and resist the mandate of higher courts.

His behavior outside the courtroom shows a similar pattern of consistent hostility toward Negroes. To begin with, there was his 1948 statement in support of white supremacy. Some have said this should be dismised as a youthful indiscretion. I might be inclined to accept his repudiation of these words now if his conduct in the intervening years had not confirmed his original statement. But on three separate occasions he was involved in discriminatory acts against Negroes.

In 1953, he drafted a charter for a Florida State University Boosters Club that limited membership to white people.

In 1956, while U.S. attorney for the northern district of Florida, he joined in a scheme to subvert the law by leasing Tallahassee's public municipal golf course to a private group, so that it could remain segregated. Though the racist purpose of the plan was commonly known in the community, Judge Carswell claims he was unaware of it.

And in 1966, Judge Carswell sold land with a restrictive covenant for whites only.

Mr. President, this is the case against Judge Carswell. In my view it establishes that he is unqualified for a seat on the high court.

His nomination is regrettable. But it would be tragic to confirm him. For his elevation would decrease the Court's stature across the land.

Many years ago, Paul Freund, a noted authority on the Supreme Court, warned us:

> The quality of the institution depends not alone on its traditions but on the character of the individuals who man it.

Inferior men make a second-rate institution.

That is why this is a bad nomination. It is depleting the Court's prestige.

Ultimately, compliance with the law cannot be secured by force. It must be freely given as a result of moral suasion.

Under our system the majority agrees to redress the legitimate grievances of the minority, and the minority pledges to work through the established processes. In this way we have been able to reform our society again and again.

Judge Carswell's nomination is divisive.

Finally, Mr. President, I want to point out that last year at a news conference President Nixon listed the justices of the Supreme Court he particularly admired. They were Brandeis, Holmes, Cardozo, and Frankfurter. These are men of superior caliber and unquestioned merit. They set a high standard for Supreme Court nominees.

Judge Carswell does not measure up either to their standards or to those so well recognized by the President. Accordingly, I shall vote against his confirmation.

MOUNTING OPPOSITION TO CARSWELL NOMINATION

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, the tide of opinion against confirmation of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to be a member of the Supreme Court has mounted steadily. Thoughtful Members of the Senate of widely varying persuasions have felt growing doubts about this nomination.

Illustrative of this trend is the report by Roscoe and Geoffrey Drummond in Friday's Philadelphia Inquirer. As the Drummonds make clear, there is a grave apprehension on the part of many Senators that confirmation of this nomination would impair the Supreme Court and weaken its stature in our national life. The extraordinary frequency of reversals of Judge Carswell's opinions is one distressinig measure of the degree to which he has been out of step with modern constitutional practice. I believe that all Members of the Senate will be interested in the perceptive commentary of the Drummonds and I ask unanimous consent that be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Mar. 20, 1970]

DOUBTS INCREASING IN CARSWELL CASE

(By Roscoe and Geoffrey Drummond)

Liberal Republican senators—enough to determine if Judge G. Harrold Carswell will be confirmed or rejected for the Supreme Court—are having a painful time deciding how to vote.

Most of them are publicly uncommitted. They prefer to support their President. They recognize that his is the primary responsibility.

But some of them are becoming very uneasy. As facts have come out which were apparently not known to President Nixon at the time of the nomination, as testimony against Judge Carswell from impressive sources has grown, their doubts are mounting.

Some of them are beginning to lean against confirming Judge Carswell. They wonder if the appointment of a man of below-quality stature would not only impair the Supreme Court but would also signal to the aggrieved, the disadvantaged, the racially injured that the Establishment—President, Congress and court—is turning against them.

These uncommitted Republicans are not against naming a Southerner to the Supreme Court. They are not against naming a conservative to the Supreme Court. They are not against naming a strict constructionist to the Supreme Court.

They are concerned with larger issues. They are concerned that now when the nation is finally coming to grips with racial justice, school integration and equal rights for all, Judge Carswell has so long been facing mostly in the opposite direction, that he is out of step with the times and that his elevation to the highest court could only be evidence that government is turning its back on the social and political reforms which are still only half achieved.

Those who are still pondering how to vote are asking themselves how out of step with the needs of the times is Judge Carswell? What levels of judicial competence would he bring to the Supreme Court?

One disturbing answer they find is that in all the cases which came before Judge Carswell on the Federal bench and were appealed to higher courts, 59 percent of his decisions were reversed.

Undoubtedly he called them as he saw them and rendered his decisions to the best of his ability.

Is this 59 percent reveral unusual? It is 300 percent higher than the national average of all Federal judges.

The Republicans who are now beginning to lean away from Carswell are aware that a committee of the American Bar Association indorsed his appointment.

It was their judgment that he lacks distinction and isn't even qualified for his present seat on the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Those who are earnestly trying to weigh the evidence find their doubts increased by the kind of reply which Carswell supporters make to this point. Sen. Roman Hruska (R., Neb.) says the President has the right to name a "mediocre" judge. He actually said it. His words:

"Even if he (Carswell) were mediocre, there are a lot of mediocre judges and people and lawyers. They are entitled to a little representation, aren't they, and a little chance?"

One uncommitted liberal Republican senator put his central thinking on Carswell this way:

"Nothing is more crucial today than to do everything we can to keep the justly discontented working within the political system and reasonably confident that our system is capable and intent upon dealing with just grievances. We must not give them any signal that their government is turning against them. I wonder if all the circumstances of the Carswell nomination won't do just that."

So do many others.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3786) to authorize the appropriation of additional funds necessary for acquisition of land at the Point Reyes National Seashore in California.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 554) authorizing certain corrections to be made in the enrollment of H.R. 11959, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H.R. 3786) to authorize the appropriation of additional funds necessary for acquisition of land at the Point Reyes National Seashore in California.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate continued with the consideration of the nomination of George Harrold Carswell to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, Mark Twain reminded us:

> It is easy to find fault if one has that disposition. There was once a man who, not being able to find any other fault with the coal delivered for his furnace, complained that there were too many prehistoric toads in it.

Supporters of the nomination of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court would like to cast the opposition in such a role, and they have endeavored to center the debate on such supposed issues as partisan politics, geography, and the conservative label.

If, indeed, these were the issues, this nomination would, by now, have already been confirmed. In fact, I think we all expected that the President would nominate a Republican, a southerner, and a strict constitutional constructionist, whatever that is interpreted to be.

Democrats do not think they have an exclusive claim on excellence and high qualification for office. We freely admit that the President had available to him many excellent choices for this position from within his own party.

The confirmation process should be free of partisan interests, and I am not aware of anyone attempting to make a partisan issue of the confirmation of this nominee. In fact, every effort has been made to keep the process free of partisanship. Indeed, it may well be easier for Democrats to shed their partisanship, since the President is not a member of their party, than for Republicans to do so, but it is important that it be done. The recent, mixed vote rejecting the nomination of Judge Clement F. Haynsworth, Jr., attests to the fact that, because of the importance of the Supreme Court, the Senate has not chosen to make the confirmation process a partisan one.

Likewise, the apparent desire of the President to appoint a southerner, is not in issue. I am content that the President should nominate a southerner, although I can think of no position where geography is less important. Justice is neither partisan nor sectional.

The final question concerning the label of constitutional conservative or strict constructionist is difficult to meet squarely. The thesis of conservative or strict interpretation of the Constitution is well within the framework of acceptability.

But there are matters concerning which this often artificial dichotomy between conservative and liberal ceases to exist. There is no conservative judicial error, no conservative concept of human equality—and certainly no conservative justice. Error is error. The only alternative to justice is injustice—there is nothing in between.

What is then the real issue? To answer this question one must first, I think, understand the power of the Senate to advise and consent as provided in article II, section 2 of the Constitution.

The advise and consent of this body was never intended to be an act of acquiescence. The Federalist Papers clearly set forth the arguments which were made during the Constitutional Convention in support of various methods of appointing judges and other Federal officers.

At one point during the Convention, it was agreed that the President should appoint all officials. At another point, it was agreed that judges should be appointed by the second branch of the legislature, and that other officials should be appointed by the President. And, from time to time, during the Convention, an effort was made to vest the full appointing power in the upper branch of the legislature by those who feared that to give the President alone such power would surely lead to a monarchy.

Out of controversy and dispute a compromise provision was finally agreed to, giving the President the power to nominate and the Senate the power to advise and consent.

Those who favored appointment by the upper branch alone would never have agreed to this compromise, to give the Senate only the power of "advise and consent" if they had not assumed the Senate would assert itself fully in this role. Particularly do we know this is true because we also know that they feared the giving of absolute power of appointment to the President would lead to a monarchy.

Alexander Hamilton, in the Federalist Papers confirmed this when he stated:

> To what purpose then required the cooperation of the Senate? I answer, that the necessity of their concurrence would have a powerful, though, in general, a silent operation. It would be an excellent check upon a spirit of favortism in the President, and would tend greatly to prevent the appointment of unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity. In addition to this, it would be an efficacious source of stability in the administration.

The fact that the Senate, over the years has rejected 22 nominees indicates that the Senate has considered these responsibilities under the Constitution to be very serious and important ones; it has not permitted the power to nominate to become the power of automatic appointment. We have done better than the Englishman in the poem "Lord Tomnoddy" who, when asked what qualification Lord Tomnoddy had to rule, replied:

> One!
> He's the Earl of Fitzdotterel's eldest son.

Nomination and appointment are not, and should never be, synonymous—especially when applied to the process of confirming Justices of the Supreme Court.

Our duty, individually and collectively as a body, is to give careful consideration to the qualifications of nominees.

We must determine, on the basis of the hearings of the Senate Judiciary Committee and all other facts that have been brought to light, whether the nominee before us today possesses the intellectual and philosophical qualifications demanded for service on the highest court in the Nation, a Court which must serve as an example for every court in our country, and which should deserve the full faith and confidence of every man in the justness of its decisions.

Perhaps our role would not be so burdensome if a member of the Court served for a limited period of time only. Most Federal executives serve at the President's pleasure, and can be removed if they prove unfit for the job. Even commissioners of independent agencies, although appointed for specific terms of several years, can be denied reappointment if they become unsuitable in the judgment of the President or the Congress. But, a Justice of the Supreme Court serves for life, and, for life, hears final appeals for human justice. This is as it should be, if the Court is to retain the independence envisaged for it by the makers of our Constitution.

The Supreme Court should be coequal with the legislative and executive branches in our system of checks and balances, which has generally served us so well, and it has a distinct and vital role to play. That role, since the days of John Marshall, has been to decide the great controversies of the day on the basis of the fundamental principles of the Constitution. One reason our Constitution has survived for 18 decades is that its authors in their wisdom realized that changing times would weaken such a charter if the charter were to deal in too great specificity. They relied on succeeding generations to match guiding principles with specific details of important current cases.

This can only be accomplished if the men who are to do the matching, the Justices of the Supreme Court, have a sophisticated and subtle understanding of the Constitution and previous interpretations, of the Nation's history, and of the social trends and problems out of which both current laws and current litigation arise. Whether conservative or liberal in approach, these men must have a breadth of vision and a genuine feeling for the rights so clearly stated by the Constitution. They must also be innovators and groundbreakers, not merely the passive followers of interpretations laid down by others.

The landmark cases decided by the Court through the years have been important, precisely because these decisions provided what had been lacking until each such Court opinion had been given—the meshing of constitutional principle, precedent, current law, and individual dispute.

Think back across the rich panoply of American constitutional history. From Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cr. 137 (1803), in which Chief Justice John Marshall made explicit the review powers implicit in the Constitution, to Reitman v. Mulkey, 387 U.S. 369 (1967), in which the Court mandated equal protection of the laws with respect to housing, and all the landmark decisions in between, one continuing element persists. That is the need for high intelligence and compassion in the way the Court approaches its job of melding all the elements together.

Whether the Court found itself defining the relationship between the three branches as it has in cases such as Youngstown Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579 (1952), explicating the requirements of our federal system as it did in Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 419 (1793), or developing the commerce powers of Congress, as in NLRB v. Jones and Laughlin Steel Corp., 301 U.S. 1 (1937), the task has demanded judicial excellence.

However, intelligence enough to deal with the complex issues is not enough, when the matter under consideration falls within the category of human rights, in consideration of which the compassion necessary to fairly weigh the impartiality of the law with the dignity of the individual is vital. Without compassion, the compelling arguments of Brandeis in his brief on the condition of women employees in Muller v. Oregon, 208 U.S. 412 (1908), would have gone for naught and those engaged in unfair labor practices would not have been placed on notice that henceforth their activities would have to meet the due process tests of the courts. Without social conscience, Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537 (1896) would not have been reversed by Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954).

Thus, we see that demands on Justices of the Supreme Court are extremely heavy. We do the country a grave disservice when we give "advice and consent" to nominees who do not meet the high standards required of them if they are to function effectively. As Justice Frankfurter has written:

> Such functions surely call for capacious minds and reliable powers for disinterested and fair-minded judgment. It demands the habit of curbing any tendency to reach results agreeable to desire or to embrace the solution of a problem before exhausting its comprehensive analysis. One in whose keeping may be the decision of the Court must have a disposition to be detached and withdrawn. To be sure, these moral qualities, for such they are, are desirable in all judges, but they are indispensable for the Supreme Court. Its task is to seize the permanent, more or less, from the feelings and fluctuations of the transient.

Thus, when it is determined that a nominee does not meet the high standards test for membership on the Supreme Court, it is the duty of the Senate to reject the nominee, rejection not of any one man, but an expression of intention to demand the highest standards of excellence for all future nominations to the Court.

Does Judge G. Harrold Carswell possess the qualifications the Senate should demand of any nominee? I think that the record reveals otherwise.

The hearings of the Judiciary Committee are replete with statements to the effect that there is nothing "in the quality of the nominee's work to warrant any expectation whatever that he could serve with distinction on the Supreme Court of the United States." Prof. William Van Alystyne, professor of law, Duke University Law School, who supported the confirmation of Judge Clement F. Haynsworth, Jr., but now opposes confirmation of Judge Carswell, said of the nominee's opinions:

> There is simply a lack of reasoning, care, or judicial sensitivity overall, in the nominee's opinions.

Two of the nominee's own judicial colleagues, Judge Elbert P. Tuttle, retired chief judge of the U.S. Fifth Circuit and Judge John Minor Wisdom of the same court, have withheld their support of the confirmation of Judge Carswell to serve on the Supreme Court.

Nine of the 15 faculty members of Florida State University Law School, which the nominee helped to establish, have written the President requesting that this nomination be withdrawn.

Recently, a group of 457 prominent law professors and lawyers, of diverse political affiliations and from different areas of the Nation, urged rejection of the nominee, or "at the very least," a reopening of the hearings so that an official investigation could be made by independent counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee.

More and more concerned citizens have begun to question the qualifications of Judge Carswell since a survey has revealed that, as a Federal district court judge, he was reversed on 58.8 percent of all those cases in which he wrote a printed opinion. This rate of reversal was three times the average rate among all Federal district judges. The same survey revealed that Judge Carswell's rate of reversals for all of his printed cases was 11.9 percent, in contrast to a rate of 5.3 percent for all Federal district cases, and 6 percent for all district cases from the fifth circuit.

In an editorial which appeared in the February 27 edition of the Tallahassee Transaction, concern was expressed about the growing opposition to the nomination. The editorial writer stated:

> The extraordinary anguish among law school faculty members and leading lawyers over the nomination of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court should alert every Senator to consider his responsibility to country and constitution.

The fact that such distinguished men and an increasing number of citizens are questioning whether the nominee has the requisite high competence and superior ability is disturbing enough, but the context in which this questioning is taking place is even more disturbing. The 1948 public words of the nominee, "I yield to no man as a fellow candidate, or as a fellow citizen, in the firm, vigorous belief in the principles of white supremacy, and I shall always be so governed," permeates the entire process of considering his qualifications.

President Nixon, in a news conference on January 30, 1970, defended the nominee's statement on the basis that it was made 22 years ago and stated that we should not "question his integrity in his late years because in his early years in the South he took the position that other southerners were taking." To prove his point, the President referred to a statement made by the late and distinguished Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, in 1940 when he wrote a column, "in which he came out unalterably against integration of education of southern schools," to use President Nixon words. However, rather than proving the point the President hoped to make, the reference to Ralph McGill and his career in the field of human rights disprove the point. We all know that Ralph McGill's long record on civil rights was outstanding. No one doubts that, through the influence of his column, carried not only in the Atlanta Constitution, but also in other southern newspapers, much was done to "bridge the river of misunderstanding."

Does the judicial record of Judge Carswell indicate that he has changed his mind concerning segregation of the races as a way of life? Has he adopted a different philosophy?

In the case of Due v. Tallahassee Theatres, Inc., 333 F. 2d 630 (Fifth Circuit, 1964), attempts were made by theater corporations and local officials in Tallahassee to keep black people out of the theaters. Judge Carswell granted summary judgment in favor of the local officials. The granting of summary relief under circumstances where facts had been alleged showing a violation of certain civil rights, and which facts were disputed, was strongly criticized by the circuit court in reversing Judge Carswell.

In the case of Singleton v. Board of Commissions of State Institutions, 356 F. 2d 771 (Fifth Circuit, 1966), the issue was desegregation of the Florida State reform schools. Suit was brought by Negro children, who were convicted but out on probation for participation in a sitin at one of the institutions, to enjoin the segregation, and to have declared unconstitutional a State statute requiring the segregation. Judge Carswell dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs lacked standing to sue even though the probation could be revoked at any time. Again the circuit court reversed Judge Carswell.

In Dawkins v. Green, 285 F. Supp. 772, reversed in 412 F. 2d 644 (1969), Negro civil rights workers sought to enjoin certain county officials from enforcing statutes on a discriminatory basis for the purpose of preventing the workers from carrying out their civil rights movement. Again Judge Carswell granted summary judgment and again was reversed by the circuit court for granting summary judgment.

I think it should be remembered that Judge Carswell's persistent granting of summary judgments took place at a time when the Supreme Court and the circuit courts were admonishing district judges to grant such relief only in cases where clearly there was no issue of fact, and no reason to secure any additional facts.

In the case of Augustus v. Board of Public Education of Escambia County, 185 F. Supp. 450 (1960), reversed 306 F. 2d 862 (Fifth Circuit, 1962), the issue was faculty segregation. The relief sought in the complaint, filed on behalf of Negro students, was for an injunction of segregation in the schools and racial assignment of the teachers. Without holding a hearing on the issue of faculty segregation, Judge Carswell on a motion to strike ruled that the matter should be stricken from the complaint. Reversal by the circuit court followed.

In numerous desegregation cases Judge Carswell approved grade-a-year desegregation plans even though the third, fourth, fifth, and eighth circuits had previously held such a slow rate to be constitutionally unacceptable. This was true in the cases of: Augustus v. Board of Public Education of Escambia County, supra; Steele v. Board of Public Instruction of Leon County, 371 F. 2d 395 (Fifth Circuit, 1967); and Youngblood v. Board of Public Instruction of Bay County, 230 F. Supp. 74 (1964).

Professor Van Alstyne considered the cases just discussed in the context of the statement made by Judge Carswell in 1948. In this regard he said:

> I would agree with those who believe that unless that statement can be significantly discounted by clear and reassuring events since that time, 20 years ago, it would be uniquely inappropriate for the Senate to consent to his nomination as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. But an examination of his decisions and opinions as a district judge since that time, even laying his earlier statement entirely aside, provides no feeling for a basis of reassurance whatever.

Nor are we reassured by the conduct of Judge Carswell on the bench, that he has changed his views since 1948. Proof has been furnished to the committee that on numerous occasions civil rights lawyers were subjected to improper judicial treatment, particularly if they were volunteers or from out of the State.

Prof. LeRoy Clark of New York University, who ran the NAACP legal defense fund litigation in Florida between 1962 and 1968, called Judge Carswell:

> The most hostile federal district court judge I have ever appeared before with respect to civil rights matters.

Professor Clark recited incidents wherein the nominee attempted to disrupt the argument of civil rights lawyers, even shouting at them at times, while according every courtesy to opposing counsel. Professor Clark stated:

> Whenever I took a young lawyer into the state, and he or she was to appear before Carswell, I usually spent the evening before making them go through their argument while I harassed them, as preparation for what they would meet the following day.

In one case, another witness before the Judiciary Committee reported that Judge Carswell had not only acted in a hostile manner toward civil rights lawyers, lecturing them at length about northern lawyers coming to Florida and arousing the local populace, but had also made it clear that he was going to deny all relief the lawyers had requested for their clients. This he proceeded to do, exhibiting resentment toward the clients, who had been arrested for trespass while attempting to aid sharecroppers in registering to vote.

He made unnecessarily complicated the filing of a habeas corpus petition in behalf of the clients, who were being held in a county jail because a local judge refused to recognize the removal jurisdiction of Judge Carswell's court.

When the lawyers finally convinced Judge Carswell that he had no choice under the law except to grant habeas corpus, his actions still kept the civil rights workers in jail by granting the petition, and, then immediately remanding the cases right back to the county court. This was done on his own motion, without being requested by any of the involved parties and without a hearing or opportunity to present testimony or argument.

In an earlier case, Judge Carswell's actions resulted in nine clergymen freedom riders having permanent criminal records after they had been arrested in the Tallahassee airport restaurant. When appeals in the State court were terminated on a technicality, Judge Carswell, sitting as a Federal district judge, denied habeas corpus without allowing a hearing. This ruling was modified by order of the fifth circuit which provided that an immediate hearing should be held before Judge Carswell if the State court did not grant such a hearing. In a meeting with the clergymen's lawyer and the city attorney, Judge Carswell suggested that the whole case could be concluded by reducing the sentences of the clergymen to the time already served, in spite of the fact that they had not requested such a reduction and, in fact, wished to have their case decided on the merits so that their records would thereby be cleared. Mr. Ernst Rosenberger, who participated in this meeting with Judge Carswell, told the Judiciary Committee that his advice "could have no other effect except to moot the entire question" which would leave the clergymen "with no way for vindication," insuring them a permanent criminal record.

In short, Judge Carswell advised the city attorney in a State court proceeding how to circumvent an order of the circuit court. His advice was followed, despite the efforts of Mr. Rosenberger, and this action totally preempted the legitimate efforts of the clergymen to obtain a judicial ruling. If Judge Carswell had in fact moderated his early segregationist views by the time these incidents took place, his conduct on the bench failed clearly to show such a change.

At the time of his 1948 speech, Judge Carswell was a private citizen, while in the 1960's, when these events occurred, he was a Federal judge, sworn to uphold the Constitution and to provide equal protection under the law to all citizens.

Nor was Judge Carswell a private citizen when he participated in the well-known Tallahassee golf course matter—he was at that time the U.S. attorney.

The record clearly shows that in 1956 Judge Carswell and other citizens of Tallahassee undertook a course of action that would result in denying to the black community of Tallahassee the use of the municipal golf course. This was done by forming a private corporation to which the city transferred the golf course.

Judge Carswell has disputed that it was his intent to deny the use of this public facility to blacks and to circumvent a ruling of the Supreme Court making it unconstitutional for city or State to segregate any of its public recreational facilities. Judge Carswell does admit having knowledge of similar practices occurring in other cities in the South.

A group of distinguished professors and members of the bar commented on Judge Carswell's explanation of his involvement in the incident stating:

If true, (the explanation) shows him to be lacking the intelligence of a reasonable man and to be utterly callous to the implications of the scheme to which he was lending himself.

I think the obvious conclusion to be reached, based on the facts and the matters discussed, is that while America has come a long way since 1948, when it might have been acceptable in certain parts of the South to campaign as a white supremacist, it cannot be demonstrated from the record that Judge Carswell, personally, has come an equal distance.

Judge Carswell has said that he regrets having made the notorious white supremacy speech in 1948. But his record does not prove such a change of heart. Indeed, it raises serious questions as to whether such a change has taken place.

We are not the same nation we were in 1954. The Supreme Court has become the symbol of our awakening to the curse of racism, our growing commitment to eradicate it, and our renewed dedication to the dream of full freedom and complete equality of opportunity for all men.

We need no one to tell us that we are still far from our goal, however great our progress. But in the midst of our failures and disappointments, our frustrations and small victories, the Supreme Court has been like a lighthouse in a storm—an unfailing symbol of our highest ideals. It has been a beacon of hope to people who have regarded other institutions as their enemies.

It is hard for most of us to understand how one could feel so far outside the concern or benefit of laws or courts as to view them as enemies. Serving on the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders—Kerner Commission—enabled me to understand this better.

We traveled throughout America, listening to the voice of her people, seeing how they lived, and we said:

Our Nation is moving toward two societies, one black, one white—separate and unequal.

It has been said that there should be a balance on the Court, but I maintain that there should not be a dilution of basic and fundamental constitutional principles which uphold the inherent worth and value of every human being.

So far as I know, it is unprecedented that a judge's own colleagues, the men who know him best, would indicate their lack of support for him and for his appointment to a higher court. Yet, that is the situation in regard to Judge Carswell. Only lately has it become known that former Chief Judge Elbert P. Tuttle and Judge John Minor Wisdom declined to join in support for Judge Carswell, and there is even some question that this fact in regard to Judge Tuttle was not presented to the Judiciary Committee with full candor.

This newly developed circumstance causes me to believe strongly that this nomination should be referred back to the Senate Judiciary Committee for further consideration. Particularly appropriate, I believe, would be discussions by the committee, even privately, with Judge Tuttle and Judge Wisdom to obtain their views concerning this nomination and the reasons therefor.

I would hope that the President of the United States and Members of the Senate who support this nomination would gracefully agree to refer it back to the committee. It would be my hope that the committee might then decide to postpone further consideration of the nomination indefinitely.

In any event, I hope that the general public will have the time to become more fully aware of the serious objections to the confirmation of Judge Carswell. Fully informed, the people and the Senate will decide against confirmation.

Mr. President, I urge that the Senate do not advise and consent to the nomination of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to be Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Mr. President, the New York Times on March 23, 1970, published an editorial in regard to this matter, in which it was said that a group of distinguished lawyers, including Francis T. P. Plimpton, president of the New York Bar Association, as well as the deans of leading law schools, have charged that the qualified rating given Judge Carswell by the Federal Judiciary Committee of the American Bar Association is seriously misleading.

Mr. President, the Washington Post for Sunday, March 22, 1970, published a lengthy editorial on this same subject in which it says in part:

Judge Carswell is a bad choice, and the Senate should reject him out of its obligation to safeguard the paramount interests of our highest court. In the process of refusing his confirmation, the Senate has an opportunity, not just to say No, but also to say Enough—of insensitivity and indifference, of legislative retrogression and of catering to racist tendencies for political gain, of talking about blacks as if there were no blacks in the room. The Senate, in this fashion, could broadcast from at least one seat of government a signal to all races—a signal which at this stage can no longer be broadcast, in a way that would be believable, by anybody else.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the New York Times and the Washington Post editorials to which I just referred, be printed in full at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Mar. 23, 1970]

RATING JUDGE CARSWELL

The Senate, in its desultory debate over whether to confirm the nomination of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court, is giving an uninspiring demonstration of its sense of responsibility on an issue of grave national concern.

President Nixon, in his weekend press conference, urged Senators to weigh, not the mail, but the evidence. It is precisely on the evidence that Judge Carswell emerges with a mediocre judicial record and with questionable attitudes toward social justice.

Senator Roman L. Hruska, Republican of Nebraska, in apparent contempt for excellence in American institutions, championed the right of all who are mediocre to be represented by mediocrity on the Supreme Court. Application of this view to the Senate is bad enough; to extend it to the highest court is intolerable. Yet, this appears to be the intent of those who deliberately spurn all honest assessment of evidence unfavorable to Judge Carswell.

For example, it has now become known that Elbert P. Tuttle, the retired Chief Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in the South, who originally backed the nomination, subsequently decided to withdraw his endorsement. But Judge Carswell's supporters let the impression of Judge Tuttle's approval be used as continuing support for him.

A group of distinguished lawyers, including Francis T. P. Plimpton, president of the New York Bar Association, as well as the deans of leading law schools, have charged that the "qualified" rating, given Judge Carswell by the Federal Judiciary Committee of the American Bar Association, is seriously misleading. They consider the issue sufficiently grave to demand that the committee reopen the case and provide a more explicit rating, as it does in the case of other Federal judges.

Judge Carswell's supporters have used the A.B.A. rating as a judgment of high merit, when it is little more than an evasive rubber stamp. Attorney General Mitchell, who undoubtedly knows the real meaning of the A.B.A.'s faint praise, has stated publicly that his nominee comes "highly recommended" by the association.

These misleading tactics amply justify the demand for a more enlightening reappraisal. An explicit rating would do much to help the Senators when they ultimately cast their vote on the dictates of both fact and conscience. The legal profession surely has a responsibility to offer credible guidance and, at the very least, make sure that its testimony cannot be abused in ways that might demean the Supreme Court.

[From the Washington Post, Mar. 22, 1970]

JUDGE CARSWELL: THE WRONG SIGNAL . . .

It is a longish leap from the fun and games at the Gridiron Club last weekend to the Senate debate on Judge Carswell. But bear with us because there is a logical connection here between the appointment of a decidedly second-rate judge to the Supreme Court and the ease with which President Nixon and Vice President Agnew stole the Gridiron show. As you may have read, the two men joined in a piano duet, with the President playing a medley of the favorite tunes of his predecessors and the Vice President interrupting him by playing "Dixie." Doubtless you had to be there to get it into the right context, to hear the rough but good-natured jibes at the Administration on race issues that preceded the surprise finale, and thus to appreciate the joke. Almost everybody agreed it was a tour de force gracefully done and quite in keeping with the spirit of an affair at which the tensions and antagonisms of the real world are supposed to be set aside.

So it is with no intent to disparage the performance of the President and the Vice President that we take note of this event. Still, at the risk of sounding stuffy, it strikes us as a small piece of a bad scene, and a significant measure of how great is the power of the Presidency to influence a public attitude. All of a sudden, it is all right to joke about something that responsible people in high places once used to handle with care and compassion and deadly seriousness.

In theory, a sense of humor is supposed to be a saving grace. So why not make sport of a Southern Strategy? The answer, of course, is that Southern Strategy is a euphemism for something that isn't funny. On its face it is no more than a cynical political tactic designed to innoculate the South against George Wallace for the sake of winning it for the Republicans, the better to secure a second term for President Nixon in 1972. As a political objective, this is fair enough—some people even see in it an admirable toughmindedness. But there is nothing admirable about the logical consequences of this strategy, for to bring it off it becomes necessary for the Administration to cultivate indifference, not to say hostility, toward the fundamental principle of human rights in general, and the equality of education available to black children in particular. Putting it another way, and bluntly, Southern Strategy means a form of racism, tacit or explicit, by people in high places, because there can be no successful effort to undercut George Wallace in the South that does not play the segregation game.

It is important to be clear in our minds about the issue here. We are well aware that the White House will be publishing next week what has been billed as the most complete, the most comprehensive, the most closely argued legal brief ever composed on school desegregation and it is not our purpose here to judge it in advance. For that is not what this is all about. We are not talking just about schools, or doubts held by responsible people about busing or other methods for dealing with the de facto segregation which occurs as a result of natural, geographic imbalance. We are talking about what a President or an Administration can do, or not do, to create an atmosphere that is conducive, not to miracles, but to continuing progress, against racial discrimination all along the line. And this, in turn, is what is so troubling about the ease with which we now laugh at jokes about a Southern Strategy. It is what links the hijinks at the Gridiron with the nomination of Judge Carswell and a lot of other things—the abrupt removal of a Leon Panneta from HEW because he tried too hard; the effort to subvert Negro voting rights; the insensitivity, in tone and phrase, to black pride; the country club mentality.

Mr. Harry Dent, a presidential assistant, receives a written offer of campaign funds from a Georgia Republican leader in exchange for the restoration of Federal school aid in a Georgia school district. He casually passes it along to HEW—and nobody seems to mind. The Vice President brushes off the idea of quotas for black students by asking the crude question, "Do you wish to be attended by a physician who entered medical school to fill a quota . . .?" Mr. Jerris Leonard, the Justice Department's civil rights enforcer, thinks it clever, or something, to say that one reason blacks just out of law school are not attracted to Justice Department jobs is that they haven't yet bought their first cashmere topcoat. Confronted with a question about Judge Carswell's involvement with segregated clubs, the President thinks it an adequate defense to say, in effect, that everybody's doing it: ". . . if everybody in government service who has belonged or does belong to restricted golf clubs were to leave the service, this city would have the highest rate of unemployment of any city in the country."

And so it goes, right down to the vote on Judge Carswell, with the Administration's men telling Republicans who opposed Judge Haynsworth—in almost every respect a much superior choice—that they can't rebuff their President twice running. They can, of course, and they should, because this is nothing so narrow as a test of party loyalty. It is a test of policy and principle—a kind of Tonkin Resolution on race, if you accept the theory recently advanced in Life Magazine by Hugh Sidey that the race issue could be for President Nixon the disaster that Vietnam was for President Johnson.

The Tonkin Resolution on Vietnam was a fraud, and while that became clearer later, it might have been clearer at the time if the right questions had been pressed, if Congress had not closed its eyes out of misplaced deference to the President and waved him down a wrong road. Therein lies the analogy. Judge Carswell is a bad choice, and the Senate should reject him out of its obligation to safeguard the paramount interests of our highest court. In the process of refusing his confirmation, the Senate has an opportunity, not just to say No, but also to say Enough—of insensitivity and indifference, of legislative retrogression and of catering to racist tendencies for political gain, of talking about blacks as if there were no blacks in the room. The Senate, in this fashion, could broadcast from at least one seat of government a signal to all races—a signal which at this stage can no longer be broadcast, in a way that would be believable, by anybody else.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. BAYH. I hesitate to interrupt the eloquent remarks of my friend and colleague from Oklahoma, but he appears to be headed into the area of the judge's qualifications, and I wanted to commend him for discussing at the outset of his remarks the broader question of whether Members of the Senate really do, in fact, have the authority to advise and consent.

As the Senator from Oklahoma knows, we have in this nomination the second distasteful disagreement with the President. During the first one, the Senator from Indiana had the opportunity to do some significant research in this area of qualification and some questions were brought to light by the Senator from Oklahoma. I suppose the Senator from Oklahoma is of the opinion that if, indeed, our constitutional fathers meant anything, when they gave us the authority to advise and consent they did in fact intend for us to speak out when we differed with the President on the matter of Supreme Court nominees.

Mr. HARRIS. I certainly do agree. The Senator from Indiana is chairman of the Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary and is, therefore, especially well qualified on the meaning of the provisions written into the Constitution by the Founding Fathers, particularly because of his interest in the high quality of the judiciary in this country which is a basic and fundamental need if our system is to continue. The Senator from Indiana is well qualified to discuss the "advice and consent" powers of the Senate. I think that their importance, which he has indicated, is quite correct.

Mr. BAYH. The Senator has been helpful in pointing out the number of nominees who have not been confirmed to the Supreme Court. Can the Senator recall the study we conducted earlier, that 25 percent of all nominees who have been recommended have either been turned down by the Senate or withdrawn by the President? I wonder whether the Senator is familiar with that rather significant percentage, as we look back over the nearly 200 years of history, in which Members of this body have taken as their personal responsibility, and rightly so, to speak out when they differ with the President.

The Senator from Indiana feels that there is inconsistency in some Members of the Senate who stand upon the floor of the Senate and bemoan the fact there seems to be a creeping executivism, so far as spreading of the powers of the executive is concerned, yet they are timid in exerting themselves in the area where their responsibility is most clear.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Indiana makes a very important point. My own research, aided by two able legislative assistants in my office, Fred Gipson and Frank Cowan, has revealed to me a number of judicial appointments which had been rejected by the Senate. I had not realized that amounted to a percentage which was as high as the Senator from Indiana has indicated. That is an important point. I know that the Senator from Indiana would agree with me, and with the comments that have been previously made in the Senate about the extra responsibility which the Constitution places upon the Senate and Members of the Senate in regard to judicial appointments, as opposed to appointments of the President to his Cabinet and so forth.

I think that the percentage of rejections by the Senate points up that over the years the Senate has considered this to be a very important duty which it has under the Constitution.

Mr. BAYH. One further point, and then I will let the Senator proceed. He has been very kind to yield. The reason I brought this other figure up was the fact that the Senator from Oklahoma had suggested over the weekend on a nationwide news program, and has suggested here today on the floor of the Senate, that the Judiciary Committee have the opportunity to look at this nomination again in view of everything that has come to the fore. It is interesting to note that if the President were to withdraw this nomination, it would not be the first time in history that that course of action had been followed.

Mr. HARRIS. I agree with the Senator from Indiana that that is the course which should be followed here. If we are not ready to reject this nomination when we come back here after the Easter recess—and I do not think that we should vote on it before the Easter recess, because I think the general public has not had a full opportunity to know all the serious objections to the nomination—it might be well worthwhile to consider referring the nomination back to the committee. If I were the nominee, I would want that.

Serious questions have been raised about it which have only now come to light. It seems that former Judge Tuttle has declined actively to support the nomination. There has been some implication that that fact was not presented to the Judiciary Committee with full candor. Very serious questions have been raised about the effect of the American Bar Association's position with regard to this or any other nomination, which I think could well be gone into further now, since they have been raised. Thus, I think it might be well to do that.

If I were the nominee, this kind of nomination being so serious, I would not—if the man is to be confirmed—I would not, if I were he, want to embark upon my duties with these kinds of serious objections raised. If I were the President who had nominated him, I would not want that to be true.

Mr. BAYH. I appreciate the Senator's replies to my questions.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that I personally have undertaken to find out, as best I could, all about Judge Carswell, from people who know him and have worked and served with him. So far as I can determine, everyone I know of, including those who represent the State of Louisiana on the district court bench, who have served with the man, all urge that I vote to confirm him.

There are two or three who would like not to be quoted because they feel it is not appropriate for a judge to engage in saying whether a man should be confirmed or not.

One went to some pains to explain to me that he felt that there were political considerations involved in the appointment of a judge and that he had very grave doubts as to whether a judge ought to be telling the Senate whether a man should be a judge or not. The overwhelming majority of judges to whom I talked were willing to express their views.

And they were unanimous in the opinion that this man should be confirmed. Can the Senator say that I should not be willing to vote to confirm a man if everything is as I have related?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator from Louisiana is convinced that Judge Carswell is qualified and meets the high standards of a Cardozo or a Holmes or the kind of men that he and I would want to consider and act upon the law and the facts in a case regarding ourselves; if the Senator thinks this nominee is of the quality and caliber that he ought to be in order to serve as one of only nine men who sits for the rest of his life to hear last and final appeals for human justice—then I think he ought to speak in favor of the nomination.

If, on the other hand, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana is in the position that a growing number of members of the general public, as well as a growing number of the Members of the Senate, are, and upon reflection on the qualifications of this nominee and the full facts concerning the matter, the Senator is beginning to doubt that this appointment should be confimred, I think he ought to listen carefully to the statements made in the Senate and elsewhere and either join with me in suggesting that we refer the nomination back to the Judiciary Committee or that we go ahead and reject it.

I would call the attention of the distinguished Senator to an editorial which appeared in the Norman Transcript, of Norman, Okla., on Tuesday, March 17, 1970, because it bears upon the Senator's own position perhaps.

The Norman Transcript started out, as did the Senator from Louisiana, feeling that it probably ought to support the nomination.

The Norman Transcript is not known as a "liberal" newspaper. As a matter of fact, the editorial starts out saying that the identities of those opposing Judge Carswell made them want to support him.

They point out that among those opposing Judge Carswell are, as they say, "extreme civil rights advocates and organized labor," and "social activists." So, this is not a particularly liberal newspaper.

The Norman Transcript at first, then, determined, as maybe the distinguished Senator from Louisiana did, that perhaps it was a nomination which should be rather summarily approved.

Then the Norman Transcript said:

In the light of later information, however, and specifically on grounds of the nominee's evidenced racism and inadequate legal qualifications—the large number of his decisions in the field of civil rights that have been reversed on appeal—many people are having second thoughts.

While Judge Carswell is conceded to be honest, there is no question his record is one of unsurpassed mediocrity. The highest court in the land needs more than that, especially in view of the lowered esteem it enjoys in the eyes of much of the public and after the soul-wrenching crises of the past. It needs someone to add not only moral integrity, but also wisdom and judicial resourcefulness that will give the court more understanding of the practical effect of its decisions and make it less stubbornly doctrinaire.

About all that recommends Judge Carswell is that he is a southerner and thus, Nixon can meet his campaign promises to the South. But, if he cannot bring judicial talent to the bench, he probably should not be confirmed.

In that event, the President should look elsewhere than in Dixie for a man who would strengthen the Supreme Court—not only for now, when strengthening is so desperately needed, but for the years to come.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial from the Norman Transcript from which I have read briefly be printed in full at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DOUBTS CAST ON CARSWELL BY RECORD OF MEDIOCRITY

To examine the identies of those who are opposing Senate confirmation of President Nixon's nomination of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court is to understand the reason for their stand.

Invariably they are associated with groups holding a vested interest in a continuation of the social-activist type of court carried to the extreme during the tenure of former Chief Justice Earl Warren. The more extreme civil rights advocates and organized labor have not retreated in their battle to prevent a turning of the court into a more constructionist mold, the avowed aim of the President. A large share of the American public apparently agrees with him that the Supreme Court should be interpreting the Constitution rather than breaking new social ground.

With this principle in mind and with such substantial backing, it is unfortunate that the President and his advisers chose a nominee with an undistinguished judicial record. Precisely because of the critical conversion he was seeking to impose on the court's makeup and precisely because of the bitter opposition the liberals could be expected to mount, the administration should have been extra careful to pick a man whose credentials—moral, judicial and philosophical—were as much beyond question as possible.

While the nomination of Judge Carswell did not seem too inspiring when it was made, many, including this newspaper, felt the country should be spared another bitter fight over confirmation such as occurred with Judge Clement F. Haynsworth Jr. Even the senators opposed to Haynsworth seemed to lack enthusiasm for another all-out battle.

We derived some solace, too, from the absence of any evidence of financial conflict of interest or wrong-doing on the part of Judge Carswell. His disavowal of the views expressed in a segregationist speech he made years ago in a Deep South community, when the temper of the country was far different from what it is now, appeared to satisfy most people. It just didn't seem that the lack of an outstanding record was worth another divisive fight.

In the light of later information, however, and specifically on grounds of the nominee's evidenced racism and inadequate legal qualifications—the large number of his decisions in the field of civil rights that have been reversed on appeal—many people are having second thoughts.

While Judge Carswell is conceded to be honest, there is no question his record is one of unsurpassed mediocrity. The highest court in the land needs more than that, especially in view of the lowered esteem it enjoys in the eyes of much of the public and after the soul-wrenching crises of the past. It needs someone to add, not only moral integrity, but also wisdom and judicial resourcefulness that will give the court more understanding of the practical effect of its decisions and make it less stubbornly doctrinaire.

About all that recommends Judge Carswell is that he is a southerner and, thus, Nixon can meet his campaign promises to the South. But, if he cannot bring judicial talent to the bench, he probably should not be confirmed.

In that event, the President should look elsewhere than in Dixie for a man who would strengthen the Supreme Court—not only for now, when strengthening is so desperately needed, but for the years to come.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I read that editorial not to confirm or approve all of the statements in the editorial, but simply to say to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana that I hope what has happened to this editorial writer might also happen to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana and to other Members of the Senate generally who have tended to favor the nomination, and upon reflection the Senator will see that the nomination ought not to be confirmed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator started out by saying or suggesting that we ought to have someone of the caliber of Judge Cardozo or Judge Holmes on the Court. Then he said something about Judge Carswell having been overruled by the fifth circuit.

My impression was that Judge Holmes was known in his day as the Great Dissenter. He dissented more than did anyone else on the Court. And in that respect, one can consider that he was overruled by the Supreme Court more than anyone else on the Court during that period of time. Yet, he was regarded as one of the great judges of all times.

I would think the fact that Judge Carswell might have been overruled a number of times by the court of appeals might reflect in about the same way.

I have tried to determine something about the point that the Senator raised. And on the basis of my information basically, I believe that if one is writing cases to be reviewed by the fifth circuit and he wants to be affirmed by the Supreme Court, the safe thing for him to do is to always go to the liberal side, because one can err to a very considerable extent on the liberal side and still be confirmed.

However, if one errs on the conservative side, he will be overruled by that court.

That is a circuit which, above all, prides itself on the extent to which it has overruled district judges. And if that be a source of pride, they can certainly claim it.

Some people may not agree. But I see nothing upon the basis of which one should not vote to confirm Judge Carswell.

Someone brought up the country club episode. I point out that the Senate voted unanimously in 1964 for an amendment that provided that if one had a private club which was, in fact, a private club, he could discriminate in the matter of membership of that club in any way he wanted. I know, because I offered the amendment.

That is how it was in 1964. I recall that former Senator Hubert Humphrey, later Vice President of the United States, was managing the bill at the time. And the Justice Department attorneys thought it was all right. They helped to draft the amendment. They agreed with it

It is very difficult for me to see how we could have voted at that time unanimously to provide that it is perfectly all right to discriminate in any way one wants with respect to the activities of a private club, and now say that Judge Carswell should not be confirmed.

It seems to me that if we follow the same logic, it would mean that every Senator who participated in that action is not qualified to be a Senator today on the same basis, because he voted to legalize the very thing that he is accusing Judge Carswell of doing in 1956.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I would not have so voted had I been a Member of the Senate at the time. However, that is not the same situation.

Judge Carswell was not a private citizen. He was a U.S. attorney at the time of the so-called Tallahassee matter in 1956. He at that time joined with other citizens in a course of action, the result of which was to exclude black people from the use of a golf course which, up until the time of their action, had been a public municipal golf course.

That result was achieved by forming a private corporation to which that previously public facility was then transferred.

Judge Carswell, I understand, has disputed it was his intent by taking part in that course of action to deny black people the use of what had been up to that time a public facility; to deny them the use of it in direct contravention of and to circumvent the ruling of the Supreme Court which had held it unconstitutional for a city or State to segregate any of its public recreational faciilties. But Judge Carswell does admit having knowledge of similar practices occurring in other cities in the South for that purpose.

I would simply call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana to the fact that if Judge Carswell was ignorant that such was the intent or would be the result of the course of action in which he participated, I think that alone raises a very serious question about his qualification and his basic intelligence to serve in this kind of very important position. But I would go further and state on that same point, and say to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, that it seems to me that questions in regard to that very incident have been raised, since Judge Carswell's appearance before the Committee on the Judiciary, with such seriousness that Judge Carswell himself should ask to come again before the Committee on the Judiciary and, if he can, clear up those objections.

If I were he, I would not want to begin upon my duties as a member of the Supreme Court with that and other serious objections still unanswered, and, as far as we know, never to be answered by the man who can answer them best.

I take it Judge Carswell is not just looking for a job. He has a job. I take it he would like to serve on the Supreme Court because he thinks that would be a place of honor and service to the general public. If that is so, which I assume it is, because there is no other reason he would want to serve, I would want to clear up these matters were I he.

Mr. LONG. Do I understand the Senator was not a Member of this body in 1964?

Mr. HARRIS. I came to the Senate, I remind the Senator from Louisiana, in the latter part of 1964, taking office too late to take part in the session of Congress that year.

Mr. LONG. May I say to the Senator that when we voted on that Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Senate—and it was by unanimous vote; there was no objection to it—accepted the amendment I offered to make clear that a private club was not subject to that act and that that private club, so far as the law was concerned, could discriminate in any fashion it chose. That has been the law since then. The amendment I offered made clear that the test would be not whether the club was organized in good faith; the words "bona fide" were used originally but there were substituted the words "in fact." The private club could discriminate in any way it wanted to discriminate. That could be Negroes organizing a private club for their own; it could mean Students for a Democratic Society if they wanted to organize a private club for their own. Any truly private group could do whatever they wanted with regard to whom they might accept as members and with whom they wanted to participate.

That action was taken by the Senate 8 years after the time the Senate was talking about. The House concurred. The President signed that bill into law, which stated that with regard to private clubs those people could do whatever they wanted to do.

I find it most difficult to understand how a Senator would object to a man being confirmed because he did something in 1956, just about 14 years ago, which not only was legal, but also there was nothing to censure that conduct at that moment; and with regard to which Congress placed its explicit stamp of approval at a date 8 years later.

So I say to the Senator that while he may say he was not a Member of this body at the time, the same thing would not be true of a great number of Senators. I think a majority of Senators now serving sat in this Chamber and made legal what they now would condemn Judge Carswell for having done. That being the case, those Senators should either go and tell their constituents they do not know what they are doing in this body and that they are not qualified, or in the alternative that Judge Carswell is qualified to be a Justice of the Supreme Court.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Louisiana persists, it seems to me, in arguing the wrong kind of conclusion from a set of facts he sets forth. The situation which the distinguished Senator from Louisiana relates is not the situation here. The situation here is of an officer of the court, a U.S. district attorney, who entered upon a course of action, the result of which was to take what had previously been a publicly owned and operated municipal golf club and transfer it into the hands of a private corporation for the purpose of keeping black people—they being members of the taxpaying general public—from using what up to that time had been a public facility.

If that was not the intent, then the circumstances are very suspect. I would think someone would come forward, and, what would be better, as I said a moment ago, would be that Judge Carswell himself ask for the opportunity to come back before the Committee on the Judiciary and relate what his intent was at that time; and better than that, respond to questions from members of the Committee on the Judiciary in relation to it.

The Senator from Louisiana said that was a long time ago. It was in 1956. The President used an argument something like that, and I think erroneously, in referring to the late Ralph McGill, who was a friend of mine and, I think, one of the most distinguished and useful men in the history of this country. The President said that Ralph McGill changed his views during his lifetime in regard to segregation. But I point out to the Senator from Louisiana that, while I will not hold a man responsible forever for the follies of his youth, and while I would not automatically condemn Judge Carswell for the white supremacy speech he made in 1948, nevertheless, I would think that a rebuttable presumption arises because of those facts and that kind of speech, which Judge Carswell's record thereafter does not show has been changed. If one looks at Judge Carswell's opinions and at his actions, all of which are spread upon the plain record of the Committee on the Judiciary, I think he will find that the record certainly fails to demonstrate that he ever changed his mind on these issues.

If he did, it seems to me we ought to have stronger proof. I do not say that he did not. I believe every man has a right to change his views. As a matter of fact, if he had been in error, as I think Judge Carswell was, he was under a moral duty to change his views. But I do not think we ought to just come in here and say, "Well, it has been 14 or 16 years ago, and we will not still hold him responsible for that." I might agree if there was anything in the record to the contrary, but where is it?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, when President Kennedy became President—perhaps the Senator from Oklahoma was not aware of this, but I was—President Kennedy refused to belong to some of the better men's clubs because no Negro members were allowed in them. He used his leverage to try to see that they were admitted. One could say that all those who were members in those clubs should not be permitted to be on the Supreme Court or in some other high positions in Government. The same argument could be applied to Judge Warren. He was a member of a club here that had no Negro members for a long period of time. I believed that is the case even now. Yet, we all recognize Judge Warren as being one of the great leaders of the liberal movement, and I would think one of the great heroes of the civil rights groups.

From the best information I have obtained with regard to Judge Carswell's record regarding the opinions the Senator mentions, I find that he has made a record of one who is not an extremist on one side or the other. He is not an extremist on the civil rights side. He is not an extremist on the other side.

I am sure the Senator would be willing to admit that, insofar as it serves the interests of civil rights, to appoint one who is an extremist on the civil rights side or civil rights advocates, about all that could be done in that direction has been done. After all, Thurgood Marshall was appointed to the Supreme Court, and there was no determined effort to defeat the confirmation of that nomination by those who thought he had extremist views on that issue.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator think that that was the appointment of an extremist on that issue?

Mr. LONG. Was he not the attorney for the NAACP?

Mr. HARRIS. And the Senator thinks that proves he was an extremist on that issue?

Mr. LONG. I think he went about as far as he could go on behalf of integration. Could the Senator tell me of someone who could have gone further?

Mr. HARRIS. I think the decisions of the Supreme Court in favor of the innate worth and dignity of every human being and equality of opportunity for every child in America of every color, is not extremism. In a way, that is conservatism. It carries out what has been the intent of the Constitution of the United States to guarantee the dignity, value, and worth of every human being. I do not know of any religion or philosophy worthy of the name, if I may say to the Senator, which would allow us to distinguish between people on the basis of their color and still have any moral regard for our own rightness.

I do see it as a matter of "balance." Some persons have talked about balance. I certainly would not want to have even one person on the court who did not believe in the Constitution of the United States and the innate value and equality of every person, regardless of color. I think the possible dilution of constitutional principle is involved. It is not a matter of extremism to uphold the value of every person.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I think when the Senator talks about little white children and little black children, we should bear in mind that it involves busing a white child 30 miles away from his home to get him into a school so that we will have there what someone has determined is a proper quota of white children. It involves taking a little black child and busing him 30 miles away from his home to put him into a school which, by someone's judgment, has the proper quota of children of the opposite color in it. It also involves the parents of both children violently protesting this action. Thus, the Negroes oppose it and the whites oppose it. Anybody who imposes that system on them, in my judgment, is an extremist, and is denying both the Negro child and his parents and the white child and his parents their rights as they see them. I think a person who would impose that condition on our citizens is an extremist.

It is these same people who say, "No, no, that is not extremism at all. That is upholding the Constitution." Nowhere in the Constitution does it say that. Therefore, when some functionary in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare says that that is a constitutional delegation of authority, I would call that extremism.

If the Senator feels that way, more power to him. I think a man should be true to his convictions. But it seems to me that the court has gone about as far as one would want to go to say the Constitution means just about everything the liberals on the civil rights issues would like to have it say. I think that Judge Carswell's views since he has been on the court have been very moderate, and I think impartial persons looking at that record would tend to think that. But it is not going to satisfy those of the view that we must appoint on the court someone who is going to vote the way Judge Marshall is going to vote all the time, for example.

Mr. HARRIS. I reply to the Senator from Louisiana: Who would have stood up for that little black child who did not have equal education in 1954 if it had not been for the Supreme Court of the United States? Nobody else did. Nobody else had, and nobody else would.

Just consider my home county, for example. I point these matters out to the Senator so that it may be noted that I do not come here with any assertion of special insight. If I can come to see these things, anyone can.

In my home county of Cotton County, the county seat is Walters, a town of about 2,000 population. No black people lived in that town, because in earlier days they had what was called a "sundown ordinance," the effect of which was that black people could not live there. Just south is the town of Temple, Okla., population 1,500. There were a few black people who lived in that town, but there were not sufficient black students to have a black high school. Prior to 1954, we had in Oklahoma, as was true in the Senator's State, and throughout America, particularly in the South, a dual school system by law.

By law, we had a black school system and a white school system. The white people in Temple went to a white high school, but there were not very many black students, so there was no black high school. Those black children who lived in Temple, Okla., did not go to the white school, although they could have walked a few blocks from the black section and could have gone to that school. Instead, by law, on taxpayer's money, including those taxes that black people themselves paid on their earnings from rather menial jobs, those eight or nine black students were bused out of Temple, were bused past Walters, Okla., and bused some 30 miles to Lawton, Okla., on a bus which was known as the tin can.

Who would have stopped that kind of inhumane, unconstitutional, degrading treatment of so many children in this country, if it had not been the Supreme Court in 1954? The Supreme Court said in effect, "You cannot have a dual school system under the Constitution. It is inherently unconstitutional to do so."

In my home county at that time, Comanche County, at Lawton, we had a superintendent of schools who stood up and said that the law was the law and that we in our town were law-abiding people, and that the Court had said that there cannot be dual school systems, and that there were not going to be dual school systems. The Court said that affirmative action had to be taken. In Lawton, we did that. We abolished the dual school system.

Now, in some areas of the country, people are saying, "Give us a little more time, and let us not have this extremist business of doing away with our dual school system." But I say to the Senator that objection comes 16 years following the case of Brown against Board of Education. Now is the time.

I tell the Senator that what we need in this country are people who are going to stand up and say, "The law is the law. Let us join together and see if we cannot work this matter out," instead of continuing an unconscionable delay which only makes matters worse and often results in harsher orders.

Mr. LONG. Let us just assume that the same child the Senator is talking about wants to go to that school right across the street from him, but he is still being put on that tin can and bused 30 miles to go to school somewhere else. Who is standing up for him now? Certainly not the Senator from Oklahoma. That is the kind of problem we are complaining about now in Louisiana.

I thought that the 1954 decision meant that every child was entitled to go to the school nearest his home. But some people, perhaps the Senator is one of them, I do not know——

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator feel that, black or white, a child should be able to go to the school that is closest to him and that that should have been allowed all along for black children?

Mr. LONG. That is what the 1954 decision meant to me. Apparently, however, some people were disappointed to find that some of the Negro children were proud to be like the people who made them, proud of their fathers and proud of their mothers, and wanted to be like them and go to school with people like them. Because some people seemed to feel that even though that little Negro child wants to go to that school next door, we are not going to let him go there, we are going to bus him 30 miles away, on that old tin can the Senator is talking about, where somebody in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare thinks his presence would make for better racial balance.

Furthermore, in the school where I went to school, Louisiana State University, any Negro who wants to go there can show his high school diploma and go there, that is all there is to it.

But over on the north side of the same city where I live, is Southern University. It is the pride of all the Negroes of Louisiana. I am proud to say that the band from Southern University performed at the Super Bowl game—I hope the Senator was watching; 80 million other Americans were watching. They did a magnificent job, and I heard a Heisman Trophy winner sitting right behind me in the stadium say, "That is the best half-time show I have ever seen."

But those people are now being told that Southern University has to become a part of LSU, whether they want to or not. They are saying, "Please, won't you let us continue being Southern University, rather than being a part of Louisiana State University?"

They very well know that every last one of them is eligible for admission to LSU next semester. Why should they be discriminated against in that fashion? I say we are discriminating against both the white and the Negro, and I say that anyone who tries to do that is an extremist on the subject.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Louisiana feels that the black people in the South have not had equal opportunity for jobs, or equal opportunity for education, or an equal chance for a good house in a decent neighborhood, only because they chose not to, I say that the Senator from Louisiana has not been looking at the same country I have been looking at.

Mr. LONG. I asked the Senator a question. He can only yield for a question, and I am trying to ask him this question: Why should not those Negroes in Southern University be entitled to have and be proud of their own university, if the whites are willing to let them have it?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, they are proud, and I am proud for them that they are proud of being black. I think the very fact that the term "black" is being used today is a good innovation.

But I would just say to the Senator from Louisiana that he knows and I know, as every person in America knows, that we have not done right by black people. We came along, after the Civil War, and there were Members of this body and distinguished people generally throughout the country who said that it is not enough to give the black man, at long last, his freedom, but we have got to help him toward the fullness of the meaning of freedom; and some of our wisest men advocated, among other things, that Congress enact a system of Federal aid to education, and that that money be divided up among the States on some ratio which involved the number and percentage of students whose families were poor.

The intent was particularly to give some compensatory attention to the education of black people, who until that time had been overtly held down and kept from education.

That was a measure of particular importance to the South, because the South at that time, as the Senator knows, did not have, by and large, in many of the States, the kind of strong system of education that it should have had.

Moreover, it was of vital importance to the country. There were people who said, "However Louisiana runs its school system is Louisiana's business. If Louisiana wants to discriminate against little black children, that is its business. If Oklahoma decides that it wants to give an inferior education to its students, black or white, that is Oklahoma's business."

Mr. President, as the distinguished Senator from Louisiana will, I am sure, admit, that was never true. It was always America's business how its young people were reared, what sort of chance they had, and what kind of education our system afforded them. We have now found out, much to our regret, Mr. President, how untrue it was. Because we have found that people do not stay in the same place. From Louisiana they move up to New York, or from Oklahoma, they move to Detroit; and we have found that if people were discriminated against anywhere, not only was that immoral, as we should always have known, but it was also going to be felt by all of us, to our detriment, in this country, and our country would be generally weakened by it.

So, the shams and dodges began to put into effect, after the Civil War, though not for a good while thereafter, when America made that awful mistake, and finally began, in the late 1800's, to pass all those Jim Crow laws, so that by the early 1900's even Washington itself, the Federal City, which most of all symbolized the American dream, became a segregated city. When that happened, Mr. President, America did something that was not only shameful, but something that has cost it dearly in blood and treasure and trouble with its conscience.

Now, Mr. President, it is time for us to move ahead. It is not, I submit, a time for "benign neglect." These problems will get worse if neglected. They are problems which demand the highest qualities in every one of us. The problems are difficult; the solutions are not easy. But what we need to insure in America, Mr. President, is that if a black person wants to live among black people alone, he ought to have that right, but if he wants to live in the previously all-white suburbs which, up to now, in most of the cities of America, has been the only place he could be near a good job and have a good house, he ought to have that right of individual self-determination.

Mr. President, that right has not been real. If a black person wants to go to an integrated school, he ought to have that right, Mr. President, and that has not been true. We have, in many of the States of this country, my own and the Senator's included, restricted some young people from doing what the rest of us in this country were allowed to do.

I say, Mr. President, that was unconscionable to do, and I agree with the Supreme Court of the United States, who has said and said repeatedly that affirmative steps are necessary to correct that terrible blot on the history of this country.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator said we have done it by law. So far as I know, I have not voted for any law to do that, and so far as I know the Senator has not.

Mr. HARRIS. No, but I think, Mr. President, that our saying that the Senator and I have not, by our own voting on some law, held down little black children in this country, or black people generally, does not absolve us from the active responsibility to correct that kind of injustice.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator, I know some things that we have done. I know a few things I have tried to do by law in the direction of trying to see to it that the Negro schools in my State and my community had that which was coming to them. I helped raise money in my State to provide facilities to see to it that Negro schoolteachers were paid every bit as well as white schoolteachers, even though, in many instances, they could not present the same credentials, that they were provided with all the wherewithal they needed to go to school, and that their schools were every bit as good as the white ones.

The Senator said one thing that interested me, because I did not know it reflected his views. He said that if a Negro citizen wanted to live among Negro citizens, he ought to have that privilege. Would the Senator be willing to say that if the Negro citizen wanted his children to go to school at the same school with other Negro children, and the white community had no objection to that, they should be permitted to do so?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I do not intend to answer that kind of theoretical question, which the Senator from Louisiana surely knows is exactly the kind of question which has so long been used as a subterfuge to keep people from realizing their constitutional rights.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Is the Senator aware of the fact that that is a problem we have, right in my hometown, with two universities?

A considerable number of Negroes are going to Louisiana State University. But there are several thousand Negroes in Southern University who prefer to go there. That is a concrete fact and is not theoretical.

Incidentally, when they started the law school at Southern, they started by borrowing LSU faculty. That faculty would teach by morning at Louisiana State and by afternoon at Southern. Those people had enough pride in their own rights that they wanted their own law professors, and they brought in some very fine Negro professors to teach there.

If that is how those people want it and prefer it, is the Senator here to tell them they should not be permitted to do so?

Mr. HARRIS. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana well knows that the "happy darky" syndrome was one that southerners used and people in my own State used for years. They said, "Leave them alone. They like it." I do not think the black people of America did like having menial jobs. I do not think they did like having indecent housing. I do not think they did like having inferior schools and colleges. I never did think that those people were correct who said, "If you will just leave our black people alone, if we will just not have some outside agitators stirring them up, they will be all right."

I believe that black people knew that the promise of the Constitution was not being delivered to them; and I, therefore, have been one of those who, at every opportunity, has tried to actively strike down those awful barriers which have tortured young people and helped to destroy children in this country for far too long.

Mr. President, I think we have an active responsibility here. If we want to see this become one country, where people have a chance to live together as citizens of one country, then all of us have the responsibility, in the way our conscience moves us to do so, to take active steps within the democratic system to see that opportunity is equal in America. And it has not been.

As the distinguished Senator from Louisiana knows, I served as a member of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders, the Kerner commission. I walked the ghettos of this country; I walked the rural poverty areas of America; and what I saw made me awfully sick at heart. The facts were not that much new to me, because, like most Americans, I knew the basic facts. But when I finished the study on the Kerner commission, it was not just a matter of knowing it in my head. I felt it in the pit of my stomach.

We said, on the Kerner commission, quite as truthfully as we knew how that America was becoming two societies, separate and unequal. We said that not only is that unacceptable, not only is that morally indefensible, but, also, it is costing us in untold treasure and lives and has done so throughout the foot-dragging history of this Nation's compromising actions in regard to the central issue of race.

One year later, I served with Mayor John Lindsay and others on a committee sponsored by the Urban Coalition and by Urban America, Inc. We took another look at this country, and we said, 1 year later, following the Kerner commission, that the problems were just 1 year worse. I venture to say that the situation is not sufficiently improved since that time.

Now, Mr. President, here we consider the appointment of a man to be one of nine to serve for the rest of his life as a member of the U.S. Supreme Court, which is the last bastion of the safeguarding of what the Constitution promises to each of us; and if we would take a nominee whose qualifications fall far, far short of what they ought to be, and whose own record raises terrible suspicions about his feelings on the central issue of race, then it seems to me that we will commit grave error. This nomination surely ought not be confirmed; and with my vote, it will not be confirmed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator has said he was not going to answer the question, so I assume that he is going to make another speech and decline to answer the question again.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I have all the time in the world, and the Senator from Louisiana is quite within his right—at my indulgence—to ask me whatever questions he wants. But it also is quite within my right to answer however I may please or as fully as I may please, since I have the floor, and since this is one of the matters of greatest importance which the Senate will consider in our lifetime.

Mr. LONG. May I ask the same question of the Senator, hoping to get an answer? What I am asking is this: There is a black community and at some distance a white community, and the black citizens want their children in the school located in the black community and the white citizens want their children in the school located in the white community. Does the Senator favor, against the will of those black parents, busing their children to the school in the white community and, against the will of the white parents, busing their children to the school in the black community?

Mr. HARRIS. If the distinguished Senator from Louisiana would like to be sworn in and testify in regard to a particular case he wants me to decide, I will do it. But I think what we are dealing with here is not the decision of some particular case. I dare say the Senator does not have a particular case in mind. If he does have a particular case in mind, surely he would present it in more detail, if he wanted a judge or jury to decide it.

Mr. LONG. Shall I detail it?

Mr. HARRIS. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana knows that principle is what is involved here. Are we going to take the tragic step we took after Reconstruction? Are we going to say, "Don't bother me any more with these basic human questions that are involved in the black-white crisis which still afflicts America?" Are we going to sort of put those questions out of our minds and get on to something a little more popular or a little easier to decide or a little less inflammatory and explosive? That is the question, Mr. President.

The question involved in the nomination of Judge Carswell is that one, and another. The first question is, Will we require the highest qualifications for those who would serve on the highest court of this land or not? The second question is equally basic, perhaps more so: Are we going to require that a man appointed to the Supreme Court of the United States believe in the promise and ideal of the Constitution to which each of us pledges our support?

Those are the questions, as I see it. Senators may differ on how they see it, but that is the way I see it.

This nominee has given black people throughout the country, and a great many others, every reason to be fearful about what he holds in his heart in regard to them and in regard to full equality in this country. I do not know what is in his heart. All I know is what is in the record. The record, it seems to me, is one which does not clearly demonstrate that the white supremacy views which he voiced in 1948 have been changed.

Ralph McGill, whom the President alluded to—a great man—spent a lifetime trying to bind up the country's wounds, trying to help see that black people in America have an equal chance, trying to change this awful kind of immoral white supremacy that the Senator from Louisiana and I know has been a rampant and ugly ghost in our country.

We have not seen proved a change of heart since this nominee made that horrible speech in 1948. That is why it is necessary that we be awfully careful in our decision.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LONG. I do not think our Negro citizens are ever going to achieve the full equality that they are entitled to, and that I want them to have, until they are willing to stand up and recognize themselves as being equal. A part of that has to do with pride in one's self, in one's mother and in one's father; with confidence, just as I am confident the case is, in his father and his mother, and his grandfather and his grandmother; until Negroes believe that they are just as good and worthy as anyone else and can take pride in themselves.

Unless we encourage them to have such confidence, we are discriminating against them, just as we discriminate against anyone else when he is made to believe that he is not worthy of having pride in his own mother and his own father, and of being proud to live in his own community, and proud to have a school that he can go to and have a teacher whom he likes, a teacher who comes from the same kind of people from whom he comes.

The Senator from Oklahoma may find something evil about that. I do not. The Senator has not answered my question. Is it not fine to see outstanding Negro citizens put on a plane that they can be proud of? Proud of wanting to learn? Proud of wanting to do their best? Proud of their fine performance in a band? Proud of wanting their own university, so that they can assert their racial identity?

If the Senator wants to see the pride of the Negro race, he can go to Southern University, where he will find Negroes who are proud of what they have achieved in the past and hope to achieve in the future.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I want to help see that black people can be as fully proud of this country as they are of themselves.

That is the issue here.

Pride in America. I want them to be able to be proud that America's promise is as real for them as it is for the distinguished Senator from Louisiana and myself.

That is the issue here.

The Senator says, "until they have pride in themselves, until they have pride in their mothers, until they have pride in each other."

I do not think that is the question at issue here.

I do not believe it was lack of black pride that built two school systems in America.

I do not believe it was lack of black pride which forced black people to endure that.

I do not believe it was lack of black pride which confined black people to the worst sections of the cities, towns, and rural areas of America to live in substandard, indecent housing, as the law and our actions did for so long, until this Senate, at long last—far too late—last year, with my active support—decided that we were going to say that a country which taxes everyone on an equal basis, and which drafts young men equally to fight for their country, will finally write into the law that a person in this country has a right to live wherever he wants to.

I do not blame black people for saying, "I am not going to say thank you, Senator HARRIS, for giving me the right to vote in 1965. I thought I already had the right in this country."

I do not think it was a matter of black pride which for so long excluded black people from the basic American right of voting in America.

I do not think it was lack of black pride that caused the awful discrimination and racism in this country from which, as I say, all of us have suffered so terribly.

Racism is the No. 1 mental health problem in America today. It cripples far more little children than does schizophrenia or mental retardation. I am not just talking about the victims of it. I am talking about the people who are taught it, as well.

There is a crippling kind of illogic in people who can stand up and profess to believe in the tenets of the Christian religion and, at the same time, somehow believe that black people are not as good as white people, or that Mexican Americans, or Indians, or any other minority in this country are not the same kind of full-fledged citizens.

Now, Mr. President (Mr. DOLE), there is no reason, at long last, at this late date, for any of us to say that we did not know any of that existed, or that we did not know any of that now exists, that suddenly the States which had a dual school system and those who upheld them have changed their minds, 16 years later, after Brown against Board of Education.

Mr. President, we are all grown men. We all know what the facts are. We can all read the Constitution and the cases. We can also, I trust, see how far short of that constitutional ideal this country has fallen in the past.

Mr. President, I see no other way. If one wants this country to continue to move ahead, if one wants to see the black-white crisis compromised again, or wants to see this country move on toward the things it says it believes in, then this is a terribly important decision facing the Senate today as to whether it will confirm the nomination of Judge G. Harrold Carswell.

It may be politically popular, for the short run, to say that what the issues need and what the black-white crisis needs is to be left alone.

If the "ideological eunuchs" or the "liberal intellectuals" of America manufactured the problems of the cities, why, then, we should leave them alone.

If we do not have a health crisis in this country, if it is not true that America is the richest and most medically knowledgeable country in the world but still stands 14th in infant mortality—a euphemism which means that your child is dead—then we should, indeed, ignore the problem.

If it is not a fact that the black-white crisis continues to worsen in America, if it is not true that 95 percent of black children continue to go to all black schools and that 95 percent of all white children continue to go to all white schools, and that that presents serious obstacles to binding up the Nation's wounds and allowing us to come together as one people in one country, and not as separate and unequal people living one country—if that is not a real problem, then we should, indeed, forget it.

If it is not a real problem that hunger continues in America, that 25 million Americans still live in poverty—if those are not real problems, then a little "benign neglect" is, indeed, the indicated treatment.

But, I say those problems are real, Mr. President.

And, since they are real, if they are not acted upon, if they are not moved against actively and vigorously, they will get worse. Leaving alone the black-white crisis in America, which is the central issue of our day, as it has been, for much, much too long, will make the problem worse.

I would say that those in charge, ourselves included, while those problems get worse during inaction, will be held accountable by the people of this country—and should be held accountable.

Mr. President, were we now considering the appointment of an Attorney General, we would have a chance to go to the people of the country in 1972 and say, as President Nixon did in his remarks to the Republican convention regarding Ramsey Clark, "Elect our candidate President, and we will have a new Attorney General."

Mr. President, what will we say in 1972 in regard to Judge Carswell? Should the Senate confirm him, he will not go out of office, as President Nixon goes out of office in 1972 or in 1976, but he will continue in office for life.

I want Members of the Senate to put themselves in the place of any black person in America who has read that supremacy speech of 1948. And I venture to say that a great many black people have had more cause to read it than do many of us who are white.

I would like to have Senators put themselves in the place of black people and look at that white supremacy speech and at the Tallahassee Golf Course matter in 1956, and then look at these decisions that the nominee has rendered as a judge, and particularly as a member of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, and then ask, "Is that the kind of Supreme Court Justice America promises me? Is that the kind of man that the President should appoint and the Senate confirm to sit in judgment on basic constitutional questions involving human rights? Is that the kind of Supreme Court Justice that I am entitled to and that America should have?" I think the answer of the Senate would be "No."

EXCLUSION OF CERTAIN PERSONS FROM THE NUMERICAL LIMITATION OF WESTERN HEMISPHERE IMMIGRATION

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 2593.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2593) to exclude executive officers and managerial personnel of Western Hemisphere businesses from the numerical limitation of Western Hemisphere immigration, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That (a) section 101(a)(15)(H) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15)(H)), is amended to read as follows:

"(H) an alien having a residence in a foreign country which he has no intention of abandoning (i) who is of distinguished merit and ability and who is coming temporarily to the United States to perform services of an exceptional nature requiring such merit and ability; or (ii) who is coming temporarily to the United States to perform temporary services of labor, if unemployed persons capable of performing such service or labor cannot be found in this country; or (iii) who is coming temporarily to the United States as a trainee; and the alien spouse and minor children of any such alien specified in this paragraph if accompanying him or following to join him."

(b) Section 101(a)(15) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(K) an alien who is the fiancée or fiancé of a citizen of the United States and who seeks to enter the United States solely to conclude a valid marriage with the petitioner within ninety days after entry, and the minor children of such fiancée or fiancé accompanying him or following to join him.

"(L) an alien who, immediately preceding the time of his application for admission into the United States, has been employed continuously for one year by a firm or corporation or other legal entity or an affiliate or subsidiary thereof and who seeks to enter the United States temporarily in order to continue to render his services to the same employer or a subsidiary or affiliate thereof in a capacity that is managerial, executive, or involves specialized knowledge, and the alien spouse and minor children of any such alien if accompanying him or following to join him."

SEC. 2. Section 212(e) of the Immigration and Nationality Act ((8 U.S.C. 1182(e)) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) No person admitted under section 101(a)(15)(J) or acquiring such status after admission whose (i) participation in the program for which he came to the United States was financed in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, by an agency of the Government of the United States or by the government of the country of his nationality or his last residence, or (ii) who at the time of admission or acquisition of status under section 101(a)(15)(J) was a national or resident of a country which the Secretary of State, pursuant to regulations prescribed by him, had designated as clearly requiring the services of persons engaged in the field of specialized knowledge or skill in which the alien was engaged, shall be eligible to apply for an immigrant visa, or for permanent residence, or for a nonimmigrant visa under section 101(a)(15)(H) or section 101(a)(15)(L) until it is established that such person has resided and been physically present in the country of his nationality or his last residence for an aggregate of at least two years following departure from the United States: Provided, That upon the favorable recommendation of the Secretary of State, pursuant to the request of an interested United States Government agency, or of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization after he has determined that departure from the United States would impose exceptional hardship upon the alien's spouse or child (if such spouse or child is a citizen of the United States or a lawfully resident alien), or that the alien cannot return to the country of his nationality or last residence because he would be subject to persecution on account of race, religion, or political opinion, the Attorney General may waive the requirement of such two-year foreign residence abroad in the case of any alien whose admission to the United States is found by the Attorney General to be in the public interest: And provided further, That the Attorney General may, upon the favorable recommendation of the Secretary of State, waive such two-year foreign residence requirement in any case in which the foreign country of the alien's nationality or last residence has furnished the Secretary of State a statement in writing that it has no objection to such waiver in the case of such alien."

SEC. 3. (a) Section 214(c) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1184(c)) is amended by inserting after "101(a)(15)(H)" the language "or (L)".

(b) Section 214 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1184) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) A visa shall not be issued under the provisions of section 101(a)(15)(K) until the consular officer has received a petition filed in the United States by the fiancée or fiancé of the applying alien and approved by the Attorney General. The petition shall be in such form and contain such information as the Attorney General shall, by regulation, prescribe. It shall be approved only after satisfactory evidence is submitted by the petitioner to establish that the parties have a bona fide intention to marry and are legally able and actually willing to conclude a valid marriage in the United States within a period of ninety days after the alien's arrival. In the event the marriage with the petitioner does not occur within three months after the entry of the said alien and minor children, they shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported in accordance with sections 242 and 243. In the event the marriage between the said alien and the petitioner shall occur within three months after the entry and they are found otherwise admissible, the Attorney General shall record the lawful admission for permanent residence of the alien and minor children as of the date of the payment of the required visa fees."

And amend the title so as to read: "An Act to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to facilitate the entry of certain nonimmigrants into the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, as passed by the Senate on August 13, 1969, S. 2593 provided for the facilitation of the entry into the United States of executive officers and managerial personnel of Western Hemisphere businesses having branch offices, affiliates, or subsidiary corporations in the United States. Such aliens would have been admitted as immigrants and excluded from the 120,000 annual limitation on quotas applicable to Western Hemisphere immigration.

The bill, as amended and passed by the House, is in the nature of a substitute for the Senate bill and while it would accomplish the original purpose of S. 2593, its coverage is broader and includes provisions relating to other categories of nonimmigrants. The principal provisions of the bill, as amended by the House, are as follows:

First. As a substitute for the Senate provision admitting Western Hemisphere managerial employees as immigrants, a new nonimmigrant classification is established for any alien who has been employed abroad for at least 1 year by a corporation or other legal entity in the capacity that was executive, managerial, or required specialized knowledge and who is seeking to enter the United States to continue employment with the same employer. This proposal would provide relief for the problems of businesses in both Eastern and Western Hemispheres in transferring key personnel to the United States for temporary tours of duty.

Second. The bill modifies the classification of nonimmigrant aliens of distinguished merit and ability who are coming temporarily to the United States to perform temporary services needed in the United States and will facilitate their temporary admission regardless of whether the nature of the position is permanent or temporary.

Third. The bill establishes a new nonimmigrant classification for aliens coming to the United States for the purpose of marrying a U.S. citizen. The visas would only be available upon approval of a visa petition filed by the prospective citizen spouse. The fiance who marries a U.S. citizen within 90 days after temporary admission would be granted permanent residence through regular immigration procedure, if found otherwise admissible. A petition would have been filed by the American citizen in behalf of the intended spouse to authorize temporary admission to the United States. Their marriage within the specified time would exempt the alien spouse, as an "immediate relative," from the annual numerical limitation on visa issuance. The alien spouse, regardless of place of birth, if admissible, would be eligible for permanent resident status under a procedure similar to that provided in section 245. The required fee paid in connection with the change to permanent resident status would be considered as payment of the visa fee when the record of permanent residence is created. In the event the marriage fails to occur, provision is made for the alien's deportation.

Fourth. The bill also would effect some changes in the present provisions of section 212(e) of the Immigration Act requiring exchange visitors to reside for a period of 2 years in their country of nationality or last residence before being eligible to apply for a visa or permanent residence in the United States. As amended that provision would impose the 2-year foreign residence requirement only where the exchange visitor's participation was financed by the United States or his own government or, regardless of financing, the alien was a national of a country which the Secretary of State had designated as requiring his talents and skills. The amended section would retain the provision for waiver of the foreign residence requirement in cases of hardship to the alien's citizen or permanent resident spouse or child, and the waiver based upon the request of an interested government agency, and would add provisions for a waiver if the alien cannot return to his home country because he would be subject to persecution and a waiver upon the recommendation of the Secretary of State in cases where a statement in writing is obtained from the alien's home country that there is no objection to a waiver in the alien's case.

Mr. President, my interest in this legislation stems from conversations which I had with members of the Canadian Parliament during a visit to Canada in 1969 for participation in the 12th Canada-United States interparliamentary meeting. After I returned from the meeting, I received several letters from two members of the Canadian Parliament, Hon. Marcel Lambert, and Hon. J. Judd Buchanan, which outlined in detail the unfair restrictions which our new Immigration Act had imposed upon Canadian businessmen. Because of their importance to the legislative history of S. 2593, I ask unanimous consent that these letters be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

HOUSE OF COMMONS,
Ottawa, Canada, June 19, 1969.

Hon. SAM J. ERVIN,
The Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: My wife and I were sorry to part company with you and your charming wife in Calgary but were so pleased that Jasper and Banff were so pleasant and the trip West had been such a success. We hope that your return to Washington was both pleasant and uneventful.

At various times during the conference in Ottawa and out West, I spoke to you about a problem that has arisen out of United States quota restrictions affecting Canadians who wish to enter the United States as landed immigrants. The detail of the quota regulations is immaterial, except that Canada for the first time is caught by these restrictions. However, our business, cultural and trading relations are of such a nature that these new regulations do work some rather peculiar hardships upon Canadians. It is about these that I am writing.

A large number of Canadian firms have subsidiaries or related companies in the United States. In the normal course of business operations, it is necessary to promote or transfer personnel. Now that the State Department has imposed a first-come first-serve method of dealing with applications for landed immigrant visas—and such a visa is required for any Canadian to work in the United States, even though it is for a Canadian company—the interpretation of the regulations and the volume of applications has caused excessive delays of many months. In fact, at the present time, I am told that applicants in the earlier part of this year were told that their applications might come up for consideration in mid 1970 or later. Many of our banks who operate in New York and other firms just cannot wait for this type of delay. American firms on the contrary are entitled to move their personnel back and forth at will within Canada and we feel that Canadian firms, who are in a similar position in the United States should also have the same privilege.

There is another feature, particularly in the oil industry, and I think it also may effect a good deal of the secondary manufacturing in Ontario, although I am not so familiar with this aspect of it. In western Canada most of the oil industry is either owned or controlled by American interests. These firms, either of the subsidiary or branch type operation, have been very good in employing Canadians as a great majority of their middle range executive and management personnel. These persons are part of the whole operation and many of them ultimately are promoted or transferred horizontally to either the parent company or to some related operation into the United States. This allows for a free hiring policy and, of course, makes the entry of these firms most welcome in the various industries in which they operate in Canada. However, now many of these firms cannot transfer Canadians back to the United States within the normal course of their operations unless they are prepared to put up with extensive delays. I have knowledge of a number of cases in which Canadian personnel were advised that they were being transferred to the U.S. and that they were being replaced by a U.S. resident in the normal course of affairs. The Canadian could not move and yet the American citizen was coming up to Canada. If these restrictions continue to apply with regard to Canadians, then I fear that American companies will abandon their very welcome and expected practice of hiring as many Canadians as they can for operations in Canada simply because they will not be able to move them without difficulty beyond Canada. Canadians will have a very limited future within these companies. I don't think that this can be considered as an acceptable state of affairs.

I have queried a number of State Department officers at the consular level and they tell me that their instructions are that these applications must be handled on a strict first-come first-serve basis, with certain minor exceptions. Whether their interpretation is correct or not, I do not know, but I am informed by them that their instructions are that any changes have to come through the legislative process. I am, therefore, drawing this matter to your attention so that it could be looked at. I would appreciate your comments.

Canada has always maintained a free immigration policy with the United States but I must say that I would regret any restrictions imposed upon Canadians to their prejudice and see a pressure build up here in Canada for reciprocal treatment or the institution of an exchange of one for one within the business community. It is my understanding that there has been some informal exchange of views between our respective governments on this subject but I have not been able to elicit any information as to the outcome of such discussions.

I have taken the liberty of writing in a similar vein to a number of your co-delegates both in the Senate and the House of Representatives.

With best personal regards, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

MARCEL LAMBERT.

P.S.—I do not know whether your regulations require landed immigrant status for Canadians who wish to join the American Armed Forces. I am informed at the present time there are some 20,000 Canadians in the U.S. Armed Forces with a great number of these serving in Vietnam or who have served there. It would be rather ironic that Canadians who wish to join the U.S. forces with a view to going to Vietnam or otherwise would have to wait on a first-come first-serve basis while their applications for landed immigrant status were caught up in the present red-tape.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,
Ottawa, Canada, July 2, 1969.

Senator SAMUEL J. ERVIN, Jr.,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR ERVIN: It was very kind of you to take the time to drop a note to my wife, Kay, and myself expressing your appreciation. It was a great pleasure for us to have the opportunity of meeting you and all of your colleagues and their wives.

I believe that such exchanges can't help but to greatly improve the close feeling between our countries.

Possibly you will recall my mentioning the problem we were having with immigration for employees of subsidiary companies in Canada and the United States. As you and Senator Mansfield suggested, I am gathering together the pertinent materials and will be in touch with Senator Mansfield to see if there is some way of overcoming our difficulties by means of a treaty between our two countries.

Again, thank you for the honour you did by visiting us and we look forward to seeing you again in the not too distant future.

Yours sincerely,

J. JUDD BUCHANAN,
Member of Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,
Ottawa, Canada, September 12, 1969.

Hon. SAM J. ERVIN, Jr.,
The Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ERVIN: This will acknowledge the receipt during my absence, about two weeks ago, of the report with regard to Bill S. 2593 as it passed the Senate. I want to thank you very much for this and for your unflagging concern with the problems I had raised with you last June. I have noted that the bill was amended in the Senate to apply to "executive officers and managerial employees." I hope that administrative interpretation will not be too restrictive so as to seriously detract from the original intention of your bill which provided for "officer or employee."

I am unaware of the subsequent procedures that are required for this particular bill to have the force of law. I presume that ultimately the bill will require executive signature. I hope that whatever remains to be done will be done in the normal course of events and that we will have the benefit of the change in the law as proposed and enacted upon by the Senate.

We are presently enjoying an adjournment period which was very welcomed, but the time for resumption of our sessions in late October is just around the corner, and in the interval we have a great deal of work to do with policy conferences and committee meetings which are now being organized preparatory to the forthcoming session.

Mrs. Lambert joins me in wishing Mrs. Ervin and yourself the best of health and enjoyment, and continued success in your very busy political activities.

Yours sincerely,

MARCEL LAMBERT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,
Ottawa, Canada, September 19, 1969.

Sen. SAMUEL J. ERVIN, Jr.,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR ERVIN: A belated thank you for the considerable effort which you have made on behalf of subsidiary and associated companies in the U.S. and Canada.

I have mentioned your efforts to several of my colleagues here in Ottawa and they asked me to express their appreciation to you. I believe that your efforts will remove an impediment which impaired the efficiency of the international companies operating in your country and mine.

Thank you again and kindest personal regards.

Yours sincerely,

J. JUDD BUCHANAN,
Member of Parliament.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, after the House amended the Senate bill, I sent an explanation of the House amendments to the members of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary which had original jurisdiction of the Senate bill and advised them that if they had any objections to approving the House amendments, they should let me know. I have been advised of no objection by any member of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. And, so far as I know there is no objection by the Senate to approving the House amendments.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I join in the request of the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment to section 212(e) dealing with the visa for ultimate residence requirements for those who came as exchange visitors without in any way being the subject of the United States or their own country's financing is a reform for which my office has contended for the last 7 years.

Mr. President, I am extremely gratified that S. 2593, as amended, has been finally accepted by the Senate.

The passage of this bill signals the end of a long struggle beginning in April 1963 the first time I wrote a letter to Secretary of State Rusk and again in April 1964 when I wrote again pointing out how over the last few years my office had been flooded with hundreds of exchange-visitor cases where use of the "exchange-visitor visa" also known as the J visa had been extended to cover large numbers of foreign nationals teaching or otherwise employed here who were issued J visas but were not sponsored by the U.S. Government within the meaning of Public Law 87–256 or the predecessor laws. These people were not supported in any way from public funds or funds provided for the purpose of the program by private organizations of either the United States or their own countries. All came to the United States without travel grants and in many cases without any type of grant, but because they were participants in a program designated by the Secretary of State and were issued a J visa; they were not eligible to apply for permanent residence until they had resided and been physically present in the country of their nationality for an aggregate of at least 2 years following departure from the United States.

I recommended that action be taken with all possible speed to amend all improperly issued J visas and that the holders of these visas be reclassified so that an alien of distinguished merit and ability coming temporarily to the United States would be eligible to apply for adjustment of status.

S. 2593, as amended, changes section 212(e) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, and imposes a foreign residence requirement only where the exchange visitor's participation was financed by the United States. Section 101(a)(15)(H)(1) is amended to permit entry of aliens for a temporary period to perform services which may be temporary in nature or permanent in nature. Before this amendment, aliens admitted on an (H)(1) petition could only come to the United States if the position were temporary in nature.

I would like to single out for special praise Mary McFerran of my staff who has labored long and hard over the past 7 years for the passage of this bill. I am very pleased her labors have finally borne fruit. I ask unanimous consent that my letters of April 10, 1963; April 14, 1964; and New York Times articles on this problem appearing on June 23, 1963, and August 22, 1964, be inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 10, 1963.

Hon. DEAN RUSK,
Secretary of State,
State Department,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: According to a "Memorandum For The General Counsel" on the "Study of the Defense Scientists Immigration Program" dated June 16, 1962 and signed by Dr. Harold Brown, Director of Defense Research And Engineering less than 10 percent of the exchange visitors now here have been sponsored by our Government within the meaning of PL 87–256.

Under this law, all visits and interchanges are financed for studies, research, instruction and other educational activities between the United States and other countries, of students, trainees, teachers, instructors, leaders, experts in fields of specialized knowledge or skill and other influential or distinguished persons.

In the revised edition of the Department of State Publication 7201, released June 1961 on page 14, it is noted that two types of grants are available. A limited number of all expense grants and the other type of grant which covers only travel expenses. Under law, a participant in a program designated by the Secretary of State is issued a (J) visa and is not eligible to apply for permanent residence until he has resided and been physically present in the country of his nationality for an aggregate of at least two years following departure from the United States.

Over the last few years my office has been flooded with hundreds of exchange-visitor cases and it has been found that in practice use of the "exchange-visitor visa" has been extended to cover large numbers of foreign nationals teaching or otherwise employed here who were issued (J) visas but were not sponsored by the U.S. Government within the meaning of PL 87–256 or the predecessor laws. These people were not supported in any way from public funds or funds provided for the purpose of the Program by private organizations of either the United States or their own countries. All came to the United States without travel grants and in many cases without any type of grant.

We have a critical shortage in our universities, research laboratories and hospitals, yet because these needed foreign nationals were improperly issued (J) visas, they were automatically brought under the two years residence abroad requirement. Even if first preference petitions are granted after their required two years of residence abroad, sixty percent come from oversubscribed quota areas so our country loses these needed established professional men and women, not for two years but for many years. I am bringing this to your attention because under Section 221(i) of the Immigration & Nationality Act, the Secretary of State is given discretion to revoke such improper documentation.

I recommend a complete revision of policy and regulations in the issuance of the (J) visa and in the granting of program numbers, to be sure that the exchange program number is a Q-program which means that the exchange visitor receives an all expense grant or a grant which does cover travel expenses. I recommend that all the schools of learning and institutions conducting the exchanges are within the meaning of PL 87–256 or the predecessor laws.

I believe that my recommendations are in full accord with the legislative history of PL 87–256 recorded in both reports accompanying this legislation, Senate Report No. 372 of the 87th Congress by Senator Fulbright and House Report No. 1094 by Representative Hays.

On Page 18 of Senate Report No. 372, Senator Fulbright defined one of the purposes of this legislation: . . . "(3) to permit more choice between visa categories so that foreign scholars and medical personnel not covered by a U.S. Government program would not necessarily have to enter this country as exchange visitors and be subject to the provisions of Public Law 555, 84th Congress . . ." ". . . Some of the problems in this field seem to be more administrative than legislative in character . . .".

On Page 16 of House Report No. 1094, the author of this legislation, Representative Hays stated: . . . "The main purpose of this new language as to reserve the (F) visa for students other than exchange students and make the new (J) type of nonimmigrant visa available solely to nonimmigrants selected under the exchange program. The placing of exchange aliens in a separate category (J) will also simplify the administration of the 2-year foreign residence requirement contained in the new subsection (b) . . .". (emphasis added)

In the many reports rendered on the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act by representatives of all Professional Groups and Foundations, it has been strongly recommended to the Congress that the Program should not be used for staffing purposes; yet, it is my understanding that upward of 1700 program members have been issued without any attempt to check out whether or not the hospitals, schools or institutions of learning are conducting exchanges and training courses within the meaning of the law.

In the appendix to this letter, you will find the outline of a few cases selected at random from my files. I am sure study of these case histories will serve to illustrate the situation outlined in this letter.

I feel it is imperative because of the critical shortage of certain skills that action be taken with all possible speed to amend all improperly issued (J) visas of these needed foreign nationals now here in the United States under the authority granted under Section 221(i) of the Immigration & Nationality Act.

The holders of these visas may properly be reclassified under Section 101(a)(15)(F)(i) of the Immigration & Nationality Act which gives a foreign national the right to come here as a bona fide student qualified to pursue a full course of study; or Section 101(a)(15)(H)(i) an alien who is of distinguished merit and ability coming temporarily to the United States to perform other temporary services of an exceptional nature requiring such merit and ability; or (ii) an alien who is coming temporarily to the United States to perform other temporary services or labor, if unemployed persons capable of performing such service or labor cannot be found in this country; or (iii) an alien who is coming temporarily to the United States as an industrial trainee. In this way, they would be eligible to apply for adjustment of status where such adjustment is found by the Attorney General to be in the public interest.

The policy and change of regulations I recommend should, of course, apply also to applicants for visas who have not yet entered the United States so as to insure their entry in the proper nonimmigrant status.

I would appreciate your early attention to these recommendations because of the urgency of the matter and a reply at your earliest convenience.

Sincerely,

JACOB K. JAVITS,
U.S. Senator.

APRIL 14, 1964.

Hon. DEAN RUSK,
Secretary of State,
State Department,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: You received a letter from me dated April 10, 1963 explaining in full detail why I recommended a complete revision of policy and regulations in the issuance of the (J) visas and in the granting of program numbers to be sure that the exchange program number is a G-program which means that the exchange-visitor receives an all expense grant or a grant which does cover travel expenses. I recommended that all the schools of learning and institutions conducting the exchanges be within the meaning of PL 87–256 or the predecessor laws. I pointed out that less than 10 percent of the exchange visitors now here have been sponsored by our Government within the meaning of PL 87–256. I brought this to your attention because under Section 221(i) of the Immigration & Nationality Act, the Secretary of State is given discretion to revoke such improper documentation.

Your reply of June 8, 1963 advised that you were awaiting a determination as to your authority under the Immigration and Nationality Act to substitute for a (J) visa another type of visa where the holder of the (J) visa at the time of his initial application appeared qualified for another type visa, and that your Legal Adviser was consulting on this question with the legal staff of the Department of Justice, since that Department has concurrent jurisdiction in this area.

I do not have to emphasize the critical shortage in the United States in all professional fields, yet many of those who were improperly issued (J) visas are highly skilled specialists needed desperately by our universities, research laboratories and hospitals.

These people were not supported in any way from public funds provided for the purpose of the Program. They came to this country without travel grants and in many cases without any tye of grant, but because of the improperly issued (J) visas, Government agencies cannot grant waivers to them except in exceptional cases.

One year after my initial letter to you, this situation is now, more than ever, in a state of chaotic confusion. The necessity for immediate action is not in the near future; it is now in the present.

I would, therefore, appreciate a prompt answer to the question I raised in my letter of April 10, 1963. I would like to know why immediate action cannot be taken to revoke such improperly issued (J) visas because under Section 221(i) of the Immigration & Nationality Act, the Secretary of State may at any time, in his discretion, revoke such visa or other documentation; and why the holders of these visas cannot be reclassified under Section 101(a)(15)(F)(i) or Section 101(a)(15)(H) (i) or (ii) or (iii).

Sincerely,

JACOB K. JAVITS,
U.S. Senator.

[From the New York Times, June 23, 1963]

U.S. VISA POLICY REVIEWED TO AVOID OUSTING STUDENTS

(By Warren Weaver, Jr.)

WASHINGTON, June 22.—The State Department is reviewing a particularly vexing application of the nation's immigration policy that is threatening with deportation hundreds, perhaps thousands, of persons who came to the United States as cultural exchange students.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk had promised critics in Congress that he would examine the problem. Because of it otherwise eligible skilled workers and professional people from abroad are being prevented from settling permanently in the United States.

The problem involves two groups of persons who entered the country under special exchange visas that require them to return to their own countries for two years before they can seek permanent residence here.

JAVITS AND LINDSAY PROTEST

The first group consists of foreigners who were given this restricted type of visa in error, in some cases apparently for reasons of speed, when they actually qualified for an entry permit easily convertible to United States citizenship.

The second group consists of persons who were given this type of visa properly, later married in this country and perhaps had children, and are now being forced to leave for a two-year waiting period abroad.

Complaints have been lodged with the State Department by Senator Jacob K. Javits and Representative John V. Lindsay, both New York Republicans, and others.

Mr. Rusk has informed the Senator that his legal aides and the Department of Justice are studying the possibility of substituting an unrestricted visa for the exchange visa in cases where the foreign visitor was originally eligible for the former.

If such a substitution could be made, the individual involved could apply at once for permanent residence, the first step toward United States citizenship, and avoid any possibility of deportation and a two-year wait.

In almost all cases, immigration quotas are open for persons here on exchange visas because of their specialized education or professional background.

Switching to another type of visa is not considered possible for the second group of visitors because the exchange visa is the only one they were ever eligible for.

However, the State Department and the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Justice are trying to work out an easing of the requirements for an "exceptional hardship" waiver of the two-year deportation.

MANY APPEALS RECEIVED

Many of the exchange students who married while in the United States have appealed to the Immigration Service for such waivers.

The standard reply has been that "the existence of a citizen or permanent-resident spouse or children and possible two-year separation incident to fulfilling the foreign residence requirement do not, in themselves, establish the exceptional hardship" required for a waiver.

A typical case is that of an English girl who came to the United States on a Fulbright grant in 1958 for graduate study at Cornell University. She married a graduate chemistry student there in 1959, and in 1960 they became the parents of a daughter.

Her exchange visa expired last August, and the Government is trying to deport her. She contends that it would involve "exceptional hardship" for her to take her daughter to England for a two-year wait or, alternatively, for her husband to postpone his career in the United States by spending two years in England.

PRIVATE BILLS SOUGHT

The Immigration Service decided two weeks ago that "exceptional hardship" was not involved, and is proceeding with deportation proceedings. She is now working to get a private immigration bill introduced in Congress on her behalf, which would stay the proceedings temporarily.

These cultural-exchange immigration problems have increased the number of private bills considerably. As long as an immigration bill remains alive in either house, its subject cannot be deported.

Cases where the foreign visitors are threatened with deportation because they were given a cultural exchange visa by mistake are equally perplexing.

A special bill is now pending, for instance, to clear for a citizenship application a 68-year-old Roman Catholic nun who is presently superintendent of a New York hospital.

Italian by birth and a member of a missionary order, she worked in the United States from 1914 to 1922 and had applied for citizenship when she was transferred to China, where she remained for 25 years. She returned to Italy in 1952 and was admitted to the United States in 1955 on a cultural exchange visa.

She should have received a returning resident-alien visa. Since she was not traveling to the United States to study under any public or private grant, she was probably not really eligible for the exchange visa.

But an exchange visa is what she was given, so that she is now barred from applying for permanent residence here until she returns to Italy for a two-year wait.

There are about 100 immigration bills involving cultural exchange visas now pending. No one knows how many other cases have not reached the legislation stage and perhaps never will.

[From the New York Times, Aug. 22, 1963]

THE UNITED STATES MAY REVISE STUDENT'S VISAS—HOUSE GROUP TOLD OF PLAN TO WAIVE RETURN CLAUSE

(By Warren Weaver, Jr.)

WASHINGTON, August 21.—The State Department proposed today to ease the threat of deportation that hangs over many foreign students who have married and raised families in the United States.

Students who come to this country now under the cultural exchange program receive visas that require them to return to their homelands for a minimum of two years before they can re-enter the United States.

Lucius D. Battle, Assistant Secretary of State for Educational and Cultural affairs, suggested that the two-year return requirement be waived where it would produce enforced separation of families and thus additional hardships.

Waivers of this requirement are theoretically available now, but the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Justice Department has refused to grant them merely on the ground that the applicant has a husband, wife or children from whom he or she would be separated by deportation.

WANTS GROUP'S APPROVAL

Mr. Battle made his proposal at a hearing of the House Immigration subcommittee. He said it had the approval of the Defense and the Health, Education and Welfare departments and the Immigration Service, but would not be put into effect unless the subcommittee approved.

There was some question about subcommittee sentiment. Several members urged Mr. Battle to submit a set of specific standards that would be used in deciding whether or not a married exchange student should be deported.

The subcommittee chairman, Representative Michael A. Feighan, Democrat of Ohio, called Mr. Battle's description of what hardship would justify a deportation waiver as very unclear, nebulous, even innocuous.

Mr. Battle reported that the State Department and the other agencies were also prepared to grant visas with no two-year return provision to foreign doctors, nurses, scientists and teachers, many of whom now enter the exchange program and thus are forced to leave after a year or two.

OPPOSED BY AMA

The State Department official noted that this recommendation had been unanimously opposed by professional organizations in the health field, such as the American Medical Association, but endorsed by the Government agencies nonetheless.

Questioned by subcommittee members, Mr. Battle emphasized that doctors, interns or nurses now in this country on exchange visas would not be permitted to shift to visas without the return provision. Such a move would be of doubtful legality, he said.

There are a number of skilled foreign professionals threatened with deportation from the United States now because they were given exchange visas with the two-year-return provision by mistake, when they might have entered on a less restrictive authorization. They would not benefit from the State Department plan.

No one really knows how many exchange students could escape deportation if the new waiver policy is adopted, but there would be hundreds, perhaps even thousands. More than 25,000 such students have been coming to the United States a year.

One reason the subcommittee held the hearing was because it has been flooded with requests for special bills, each designed to hold up by statute the deportation of a single exchange student who faces the two-year return to his homeland.

Members of the subcommittee urged Mr. Battle to review the program under which private companies sponsor students abroad who then are able to come to the United States and work for them under the special exchange visa.

Some immigration authorities feel that this program could be improved by eliminating access to the easily obtained exchange visa and restricting participants to visas issued only to highly skilled specialists.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am very pleased that this measure has now borne fruit. I express my appreciation to the Senator from North Carolina who has piloted this measure all the way through.

I assure the Senate that it will be a blessing to many people who have had to experience great difficulty in using their talents based upon the skills which they have learned for the benefit of the United States because of this very terrible and mistaken utilization of the so-called J visas which require 2 years of residence and a further period of study or training in the United States.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New York, who has been one of the stanch supporters of the measure since its very inception.

I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to S. 2593.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENT DECLARES NATIONAL EMERGENCY IN POSTAL STRIKE

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, this afternoon President Nixon issued a declaration of national emergency in the form of a proclamation, which reads as follows:

DECLARING A NATIONAL EMERGENCY

(A proclamation by the President of the United States of America)

Whereas certain employees of the Postal Service are engaged in an unlawful work stoppage which has prevented the delivery of the mails and the discharge of other postal functions in various parts of the United States; and

Whereas, as a result of such unlawful work stoppage the performance of critical governmental and private functions, such as the processing of men into the Armed Forces of the United States, the transmission of tax refunds and the receipt of tax collections, the transmission of Social Security and welfare payments, and the conduct of numerous and important commercial transactions, has wholly ceased or is seriously impeded; and

Whereas the continuance of such work stoppage with its attendant consequences will impair the ability of this nation to carry out its obligations abroad, and will cripple or halt the official and commercial intercourse which is essential to the conduct of its domestic business:

Now, therefore, I, Richard Nixon, President of the United States of America, pursuant to the powers vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States and more particularly by the provisions of Section 673 of Title 10 of the United States Code, do hereby declare a state of national emergency, and direct the Secretary of Defense to take such action as he deems necessary to carry out the provisions of the said Section 673 in order that the laws of the United States pertaining to the Post Office Department may be executed in accordance with their terms.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this 23d day of March in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and seventy, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and ninety-fourth.

The President signed this declaration during a bipartisan meeting of Members of the two bodies of Congress. At the same time he signed an Executive order calling into service members and units of the National Guard.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the Executive order.

There being no objection the Executive order was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER CALLING INTO SERVICE MEMBERS AND UNITS OF THE NATIONAL GUARD

Whereas certain employees of the Postal Service are engaged in an unlawful work stoppage which has prevented the delivery of the mails and the discharge of other postal functions in various parts of the United States; and

Whereas the laws of the United States, including Sections 707, 5102, 6001, and 6101 of Title 39, United States Code require that the business of the Post Office Department, including the expeditious processing and delivery of the mail, be regularly carried on; and

Whereas the aforesaid unlawful work stoppage has prevented and is preventing the execution of the aforesaid laws relating to the Post Office Department; and

Whereas the breakdown of the postal service in the numerous areas affected by the said unlawful work stoppage is a matter of grave national concern; and

Whereas I am charged by the Constitution of the United States to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and I have determined that I am unable solely with the regular forces to cause the aforesaid laws to be executed;

Now, therefore, I, Richard Nixon, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, including Sections 3500 and 8500 of Title 10 of the United States Code and Section 301 of Title 3 of the United States Code, do hereby order as follows:

Section 1. The Secretary of Defense is authorized and directed to take all appropriate steps to respond to requests of the Postmaster General for assistance in restoring and maintaining Postal service and to execute the Postal laws of the United States.

Section 2. In furtherance of the authorization and direction contained in section 1 hereof, the Secretary of Defense is authorized to use such of the Armed Forces of the United States as he may deem necessary.

Section 3. I hereby authorize and direct the Secretary of Defense to call into the active military service of the United States, as he may deem appropriate to carry out the purposes of this order, any or all of the units of the Army National Guard and of the Air National Guard that he deems appropriate to serve in the active military service of the United States for an indefinite period and until relieved by appropriate orders. In carrying out the provisions of this order, the Secretary of Defense is authorized to use the units, and members thereof, of the Army National Guard and of the Air National Guard called into the active military service of the United States pursuant to this section.

Section 4. The Secretary of Defense is authorized to delegate within the Department of Defense any of the authority conferred upon him by this Executive Order.

RICHARD NIXON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 23, 1970.

Mr. SCOTT. The President said this morning that his purpose is to use the greatest persuasion and the least compulsion possible, that what is necessary is firmness in the execution of his office, but it is his desire to leave open every possibility for early termination of the work stoppage.

Therefore, at this time the order will be applied in the New York City postal system only, in order to use military personnel, who will be unarmed and in military fatigues, and prepared to work directly and solely under the supervision of civilian postal employees in this area for the purpose of getting out that portion of the first-class mail which is of an emergency and essential character.

The President addressed the people of the United States pointing out that it is impossible for the executive department to negotiate with postal workers until the violations of the law cease.

The bipartisan leadership of Congress did not in any way dissent from the President's recommendation. I do not wish to quote individuals by name, but there was no indication there other than that Congress could not possibly act on legislative matters pertaining to postal pay increases until after the illegal work stoppages have ended. Neither Congress nor the Executive could hardly act with a gun at their heads.

We in Congress desire to act for the relief of postal employees. The President recognizes, as do Senators and Members of the House, that postal employees are underpaid, that they are entitled to certain comparability provisions, that they are entitled to relief; and that they have just and legitimate grievances, some of long standing. The sooner the work stoppage is ended, the sooner we can give them the kind of relief to which they are justly entitled.

Mr. President, at this point I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, I wish to join the Senator from Pennsylvania in pledging support to the action taken by the President today. The delivery of our mail is of paramount importance. When the delivery of the mail is stopped it affects all Americans. We have on the statute books laws prohibiting strikes against the Government. The President called this to the attention of postal workers, the overwhelming majority of whom are abiding by the law and continue to work. I hope it will be unnecessary to use military forces in New York or in any other area, but the President took the only step he could and that is to protect the interest of all the country.

Last week with that thought in mind I introduced a resolution pointing out that we do have laws on the books prohibiting strikes against the Government, and the penalties embraced therein, and called on the administration to enforce these laws. If necessary, Congress may want to consider that resolution and thereby pledge its support of the action that the President took today.

Congress does stand behind the President in this action and I believe the American people will also support his decision. While the postal workers do have some justifiable grievances, as the Senator pointed out, it is recognized that this is not the way to get them adjusted. The postal workers must return to work so that the matter may be worked out in negotiations and by the action of Congress.

Let us emphasize we are a government of laws and not men, nor any group of men have a right to violate these laws merely because they may disagree.

Neither the President nor Congress can work under the threat of blackmail. We cannot condone in this country a strike against the Federal Government.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr President, as I said last week, the President is under a duty which he must perform to keep the Government going and not allow the functions of the United States, to grind to a halt, as they would if the mail does not move. Therefore, the President did what he had to do. I regret he had to do it and I regret he picked out New York City, but that is the penalty we pay for being the financial and commercial hub we are.

However, I have a practical suggestion I would like to lay before the President, the distinguished minority leader, and the people of the country. When the President said we will not negotiate until the men come back, I think that is being unrealistic and likely to harden attitudes on the part of the Government and the men, who are pretty angry. They have a right to be angry.

The Government has failed them. There is no question about that. Their pay raise is long overdue. It has been tied into a postal reorganization, which may be fine—indeed, I am for it—but it should not be the price of a pay raise, nor should postal workers have been made the "patsies" in the fight on inflation.

The presidents of the postal unions have not been parties to the work stoppage. They have done the best they could to get the men back to work. As is true in many conflicting situations, many things lean on each other.

I believe if the opportunity were afforded to work with the leaders, with the presidents of the postal unions, most of whom are in Washington—and who have done their utmost to bring the men back—and if Members of Congress and the President were tied into the effort, it would accelerate bringing the men back to work. I have no doubt about that.

The Senator from Delaware, the distinguished minority leader, and I could all agree that anything we can do without undue rigidity, which will bring this situation back to normal in the shortest possible period and curtail the use of armed forces to a bare minimum, would be highly desirable. I submit that suggestion, and I know the Senator will give it every consideration, as will the President. I ask unanimous consent that a statement I have just released concerning the President's address be made part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR JAVITS

It is most regrettable that the President has found it necessary to call out the troops to get the mails through. I cannot fault the President for having made this decision. He has a constitutional responsibility to see that the mails get through, and this is what he has done. I regret, too, that he felt he had to single out New York City, but I assume that is the price New York City must pay for being the nation's financial and commercial hub.

The one aspect of the President's announcement which I do deplore is the refusal to enter into negotiations until the postal workers return to their jobs. Now is the time for a little more flexibility, because I feel that rigidity can only serve to harden the attitudes of the U.S. government and of the striking workers. I hope that the President will modify his stand so that a spirit of greater reasonableness can prevail on both sides.

The strikers are very mad, and with real cause. They have been underpaid and taken for granted for too long. That does not mean, however, that they are free to flout the law. They must be urged to return to their jobs, but the best way to do that is for the Administration to sit down and begin negotiating with the postal union leaders, who have taken a most responsible stand against the walkout. I believe that if they come up with a package that has Administration and Congressional support, the postal workers will return to their jobs promptly.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding.

I want to pledge my support to the President and commend him for the action he has taken. It would be very unwise to permit the strike to go on and let the deliveries of the mails bog down.

It would be totally wrong to negotiate or concede the strikers any of their demands as long as they are in violation of law.

The basic issue is whether or not the citizens of the United States can violate those laws that they decide are unjust and that they have a right to. That has been preached from high places. It may lead to the downfall of our Government. But this is the first demonstration we have had of it in the Government itself.

The delivery of mail is a Government function. It is a violation of law to strike or assert the right to strike, and that law should be enforced.

I want to commend the vast army of postal workers who have had no part in this strike. I want to commend those leaders who have discouraged them. But I raise the question, Mr. President, Are we going to say to any segment of the American people that if they suffer an economic injustice, that gives them the right to violate the law?

I know many older people who, in spite of social security, are receiving too small an amount of money. I know many farmers whose income is not what it ought to be. I know many people who are working in the only job available to them, and it is not as much as they ought to have.

Are we going to say to all of those people that they have a right to flout the law and to disobey the law? That is the issue.

After the strike is settled, the time will come to discuss what kind of postal legislation we should have. All Americans should wholeheartedly support the President and condemn those people who, with knowledge and intent, openly violate the law of the United States.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I had promised to yield first to the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), but before I do so, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD the remarks made by the President at 2:15 p.m. today.

There being no objection the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF THE PRESIDENT IN A TELEVISION AND RADIO ADDRESS REGARDING THE POSTAL WORKERS' STRIKE

My fellow Americans: I want to report to you on developments in the postal work stoppage and on the actions I have decided to take.

First, the overwhelming majority of postal workers across the nation remain on their jobs—upholding their tradition, and their oath, to support the Constitution of the United States.

Second, in many communities where walkouts occurred last week, postal employees are returning to their jobs.

However, in several large cities, the post offices are shut down. In New York, for example, the mail system is wholly paralyzed by the illegal walkouts; and essential services have been halted.

Last Saturday, I pledged to the nation that, if the current situation existed on Monday—today—I would take action to fulfill my constitutional obligation to move the mails and I am taking that action now.

Injunctions have been sought, and in most cases already granted, forbidding striking postal workers from interfering with those who wish to return to work.

I directed the Attorney General to take whatever action he believes necessary to see that these court orders are obeyed, and working with local authorities, to see that no illegal picket lines interfere with workers returning to work.

Secondly, I have just now directed the activation of the men of the various military organizations to begin in New York the restoration of essential mail services. New York City is where the current illegal stoppages began; it is where the mail has been halted the longest; it is where the resultant problems have become most acute. If the Postmaster General deems it necessary to act in other affected major cities, I will not hesitate to do so.

These replacements are being sent in as supplemental work force to maintain essential services. Only as many workers as are necessary to accomplish that will be used and they will be withdrawn as the striking postal workers return to their jobs.

Let me now address my comments to both the postal workers who have stayed on the job—and those who are engaging in the work stoppage.

The United States Postal System is a vital element of our entire communications system. The poor depend heavily upon it for medical services and also for Government assistance. Veterans depend upon it for their compensation checks. The elderly depend upon it for their Social Security checks. The nation's businesses depend upon it as a way to stay in business so they can meet their payrolls and our men in Vietnam depend upon "mail call" as their only link with their loved ones at home.

From the time I came to Congress 23 years ago, I have recognized that the hundreds of thousands of fine Americans in the mail service—the Post Office Department—are underpaid and they have other legitimate grievances.

For the past year, almost since the day we took office, both the Postmaster General and I have been working to alleviate not only the legitimate grievances of postal workers but to move to eliminate the source of those grievances—that is, the obsolete postal system itself, a system that no longer serves its employees, its customers or the country as it should.

That was why that among our first legislative proposals was wholesale reform of the United States Post Office. Included have been requests for increased pay for postal workers, for increased benefits, for compression by 60 percent of the time it takes a worker to move from the bottom to the top of the pay scale.

I believe that if that postal reform had become law we wouldn't have the current crisis. But that crisis is here and it has brought additional grievances to the fore. The country has recognized these inequities in postal pay and benefits.

This Administration has always been willing to work them out. As the Secretary of Labor and postal union leaders indicated again Saturday, we stand ready to begin negotiations, discussions on all issues including pay immediately after postal workers are back on their jobs. But we cannot and we will not negotiate while thousands of postal workers are participating in an illegal work stoppage.

At this time, it is only those who have struck and are staying off the job who are preventing meaningful negotiations and resolution of their problems through those negotiations and the legislative process.

And so I urge you to return to your jobs so that these negotiations can begin with an urgent but reasonable climate.

Just as this issue goes beyond the question of mail service, so my remarks at this time are addressed to all Americans. What has occurred here is that some employees of the Federal Government are now not only going against the best interests and the best tradition of their service, but against the recommendations of their national union leader, against the oath of office that they took, against orders handed down by the Federal courts and they are cutting off service essential to thousands, millions of Americans.

What is at issue then is the survival of a government based upon law. Essential services must be maintained and, as President, I shall meet my Constitutional responsibility to see that those services are maintained.

And I am asking for the understanding and support of every American in this decision that I have made in behalf of our country.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield now to the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN).

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I rise briefly to associate myself with the remarks of the distinguished minority leader and other Senators who are commending the President for the action he announced today.

I think it is particularly noteworthy that the President's message and his tone were conciliatory. He moved at a time of serious domestic crisis with a calm determination which has become his hallmark as President of the United States—no appeal to passion, but a quiet appeal to reason.

He has, I think, used the minimum of force which he could call upon under the circumstances, and has left the maximum amount of flexibility and room for negotiation and reason.

I, too, want to join the Senator from Nebraska in paying tribute to the many thousands of postal workers who have not left their job, and to remind ourselves and the Nation that the overwhelming majority of postal workers have continued to abide by the oath they took when they became employees of the Government. I also want to commend the national and local leaders of postal unions who have done their utmost to keep postal workers on the job.

I hope, as all the other Members of the Senate do, that it will not be necessary even to use troops in New York City; that before it becomes necessary, those few workers out of many will see the correctness of responding to the President's appeal.

I thank the minority leader for yielding to me.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield now to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND).

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I wish to thank the distinguished minority leader. I made a statement on this matter last Friday. I wish now to be associated with the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. President, the President of the United States today has made an urgent but reasonable appeal to the postal workers to return to their jobs throughout the country. It was a firm speech but a moderate one. There were no polemics, no hysterics, no threats.

There was, however, every indication the administration would act—and act with conviction and with speed—to get the mail service of this country moving again.

The President said he would call on the military to help handle the crisis. But he mitigated this by saying he would use troops immediately only in New York City, and use only the number of troops needed to get the mail going again.

He also warned the postal workers who are still out on strike that there can be no negotiations with any of them until all of them are back on the job.

The President fully recognizes that the postal workers of the United States deserve more pay, better benefits, and more reasonable working conditions. But, he said, the Federal Government would not be blackjacked into action by an illegal strike; and I commend him for taking this position.

Altogether, Mr. President, his statement on the postal crisis was a logical, reasonable, and most rational one. If the postal workers accept what he said in the spirit in which it was said, the crisis will be over and we can get on about the business of resolving the issues involved.

KERNER COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—SPECIAL IMPACT PROGRAM

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders, in its report of over 2 years ago, recommended a war on poverty on four fronts. The first, and largest was employment; the second, economic development of poverty areas and encouragement of ghetto business ownership; the third, reform of the present welfare system; and the fourth, a national system of income supplementation. In the context of the consideration of the administration's proposals for a new comprehensive manpower system and for an historic reform in our welfare structure, this Congress has the opportunity to move substantially toward implementation of the Kerner Commission recommendations on three of these four fronts.

However, despite growing interest in the slogans of economic development and of minority enterprise and ambitious new initiatives by this and the previous administration, we have not developed an economic development or minority enterprise strategy. Businesses continue to leave the core cities at an alarming rate. Between 1954 and 1965, almost two-thirds of all new industrial buildings and a little over half of all new stores were constructed outside the central cities. The situation, in depressed rural areas, as measured in migration statistics is just as great. Between 1950 and 1960 some 11 million Americans migrated from rural to urban areas and there is every indication that the 1970 census will show a continued movement at equal or higher rates. The most recent reports indicate that minorities still own and operate less than 1 percent of the nearly 5 million private businesses in the country, and that fewer than 3 percent of the 1.5 million Americans who classify themselves as self-employed are of minorities. And present economic conditions make us aware that the unemployment rate in depressed urban and rural areas averages well above the national rate and that in those areas soaring rates of 12 percent are not uncommon.

We need a number of programs to overcome these realities, but I have long held that the principal need is for a new quasi-public institution to stimulate the influx of low-interest capital for economic development of our depressed urban and rural areas. In 1967, I proposed the establishment of a domestic development bank, a profitmaking corporation authorized to make and participate in long-term, low-interest loans and guarantees and to provide supportive technical assistance, in order to stimulate employment opportunities and minority entrepreneurship in such areas. The proposal envisions the use of governmental funds and resources essentially as levers to move the private forces into positions that can supplement current strictly governmental efforts to fight poverty. The bank would be authorized to make long-term, low-interest loans and guarantees, to participate in loans with public or private lenders to sell participations in its loans, and to provide supportive technical assistance. In essence, it is very much similar to the highly successful World Bank in its purpose, operations and structure.

Since my introduction of the Domestic Development Bank Act, there has been a growing recognition of the need for an additional institution to provide such capital. The domestic bank concept has received favorable recognition from such groups as the Kerner Commission and the Urban Coalition and was embodied in the Community Self-Determination Act introduced in October 1968 by a bipartisan group of more than 35 Senators and of which I was a primary sponsor.

Others in Congress have made great contributions in underscoring the need for an additional financial institution.

Senator PROXMIRE's Commodity Credit Expansion Act and hearings conducted by his subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee have provided important direction. Senator SPARKMAN's introduction of the Urban Development Bank Act has also called attention to this need.

The Office of Economic Opportunity now proposes to "test" these proposals through an economic development demonstration program funded in large part under the special impact program authorized in title ID of the Economic Opportunity Act which I coauthored with the late Senator Robert Kennedy and which has been implemented with such success in Bedford-Stuyvesant in my State.

Under the demonstration program, the Office of Economic Opportunity plans to fund an experimental Opportunity Funding Corp., a nonprofit corporation, to conduct activities in a large number of low-income communities throughout the country. The Opportunity Funding Corp., would be composed of three units, each of which would offer a different kind of financial incentive.

The first unit, the opportunity guarantee component, would demonstrate the feasibility of various guarantee techniques in attracting private resources to assist low income communities, by attempting to remove the risk aversion of private institutions to committing capital and credit to the needs of the poor.

The second unit, a community development discount component, will be a small discount facility intended to demonstrate the feasibility of a mechanism to purchase SBA and EDA-backed obligations and other commercial paper generated by enterprises in low-income communities.

The third unit, an incentive simulator component, is intended to field test various new financial inducements—including simulated tax incentives—to encourage privately undertaken projects and investment in low-income communities.

Mr. President, the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, of which I am the ranking member, in its October 1969 report on the economic opportunity amendments urged a full implementation of the special impact program in order to realize the full potential of community-based economic development both in terms of expanding the program to permit the funding of a number of proposals now pending from community groups and in terms of exploring the potential for further private involvement. On the latter point, the report stated:

> The committee hopes that as the program develops it will look into ways and means to involve the business community effectively in Special Impact programs as a source of both capital and technical assistance to developing community based corporations.

With this commendable initiative from the Office of Economic Opportunity, I think that it is an appropriate occasion for the Subcommittee on Employment, Manpower and Poverty, chaired by Senator GAYLORD NELSON, to hold a series of hearings to fully examine the potential of the special impact program, as well as the Office of Economic Opportunity's proposed demonstration programs and related programs and initiatives so that we can move thoughtfully with all possible speed toward a total economic development and minority enterprise strategy.

Accordingly, I hope that the chairman of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, Senator YARBOROUGH, and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Employment, Manpower, and Poverty, Senator NELSEN—who have themselves made significant contributions in this area—will add such hearings to the committee's schedule.

FINANCE COMMITTEE REPORTS UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION BILL

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, last week, the Committee on Finance met in executive session and concluded its work on H.R. 14705, the Employment Security Amendments of 1969. The bill was ordered reported to the Senate with a number of committee amendments. I plan to report it before the Easter recess begins. It is a bill which the Senator from Oklahoma favors and which I believe I also favor. We may differ on amendments, but we do favor the bill.

The committee bill extends unemployment compensation coverage to about 4.4 million workers who, up until now, have not been protected by this program. It also would enact a major program of extended benefits for workers who are unable to find jobs after their regular benefits have been exhausted in periods when unemployment rates are quite high.

So that all Senators might know of the details of the committee action on this important measure, I ask unanimous consent that the committee's announcement of its decisions on the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the press release was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION BILL REPORTED

Honorable Russell B. Long (D., La.), Chairman, Committee on Finance, announced today that the Committee had concluded its work on H.R. 14705, the Employment Security Amendments of 1969 and had ordered the bill reported favorably to the Senate. He noted that while most features of the House bill were approved without change, the Committee did modify several provisions in the House bill. The important actions taken by the Committee are generally described in the following paragraphs:

1. Farm Workers.—The Committee agreed to extend unemployment compensation coverage to employees of large farms. Under the Committee amendment, farm employers who have eight or more employees in each of 26 different weeks during the year would be brought under the program, and all their employees would become eligible for unemployment compensation benefits. However, agricultural crew leaders and their employees would not be included in this extension of coverage. The Committee felt that experience should be gained by both the Federal and State governments in administering this new farm coverage before extensions to additional agricultural groups is considered. Under the Committee amendment, about 22,000 new employers—2 percent of all farm employers—and about one quarter of a million farm employees—about one-fifth of all farm employees—are brought under the unemployment compensation program.

2. Small Firms.—The Committee agreed to delete the provision in the House bill which would have extended coverage to employees in small firms—those which employ one or more employees in each of 20 weeks, or which pay wages of $800 or more in a quarter. The present law test of four employees in 20 weeks is retained by this Committee amendment.

3. Hospitals and Colleges of Higher Education.—The Committee agreed to the provisions of the House bill which extend coverage to certain employees of non-profit organizations and State hospitals and institutions of higher learning.

However, the Committee also agreed to bring faculty, research and administrative employees of institutions of higher learning into the program, and to indicate in the statute that these additional employees are not to be considered unemployed if they have a contract to resume work after the summer vacation.

The Committee further agreed to permit employees of a county or municipal hospital or institution of higher education to be covered at the option of the governmental unit under an agreement to make payments in lieu of taxes.

4. Clients of Sheltered Workshops.—The Committee agreed to extend coverage under the non-profit provision of the House bill to include the "clients" of a sheltered workshop—the blind or other handicapped persons for whom employment is provided in the sheltered workshop. The amendment would affect an estimated 100,000 handicapped persons employed in about 1,500 sheltered workshops. Just as the House bill provided with respect to their regular employees, the sheltered workshop would be permitted to finance benefits for its "clients" either on a reimbursable basis or by electing to pay the regular unemployment compensation tax in the State.

5. Taxable Wage Base.—The Committee on Finance agreed to the provisions in the House bill which increase the taxable wage base for unemployment tax purposes from $3,000 per employee under existing law to $4,200. It also agreed to increase the net Federal tax from 0.4 percent to 0.5 percent. As under the House bill, the higher Federal tax rate would become effective with respect to wages paid in 1970. The higher wage base would become effective with respect to wages paid in 1972.

6. Extended Benefit Program.—The Committee agreed to the provisions in the House bill which provide for a period of extended unemployment compensation benefits (after regular benefits are exhausted) when unemployment reaches specified levels. Under this new program, the cost of the extended benefits would be shared equally between the Federal government and the State governments. The Committee rejected amendments which would have (a) financed the extended benefits wholly from Federal funds, and (b) provided for a temporary Federally financed program of extended benefits in the interim between the date of enactment of the bill and January, 1972, when the permanent Federal-State program becomes effective.

7. Effective Date.—The Committee generally agreed to the effective dates contained in the House bill, but it modified them so that a State which does not have a meeting of its legislature in 1971 would have an additional six months, until July 1, 1972, to approve the changes in State law necessary to implement these new requirements.

8. Federal Benefit Standards.—The Committee rejected amendments offered by Senator Abraham Ribicoff (D., Conn.) and Senator Eugene J. McCarthy (D., Minn.) to fix Federal standards on unemployment compensation benefits. The Ribicoff amendment in effect would have required States to pay a benefit equal to 50 percent of the unemployed individual's wage up to 50 percent of the average wage paid in the State. The McCarthy amendment would have imposed a similar requirement, and in addition, would have required the payment of benefits for at least 26 weeks and would have set standards on eligibility under State laws. These amendments were not agreed to.

TAX AMENDMENT—U.S.S. "PUEBLO"

The Chairman also announced that the Committee on Finance had approved H.R. 8654, which provides that enlisted men who were detained by North Korea when the U.S.S. Pueblo was seized by that nation in 1968 may exclude from gross income for Federal tax purposes amounts received as compensation during the period of their detention. Commissioned officers who were detained would be allowed to exclude the first $500 per month of compensation received for each month they were imprisoned.

AMERICAN POLICY ON ARMS SALES AND ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE TO ISRAEL

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement on the administration's announcement regarding the policy of arms sales to Israel.

The failure of the administration to specify the number of additional Phantoms to be provided for Israel's security is disappointing. But the reiteration of the President's policy to maintain an arms balance for Israel; his awareness of the threat of the Soviet SAM missiles, manned by Soviet technicians, now being deployed in Egypt; his understanding of Israel's need for replacement of downed planes, and his assurance of economic assistance for Israel—all are gratifying.

I firmly believe that considering the problem of attrition and of Israel's peril, the security situation would appear to require—now—our assurances to Israel of continued deliveries of Phantoms and Skyhawks. The administration's decision against such a specific commitment now must be considered more political than military.

Considering the pressures on Israel's economy, the administration's understanding of and response to Israel's request for economic assistance is certainly a vital factor in ameliorating the unfavorable effect of the decision on the Phantoms.

This is an occasion also for putting in proper perspective our relationship with Israel in the Middle East crisis in terms of the large number of Americans who so much admire Israel's courage and resourcefulness. The fact is that Israel is a real friend in the Eastern Mediterranean, a friend well able to see to its own security. All it asks is to be able to buy the weapons. In the longer term, the example of Israel should serve to encourage modernization and democracy in an area of the world overwhelmed by feudalism, dictatorship, poverty, and ill health.

To assume that the United States can win favor with the radical Arab States by denying Israel Phantoms now is grave self-deception. Their demand is for Israel's extinction—nothing less—and this obviously the American people cannot support or condone. Accordingly, it is in our national interest to assist in conserving the stimulative power to the whole area which Israel possesses, especially as it has already been made clear that Israel will negotiate for a permanent peace with no preconditions whatsoever on even the most sensitive subject.

The President's decision leaves us about where we were. We have a right to expect the administration to be vigilant, alert, and immediately responsive to the needs for the survival of Israel which are so closely connected to the prospects for peace and development in the area.

As the President himself said during his 1968 campaign:

> As long as the threat of Arab attack remains direct and imminent, sufficient power means the balance must be tipped in Israel's favor. . . . I support a policy that would give Israel a technological military margin to more than offset her hostile neighbors' numerical superiority.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ASIAN DEVELOPMENT BANK MEETING—APPOINTMENT BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLE). The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, appoints the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) and the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) to attend the Asian Development Bank Meeting in Seoul, Korea, on April 9–11, 1970.

THE DENIAL OF PLANES TO ISRAEL

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, I regret the decision not to sell to the State of Israel the planes their government says are essential to their future security.

For 20 years the Soviet Union has been steadily increasing its military strength in and around the Mediterranean. In addition, the U.S.S.R. has been loading up with modern military equipment, its now many satellites on the north littoral of Africa, including those on the Mediterranean itself. This has and does include both offensive and defensive weapons, land, sea, and air.

Israel is a small nation, one which, in some parts, is a bare 40 miles wide. That fact is a cause for serious apprehension on the part of its military experts. Obviously, this narrowness is a serious weakness from a security standpoint because of the heavy shortening of military time and space in this nuclear era.

We are justifying the policy of fighting with our own lives and treasure various Communist satellites in the Far East, on the grounds that such a policy, and the programs incident thereto, are essential to our security; and to that end we give arms to many nations in that far away area.

Although Israel is one of the few countries in the world today resisting successfully Communist arms and Communist satellite aggression without the support of American troops, apparently we are now refusing even to sell them the arms they believe necessary for their survival.

In the past, the United States has defended giving arms to some of the radical Arab States, as well as selling them to Israel, on the ground that we believed in preserving a military balance. If that balance was right in the past, however, how can it now be right, after the approval by France of 100 more planes to Libya, a government which recently demanded that this country get out of our large air base at Tripoli in their country; and has expressed openly its sympathy with, and support for, the Communist satellite countries in the area.

The only other countries capable of furnishing the type and character of sophisticated weaponry that Israel asserts are essential to its security are France and the Soviet Union. These are the only two countries in the world in addition to the United States, which make such weaponry; and both of these other countries are now heavily supplying said weaponry to the radical Arab States.

This decision could create more interest on the part of Israel to join the nuclear club. We do not see how, in turn, that could be anything but a negative contribution to the steadily and ever more important search for permanent world peace.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I think the statement just made by the distinguised senior Senator from Missouri regarding the denial of the sale of weaponry, especially aircraft to Israel, is very important. I hope very much that the administration and the Pentagon will give it very serious consideration.

The Senator from Missouri speaks from an enormous wealth of experience, especially as it concerns air armament. He raises critically important questions, especially about the balance of power. The Senator especially raises the problem of leadtime which is involved for these planes. If the leadtime is not taken into account, the planes will not be there when the time comes when they are needed.

This introduces an element of grave security doubt in a time which is likely to be an emergency for us, and as it would be really for Israel if things get hotter than they are now. If a grave emergency occurs and the Phantom aircraft or other military aircraft are not available because the leadtime has not been taken into account. The consequences could be irreparably damaging.

This is an open and not a closed door in terms of what policy should be pursued regarding these aircraft.

I think the Senator from Missouri has made a very significant contribution. And I am grateful to him.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, I thank the able senior Senator from New York for his thoughtful and kind remarks.

What worries me about this decision is that possibly some of the same people who made it have had something to do with our policies in recent years as we waged war in other lands.

Everyone knows that the State of Israel, because of its size and its young economy, is hard pressed for money. But that state has never requested a single soldier or airman, nor has it ever asked to receive in the form of gifts some like those which in the past we have actually given to some of its Arab enemies.

If this country, therefore, despite its now serious economic situation, desires to buy those planes because of conviction that said planes are essential to its security, it is incredible to me why we refuse to sell.

As has been well said, the Arabs can lose 100 battles, but the Israelis cannot lose one.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I am very grateful to my colleague for his comments.

Again, I repeat that we had better listen to advice when it comes from so authoritative a source.

Mr. SYMINGTON. I thank my colleague for his observations.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO PRESIDENT NIXON FOR HIS DECISION ON POST OFFICE SITUATION

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, throughout the 1960's we have heard proclaimed the doctrines of civil disobedience:

> If you don't like a law, disobey it; a man looks to his individual conscience to decide what law to obey.

Mr. President this self-serving disobedience has spread. And now, the U.S. mail itself has been disrupted. Mr. President, the time has come to reestablish the principle of government of laws, not of men.

Millions of Americans are applauding the courageous action of the President of the United States. He has ordered the mails to go through. The tactics of negotiation by duress will fail because the President will not stand for it.

The President sees the needs of the poor, the elderly, the veterans, businesses which must meet their payrolls. He insists that the mails must go through.

The President has also seen the needs of the postal workers and the postal system. But this Democratic Congress has dragged its feet and helped produce an illegal work stoppage.

The President's action is carefully, calmly tailored to the situation. It is orchestrated with the courts, and the many returning postal workers. The President's action is restrained, a reasonable one. All issues will be discussed when the postal workers return to work.

The statesmanlike and nonpolitical postal reform system proposed by the President will go through eventually. A just pay raise will also go through.

But most important, the President has squarely met the basic issue.

Survival of a government based upon law. Survival of the concept of obedience to the law.

FREE FLIGHTS FOR INFLUENTIAL CITIZENS AT TAXPAYERS' EXPENSE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I rise today to protest against the continuing practice of the Pentagon and the military services of providing free flights to influential citizens to military installations for public relations and propaganda purposes.

The practice is objectionable for at least two major reasons. First, it is an obvious attempt by the military to build up a group of influential citizens to back its huge budget and to lobby for its weapons systems. In fact, within the last year I have received a number of letters from those who have taken such trips calling on me to support the weapons systems which they have examined.

Second, the practice costs money which could be spent either for more important programs or returned to the overburdened and overwrought American taxpayer through a reduction in his taxes.

The practice is nefarious on all counts. It should be stopped and stopped now. At a time when the country faces rapidly rising prices and inflationary pressures, on the one hand, and rising unemployment and cutbacks in jobs and hours of work, on the other, it is impossible to justify the expenditures of hundreds of thousands of dollars by the Pentagon on propaganda flights which are not even specifically authorized by the Congress.

THE FACTS

What are the facts? Last December I wrote to the Secretaries of the Air Force, the Navy, and the Army asking them for specific information about the number and costs of flights during 1969 of community and business leaders to military installations for the purpose of briefing them on the mission of the service.

I asked how many flights had been flown, how many civilian passengers were flown, how many military passengers were flown, how many planes were used for this purpose, how many members of airplane crews were involved, how many flying hours were flown for such purposes, the cost per flying hour, and the total cost of the flights.

I have now received the answers which I shall share with the Senate.

AIR FORCE FLIGHTS

The Air Force replied that it had flown 216 different civic groups to and from major command installations for briefings and orientations during calendar year 1969.

The Air Force flights involved 4,923 civic and community leaders. They were accompanied by 461 military personnel.

Some 1,184 aircrew members were used as flight personnel for the aircraft during the flights.

The Air Force flew 1,672 flying hours at an average cost of $275 per hour, which included personnel per diem costs.

The Air Force said that the total operating costs of its flights was $459,800, or just short of half a million dollars.

NAVY FIGURES

The Navy also provided the information I requested. They flew 30 groups of influential business and community leaders to Navy installations. These flights involved some 1,075 civilians who were accompanied by 86 military passengers. Twenty-one different aircraft were involved with an average of 3.3 crew members per flight or 99 altogether.

The Navy planes flew 312.3 flying hours at an average cost of $275.32 per hour.

The total cost of the flights was given by the Navy at $35,982.30.

ARMY FLIGHTS

The Army sponsored some 51 groups of influential citizens on flights to Army installations for the purpose of promoting community relations.

These involved 812 civilians and 160 military passengers. Some 262 air crewmen were involved.

The Army-sponsored flights logged 853 flying hours at an average cost of $215 per hour, which included personnel per diem costs.

The total costs of the Army flights was given as $184,030.

TOTAL FIGURES

When the facts about the free flights of all three services are added together we find that the program is an extremely extensive one. It involves several thousand people and costs several hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Altogether some 297 influential business and community groups were airlifted by the Pentagon in 1969 to major military installations for briefings and orientation conferences.

The services flew 6,810 civilian community and civic leaders on the flights. They were accompanied by 707 military personnel. Some 1,545 members of air crews were needed to man the flights.

The planes flew a total of 2,837 flying hours at a cost which averaged between $215 and $275 per hour.

The total costs of these flights by all three services was $679,812.30, or over two-thirds of a million dollars.

I ask unanimous consent that a table giving the details for each of the three services be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DETAILS ON FLIGHTS IN 1969 BY THE MILITARY SERVICES OF REPRESENTATIVES OF CIVIC AND COMMUNITY ORGANIZATIONS TO MAJOR MILITARY INSTALLATIONS FOR PURPOSES OF BRIEFING AND ORIENTATION

	Flights by—
	Air Force	Navy	Army	Total
Number of groups briefed	216	30	51	297
Number of civilians flown	4,923	1,075	812	6,810
Number of military personnel accompanying civilians	461	86	160	707
Air crew members	1,184	99	262	1,545
Number of flying hours	1,672	312	853	2,837
Cost per hour	$272	$275	$215
Cost of flights	$459,800	$35,982.30	$184,030	$679,812.30

ALLEGED JUSTIFICATIONS

Mr. PROXMIRE. Over the years a number of justifications have been made for this program. Generally, it is argued that there is little or no expense to the military because the influential civilians are flown on training flights. It is argued that the flights would be made, the planes flown, and the crew would be in the air in any case.

In the letters just sent to me, this argument is made. Major General Murphy of the Air Force wrote:

No specific aircraft or aircrews are reserved solely for this program.

Hours flown in support of this program, are included in and justified to Congress as part of the overall Air Force allocation of aircrew proficiency flying and training time, and are not in addition thereto.

General Murphy claimed that "the aircraft operating costs reflected above are not, therefore, additive to aircrew proficiency training costs."

That may be said, but many of us find it very hard to believe that an Air Force training flight just happens to be going between Madison, Wis., and the SAC Headquarters at Omaha, Nebr., as one did recently. It strains our credulity when the Army arranges to fly influential Pennsylvania citizens, as it did on March 10 to 14 this year from Middletown, Pa., to Ft. Bliss, Tex., and thence to Ent Air Force Base in Colorado Springs, and back to Middletown and justifies the use of Air Force planes as a "part of authorized allocations for normal aircrew proficiency flying time." And argues they "are not an additional allocation."

OPERATION UNDERSTANDING

This trip, incidentally, was called Operation Understanding. The Army claimed that the "Operations Understanding program provides a means of enhancing community relations and fostering better public understanding of the mission, activities and accomplishments of the Army, Air Defense Command and, consequently the Army's role in the air defense of our country."

What it really was, in fact, was a thinly disguised attempt to sell influential citizens on the ABM. The program for this group from Pennsylvania included briefings on current and future air defense weapons systems, the firing of the Nike-Hercules missile, a look at the Chaparral-Vulcan and Redeye air defense weapons, and an orientation tour of the North American Air Defense Command combat operations in the Cheyenne Mountains. These briefings and firings were to take place at Fort Bliss, Tex., White Sands Missile Range, N. Mex., and the Army Air Defense Command Headquarters at Colorado Springs.

Incidentally, the program also included a voluntary sightseeing tour in Juarez, Mexico, and lunch as the guest of the commanding general, U.S. Army Air Defense Command.

COUNTY OFFICIAL OBJECTS TO "BRAIN WASHING"

One county official from Pennsylvania who was invited to take part wrote to me complaining about the trip in the following terms:

I object strenuously to programs of this type as they are put together for propaganda purposes.

I object further to this type of program because it is designed to brain wash public officials into thinking vast expenditures for such programs as the A.B.M. are justified and therefore it is my contention that this is another example of the military becoming involved in political decisions.

Various individuals and groups are invited. In this case, it was a county commissioner. In others it is the members of local civil organizations, leading businessmen and labor leaders, and college and university officials. In general, the military invites the members of the local establishment and power structure in the community to partake of its largess. In their letter to me, the Air Force refers to these as "public affairs airlift for distinguished civic leaders and community businessmen."

The free flights I am talking about today do not include those which the military offers for inspection trips to Members of Congress and the administrative agencies, or for educators to visit the military academies in advisory capacities.

JUSTIFIED BY MEANINGLESS EUPHEMISMS

Various reasons are given in support of these free flights. Meaningless euphemisms are concocted and substituted for the real purpose of the junkets. This year it was "enhancing community relations and fostering better public understanding." A few years back the military justified similar activities to the General Accounting Office on grounds that their purpose was "to acquaint the public through its influential citizens with the problems, workings, and accomplishments of the Defense Department and the disposition of their defense dollars."

I think almost all Americans are concerned about "the disposition of their defense dollars." One way to make them less concerned is to put a stop to these junkets—for that is what they are.

STOP THE LOBBYING

They are junkets at the expense of the American taxpayers to propaganize, to build support, and to lobby for highly questionable military weapons systems.

They are a waste of money. They should be stopped.

They are not paid for by direct appropriations. They are not a line item in the annual budget, authorization bill, or appropriation bill.

At a minimum such future flights should be justified in the budget and requested specifically. If that were required it is my judgment that these expenditures would be the first to be cut.

We should strike them from the defense budget. They are wasteful, unnecessary, and have the lowest priority.

I call on the Defense Department to reform itself. Cut out the free flights to influential citizens. Stop the propaganda. Live within your means.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of one of the letters I addressed to the services, and the replies I received from the Air Force, Navy, and Army be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECEMBER 15, 1969.

Hon. ROBERT C. SEAMANS, Jr.,
The Secretary of the Air Force,
Department of Defense,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: One of the practices of the Air Force and of other military Departments is to fly representatives of community businesses and organizations to Air Force, Navy, Army and other installations for the purpose of briefing them on the work of the service.

One such flight took place this past year from Madison, Wisconsin to the Headquarters Strategic Air Command, at Offutt Air Force Base in Omaha. Several dozen local citizens were flown there for an orientation briefing and conference.

I would like to get from your office the following information.

In calendar year 1969 how many such flights were flown by the Air Force?

How many civilian passengers were flown?

How many military passengers were flown?

How many planes were used for this purpose?

How many members of Air Force crews were involved?

How many flying hours were flown for such purposes?

What was the average cost per flying hour and the total cost of these flights?

I would like this information as soon as it is conveniently possible for you to furnish it.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM PROXMIRE,
U.S. Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE,
Washington, January 22, 1970.

Hon. WILLIAM PROXMIRE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR PROXMIRE: The Secretary of the Air Force has asked me to respond to your inquiry requesting information from the Air Force concerning public affairs airlift for distinguished civic leaders and community businessmen.

The Air Force flew 216 different civic groups to and from major command installations for briefings and orientations during calendar year 1969. Participating in these tours were 4,923 civic and community leaders, together with 461 accompanying military personnel. There were 1,184 aircrew members used to crew the aircraft for these flights. Nine different types of aircraft were used. The 1,672 hours for the trips cost an average of $275 per hour which includes personnel per diem cost. The total operating cost of these flights was $459,800.

No specific aircraft or aircrews are reserved solely for this program. Air Force regulations require that invitees pay for their own meals, incidental expenses and billets.

The hours flown in support of this program are included in and justified to Congress as part of the overall Air Force allocation of aircrew proficiency flying and training time, and are not in addition thereto. The aircraft operating costs reflected above are not, therefore, additive to aircrew proficiency training costs.

We trust that this information is responsive to your inquiry.

Sincerely,

JOHN R. MURPHY,
Major General, USAF, Director, Legislative Liaison.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, D.C., February 10, 1970.

Hon. WILLIAM PROXMIRE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR BILL: This is in further reply to your recent letter in which you requested certain information concerning the Navy flights carrying representatives of community businesses and organization to Navy installations for the purpose of briefing them on the work of the Navy.

The following information is provided in response to your questions:

In calendar year 1969, how many such flights were flown by the Navy? Answer: 30.

How many civilian passengers were flown? Answer: 1,075.

How many military passengers were flown? Answer: 86.

How many planes were used for this purpose? Answer: 21 different aircraft of 3 different types.

How many members of air crews were involved? Answer: Average of 3.3 crew members per air lift.

How many flying hours were flown for such purposes? Answer: 312.3 flying hours.

What was the average cost per flying hour and the total cost of these flights? Answer: Average cost per flying hour is $275.32, and the total cost of the flights is $35,942.30.

In addition to the flights in which you are interested, certain specific groups of educators have been transported to the U.S. Naval Academy in advisory capacities.

I hope this information will be helpful to you.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN H. CHAFEE.

JANUARY 27, 1970.

Hon. WILLIAM PROXMIRE,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR SENATOR PROXMIRE: This is in reply to your inquiry concerning air transportation for community leaders to visit Army installations in conjunction with community relations projects.

During Calendar Year 1969, the Army world-wide sponsored 51 groups in which 812 civilian and 160 military passengers, including escorts were flown in 66 aircraft to various locations for the purpose of touring military installations. A total of 262 air crewmen logged 853 flying hours at an average cost of $215 per flying hour in support of these tours to include personnel per diem costs. The total cost of these flights was $184,030.

These tours are conducted by Army Commands to provide information on the Army's state of readiness and how it trains and takes care of its soldiers. This does not include the educator tour program of the U.S. Military Academy which provides information to civilian educators to permit them to counsel youths on opportunities at the academy.

Aircraft are provided primarily by the U.S. Air Force with no aircraft or air crews specifically allocated to these programs. The hours flown are part of authorized allocations for normal aircrew proficiency flying time and are not an additional allocation. Cost for meals, incidental expenses and billets are borne by the participants.

I trust the above information will be of assistance to you.

Sincerely,

RAYMOND T. REID,
Colonel, GS, Office, Chief of Legislative Liaison.

PRIDE OF THE NATION'S PRESS UNANIMOUSLY OPPOSES CARSWELL

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, yesterday and today three newspapers that I receive and read daily, and for which I have the greatest respect, editorialized in a telling fashion against the nomination of G. Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court. Two of the papers probably are read by the vast majority of my Senate colleagues on a regular basis—the New York Times and the Washington Post. The third is the pride of the Midwest and at the top of the scale of national competence—the Milwaukee Journal.

Both the Journal and the Times make short shrift of some remarks made on this floor last week to the effect that those Americans of modest scholastic attainments should have their representative on the Court. The Journal states it this way:

> Since many Americans are mediocre, as the case is put, they should have one of themselves on the court! To state the premise is to demolish it.

The Times calls the application of such a principle to the Senate "bad enough; to extend it to the Highest Court is intolerable."

The Times goes on to cite certain misleading tactics used by Judge Carswell's supporters. For instance:

> It has now become known that Elbert F. Tuttle, the retired Chief Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in the South, who originally backed the nomination, subsequently decided to withdraw his endorsement. But Judge Carswell's supporters let the impression of Judge Tuttle's approval be used as continuing support for him.

In another instance Attorney General Mitchell transformed a lukewarm American Bar Association endorsement of Carswell as "qualified" into a misleading "highly recommended" label.

The Post and the Journal come down hard on Carswell's civil rights record—the Journal pointing to Carswell's 15 unanimous reversals in civil rights cases, and the Post calling for his rejection as a signal to all races that the Senate will not permit the executive branch to pursue a southern strategy that exacerbates relations between black and white for political gain.

The Times characterizes Carswell's record as "mediocre" and demonstrating "questionable attitudes toward social justice." The Journal terms him "lacking the professional competence demanded by the position." The Post calls him "a decidedly second rate judge."

These are the very reasons I am voting against the Carswell nomination—the reasons the dean's of the Nation's finest law schools are opposing the nomination and the reasons why the Senate should not hesitate to send the nomination back to the White House stamped "unacceptable."

I ask unanimous consent that the three editorials I have referred to be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Milwaukee Journal, Mar. 22, 1970]

SENATE SHOULDN'T CONSENT TO CARSWELL NOMINATION

Some supporters of the nomination of Judge Carswell for the U.S. Supreme Court, finding nothing else to extol in the man, are now driven to extol his mediocrity. Since many Americans are mediocre, as the case is put, they should have one of themselves on the court!

To state the premise is to demolish it. Resort to it depicts the poverty of any argument for Carswell's confirmation, and the desperation of his supporters as they contemplate the tide of conviction spreading across the land (outside the South) that he simply won't do.

Carswell's notorious white supremacy speech of 1948 has turned out to be inexcusable as a mere aberration of youth, conforming to the rules of southern white politics at the time. For he did not repudiate it by word or deed throughout his later career; in fact, he gave it life by many actions right down to the present. He now says himself that it was "a matter of convenience"—which only now has become convenient to repudiate.

Even if racial bias were deemed tolerable in a Supreme Court justice, however, lacking the professional competence demanded by the position cannot be. Neither can lack of "sensitivity to injustice"—a lack in Carswell to which many legal scholars have attested after studying his record as a U.S. prosecutor and trial judge.

Law Dean Louis Pollak of Yale has concluded that Carswell's credentials are "more slender than those of any other nominee for the Supreme Court in this century." His "level of competence," says Dean Derek Bok of Harvard, is "well below the high standards that one would presumably consider appropriate and necessary for service in the court."

Prof. Gary Oldfield of Princeton: ". . . an obscure judge who has made no visible contribution to the development of the law. His chief qualification appears to be an abiding unwillingness to protect constitutional rights of black Americans." ". . . A judge who would rather risk bad law and repeated reversals than offend the feelings of local segregationists."

Carswell's record of foot dragging in civil rights includes 15 unanimous reversals by courts of appeal, in which he had persistently gone opposite to the guidance of higher courts in parallel cases. This shows him not to be even a conscientious judicial workman.

Danger that such a man may be confirmed stems from an inclination by most of the Republican senators who had blocked President Nixon in the Haynsworth case to feel that they should let him win this one. That puts political etiquette above the country's need for great jurists on the Supreme Court, which Nixon once acknowledged but now denies in practice.

Making Nixon a winner with Carswell would make the court and the country losers. If the role of the Senate to "advise and consent" means anything, it means that a Senate filling the role will not permit this to happen.

[Fom the Washington Post, Mar. 22, 1970]

JUDGE CARSWELL: THE WRONG SIGNAL

It is a longish leap from the fun and games at the Gridiron Club last weekend to the Senate debate on Judge Carswell. But bear with us because there is a logical connection here between the appointment of a decidedly second-rate judge to the Supreme Court and the ease with which President Nixon and Vice President Agnew stole the Gridiron show. As you may have read, the two men joined in a piano duet, with the President playing a medley of the favorite tunes of his predecessors and the Vice President interrupting him by playing "Dixie." Doubtless you had to be there to get it into the right context, to hear the rough but good-natured jibes at the Administration on race issues that preceded the surprise finale, and thus to appreciate the joke. Almost everybody agreed it was a tour de force gracefully done and quite in keeping with the spirit of an affair at which the tensions and antagonisms of the real world are supposed to be set aside.

So it is with no intent to disparage the performance of the President and the Vice President that we take note of this event. Still, at the risk of sounding stuffy, it strikes us as a small piece of a bad scence, and a significant measure of how great is the power of the Presidency to influence a public attitude. All of a sudden, it is all right to joke about something that responsible people in high office used to handle with care and compassion and deadly seriousness.

In theory, a sense of humor is supposed to be a saving grace. So why not make sport of a Southern Strategy? The answer, of course, is that Southern Strategy is a euphemism for something that isn't funny. On its face it is no more than a cynical political tactic designed to innoculate the South against George Wallace for the sake of winning it for the Republicans, the better to secure a second term for President Nixon in 1972. As a political objective, this is fair enough—some people even see in it an admirable toughmindedness. But there is nothing admirable about the logical consequences of this strategy, for to bring it off it becomes necessary for the Administration to cultivate indifference, not to say hostility, toward the fundamental principle of human rights in general, and the equality of education available to black children in particular. Putting it another way, and bluntly, Southern Strategy means a form of racism, tacit or explicit, by people in high places, because there can be no successful effort to undercut George Wallace in the South that does not play the segregation game.

It is important to be clear in our minds about the issue here. We are well aware that the White House will be publishing next week what has been billed as the most complete, the most comprehensive, the most closely argued legal brief ever composed on school desegregation and it is not our purpose here to judge it in advance. For this is not what this is all about. We are not talking just about schools, or doubts held by responsible people about busing or other methods for dealing with the de facto segregation which occurs as a result of natural, geographic imbalances. We are talking about what a President or an Administration can do, or not do, to create an atmosphere that is conductive, not to miracles, but to continuing progress against racial discrimination all along the line. And this, in turn, is what is so troubling about the ease with which we now laugh at jokes about a Southern Strategy. It is what links the hijinks at the Gridiron with the nomination of Judge Carswell and a lot of other things—the abrupt removal of a Leon Panneta from HEW because he tried too hard; the effort to subvert Negro voting rights; the insensitivity, in tone and phrase, to black pride; the country club mentality.

Mr. Harry Dent, a presidential assistant, receives a written offer of campaign funds from a Georgia Republican leader in exchange for the restoration of Federal school aid in a Georgia school district. He casually passes it along to HEW—and nobody seems to mind. The Vice President brushes off the idea of quotas for black students by asking the crude question: "Do you wish to be attended by a physician who entered medical school to fill a quota . . .?" Mr. Jerris Leonard, the Justice Department's civil rights enforcer, thinks it clever, or something, to say that one reason blacks just out of law school are not attracted to Justice Department jobs is that they haven't yet bought their first cashmere coat. Confronted with a question about Judge Carswell's involvement with segregated clubs, the President thinks it an adequate defense to say, in effect, that everybody's doing it: ". . . if everybody in government service who has belonged or does belong to restricted golf clubs were to leave the service, this city would have the highest rate of unemployment of any city in the country."

And so it goes, right down to the vote on Judge Carswell, with the Administration's men telling Republicans who opposed Judge Haynsworth—in almost every respect a much superior choice—that they can't rebuff their President twice running. They can, of course, and they should, because this is nothing so narrow as a test of party loyalty. It is a test of policy and principle—a kind of Tonkin Resolution on race, if you accept the theory recently advanced in Life Magazine by Hugh Sidey that the race issue could be for President Nixon the disaster that Vietnam was for President Johnson.

The Tonkin Resolution on Vietnam was a fraud, and while that became clearer later, it might have been clearer at the time if the right questions had been pressed, if Congress had not closed its eyes out of misplaced deference to the President and waved him down a wrong road. Therein lies the analogy. Judge Carswell is a bad choice, and the Senate should reject him out of its obligation to safeguard the paramount interests of our highest court. In the process of refusing his confirmation, the Senate has an opportunity, not just to say No, but also to say Enough—of insensitivity and indifference, of legislative retrogression and of catering to racist tendencies for political gain, of talking about blacks as if there were no blacks in the room. The Senate, in this fashion, could broadcast from at least one seat of government a signal to all races—a signal which at this stage can no longer be broadcast, in a way that would be believable, by anybody else.

[From the New York Times, Mar. 23, 1970]

RATING JUDGE CARSWELL

The Senate, in its desultory debate over whether to confirm the nomination of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court, is giving an uninspiring demonstration of its sense of responsibility on an issue of grave national concern.

President Nixon, in his weekend press conference, urged Senators to weigh, not the mail, but the evidence. It is precisely on the evidence that Judge Carswell emerges with a mediocre judicial record and with questionable attitudes toward social justice.

Senator Roman L. Hruska, Republican of Nebraska, in apparent contempt for excellence in American institutions, championed the right of all who are mediocre to be represented by mediocrity on the Supreme Court. Application of this view to the Senate is bad enough; to extend it to the highest court is intolerable. Yet, this appears to be the intent of those who deliberately spurn all honest assessment of evidence unfavorable to Judge Carswell.

For example, it has now become known that Elbert F. Tuttle, the retired Chief Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in the South, who originally backed the nomination, subsequently decided to withdraw his endorsement. But Judge Carswell's supporters let the impression of Judge Tuttle's approval be used as continuing support for him.

A group of distinguished lawyers, including Francis T. P. Plimpton, president of the New York Bar Association, as well as the deans of leading law schools, have charged that the "qualified" rating, given Judge Carswell by the Federal Judiciary Committee of the American Bar Association, is seriously misleading. They consider the issue sufficiently grave to demand that the committee reopen the case and provide a more explicit rating, as it does in the case of other Federal judges.

Judge Carswell's supporters have used the A.B.A. rating as a judgment of high merit, when it is little more than an evasive rubber stamp. Attorney General Mitchell, who undoubtedly knows the real meaning of the A.B.A.'s faint praise, has stated publicly that his nominee comes "highly recommended" by the association.

These misleading tactics amply justify the demand for a more enlightening reappraisal. An explicit rating would do much to help the Senators when they ultimately cast their vote on the dictates of both fact and conscience. The legal profession surely has a responsibility to offer credible guidance and, at the very least, make sure that its testimony cannot be abused in ways that might demean the Supreme Court.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate continued with the consideration of the nomination of George Harrold Carswell to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I have had several communications over the last few days during the debate on the nomination of Judge Carswell, many of which I put in the RECORD, others of which I wish to put in the RECORD now.

One of them is of particular interest, and I wish to bring it to the attention of the Senate. It is written by a woman lawyer, a member of a large law firm in Tallahassee, Fla.

KEEN, O'KELLEY & SPITZ,
Tallahassee, Fla., March 20, 1970.

Hon. EDWARD J. GURNEY,
Senator for the State of Florida,
U.S. Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: I hope that I am not being presumptious in feeling that you might be interested in my views concerning the nomination of Judge Carswell since my background is not that of the typical Tallahassee lawyer now practicing before him. I was born and educated in Minnesota and have been exposed to judges in such diverse places as Minnesota, the District of Columbia, Arkansas and Florida. I also have taught in a law school: the University of Arkansas Law School. And I am a woman lawyer.

I graduated from the Law School of the University of Minnesota, class of 1941 and was a member of the editorial board of the Law Review and elected to Order of the Coif. I present this background to convince you that I have some basis for evaluating a judge.

I have been engaged in practicing law in Tallahassee, Florida, for the past four years and have had a fairly extensive practice in the District Court before Judge Carswell. He has always been eminently fair and courteous to all parties, he has displayed a deep learning in the law and his opinions have a clarity that is sadly lacking in many that

I must wade through in the course of my daily work. Perhaps they lack a degree of literary grace, as is deplored by Max Lerner and others of his ilk, but I am sure that Judge Carswell's opinions will gain in style when they are no longer the product of the heaviest case load of any judge in the federal system.

It has also been my observation that whatever reversals Judge Carswell has sustained at the hands of the Fifth Circuit have been the result of his being willing to use the summary judgment rule, a rule to which the Fifth Circuit is avowedly opposed.

I have been unable to see any racial bias in Judge Carswell and I am sure that I would see it if it existed: I spent my formative years in Minnesota and living in the South has not changed my attitudes as is attested by the fact that I am currently representing a black plaintiff in a civil rights case against a municipality and its officers. I can also refute the silly "sexist" charge levied against Judge Carswell. I have been treated with exactly the same degree of courtesy and consideration as any other advocate, no more and no less. I also know, of my own knowledge, that when Judge Carswell was elevated to the Fifth Circuit he selected as his law clerk a woman law school graduate.

I have no personal interest in Judge Carswell's nomination for I am not a social friend and professionally I would be better served by his being retained in the Fifth Circuit where I do practice but this feeling is outweighed by the duty I owe my profession.

I am of the unswerving belief that Judge Carswell would make an excellent Supreme Court judge and I earnestly request you to give real, and fair, consideration to his nomination.

Sincerely yours,

HELEN CAREY ELLIS.

Of course, this is just another instance of what I have said on the Senate floor again and again during this debate; namely, that these are the endorsements that impress me, not what a law school professor in the North may say or what a Wall Street lawyer may say or what their opinions may be about Judge Carswell.

Another thing of interest is that some credence has been given to the argument that some law school faculty members of Florida State University are opposed to the nomination of Judge Carswell. That is true. One of my lawyer friends addressed a letter the other day to the Senator from Iowa (Mr. MILLER). I ask unanimous consent that the text of the letter be printed in the RECORD in the course of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ERVIN, PENNINGTON,
VARN & JACOBS,
Tallahassee, Fla., March 20, 1970.

Hon. JACK MILLER,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MILLER: I have read with a great deal of concern of the action of some nine members of the teaching staff at Florida State University College of Law. That teaching staff consists of eighteen; the nine who seem to have opposed Judge Carswell's nomination consisted of eight of the teaching faculty and one librarian. Of those who do not oppose Judge Carswell, most, including Dean Joshua Morse and former Dean Mason Ladd (now in a teaching position) have strongly endorsed Judge Carswell's nomination.

Because of that concern, I have tried to determine the basis for the action of the nine critics. I am, therefore, attaching a list of their names, their teaching positions, colleges attended and ages, and years on the teaching faculty at Florida State University, as well as their political affiliations if they are registered in Leon County, Florida.

It is quite significant that none of the nine critics is a member of The Florida Bar. Because The Florida Bar is an integrated bar, they are not allowed to practice before the courts in our state. I, therefore, respectfully suggest that none of the nine is qualified to speak as to Judge Carswell's abilities or qualifications.

I am enclosing for your further information a copy of the February 1970 issue of The Florida Bar Journal. Beginning on page 88 is an item concerning Judge Carswell and on page 73 is an apt comment on the courts and the criticism of Judge Carswell.

I have known Judge Carswell personally since 1952. In 1954 I became Assistant United States Attorney and served with him while he was United States Attorney for the Northern District of Florida. When he was elevated to the District Court bench, I became United States Attorney. Since February 1961, I have been engaged in the general practice of law in Tallahassee, which practice includes civil and criminal litigation in the Federal Court. Based on my personal knowledge of the man, on my personal experience as United States Attorney and as a practicing lawyer, I recommend his nomination to you and to the United States Senate and urge that his nomination be speedily confirmed.

Very truly yours,

WILFRED C. VARN.

Enclosures.

Name	Age	Years teaching FSU	Member of Florida bar	Political affiliation
Robert P. Davidow, associate professor, Dartmouth, Michigan, Harvard.	32	Less than 1 year	No.	Unknown.
Jarret Oeltjen, associate professor, Nebraska, Chicago	28	do	No.	Do.
Edwin M. Schroeder, Librarian, Tulane	33	do	No.	Do.
John W. Van Doren, associate professor Harvard, Yale	35	do	No.	Do.
Kenneth Vinson, full professor, Texas, Yale	34	do	No.	Do.
Raymond Maguire, assistant professor, Canisius, Harvard, Columbia.	31	Just short of 2 years	No.	Do.
John Yetter, assistant professor, Duquesne, Yale	30	do	No.	Do.
David F. Dickson, associate professor Princeton, Yale, FSU	37	4 years	No.	Republican.
Francis N. Millett, associate professor, Harvard, North Carolina, Alabama.	38	4 years	No.	Do.

Mr. GURNEY. The interesting thing is that these nine members of the faculty from Florida State University Law School who oppose the nomination of Judge Carswell are as follows:

Robert P. Davidow came from Dartmouth, Michigan, and Harvard, but has been teaching at Florida State less than 1 year.

Jarret Oeltjen, age 28, has been at Florida State University less than 1 year.

Edwin M. Schroeder is listed as a librarian. He does not even teach law. He has been at Florida State University less than 1 year.

John W. Van Doren went to Harvard and Yale. That does not surprise me. He is 35 years old and has been teaching at Florida State University less than a year.

Kenneth Vinson has been a teacher at Florida State University less than 1 year.

Raymond Maguire comes from Harvard and Columbia, is 31 years old, and has been teaching at Florida State University just short of 2 years.

John Yetter came from Duquesne and Yale, is 30 years old, and has been at Florida State University just short of 2 years.

David F. Dickson came from Princeton and Yale—there is a great background—is 37 years of age, and has been at Florida State University 4 years.

Francis N. Millett came from Harvard, is 38 years old, and has been at Florida State 4 years.

Not a single one of these members of the faculty are members of the Florida bar—not one. Though I do not know it, I doubt whether any of them has been in court; and, needless to say, they know nothing of Judge Carswell—again typical of the kind of opposition Judge Carswell is getting.

Here is another letter that I think is worthwhile bringing to the attention of the Senate. It is from a man named David L. Middlebrooks. I know him well, because I recommended his appointment to the U.S. district court to replace Judge Carswell. He is a longtime personal friend of mine, one of the outstanding lawyers in Florida.

As a matter of fact, he was one of the outstanding students of Florida University Law School. I wish I had his biography. I think he was first in his class, president of the student body, a member of the Law Review, and has other credentials like that. I called him up and asked him to write me a letter to explain what he knew about Judge Carswell, mainly because he probably practiced in Judge Carswell's court more than any other lawyer who came before him. This is what he said:

U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE,
Tallahassee, Fla., March 19, 1970.

Hon. EDWARD J. GURNEY,
U.S. Senator, New Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR GURNEY: You inquired this date by telephone of my acquaintance with the Honorable G. Harrold Carswell whose nomination as Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court is presently being considered by the United States Senate.

I have known Judge Carswell since my admission to the Bar of Florida in the year 1956. Since his elevation from the position of United States Attorney to the position of Judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Florida, I have had numerous occasions to be before Judge Carswell in many different capacities as a lawyer. I doubt seriously if many practicing attorneys in the Northern District of Florida have had a better opportunity to become acquainted with this man or to learn as much as I have as to his character and ability.

During my entire legal career I was a member of two of the largest law firms in west Florida and as can be expected these law firms handled a large portion of the litigation in Federal Court. Being primarily a trial attorney I had the occasion to be before Judge Carswell in both civil and criminal cases. For approximately seven years prior to my being appointed as United States District Judge for the Northern District of Florida, I was a member of a committee who recommended a list of attorneys to Judge Carswell for appointment to represent indigent defendants charged with offenses against the United States and as a member of this committee I was almost always present when the criminal docket was sounded and attorneys were appointed to represent indigents. In addition I was a member of a three-man committee to examine applicants for admission to the Bar of the United States District Court as to their qualifications to practice before this Court. I was appointed by Judge Carswell as Chairman of the Admiralty Rules Committee to suggest possible revision of the existing admiralty rules.

There were few times when Judge Carswell held Court in Pensacola that I did not appear before him in a contested matter or as his representative in the selection of competent attorneys to represent persons accused of crime. In these capacities I was able to witness his courtroom appearance and his attitude toward members of the Bar, both black Americans and white Americans. It goes without saying that I also had an opportunity to see how Judge Carswell treated those persons appearing before him as defendants in criminal cases.

Long before Judge Carswell was appointed as a Judge of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, I had made the statement to many of my lawyer friends and other friends that it was my opinion that he was one of the best trial Judges in the State of Florida. I wish that it were possible that a poll be taken of the hundreds of lawyers who appeared before Judge Carswell to determine from these lawyers their opinions of Judge Carswell's ability as a jurist. I am confident that the great majority of them would share my opinion of this man.

Judge Carswell always treated lawyers and litigants with the respect that all human beings deserve and was especially anxious and determined to see that all persons accused of crime in his Court received competent counsel to represent them. Not once did I observe Judge Carswell treat a lawyer or litigant unfairly or harshly. He is the type of Judge who always rose from his chair when lawyers and litigants would enter his Chambers and meet them with a ready handshake.

There has been some comment made that Judge Carswell's manner in his association with counsel was other than courteous. It should be pointed out that during most of the years that Judge Carswell was Judge of the United States District Court that he handled the entire case load in the Northern District of Florida with little assistance. He was the only Judge in the Northern District of Florida which stretches geographically from Pensacola to Gainesville, a distance of some 350 miles. Congress saw fit to add an additional Judge in the Northern District of Florida approximately two years ago. I am sure that the heavy case load and the distance Judge Carswell was required to travel influenced him in attempting to handle litigation in the Northern District of Florida as promptly as possible. This might account for some comment that he was brusque in manner at times in Court proceedings.

During these many years I have also had an opportunity to visit with Judge Carswell socially and firmly believe that if Judge Carswell had any feeling of superiority where black Americans were concerned I would have observed it. No one could convince me that G. Harrold Carswell is a racist.

I felt obliged to give you the benefit of my observations of Judge Carswell because of the many criticisms made by persons who could not possibly know Judge Carswell as I have known him through the years. In my opinion he would be an outstanding United States Supreme Court Justice.

Sincerely,

D. L. MIDDLEBROOKS.

This, again, is from one who is now a U.S. district judge in the northern district of Florida, and really one of the outstanding members of the Florida bar, a man of unimpeachable credentials, and a man who appeared in Judge Carswell's court, probably, more than any other lawyer in his entire district.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, in addition to the letters I have read, a letter from Robert T. Mann, judge of the district court of appeals, Lakeland, Fla.; a letter from Frank A. Orlando, judge of the juvenile court of Broward County, Fla.; a letter from James W. West, county judge of Sumter County, Fla.; and a letter from John W. Booth, judge of the fifth judicial circuit, Bushnell, Fla.; and many telegrams which I have received as well.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LAKELAND, FLA.,
March 16, 1970.

Hon. EDWARD GURNEY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR ED: I am disturbed by the unfair and excessive criticism of Judge Harrold Carswell. I write to suggest to you that the prolongation of this controversy can only serve to discredit our judiciary.

Perhaps I am slightly biased by his recent citation with approval of one of my opinions, but I view Judge Carswell as a man of impeccable character and reputation. I do not know him intimately, but I know of nothing which would warrant his rejection by the Senate. It is, after all, the President's prerogative to nominate Justices. The Constitution contemplates that the Supreme Court will reflect a diversity of viewpoint.

The maintenance of a just and orderly society is a complex task in which we are all involved. It deserves our best efforts and our best men. I fully expect Judge Carswell to serve as Justice with far greater distinction than his detractors think possible.

I am pleased to hear that your wife is improving. Elizabeth and I join our prayers to yours for her speedy and complete recovery.

Sincerely,

BOB.

JUVENILE COURT OF BROWARD COUNTY,
Fort Lauderdale, Fla., March 20, 1970.

Re Judge G. Harrold Carswell.
Senator EDWARD GURNEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR GURNEY: This letter is in response to the attached newspaper article concerning the appointment of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to the United States Supreme Court. I feel my response is necessary since, in my opinion, many unwarranted and untrue statements are being made by members of the judiciary with reference to Judge Carswell's appointment to the Supreme Court.

Before becoming a Judge of the Juvenile Court for Broward County in March of 1968, I served for four years as an Assistant Attorney General for the State of Florida. During that time I appeared before Judge Carswell representing the State of Florida in several cases. All of these cases had to do with Civil Rights and desegregation of state institutions or local school systems. I can say without a doubt that Judge Carswell was fair, impartial and applied the law of the land as it was written at the time we were presenting our cases to him. In a specific case dealing with the desegregation of the State Training Schools, Judge Carswell struck down a Florida Statute which required these institutions to be operated on a segregated basis. However, in order to give the State of Florida a reasonable time to make an orderly transition, he allowed us approximately three months to prepare and implement a desegregation plan. This, in my opinion, showed great judicial discretion on his part and, at the time of the case, was satisfactory to all parties involved.

As one who has known Judge Carswell both professionally and socially, I am quite disappointed in the members of the judiciary who have chosen to speak out against Judge Carswell without really knowing what type of a man he is.

It is a shame because a man does not have pro-labor or pro-civil rights activities in his background he cannot, without going through great embarrassment and unreasonable criticism, become a member of the United States Supreme Court. I am hopeful you will be able to prevail upon members of the United States Senate to see that Judge Carswell will be a true representative of the feelings of the American People and interpret the Constitution as it is written—not as he thinks it should be applied.

If there is anything I can do as a member of the Florida State Judiciary to assist you in your attempts to have Judge Carswell confirmed, please do not hesitate to call.

Thanking you very much, I am,

Sincerely,

FRANK A. ORLANDO,
Presiding Judge, Juvenile Court of Broward County.

BUSHNELL, FLA.,
March 18, 1970.

Hon. EDWARD J. GURNEY,
U.S. Senator,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: Please continue to do everything in your power to get a good man on the Supreme Court. Please keep pushing for Judge Carswell.

Respectfully,

JAMES W. WEST,
County Judge, Sumter County.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
March 17, 1970.

Hon. EDWARD J. GURNEY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR GURNEY: The appointment of a conservative man such as Judge G. Harrold Carswell to the United States Supreme Court is long overdue, and now that we have the opportunity of securing such an appointment, I sincerely and earnestly urge that you, as our Senator, give your unqualified support to this appointment.

I am sure that the opposition will continue to raise smoke screens and attempt to defeat this selection by our President. The people of Citrus, Hernando and Sumter Counties, where I serve as presiding judge, are, in my opinion, solidly behind Judge Carswell and your part in assisting in his confirmation by the Senate would be well received.

Yours very truly,

JOHN W. BOOTH,
Circuit Judge.

PENSACOLA, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

Hon. EDWARD J. GURNEY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.:

I respectfully urge your favorable consideration of Judge G. Harrold Carswell for the United States Supreme Court. It could possibly be said that I am a member of a so-called minority group. I have had the privilege of trying cases before Judge Carswell on numerous occasions and found him to be fair, impartial, intelligent, and profound in his legal opinions. I would stake everything I own that Judge Carswell is not prejudiced against any person because of his race or religion and I feel that those who suggest such a thing are doing a terrible disservice to a great jurist and outstanding human being.

DAVID H. LEVIN.

VERO BEACH, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

Senator EDWARD GURNEY,
New Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

As a practicing attorney in Vero Beach, Florida I would like to express to you that in my opinion that I and most lawyers in this area strongly support the nomination of Judge Harrold Carswell to the U.S. Supreme Court. The impression that the lawyers of Florida do not support Judge Carswell is in error.

CHER CLEM.

VERO BEACH, FLA.,
March 20, 1970.

Senator EDWARD J. GURNEY,
New Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

As a practicing attorney and President of the Indian River County Bar Association in Vero Beach, Florida, I would like to express to you that in my opinion that I and most lawyers in this area strongly support the nomination of Judge Harrold Carswell to the U.S. Supreme Court. The impression that the lawyers of Florida do not support Judge Carswell is in error.

ROBERT JACKSON.

MARIANNA, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

Senator EDWARD GURNEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

Sincerely believe circus has lasted long enough. For sake of a strong court system commanding respect of all, urge your efforts to end farce involving Judge Carswell and press for immediate confirmation.

R. ROBERT BROWN,
County Judge, Juvenile Court Judge.

MONTICELLO, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

Hon. ED GURNEY,
U.S. Senator, U.S. Congress,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR GURNEY: I have known Judge Harrold Carswell since he became US District attorney. I have practiced before his court when he was district judge. He is most eminently qualified to sit on the US Supreme Court especially when viewed from the standpoint of the qualification of some present and former Justices. I sincerely believe he will interpret the law rather than legislate. I urge that the verification and the defamation spawned by Senators Bayh et. al. cease, and the Senate get on with immediate confirmation.

Respectfully,

KENNETH E. COOKSEY,
Judge, Monticello, Fla.

DE FUNIAK SPRINGS, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

HON. EDWARD GURNEY,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

SIRS: I have been a county judge in Walton County, Fla for 21 years. I wish to say that the Hon Harrold Carswell is qualified in every respect. I give him my unqualified support. All my friends also feel this way.

JOE DAN TROTMAN.

MIAMI, FLA.,
March 20, 1970.

Hon. ED. J. GURNEY,
U.S. Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR GURNEY: Strongly support confirmation of Judge Carswell to the Supreme Court.

DAVID POPPER,
Dade County Courthouse.

FT. LAUDERDALE, FLA.,
March 20, 1970.

Hon. ED GURNEY,
New Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

Judge Carswell is eminently qualified because of his record of many years on the bench and a record of many sound decisions.

STEWART F. LAMOTTE, Jr.,
Circuit Judge, 17th Judicial Circuit.

PANAMA CITY, FLA.,
March 20, 1970.

Senator ED GUERNEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

Add my name to the growing list of Florida attorneys who without reservation endorse the nomination of Judge Harrold G. Carswell as justice of the United States Supreme Court. Based upon my practice before Judge Carswell I am of the opinion that he is a man of unusual ability, especially equipped for the responsibilities and demands of this high office.

DAYTON LOGUE.

PALM BEACH, FLA.,
March 20, 1970.

Hon. EDWARD GURNEY,
U.S. Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

First telegram transcribed in error. Corrected copy reads as follows: Judge Harrold Carswell is eminently qualified to serve as associate justice and I earnestly recommend immediate and favorable action on his behalf by the Senate.

GEORGE W. HERSEY.

PALM BEACH, FLA.,
March 20, 1970.

Senator EDWARD GURNEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

Judge Harrold Carswell is eminently qualified to serve as associate justice and I fervently recommend immediate and favorable action on his behalf by the Senate.

GEORGE W. HERSEY.

PENSACOLA, FLA.,
March 20, 1970.

Hon. EDWARD J. GURNEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

Considerable contact with Honorable G. Harrold Carswell while he was judge of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Florida has given me a very high regard for his character, mind and judicial abilities. I therefore strongly urge his approval by the Senate in his appointment to the United States Supreme Court.

WILLIAM FISHER, Jr.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.,
March 20, 1970.

HON. EDWARD J. GUERNEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

I wish to record my wholehearted endorsement of Judge Carswell for elevation to the Supreme Court.

MARK R. MCGARRY, Jr.,
Circuit Judge.

TAMPA, FLA., March 21, 1970.

Senator ED GURNEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

Having tried cases before Judge Carswell, winning and losing, and having recently argued in the U.S. Supreme Court, I can assure that Judge Carswell would be a valuable member of that Court. Press reports that he is not competent or is not intelligent are simply not based on the facts. The truth is he is too intelligent and too incisive in his thinking to be taken in by inept analogy or loose argument and he has an instinct for doing justice. As for the argument that he has been reversed in civil rights cases, would it not be fair to ask "who has not". I hope you can make those who think they should vote against confirming Judge Carswell know that they are being misled by people who have never, or rarely, practiced before him or have little idea of what a judge's duty is. If I can help in any way I hope you will let me know.

DEWEY R. VILLAREAL, JR.,
Flower White, Gillen Humkey and Kinney.

PANAMA CITY, FLA.,

Hon. EDWARD J. GURNEY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

I would like to reaffirm my convictions in support of Judge Carswell as a candidate for the Supreme Court. I practiced before Judge Carswell for approximately seven years and selfishly regretted his elevation to the fifth circuit court of appeals because of his extreme competence as a jurist on the district court level. However, there is no doubt that his ability demanded such consideration of Judge Carswell based on Judge Carswell demonstrated abilities. I feel extremely earnest in stating that all citizens would be well served by him as a member of our Supreme Court and accordingly I urge you to influence your colleagues to confirm Judge Carswell for membership on the Supreme Court.

ROWLETT. W. BRYANT.

MIAMI, FLA., March 21, 1970.

Senator EDWARD GURNEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

I wish to thank you for your support for Judge Carswell. He is highly qualified to serve on the U.S. Supreme Court. I am proud that President Nixon has nominated and that you will vote to confirm a Southern jurist who is gifted with common sense and practical experience as well as intellectual capability.

ROBERT W. RUST,
U.S. Attorney, Miami, Fla.

MIAMI, FLA.,
March 22, 1970.

Senator EDWARD J. GURNEY,
New Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

I urge your support for confirmation of Judge Carswell.

THOMAS E. LEE, Jr.,
Circuit Judge.

MIAMI, FLA.,
March 21, 1970.

Senator EDWARD J. GURNEY,
Washington, D.C.

I urge support for confirmation of Judge Carswell.

THOMAS E. LEE, Jr.,
Circuit Judge.

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
March 20, 1970.

Senator EDWARD GURNEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

Telegram sent to Judge G. Harrold Carswell, New Orleans, Louisiana. Quote, as you may know, we of N.E.G.R.O. have spoken out in support of your nomination to the United States Supreme Court. As we have neither met nor communicated it would seem useful on the eve of your confirmation by the Senate for me to explain to you why I consider that confirmation in the best interests of black America and the Nation.

Our country finds itself a cauldron of hatred and in the search for headlines and recognition too many of us can only throw more coals on the fire.

In this rush to self-destruction I * * * to tell which the participants hate more, their opponents or themselves. America needs to stop the shouting, to give iitself a second chance and in our view you, Judge G. Harrold Carswell, have become the symbol of that second chance. Blind forgetfulness and turning the other cheek may be attributes of saints and perhaps proper aspirations for men but for most of us your recent public recantation of views expressed in 1948 will do. We take you at your word. If at some instance we must believe that you are insincere, that man cannot grow in understanding that there is no personal redemption, then I would not be writing to you as a neurosurgeon, the president of N.E.G.R.O., or even as an American citizen but would be, as were my ancestors, a slave. Hopefully you are not the last, but certainly not the first, distinguished American to change his mind. But lest I be guilty of the naivete critics of my position claim for me, let me say that sincere or insincere your public recantation of racist views is a watershed in American history. It is a signal to all that your interest and those of any man who aspires to play a significant role in national life can no longer be served by the expression or practice of racism.

As an American I am aware of the need to give ourselves a second chance, but it is as a Negro that I must accept the censure of many to support your nomination as a symbol of the second chance my people need so desperately. For Negroes to insist on a national policy which precludes the concepts of rehabilitation and redemption of the individual is to close the door forever on our black brothers who, because they have been the victims of the very bigotry we decry are today chronic welfare recipients, drug addicts, alcoholics, and convicted criminals. To deny a Judge Carswell the chance to repudiate the task position that we abhor is to deny the black underprivileged as a group the hope that is implied in the principle of redemption. The cry from our people that all America must hear and need is the cry for a second chance.

In human history it has always been the best of us who have identified with the least of us. For you to serve as a symbol of the second chance for America's black forgotten is an opportunity hard one. I sincerely hope that history will record your career on the Supreme Court as distinguished service to that deeply human concept.

In the heat and rancor of national debate there seems little time or inclination today to concern oneself with the personal, human feelings of participants. May I now, regardless of past, present or future disagreement, take the opportunity to express to you as a fellow human being my own deep personal concern for your private self during this protracted period of intense public attention.

THOMAS W. MATTHEW, M.D.,
President, NEGRO.

PANAMA CITY, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

Hon. EDWARD GURNEY,
U.S. Senator,
Washington, D.C.:

The following information relative to Marianna Civil Action No. M-572 Bay County, Florida, desegregation suit filed in January 1964. First counsel for Negro plaintiffs was Charles F. Wilson, Pensacola, Florida, who I understand, has filed a letter supporting Judge Carswell's nomination to Supreme Court. Present counsel, Theodore Bowers, is one of 14 different lawyers representing individual plaintiffs against school board in 7 years that this case has been pending. Judge Carswell was district judge for approximately 6 of those 7 years. During 6 years Judge Carswell actively encouraged and challenged the parties to pursue voluntary desegregation, failing which he entered numerous desegregation orders. He was constantly calling counsel together to determine desegregation progress. Voluntary efforts without court orders resulted in the total integration of high schools in 1967 by closing county's only all-Negro school. Presently there are no all black schools in Bay County, Florida. Indicative of Judge Carswell's fair play and fair rulings is that in 6 years of continuous desegregation litigation, plaintiffs and NAACP, thought it necessary to appeal his orders only one time and that in 1969 resulting in the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, en banc, saying of the Bay County desegregation efforts: "This system is operating on a freedom of choice plan. The plan has produced impressive results but they fall short of establishing a unitary school system." Page 23 of slip opinion—Sing Leton et al v. Jackson Municipal Separate School District et al, case No. 27863.

In 6 years I saw Judge Carswell patiently listen to all arguments of all counsel. No allegation made in any pleading anywhere or on appeal to higher court of mistreatment of any client or counsel by Judge Carswell at any time. No attorney in my 6 years before the court complained to the court of any alleged mistreatment, publicly or privately, prior to nomination of Judge Carswell to U.S. Supreme Court. Judge Carswell did request Justice Department representing USA to try to assign the same lawyer to our case for continuity in order to avoid the court having to review for new counsel old ground already covered and former rulings of the court on evidentiary matters. His patience and courtesy in bringing each new counsel up to date was remarkable to behold. All counsel were treated with respect and fairness. Judge Carswell constantly chided the school board to do better. He told us after Green v. New Kent County, that freedom of choice was out and that we must come up with some other plan. Presently school system operating on straight neighborhood zone plan with all black schools integrated with white students. Letter to follow.

JULIAN BENNETT.

Mr. GURNEY. Again I say to the Senate that it seems to me that if we are going to be fair in our judgment of this nominee to the Supreme Court, we certainly ought to weigh the evidence, as lawyers say—and many of us here are lawyers, including those who have made arguments on the floor of the Senate in the last few days—and in weighing that evidence, it seems to me that the best evidence which we have, certainly, is the evidence of men who know Judge Carswell, who practiced in his court, who met him socially, and who know him as a lawyer and as a judge, rather than the opinion of some law school professor, or some New York lawyer, or some other chap who is hundreds or thousands of miles away and who does not know the judge personally at all.

THE POSTAL STRIKE

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, great harm has been done to the Nation by the willful action of a small group of men who have engineered and led the walkout of postal employees.

They have hurt every segment of our society.

They have done great damage to many firms depending on airmail to do business. They have made life more miserable for the poor and the elderly who get their pension or welfare checks through the mail. They have struck a harsh blow at the morale of our troops in Vietnam who are not getting letters. They have struck a blow at the morale of many thousands of mothers and fathers, sisters and wives, of servicemen—particularly our young men overseas—because the mail is not being delivered.

This they have done because, in the minds of many of these postal workers, they have grievances that go beyond reason and make the kind of illegal action they have taken preferable to continued inaction.

This postal strike would not have been necessary—from their point of view—had the Congress of the United States acted in good time. For nearly a year now there have been major postal reform bills before the Congress. And for all those months the leadership of this Congress has refused to meet its obligations and take the action necessary to enact those administration proposals into law.

Mr. President, I call upon the leadership of the Congress to respond as quickly and as firmly as the President has responded to this crisis.

I call upon the leadership to act with speed, and reason, to the needs of the Nation and the postal workers.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the role.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZING CORRECTIONS IN THE BILL (H.R. 11959) TO INCREASE EDUCATIONAL ALLOWANCES TO VETERANS

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on House Concurrent Resolution 554.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. DOLE) laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 554, which was read by the bill clerk, as follows:

H. CON RES. 554

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed, in the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 11959) to amend chapters 31, 34, and 35 of title 38, United States Code, in order to increase the rates of vocational rehabilitation, educational assistance, and special training allowance paid to eligible veterans and persons under such chapters, to make the following corrections, namely: In section 202 of the bill, delete the subsection designation "(a)" immediately after "SEC. 202.", and delete all of subsection (b) thereof; in section 1696(a) of the new subchapter added by section 204(a)(4) of the bill, delete "section 1682(b) of this title" and insert in lieu thereof "subsection (b) of this section"; and in the parenthetical matter contained in section 242(a) of the new subchapter added by section 214(a) of the bill, insert "need for" immediately after "including their".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, House Concurrent Resolution 554 was considered and agreed to.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of George Harrold Carswell to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to address myself to the fitness of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to occupy a position on the highest court of our land.

My conclusion, after sitting through the hearings and studying the record, is that Judge G. Harrold Carswell has demonstrated neither the judicial temperment and fairness nor the professional competence commensurate with the high standard of excellence that must be demanded and should be demanded of a Justice of the Supreme Court. Therefore, I must oppose confirmation of the nomination.

As chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Improvements in Judicial Machinery, I have been very much concerned with improving the operation of our Federal judicial system. I have chaired countless hearings over the past 5 years, initiated legislation, helped to draft legislation, modified and amended legislation—substantial legislation—dealing with the administration, practices and procedures of the Federal judicial system, including the creation of the Federal jury selection system now in operation, the complete overhauling—indeed, the abolition—of the U.S. commissioners system, setting up the new Federal magistrates system, the development of an effective approach to multidistrict litigation, the management of numerous omnibus judgeship bills, and involving many other legislative areas concerned with the improvement of the Federal judicial system.

Because of this legislative background as well as my personal inclinations and background, I feel a deep responsibility to my colleagues and to the Nation to delve deeply into the issues touching upon the effectiveness of Federal judiciary. Nothing is more relevant to that effectiveness than the process of assuring that the Federal bench and, in particular, the Supreme Court are manned by appointees of the highest quality. Men appointed to the Supreme Court have, for practical purposes, life tenure, with no effective means for discipline or removal. Their influence on our national life may very well transcend that of the President who appointed them.

The role of the Supreme Court in our society is too vital to be endangered by the appointment of men whose judicial temperament or professional qualifications are subject to serious doubt.

In considering those named by the President to vacancies on the Federal district and circuit courts over the past 5 years, and in considering previous nominees for the Supreme Court, I have consistently adhered to the position that, barring an unusual situation, the nomination of a man selected by the President for the Federal bench should be confirmed by the Senate if he has demonstrated a character beyond reproach, professional competency equal to the task set for him, and a proper judicial temperament.

As I stated earlier, the role of our Supreme Court in our society is far too vital to be endangered by the appointment of a man or of men whose judicial temperament or professional qualifications are subject to serious doubt. The notion that a Senator does not have an obligation to insist on a high degree of competence, ability, and judicial fairness runs completely contrary to the Constitution of the United States and to the entire history of our great Nation. There is only one reason why our Founding Fathers wrote into article III provisions requiring Senate advice and consent on Supreme Court nominees, and it is that they expected the Senate to exercise a high influence over the President—to, in the words of Alexander Hamilton, in Federalist Papers No. 76 or 77, put sufficient influence on the President of the United States in order to assure that:

> He would be both ashamed and afraid to bring forward, for the most distinguished or lucrative stations, candidates who had no other merit than that of coming from the same State to which he particularly belonged, or of being, in some way or other, personally allied to him, or of possessing the necessary insignificance and pliancy to render them the obsequious instruments of his pleasure.

Our Founding Fathers did not intend for the U.S. Senate to sit idly by and have that type of man nominated for the Supreme Court of the United States.

The man selected by the President for the Federal bench should have a character beyond reproach, professional competency equal to the task set for him, and a proper judicial temperament. By "proper judicial temperament" I mean at least the ability to put aside one's own prejudices and biases so as to be able to approach every case with a fair and open mind.

These criteria are not always easy to apply. I have made every effort to apply them in a consistent manner to those nominees whose names have been placed before the Senate.

In 1965, the first year I was in the Senate, I opposed the nomination to the district court of Massachusetts of Francis X. Morrissey, a man sponsored by two of my closest personal friends in the Senate, because I believed that his record did not demonstrate the legal ability requisite for a Federal judge. When the Governor of Mississippi, James P. Coleman, was nominated to the fifth circuit, I spoke in his favor on the floor of the Senate and voted to confirm, despite the firm opposition of many civil rights groups in my State. My examination of his record convinced me that he would make a fair and objective judge. Although I had supported the initial appointed of Mr. Justice Fortas, I took the lead in calling for his resignation when the unanswered questions surrounding his nonjudicial activities cast a cloud over the reputation of the Supreme Court. I also supported President Nixon's choice of Judge Warren Burger for Chief Justice, although I have not always agreed with him on substantive issues.

Now the Senate is asked to advise and consent to the appointment of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

I aproached the hearings on Judge Carswell's appointment seeking to learn not what he was when he delivered his infamous racial supremacy speech in 1948, but what he is in 1970, what kind of judge—what kind of man.

Unfortunately, some of the most revealing testimony was presented to the Judiciary Committee after Judge Carswell testified and the members of the committee were not able to review it with him. A request that he be recalled was rejected. Moreover, the short, general rebuttal letter that he submitted for the record was unresponsive and unenlightening. On the whole, however, the hearings were enlightening, indeed shocking, but hardly reassuring.

I will not dwell on Judge Carswell's willingness in 1965 to lend his name and the prestige of his office as U.S. attorney to an effort to circumvent the mandates of the Constitution by converting a public golf course into a private one. Nor will I attempt to analyze similar events that have come to light, such as his attempt, in 1969, to amuse the members of the Georgia Bar Association with a racial joke. These are serious matters, but not, I believe the keys to the case against Judge Carswell.

JUDGE CARSWELL'S LACK OF JUDICIAL TEMPERAMENT

Our judicial system must accord litigants a fair hearing. Justice is not dispensed when a judge's personal views and biases invade the judicial process. In Judge Carswell's court, the poor, the unpopular and the black were all too frequently denied their basic right to be treated fairly and equitably.

Judge Carswell was simply unable or unwilling to divorce his judicial functions from his personal prejudices. His hostility toward particular causes, lawyers and litigants was manifest not only in his decisions but in his demeanor in the courtroom.

Prof. Leroy Clark of New York University supervised the NAACP legal defense fund litigation in Florida between 1962 and 1968. In this capacity he was in charge of the entire civil rights litigation in the State of Florida. Professor Clark believes that there is not a lawyer in the country who has appeared before Judge Carswell on more cases involving civil rights matters. Professor Clark appeared before Judge Carswell in no less than nine or 10 civil rights cases. Testifying before the Judiciary Committee hearings on the nomination, Professor Clark called Judge Carswell—

(T)he most hostile federal district court judge I have ever appeared before with respect to civil rights matters. . . .

Judge Carswell was insulting and hostile. I have been in Judge's Carswell's court on at least one occasion in which he turned his chair away from me when I was arguing. I have said for publication, and I repeat it here, that it is not, it was not an infrequent experience for Judge Carswell to deliberately disrupt your argument and cut across you, while according, by the way, to opposing counsel every courtesy possible.

It was not unusual for Judge Carswell to shout at a black lawyer who appeared before him while using a civil tone to opposing counsel. . . ."

* * * * *

(W)henever I took a lawyer into the State, and he or she was to appear before Carswell, I usually spent the evening before making them go through their argument while I harassed them, as preparation for what they would meet the following day.

Mr. President, a man with that sort of record, whether sitting as a police magistrate, a people's court judge, or a circuit court judge, is not fit to sit on any court, let alone the Supreme Court of the United States.

Another lawyer who has represented various clients in litigation before Judge Carswell in cases involving the civil rights of black people is Theodore R. Bowers. Mr. Bowers has been admitted to practice in all the courts of the State of Florida, the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Florida and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. He actively practiced before Judge Carswell from 1965 until 1969, when Judge Carswell was elevated to the U.S. Court of Appeals. Mr. Bowers prepared an affidavit in which he strongly reinforces the opinion of Prof. Leroy Clark that Judge Carswell was antagonistic toward rights of minority groups.

Mr. Bower's affidavit states:

Honorable G. Harrold Carswell was very antagonistic toward cases and parties seeking to secure and vindicate the civil rights of Negroes. . . .

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, Mr. Bower's affidavit in full.

There being no objection the affidavit was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AFFIDAVIT

STATE OF FLORIDA,
County of Bay:

Theodore R. Bowers being duly sworn deposes and says:

1. That he is an Attorney at Law admitted to practice in all the courts of the State of Florida, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Florida and the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

2. That he has represented various clients in litigation before the Honorable G. Harrold Carswell, as District Judge, in cases involving the civil rights of black people; that he actively practiced before said judge from 1965 until 1969, when Judge Carswell was elevated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

3. That the Honorable G. Harrold Carswell was very antogonistic toward cases and parties therein seeking to secure and vindicate the civil rights of Negroes.

4. That I am engaged in the practice of law, full time, in the state Courts in the northern part of Florida; that with the exception of a few Municipal Court Judges and judges of inferior state courts of limited jurisdiction (courts below circuit court jurisdiction—the principal trial courts in Flordia), Judge Carswell is, in my opinion, the most prejudice judge before whom I have had the honor to practice.

Dated this 5th day of February, 1970.

THEODORE R. BOWERS.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 5th day of February, A. D. 1970.

———— ————,
Notary Public.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, another member of the Florida bar, Maurice Rosen, an attorney involved in various civil rights cases in northern Florida between 1963 and 1964, in an affidavit prepared under oath, states:

That the reputation of Judge Harrold G. Carswell among attorneys handling civil rights cases during that period was that he was not sympathetic to the civil rights movement and that they could not expect to win a civil rights related case before him.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the entire affidavit printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the affidavit was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AFFIDAVIT

STATE OF FLORIDA,
County of Dade, ss:

Before me, the undersigned authority, personally appeared Maurice Rosen, who, being duly sworn upon oath, deposes and says:

1. That he is an attorney and member of the Bar of the State of Florida.

2. That he was involved in various civil rights cases in northern Florida during 1963 and 1964 as an attorney.

3. That the reputation of Judge Harrold G. Carswell among attorneys handling civil rights cases during that period was that he was not sympathetic to the Civil Rights Movement and that they could not expect to win a civil rights related case before him.

Further, affiant sayeth naught.

MAURICE ROSEN.

SWORN TO AND SUBSCRIBED before me this 5th day of February, 1970.

THELMA KAROSHIK,
Notary Public, State of Florida.

My commission expires December 12, 1972.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, another Florida lawyer, representing clients asserting their constitutional rights before Judge Carswell, James B. Sanderlin, a member of the Florida bar, sent me a telegram which I received this morning, and I ask unanimous consent to have the entire telegram printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.,
March 23, 1970.

Senator JOSEPH TYDINGS,
New Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I am a member of the Florida bar and have practiced law in Florida for approximately seven years and have handled a number of civil rights cases. Whenever a colleague and I were discussing the filing of a civil rights case we always tried to avoid Judge Carswell because we could never be sure that we could get an unbiased ruling from him. In his orders in a couple of cases I had before him rather than give the relief asked for in an order he wanted us to accept the good faith of the defendant who we were having to bring into court to seek relief against. By reputation in the field among all the lawyers who handled civil rights cases the feeling was that Judge Carswell could not be relied on for a fair impartial and equitable disposition of civil rights matters.

JAMES B. SANDERLIN.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAYH). The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, supporters of Judge G. Harrold Carswell have maintained throughout the debate that there is no reason, or at least no legitimate reason, to deny him confirmation to the Supreme Court. I confess that I have been intrigued by their arguments and would like at this time to deal with these issues briefly.

First, it has been pointed out that Judge Carswell was nominated by the President, he is the President's choice, and this fact deserves some weight in our deliberations. I agree. But I am also conscious of the fact that under the Constitution there is a dual responsibility involved in the selection of a judge. The President nominates, but the Senate must give its advice and consent.

At no time in our history has it been expected, even by the men who drafted the Constitution, that the Senate should defer to the President's choice against its own best judgment.

James Madison, in the famous Federalist Papers, emphasized the supremacy of the Legislature in this regard, and believed it would be a check upon "political appointments" by the Executive.

Thus, our congressional mandate is clear: We would not be true to ourselves or to the people we represent if we were to allow ourselves to be governed solely by the President's will.

Second, it has been held that Judge Carswell has earned the highest respect of those with whom he has worked over the years. The Judiciary Committee of the American Bar Association has twice recommended him for confirmation to the Supreme Court. His own colleagues on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals have warmly endorsed his nomination. Lawyers who have practiced before him have given him high ratings for his fair and judicial handling of their cases.

But let us look more closely at these supposed indications of support. The American Bar Association has chosen not to rate nominees for the Supreme Court in the same manner that they rate appointees to the lower court. A recommendation of "qualified" in this case, therefore, carries with it no qualitative reference. We do not know if the members of the committee who investigated Judge Carswell's record regard him as "highly qualified," "exceptionally well qualified," or just "barely qualified." There is no indication whatsoever as to what they really think of the man. My guess is that a man would have to be an exceptionally poor candidate for any post to receive an "unqualified" recommendation from the committee, especially after he had been chosen by the President himself to sit on the highest court of the land.

I believe, therefore, that the ABA's endorsement of Judge Carswell has been evaluated by his supporters in a manner all out of proportion to its actual significance.

The ABA committee hearings were far from extensive. They did not have all the evidence before them at the time they made their recommendations. They were, in fact, simply giving their pro forma stamp of approval to the name already selected by the President.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not a fact that the ABA committee declined to hear testimony from all of the lawyers who testified against the nomination before the Senate Judiciary Committee?

Mr. BROOKE. It is my understanding that is a fact.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not also a fact that they did not take time to receive a full statement from Mr. Lowenthal even after Mr. Lowenthal requested the opportunity to place a written statement before them?

Mr. BROOKE. It is my further understanding that is also a fact.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not a fact that they gave their endorsement before they even took the trouble to read the hearing or the testimony taken at the hearings before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate?

Mr. BROOKE. I understand that is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKE. I yield.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I am a member of the American Bar Association. Very frankly, the association's participation in the last two nominations to the Supreme Court have resulted in a great deal of controversy.

It is a long time since I went to law school, but perhaps the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, a former attorney general, may be able to refresh my recollection.

As I recall it, there is a rule of law that if one sees a casualty on the highway, he is under no obligation to stop and render first aid. But if he does, he has to do it well.

Mr. BROOKE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MATHIAS. I think this is a situation of that sort. If the American Bar Association injects itself into these proceedings, it ought to be well done, if it is done at all.

I must confess that I think there is something wrong with the system. There is nothing wrong with the men. I know a great many of the men who serve on that Judicial Selection Committee. They are fine men. They are excellent lawyers. It seems to me that the commission they have been given is improperly drawn or we would not be ending up with the kind of controversial situation we have.

Regardless of the outcome of the pending nomination, regardles of how any individual Senator may act upon it, I think this is a very regrettable development.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, as the Senator has very rightly pointed out, I think it is a great misfortune that the American Bar Association entered into this deliberation in the first instance.

The American public has been led to believe that the American Bar Association has conducted a rather exhaustive study and extensive review of the nominee's qualifications for the position to which he has been appointed.

The proponents, those who have been debating in favor of Judge Carswell, have been using the American Bar Association's approval as the highest recommendation possible that this nominee could receive. And I think it has been with some justification that the American people have been relying upon the American Bar Association's recommendation and approval.

I am a member of the American Bar Association, as is the distinguished junior Senator from Maryland.

I see the distinguished senior Senator from New Jersey on the floor, the distinguished Senator from Maryland, the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan, and the distinguished junior Senator from Michigan, also. I think we all are or have been at some time members of the American Bar Association.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, would the Senator admit the senior Senator from New Jersey to that hallowed circle?

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, I think I named the distinguished senior Senator from New Jersey first.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I am sorry. I was reading, and I did not hear the Senator mention my name.

Mr. BROOKE. I think there are others who are also members of the American Bar Association. It has always appeared to represent the pinnacle of the legal profession. Therefore, for a long period of time this association has been called upon to make investigations and make recommendations to the President of the United States relative to his appointments to the Supreme Court.

Let me back up for a moment, before the nomination of Clement Haynsworth, and the most recent nomination to the Supreme Court, to the promotion of Mr. Justice Fortas to the position of Chief Justice of the United States. It is my understanding—and some Senator may correct me if I am wrong—that when the American Bar Association was called upon to make its recommendation to President Johnson in connection with his elevation of Justice Fortas to the highest and most exalted position of Chief Justice of the United States, there was a conference phone call made at 7 o'clock in the morning to the members of the judiciary committee of the American Bar Association to solicit their approval. This is incredible to me. If this is a fact—and I understand it to be a fact—it is incredible that this constituted the full extent of the investigation and the examination into Mr. Justice Fortas that the American Bar Association's judiciary committee was performing at the time it was to make its recommendation to the President.

I know that Mr. Fortas was a member of the Supreme Court, so that his qualifications, at least to sit as a member of that body, had already been examined. He was a member of that body. But still, here the President was asking for a recommendation for a Chief Justice of the United States from this highly legal body, the American Bar Association, and they oblige with a conference telephone call at 7 o'clock in the morning in order to make recommendations. As the distinguished senior Senator from Maryland pointed out in colloquy on the floor of the Senate this afternoon, little or no investigation was made into qualifications of the nominee now before us.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BROOKE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Did the Senator know that John Lowenthal, professor of law at Rutgers University, whose testimony was so tremendously persuasive before the Committee on the Judiciary—and which is found at page 139 of the record and thereafter in the hearings—was invited by this committee of the American Bar Association to give his opinion of Judge Carswell's competence to sit on the Supreme Court; that he asked for time to submit a written statement and certain documentation; that within a day or two, before he had a chance to submit the documentation he was told that the committee had already made up its mind?

I do not know whether the committee would have been influenced by the testimony Professor Lowenthal produced at our hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary, but as one lawyer, I was very impressed, and I cannot help but think some members of that American Bar Association committee would have been equally impressed. I say this because I know that the individual members of this committee are outstanding lawyers and gentlemen who would like to view this nomination with an open mind.

I cannot help but think also, as the Senator reflected on the American Bar Association custom of passing on justices for the Supreme Court, how very different their treatment for handling justices of the Supreme Court is from handling judicial nominations for U.S. district judges and judges for U.S. circuit courts of appeal. In the latter instances, the Attorney General, at least in recent cases, has submitted names of candidates for district judges or judges for the U.S. courts of appeal to the American Bar Association and their committee. In one instance a nomination brought up here, proposed by two of my closest friends in the Senate—which nomination I opposed and it later was withdrawn, Frank Morrissey—was opposed by the American Bar Association after careful screening. But when one comes to Supreme Court nominations this procedure is not followed. Rather the President expects his selection to be quickly rubber stamped without careful evaluation of the nominee. Thus, the whole system of the American Bar Association's approval or disapproval of Supreme Court nominations is broken down because it appears to be nothing more or less than confirming or almost rubberstamping a nomination already announced by the President.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKE. Does not the Senator feel that this is in fact a misrepresentation to the President, to the Senate, and to the American people? The President has every right to believe, the Senate has every right to believe, and the American people have every right to believe that when the American Bar Association gives approval or makes a recommendation, that judgment is based upon some extensive, if not exhaustive, examination of the total qualifications of the nominee.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator is absolutely correct. And because it is clearly not based on an exhaustive examination of the total qualifications of the nominee, something is wrong with the system. I do not see how it can be considered a fair examination.

Certainly, if ever there was an example that pointed out the failure of the Committee on Judicial Selections of the American Bar Association to do the job the lawyers of America have a right to expect of them, and which all of us who are members of the American Bar Association have a right to expect of them, that example is the nomination now pending before the Senate.

Mr. BROOKE. I have one comment on the point which the Senator from Maryland just raised relative to those judges who sat with the proposed nominee. I submit that the, supposed recommendation of those who practiced with Judge Carswell on the fifth circuit court of appeals is also open to question. There are 15 members of that court, of which he is one. Five letters of recommendation appear in the transcript of hearings, of which one, the letter of Judge Elbert B. Tuttle, has since been modified—and I might add by virtue of the investigation of the senior Senator from Maryland—it has been modified so significantly as to indicate a withdrawal of support.

According to Judge Tuttle, he indicated to Judge Carswell in a telephone conversation of January 28, 1970, while the confirmation hearings were still in progress, that: "I could not testify in support of his nomination."

Since then it has come to light, primarily through press reports that Judge Miner Wisdom, also of the fifth circuit, also withheld his endorsement. And that it was two other judges on the court who objected to the circulation of a joint letter endorsing the nominee.

Therefore, of the 15 judges on the court, the record stands at four and four with six judges, excluding Judge Carswell as an interested party, uncommitted. Given the natural reluctance of many members of the bench to comment on a matter that is constitutionally within the province of the legislative and executive branch to decide, this is a remarkable record.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKE. I yield.

Mr. MATHIAS. I would like to make one thing clear. With reference to the participation of the American Bar Association in this proceeding, it is not only the senatorial members of the American Bar Association that are unhappy with the events that have evolved in connection with both the Haynsworth and the Carswell nomination. I hear from other members of the bar who are important members of the American Bar Association, that they are unhappy.

I think it also should be clear that it is apparently the system that is at fault because they are good men, strong men, and able and discerning men on the committee.

I think what we need to know is what commission that committee was given. Were they supposed to undertake a thoughtful evaluation of the kind that goes to the editors of Good Housekeeping, when they undertake to put the seal of approval on some product, which involves a thorough and comprehensive examination? Or is it just supposed to be like the medical examinations for draft boards during World War II; if the body was warm and breathed a little, they shot it through. What is the commission of that bar association committee?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator would agree that we need to know more about their mandate.

Mr. MATHIAS. I think we ought to know what job it was given, because I do not think we ought to be unfair to the members of the committee.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, we should know not only what job they were given, but what could be rightly expected by the Senate and by the Nation as to their recommendation.

Mr. MATHIAS. I think this is where every member of the American Bar Association assumes some responsibility, because I think the public, at least, thinks the commission given to it was the commission that Good Housekeeping is given in putting the seal of approval on something—evaluating the product, testing, checking the product's reputation, and everything else. That is where the bar association and where we in the Senate bear some responsibility.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, I had yielded to the Senator to ask a question. I thank the Senator from West Virginia for protecting my rights.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I say to the able Senator, I may not continue to protect them very long.

If the Senator will yield further, may I ask how long this filibuster is expected to continue?

Mr. BROOKE. May I say to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia that even before coming to this august body I had always objected to filibusters, and certainly I have no intent of participating in a filibuster now. It was my understanding that this was a debate on the nomination of G. Harrold Carswell to be a member of the Supreme Court of the United States; that the proponents and opponents would be engaged in a debate which would be very helpful to the Senate in arriving at whatever decision it ultimately will come to in the days ahead. So I want to assure my very distinguished friend that, if this is a filibuster, I am not aware of it, and certainly not a party to it.

The matter which I am discussing here with my colleagues is one, I think, of great importance, and obviously they think it is of great importance to be here this late in the evening discussing these matters.

Again, I thank the distinguished Senator for protecting my rights to debate the nomination of G. Harrold Carswell.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one final observation?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the able Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKE. I think, in all fairness, I should certainly yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, let me assure the distinguished Senator I have no objections to filibusters when they become necessary in the interest of a worthy purpose, but if we are going to have one, I think we ought to play by the rules, and a filibuster is a pretty tough, hard game. I think we ought soon to begin to apply the rules, and I think those who want to continue in this extended debate should be put on notice that there will come a time, if this is going to be a filibuster—I have no objection, as I say, to filibusters; there are times when I think filibusters are proper, and I have participated in them myself—but there are rules of the Senate which I think, when it becomes evident that a filibuster is in progress on this nomination, should be utilized and rigidly applied by Senators who wish to bring this matter to a vote in due time.

Mr. BROOKE. I am aware of the Senator's feelings about filibusters and the fact that he has participated in them, but I want to assure him that he and I disagree in this regard. I object to filibusters, as I have said, and, I repeat, I am not a party to a filibuster, if it is one. I spoke on this nomination before, and I said then I expected to speak on it further, because certain issues have come to mind that I would like to debate. But I have other matters to debate, and I am sure the Senator stands for my right to debate them, and debate them without their being characterized as filibusters.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. If the Senator will permit me to just say that I certainly want to hear him when he discusses these matters further, I certainly defend his right to say what he wishes and to speak as long as he desires. But if this is going to be a filibuster—and my remarks are not directed to the Senator solely—then I think there comes a time when we have to apply the rules, and one rule we are breaking right now, should any Senator wish to object, is that of yielding for other than a question. The able Senator yielded to me, and I thank him.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKE. I yield.

Mr. CASE. Does the Senator know—and this is to elicit information—whether in the course of our discussions the exact letter of the selection committee of the American Bar Association to the chairman of our Judiciary Committee of January 26, 1970, has been placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. BROOKE. I do not know.

Mr. CASE. If not, would the Senator object if I asked at the appropriate time to do so, or if I asked him if he would insert that letter into the RECORD at this point, perhaps, together with a statement by the standing committee on Federal judiciary, which is the same committee to which I referred, which sets out precisely the considerations that were taken into account and those that were not taken into account?

Mr. BROOKE. I assure the Senator that I would not object, and would consider it a contribution if the Senator would have it printed in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. CASE. If the Senator will yield for that purpose, I wonder if the Senator from West Virginia would object if I asked permission to insert it in the RECORD at this time.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Yes, I object.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further——

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to be advised of what the will of the Senate is.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from West Virginia has withdrawn his objection, so the distinguished Senator from New Jersey can insert the matter into the RECORD.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have printed in the RECORD at this point the American Bar Association letter on the Judge Carswell nomination, and also a statement of the qualifications it considered in connection with the matter.

There being no objection, the statement and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION STANDING COMMITTEE ON FEDERAL JUDICIARY, FEBRUARY 20, 1970

It is our pleasure to report that the relations between President Nixon's administration and our Committee continue to be excellent. Attorney General Mitchell and Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst have pursued an unbroken policy of recommending to the President for appointment to the Federal District Courts and Courts of Appeals only lawyers found by our Committee to be qualified, well qualified or exceptionally well qualified. President Nixon is the first President who has maintained this policy, unbroken, during his first year in office when political pressures upon a new administration are often most intense.

GENERAL ACTIVITY OF THE COMMITTEE

Since January 20, 1969 the Committee has submitted a total of 46 Informal Reports and 39 Formal Reports. Six Formal Reports and three Informal Reports are still in progress.

Of the Formal Reports submitted, 24 were for vacancies in the District Courts and 15 were for vacancies in the Courts of Appeals. Four of the candidates were found to be "Exceptionally Well Qualified", 20 were found to be "Well Qualified", and 14 were found to be "Qualified". One was found "Not qualified by reason of age".

Of these investigated informally, 40 were found qualified or better and six not qualified. Five names were withdrawn from consideration while an investigation was in progress.

The Committee has also reported favorably to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate as to the professional competence, integrity and judicial temperament of a nominee for the office of Chief Justice of the United States, Warren E. Burger, and of two nominees for the office of Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, Chief Judge Clement E. Haynsworth and Judge G. Harrold Carswell. The problem posed to the Committee by these nominations will be discussed at greater length at the end of this report.

The Committee deeply appreciates the ready cooperation which it has received from members of this Association.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS AND NOMINATIONS

Since January 20, 1969 President Nixon has nominated 31 persons for judicial office other than the Supreme Court. Of these, four have been found "Exceptionally Well Qualified", 15 "Well Qualified" and 12 "Qualified". Of these, 27 have been confirmed. In addition, four vacancies exist in Courts of Appeals and 12 in District Courts for which nominations have not yet been submitted. Three of these vacancies are over one year old, the others less than seven months.

Attached as Exhibit A is a list of vacancies in existence since January 20, 1969 and the President's action taken as to each.

APPEARANCE AT INDUCTION CEREMONIES

The Committee has continued the practice established several years ago of appearing through one of its members or authorized representatives at the induction ceremonies of judges. At such occasions, when appropriate under the procedures of the Court in question, the representative of the Committee has made a brief statement outlining its function, emphasizing the objective of the American Bar Association to encourage the appointment of qualified judges, and extending congratulations and best wishes to the new judge. We believe that these appearances are valuable to the Association and to the profession. We are grateful to all of the lawyers who have given their time to assist the Committee in this effort.

ANTICIPATED WORKLOAD

In addition to the usual vacancies arising from retirement, resignation and death, the Committee anticipates a large increase in its work as a result of the expected passage of pending bills which will add approximately 70 new federal judgeships.

AGE RESTRICTIONS

Since the last meeting of the Association, the Committee has reconsidered its guideline as to the maximum age at which persons under consideration for judicial nomination should be considered qualified. As to persons not already in the Federal judicial system, there has been no change: A person over the age of 64 will not be considered qualified for nomination to a United States District Court or Court of Appeals; a person over 60 will not be approved unless he would otherwise have been found well qualified or exceptionally well qualified. As to United States District Judges who are under consideration for appointment to a Court of Appeals, if they are over the age of 64 they will be approved only if they would otherwise have been well qualified or exceptionally well qualified; after reaching the age of 68, they will be considered not qualified by reason of age. This represents a liberalization of the rule as expressed in our last report in that the requirement for District Judges between the age of 64 and 68 has been dropped from exceptionally well qualified to well qualified and eligibility for retirement has been eliminated as a basis in itself for disqualification.

SUPREME COURT APPOINTMENTS

In his first year in office, President Nixon has nominated three lower court judges for vacancies on the Supreme Court. The first, Judge Warren E. Burger of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia was nominated and confirmed as Chief Justice of the United States. Chief Judge Clement E. Haynsworth of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals was nominated for the office of Associate Justice but was not confirmed by the Senate. Judge George Harrold Carswell, of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals was then nominated for this vacancy. His nomination is now awaiting action by the Senate.

All of these nominees were reported favorably by our Committee. President Nixon has followed his announced policy of not consulting the Committee with respect to the nomination of Supreme Court justices. In each case, however, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary has requested the Committee's views as to persons nominated for this Court.

In accordance with past practices, the Committee has restricted its comments to matters of professional qualification—integrity, judicial temperament, and professional competence. As to Judge Haynsworth, the Committee's view was expressed by the formulation in use for several years—"highly acceptable from the viewpoint of professional qualifications." At that time, however, the Committee decided to discontinue the future use of this obscure formulation and to limit its rating to "qualified" or "not qualified". Accordingly, in the case of Judge Carswell, the Committee responded to the inquiry of the Senate by letter and in more expanded form. A copy of this letter is attachted hereto as Exhibit B. In this letter the Committee expressly stated that its investigation was limited to the professional competence, integrity and judicial temperament of the nominee.

Notwithstanding the limitation which the Committee has expressed in one form or another as to the scope of its evaluation of Supreme Court nominees, critics from time to time have attacked its views as though they constituted full endorsement of the President's selection. Yet professional qualification was only one of a number of equally important factors properly considered by the President in making his selection which the Committee has never attempted to evaluate—and which it is accordingly in no position to explain or defend.

The minimum standards of integrity, judicial temperament and professional competence which the Committee traditionally applies to Supreme Court nominees are substantially the same as those applied for federal Courts of Appeals. The Committee has not attempted to suggest that these standards be different for the Supreme Court. This does not imply that added distinction is not to be sought in Supreme Court nominees but rather that this quality is not as readily measurable in the narrow terms of professional competence as in the case of the lower courts, because of the unique powers of the Supreme Court.

If the Committee adheres to its present practice, its evaluations will continue to be criticized at least in part on the basis of factors not within the relatively narrow scope of its investigation. On the other hand, if it were to depart from its previous policy and undertake to express its view as to a nominee's ideology, stature and distinction it would be drawn into areas involving nonprofessional matters and areas in which evaluation is extremely subjective.

The Committee has been and is continuing to review its procedures and scope of investigation with emphasis on its role as to Supreme Court appointments which, unlike those for other federal courts, are made without consultation with the Committee. It will welcome the suggestions of members of this House for its improvement.

Respectfully submitted.

Sumner H. Babcock, Albert R. Connelly, Harry G. Gault, Robert H. Harry, Charles A. Horsky, Richard E. Kyle, Norman P. Ramsey, Miles G. Seeley, John A. Sutro, Sr., Robert L. Trescher, Sherwood W. Wise, Lawrence E. Walsh, Chairman.

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION,
New York, N.Y., January 26, 1970.

HON. JAMES O. EASTLAND,
Chairman, U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: Thank you for your telegram of January 21, 1970 inviting the comments of the American Bar Association Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary with respect to Judge G. Harrold Carswell, who has been nominated for the office of Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Committee is unanimously of the opinion that Judge Carswell is qualified for this appointment.

This committee has previously investigated Judge Carswell for appointment to the District Court in 1958 and for appointment to the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in 1969. On each occasion Judge Carswell was reported favorably for these appointments. The Committee has now supplemented these investigations within the limits fixed by your telegram.

With respect to nominations for the Supreme Court, the Committee has traditionally limited its investigation to the opinions of a cross-section of the best informed judges and lawyers as to the integrity, judicial temperament and professional competence of the proposed nominee. It has always recognized that the selection of a member of the Supreme Court involves many other factors of a broad political and ideological nature within the discretion of the President and the Senate but beyond the special competence of this Committee. Accordingly, the opinion of this Committee is limited to the areas of its investigation.

In the present case the Committee has solicited the views of a substantial number of judges and lawyers who are familiar with Judge Carswell's work, and it has also surveyed his published opinions. On the basis of its investigation the Committee has concluded, unanimously, that Judge Carswell is qualified for appointment as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Respectfully yours,
LAWRENCE E. WALSH,
Chairman.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield one further time to me?

Mr. BROOKE. I yield.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, as we entered the debate on this second controversial nomination, it appeared to me that it would be helpful to learn how much controversy there had been in previous confirmation debates in this century. I asked the Library of Congress to take a look into that question. The Library reports that, including the Haynsworth debate, there had been 13 prior rollcalls on confirmations in this century, the first being that of Justice McReynolds, in 1914.

As one reviews those rollcalls, he is compelled to note the absence of any high degree of controversy in most of the cases.

I think it is very instructive that although there were rollcalls in these 13 cases, in most of them the opposition which is recorded is very small; and of course in a number of cases there was approval of confirmation by voice vote—the roll was not even called—which is evidence that there was very little controversy on those matters.

My only point is that certainly the Senate was not any less aggressive, or any less concerned, or any less interested in the quality of the Supreme Court during those years than it is now. I think we have to assume that our predecessors were as vigilant in the public interest during this whole period as we are. But the point is that, I think, someone had done his homework in almost every one of these cases; and I think it is regrettable that the country is again in the situation in which we now find ourselves.

I ask unanimous consent to have these rollcalls printed at this point in the RECORD. I believe they are instructive and helpful, and outline the historical perimeter of the problem we now face.

There being no objection, the rollcalls were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Journal of Executive Proceedings of the Senate, Vol. XLVII]

NOMINATION OF JUDGE MCREYNOLDS

SATURDAY, AUGUST 29 (LEGISLATIVE DAY, AUGUST 25) 1914

The Senate proceeded to consider executive business at 11 o'clock and 20 minutes a.m., with the Vice President in the chair.

Consideration of the nomination of James Clark McReynolds to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States was resumed.

After discussion, the question being, Will the Senate advise and consent to the said nomination? Mr. Norris demanded the yeas and nays, and the demand being adequately seconded, the Vice President directed the Secretary to call the roll. The call resulted, 44 yeas and 6 nays, as follows:

Yeas: Messrs. Bankhead, Brady, Bryan, Burton, Chamberlain, Chilton, Clarke of Arkansas, Colt, Culberson, Dillingham, Fall, Gallinger, Hughes, Lea of Tennessee, Lee of Maryland, Lewis, McCumber, Martin, Martine, Myers, Nelson, Newlands, O'Gorman, Overman, Perkins, Pittman, Pomerene, Ransdell, Reed, Shafroth, Sheppard, Shields, Simmons, Smith of Maryland, Smith of Michigan, Smith of South Carolina, Smoot, Swanson, Thomas, Thompson, Thornton, Townsend, White, and Williams—44.

Nays: Messrs. Clapp, Cummins, Jones, Norris, Poindexter, and Vardaman—6.

Accordingly, it was

Resolved, That the Senate advise and consent to the appointment of the said James Clark McReynolds to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States agreeably to his nomination.

By unanimous consent, Mr. Smith of Georgia, who had been unavoidably absent during the roll call, was permitted to state that if he had been present he would have cast his vote in favor of Mr. McReynolds' confirmation.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—Senate, June 1, 1916, Vol. 53, p. 9032]

CONFIRMATION OF JUDGE BRANDEIS

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 30 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

NOMINATION OF LOUIS D. BRANDEIS

The injunction of secrecy was removed from the following proceedings in executive session:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT, MAY 26, 1916

That not later than Thursday, June 1, 1916, the majority members of the Committee on the Judiciary and the minority members thereof may file reports upon the nomination of Louis D. Brandeis to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, which reports shall forthwith be printed in confidence for the use of the Senate; that, on the said day—Thursday, June 1, 1916—at not later than 4:55 o'clock p.m., the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of executive business, and that at 5 o'clock p.m., on the said day, the Senate shall proceed to vote, without debate, upon the said nomination to a final conclusion.

It is further ordered that, after the said vote, the said reports and the proceedings upon the vote shall be printed in the RECORD, and the injunction of secrecy removed from all matters in relation to said nomination.

Vote on the question of advising and consenting to the appointment of Mr. Brandeis. Yeas and nays asked by Mr. CHILTON.

YEAS, 47

Ashurst, Bankhead, Beckham, Broussard, Chamberlain, Chilton, Culberson, Fletcher, Gore, Hardwick Hitchcock, Hollis.

Hughes, Husting, James, Kern, La Follette, Lane, Lea, Tenn., Lee, Md., Lewis, Myers, Norris, O'Gorman.

Overman, Owen, Phelan, Pittman, Poindexter, Ransdell, Reed, Saulsbury, Shafroth, Sheppard, Shields, Simmons.

Smith, Ariz., Smith, Ga., Smith, Md., Smith, S.C., Stone, Taggart, Thomas, Thompson, Underwood, Vardaman, Walsh.

NAYS, 22

Brady, Brandegee, Clark, Wyo., Cummins, Curtis, Dillingham, du Pont, Fall, Gallinger, Harding, Lippit, Lodge.

Nelson, Newlands, Oliver, Page, Smith, Mich., Sterling, Sutherland, Townsend, Warren, Works.

NOT VOTING, 27

Borah, Bryan, Burleigh, Catron, Clapp, Clarke, Ark., Colt, Goff, Gronna, Johnson, Me., Johnson, S. Dak., Jones, Kenyon, McCumber.

McLean, Martin, Va., Martine, N.J., Penrose, Pomerene, Robinson, Sherman, Smoot, Swanson, Tillman, Wadsworth, Weeks, Williams.

Announcing the vote, the Vice President stated that the resolution of confirmation had been agreed to, and announced that the nomination had been confirmed.

Mr. FALL. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Martine). I transfer my pair to the Senator from Utah (Mr. Smoot) and vote "nay." If the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Martine) were present and not paired he would vote "yea."

Mr. HOLLIS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York (Mr. Wadsworth). I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine (Mr. Johnson). If the Senator from Maine were present he would vote "yea." If the Senator from New York (Mr. Wadsworth) were present he would vote "nay." I vote "yea."

I also desire to state that if the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Clapp) were present he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Kenyon), who would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Virginia (Mr. Swanson) and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Idaho (Mr. Borah) is paired with the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. Gronna). If the Senator from Idaho were present he would vote "nay."

and the Senator from North Dakota would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Virginia (Mr. Martin) is necessarily absent. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. HUGHES. My colleague (Mr. Martine) is necessarily absent from the Senate. If present he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Fall).

Mr. OWEN. I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Catron). I transfer that pair to the Senator from Florida (Mr. Bryan) and vote "yea."

Mr. JAMES. I desire to announce that the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Pomerene) is paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Weeks). If present the Senator from Ohio would vote in favor of the confirmation of Mr. Brandeis and the Senator from Massachusetts would vote against the confirmation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Colt). I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Johnson) and vote "yea." If the Senator from South Dakota were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Clarke), who is absent, but I am at liberty to vote on this question and I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS. I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. McCumber). I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia (Mr. Martin) and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. I desire to announce that my colleague (Mr. Weeks) is paired with the senior Senator from Ohio (Mr. Pomerene). If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Penrose). If present he would vote "nay" and I would vote "yea," if I had the privilege; but I withhold my vote in consequence of my pair.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have a pair with the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Sherman), but under an arrangement with the Senator from Illinois, if his vote is not controlling, I am permitted to vote on this nomination. I therefore vote "yea." I am requested to announce that if he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Goff). If I were at liberty to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Maine (Mr. Burleigh) is paired with the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. NEWLANDS (after the result of the vote had been announced). Regarding my vote, I should like to say that I have great admiration for Mr. Brandeis as a propagandist and publicist, but I do not regard him as a man of judicial temperament, and for that reason I voted against his confirmation.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—Senate, vol. 64, p. 813]

CONFIRMATION OF JUDGE BUTLER

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. JONES of Washington, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 3 hours and 40 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

CONFIRMATION OF PIERCE BUTLER

In executive session this day, following the confirmation of Pierce Butler to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, on motion by Mr. NORRIS and by unanimous consent, the rules were suspended, and it was Ordered, That the vote by which the Senate declined to rerefer the nomination to the Committee on the Judiciary and the vote by which Mr. Butler was confirmed be made public.

The vote, on the motion of Mr. LA FOLLETTE to recommit the nomination to the Committee on the Judiciary, resulted—yeas 7, nays 63, as follows:

YEAS, 7

Harris, Heflin, La Follette, McKellar, Norris, Sheppard, Trammell.

NAYS, 63

Ashurst, Ball, Bayard, Brandegee, Broussard, Bursum, Cameron, Caraway, Colt, Cummins, Curtis, Dial, Dillingham, Ernst, Fernald, Fletcher.

Frelinghuysen, George, Glass, Gooding, Hale, Harrison, Hitchcock, Johnson, Jones, N. Mex., Jones, Wash., Kellogg, Kendrick, Keyes, King, Lenroot, Lodge.

McCumber, McLean, McNary, Moses, Myers, Nelson, New, Nicholson, Norbeck, Oddie, Overman, Page, Pepper, Phipps, Poindexter, Reed, Mo.

Reed, Pa., Robinson, Shortridge, Smoot, Stanley, Sterling, Sutherland, Townsend, Wadsworth, Walsh, Mass., Walsh, Mont., Warren, Watson, Weller, Williams.

NOT VOTING, 26

Borah, Brookhart, Calder, Capper, Couzens, Culberson, Edge, Elkins, France, Gerry, Harreld, Ladd, McCormick, McKinley.

Owen, Pittman, Pomerene, Ransdell, Shields, Simmons, Smith, Spencer, Stanfield, Swanson, Underwood, Willis.

Mr. BROOKHART announced his pair with Mr. CALDER, and stated that if he were not paired he would vote "yea."

So the Senate refused to recommit the nomination to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The vote on confirmation resulted—yeas 61, nays 8, as follows:

YEAS, 61

Ashurst, Ball, Bayard, Brandegee, Broussard, Bursum, Cameron, Caraway, Colt, Cummins, Curtis, Dial, Dillingham, Ernst, Fernald, Fletcher.

Frelinghuysen, Glass, Gooding, Hale, Harrison, Hitchcock, Johnson, Jones, N. Mex., Jones, Wash., Kellogg, Kendrick, Keyes, King, Lenroot, Lodge, McCumber.

McLean, Moses, Myers, Nelson, New, Nicholson, Oddie, Overman, Page, Pepper, Phipps, Poindexter, Pomerene, Reed, Mo., Reed, Pa., Robinson.

Shortridge, Smoot, Spencer, Stanley, Sterling, Sutherland, Townsend, Wadesworth, Walsh, Mass., Walsh, Mont., Warren, Warson, Williams.

NAYS, 8

George, Harris, Heflin, La Follette, Norbeck, Norris, Sheppard, Trammell.

NOT VOTING, 27

Borah, Brookhart, Calder, Capper, Couzens, Culberson Edge, Elkins, France, Gerry, Harreld, Ladd, McCormick, McKellar.

McKinley, McNary, Owens, Pittman, Ransdell, Shields, Simmons, Smith, Stanfield, Swanson, Underwood, Weller, Wills.

Mr. BROOKHART announced his pair with Mr. CALDER, and stated that if at liberty to vote he would vote "nay."

So the nomination of Pierce Butler as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States was confirmed.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—Senate, vol. 66, p. 3057]

NOMINATION OF JUDGE STONE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on confirming the nomination of Mr. Stone, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ASHURST responded "yea."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. For the benefit of the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary be incorporated as a part of the proceedings of this day.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, does that contain the testimony of those who have appeared against Mr. Stone?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I will have to make a point of order against the request of the Senator from California. The roll call was commenced and there had been a response.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Secretary will proceed with the roll call.

The reading clerk resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas (Mr. Robinson), who is absent, but on this vote I understand that were he present he would vote as I shall vote, and I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS. (when Mr. La Follette's name was called). I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. La Follette) is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). In view of the fact that I am counsel for Senator WHEELER, I ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with my colleague (Mr. Ralston). If he were present, he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). Mr. President, I shall refrain from voting on this question, with the permission of the Senate.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Illinois (Mr. McCormick) is unavoidably detained from the Senate. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BROUSSARD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MOSES), who, if he had been present, would have voted as I have voted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. Moses), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Spencer), and the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Elkins) are necessarily absent, and if present they would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Maryland (Mr. Bruce) is necessarily absent, and that if present, he would vote "yea."

The rollcall resulted—yeas 71, nays 6, as follows:

YEAS—71

Ashurst, Ball, Bayard, Bingham, Borah, Brookhart, Broussard, Bursum, Butler, Cameron, Capper, Caraway, Copeland, Couzens, Cummins, Curtis, Dale, Dial.

Edge, Edwards, Ernst, Fornald, Ferris, Fess, Fletcher, George, Glass, Gooding, Greene, Hale, Harreld, Harrison, Howell, Johnson, Calif., Jones, N. Mex., Jones, Wash.

Kendrick, Keyes, Ladd, McKeller, McKinley, McLean, McNary, Mayfield, Means, Metcalf, Neely, Norbeck, Oddie, Overman, Pepper, Phipps, Ransdell, Reed, Mo.

Reed, Pa., Sheppard, Shields, Shortridge, Simmons, Smith, Smoot, Stanfield, Stanley, Sterling, Swanson, Wadsworth, Walsh, Mass., Warren, Watson, Weller, Willis.

NAYS—6

Frazer, Heflin, Johnson, Minn., Norris, Shipstead, Trammell.

NOT VOTING—19

Bruce, Dill, Elkins, Gerry, Harris, King, LaFollette, Lenroot, McCormick, Moses.

Owen, Pittman, Ralston, Robinson, Spencer, Stephens, Underwood, Walsh, Mont., Wheeler.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the question, Shall the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Harlan Fiske Stone to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States the yeas are 71 and the nays are 6. So the Senate advises and consents to the nomination.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the President be notified of the action of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The President will be notified.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—House, Feb. 13, 1930, Vol. 72, p. 3591]

NOMINATION OF JUDGE HUGHES

Mr. KEYES (when Mr. Moses's name was called). My colleague (Mr. Moses) is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. FESS (when Mr. Reed's name was called). I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Reed) is detained at the Naval Arms Conference in London. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD (when the name of Mr. Robinson of Arkansas was called). The senior Senator from Arkansas has been paired, at his request, in favor of the confirmation. He is paired with the junior Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Howell), who, if present, would vote "nay." The Senator from Arkansas is detained in attendance at the Naval arms conference in London.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Indiana (Mr. Robinson). I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina (Mr. Smith), who is detained at home by reason of illness, and who, I am informed, would vote "nay" if present. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Reed) and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The senior Senator from Maryland (Mr. Tydings) is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Metcalf), who would, if present, vote "yea."

Mr. FESS. The junior Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Robsion), if present, would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS, 52

Allen, Ashurst, Baird, Barkley, Bingham, Broussard, Capper, Copeland, Dale, Deneen, Fess, Fletcher, Gilbert.

Glenn, Goff, Goldsborough, Gould, Greene, Grundy, Hale, Harrison, Hastings, Hatfield, Hebert, Jones, Kean.

Kendrick, Keyes, McCulloch, McNary, Oddie Patterson, Phipps, Pine, Ransdell, Schall, Shortridge, Smoot, Steck.

Steiwer, Stephens, Sullivan, Swanson, Thomas, Idaho, Townsend, Trammell, Vandenberg, Wagner, Walcott, Walsh, Mass., Waterman, Watson.

NAYS, 26

Black, Blaine, Blease, Borah, Bratton, Brookhart, Connally, Couzens, Dill, Frazier, George, Glass, Harris, Hawes.

Johnson, La Follette, McKellar McMaster, Norbeck, Norris, Nye, Overman, Sheppard, Simmons, Walsh, Mont., Wheeler.

NOT VOTING, 8

Brock, Caraway, Cutting, Hayden, Heflin, Howell, King, Metcalf, Moses, Pittman.

Reed, Robinson, Ark., Robinson, Ind., Robsion, Ky., Shipstead, Smith, Thomas, Okla., Tydings.

So the Senate advised and consented to the nomination of Charles Evans Hughes to be Chief Justice of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The President will be notified.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—Senate, Vol. 72, p. 8487]

NOMINATION OF JUDGE PARKER

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination?

Mr. HARRISON and Mr. McKellar called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TRAMMELL (when Mr. Fletcher's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague (Mr. Fletcher) on account of illness.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when Mr. George's name was called). The Senator from Georgia (Mr. George) is absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. GLENN (when his name was called). On this matter I have a special pair with the senior Senator from Florida (Mr. Fletcher), who is unavoidably absent from the Chamber. I understand that if present he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BLACK (when Mr. Heflin's name was called). My colleague the senior Senator from Alabama (Mr. Heflin) is absent on important business. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Norbeck). If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay," and if the Senator from South Dakota were present I am informed that he would vote "yea."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. McMaster's name was called). The junior Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McMaster) is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina (Mr. Smith). If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KEYES (when Mr. Moses's name was called). My colleague (Mr. Moses) is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Thomas). If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Georgia (Mr. George), who is necessarily absent. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STEIWER (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Grundy), who is necessarily absent from the Chamber. I find that I can transfer my pair to the junior Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McMaster), and I transfer the pair and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma (when his name was called). On this question I have a special pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. Moses). As stated, if present he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HATFIELD. My colleague the senior Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Goff) has a special pair with the junior Senator from Iowa (Mr. Brookhart). If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea," and I am informed that if the junior Senator from Iowa were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Robsion) is paired with the junior Senator from Utah (Mr. King). If the junior Senator from Kentucky were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay," and the junior Senator from Utah would vote "yea."

YEAS—39

Allen, Baird, Bingham, Blease, Broussard, Dale, Fess, Gillett, Glass, Goldsborough, Gould, Greene, Hale, Harrison, Hastings, Hatfield, Hébert, Jones, Kean, Keyes, McCulloch, Metcalf, Oddie, Overman, Patterson, Ransdell, Reed, Shortridge, Simmons, Smoot, Steck, Stephens, Sullivan, Swanson, Thomas, Idaho, Townsend, Walcott, Waterman, Watson.

NAYS—41

Ashurst, Barkley, Black, Blaine, Borah, Bratton, Brock, Capper, Caraway, Connally, Copeland, Couzens, Cutting, Deneen, Dill, Frazier, Harris, Hawes, Hayden, Howell, Johnson, Kendrick, La Follette, McKellar, Norris, Nye, Pine, Pittman, Robinson, Ark., Robinson, Ind., Schall, Sheppard, Shipstead, Steiwer, Trammell, Tydings, Vandenberg, Wagner, Walsh, Mass., Walsh, Mont., Wheeler.

NOT VOTING—16

Brookhart, Fletcher, George, Glenn, Goff, Grundy, Heflin, King, McMaster, McNary, Moses, Norbeck, Phipps, Robsion, Ky., Smith, Thomas, Okla.

So the Senate refused to advise and consent to the nomination.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—Senate, vol. 81, p. 9103]

CONFIRMATION OF JUSTICE BLACK

I further announce that the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. Maloney) is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Montana (Mr. Wheeler), the Senator from Nevada (Mr. McCarran), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. Smith), and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Walsh) are unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 63, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—63

Adams, Andrews, Ashurst, Bankhead, Barkley, Berry, Bilbo, Bone, Brown, Mich., Brown, N.H., Bulkley, Bulow, Byrnes, Capper, Caraway, Chavez.

Clark, Connally, Dieterich, Donahey, Ellender, Frazier, George, Gillette, Green, Guffey, Harrison, Hatch, Herring, Hitchcock, Holt, Hughes.

Johnson, Colo., La Follette, Lee, Lewis, Logan, Lonergan, Lundeen, McAdoo, McGill, McKellar, Minton, Moore, Murray, Neely, Nye, Overton.

Pepper, Pittman, Pope, Radcliffe, Reynolds, Schwartz, Schwellenbach, Sheppard, Shipstead, Smathers, Thomas, Okla., Thomas, Utah, Truman, Van Nuys, Wagner.

NAYS—16

Austin, Borah Bridges, Burke, Byrd, Copeland, Davis, Gerry.

Glass, Hale, Johnson, Calif., King, Lodge, Steiwer, Townsend, White.

NOT VOTING—16

Bailey, Black, Duffy, Gibson, Hayden, McCarran, McNary, Maloney, Norris, O'Mahoney, Russell, Smith, Tydings, Vandenberg, Walsh, Wheeler.

So the nomination of Senator Hugo L. Black, of Alabama, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, was confirmed.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, for friendly reasons which all will understand, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which it has just advised and consented to the confirmation of the nomination of Senator Black.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I now move that the President be notified of the action of the Senate in advising and consenting to this nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—Senate, Apr. 4, 1939, vol. 84, p. 3788]

CONFIRMATION OF JUDGE WILLIAM O. DOUGLAS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of William O. Douglas to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY (when Mr. Tydings' name was called). The Senator from Maryland (Mr. Tydings) is unavoidably detained. I am authorized to say that if he were present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BYRNES (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Maine (Mr. Hale). I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Illinois (Mr. Lewis), and let my vote stand.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. Wiley) and the Senator from Vermont (Mr. Gibson) are necessarily absent from the Senate. If present, both Senators would vote "yea."

I also announce that the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Shipstead), who is necessarily detained, would, if present, vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from California (Mr. Downey), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Herring), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Lee), and the Senator from Florida (Mr. Pepper) are detained in Government departments. I am advised that if present and voting these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Thomas), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Truman), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Lucas), and the Senator from Idaho (Mr. Clark) are unavoidably detained. I have been requested to announce that if present and voting these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Montana (Mr. Wheeler) is detained in a meeting of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Holt) is absent because of a death in his family.

The Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Bailey), the Senator from iVrginia (Mr. Glass), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Van Nuys), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Donahey), and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Walsh) are unavoidably detained.

Mr. MCKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Delaware (Mr. Townsend) has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed the Senator from Delaware has not voted.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Illinois (Mr. Lucas), and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HILL. My colleague the senior Senator from Alabama (Mr. Bankhead) is detained from the floor on official business. I am authorized to say that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. BARKLEY. The senior Senator from Illinois (Mr. Lewis) is absent on important public business. I am authorized to say that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. OVERTON. The junior Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Ellender) is absent, attending a committee meeting. I am authorized to say that if present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 62, nays 4, as follows:

YEAS—62

Adams, Andrews, Ashurst, Austin, Barbour, Barkley, Bilbo, Bone, Borah, Brown, Burlow, Burke, Byrd, Byrnes, Caraway, Chavez.

Clark, Mo., Connally, Danaher, Davis, George, Gerry, Gillette, Green, Guffey, Gurney, Harrison, Hatch, Hayden, Hill, Holman, Hughes.

Johnson, Colo., King, LaFollette, Logan, Lundeen, McCarran, McKellar, McNary, Maloney, Mead, Miller, Minton, Murray, Neely, Norris, O'Mahoney.

Overton, Pittman, Radcliffe, Reynolds, Russell, Schwartz, Schwellenbach, Sheppard, Smathers, Smith, Steward, Taft, Thomas, Utah, Wagner.

NAYS—4

Frazer, Lodge, Nye, Reed.

NOT VOTING—30

Bailey, Bankhead, Bridges, Capper, Clark, Idaho, Donahey, Downey, Ellender, Gibson, Glass, Hale, Herring, Holt, Johnson, Calif., Lee, Lewis.

Lucas, Pepper, Shipstead, Thomas, Okla., Tobey, Townsend, Truman, Tydings, Vandenberg, Van Nuys, Walsh, Wheeler, White, Wiley.

So the nomination of William O. Douglas, of Connecticut, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States was confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Douglas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—Senate, Mar. 16, 1955, vol. 101, p. 3036]

CONFIRMATION OF JUDGE HARLAN

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Frear in the chair). A quorum is present.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of John Marshall Harlan to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States?

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Oregon (Mr. Morse), who is absent. If he were present and voting he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote I would vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

The rollcall was concluded.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I announce that the Senator from Georgia (Mr. George), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. McNamara), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Morse), the Senator from Montana (Mr. Murray), the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Sparkman), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Symington) are absent on official business.

The Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy) is absent by leave of the Senate because of illness.

I further announce that the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. McNamara), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Symington) if present and voting, would each vote "yea."

Mr. KNOWLAND. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. Bridges), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Saltonstall), the Senator from Kansas (Mr. Schoeppel), the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Smith), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. Young) are absent on official business.

The Senator from Kansas (Mr. Carlson) is necessarily absent.

If present and voting the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Saltonstall) and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Smith) would each vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 71, nays 11, as follows:

YEAS—71

Aiken, Allott, Anderson, Barkley, Barrett, Beall, Bender, Bennett, Bible, Bricker, Bush, Butler, Byrd, Capehart, Case, N.J., Case, S. Dak., Chavez, Clements, Cotton, Curtis, Daniel, Dirksen, Douglas, Duff.

Dworshak, Ellender, Flanders, Frear, Fulbright, Goldwater, Gore, Green, Hayden, Hennings, Hickenlooper, Holland, Hruska, Humphrey, Ives, Jackson, Jenner, Johnson, Tex., Kefauver, Kerr, Kilgore, Knowland, Kuchel, Lehman.

Long, Magnuson, Malone, Mansfield, Martin, Iowa, Martin, Pa., McCarthy, Millikin, Monroney, Mundt, Neely, Neuberger, O'Mahoney, Pastore, Payne, Potter, Purtell, Robertson, Smith, Maine, Thye, Watkins, Wiley, Williams.

NAYS—11

Eastland, Ervin, Hill, Johnston, S.C., Langer, McClellan, Russell, Smathers, Stennis, Thurmond, Welker.

NOT VOTING—14

Bridges, Carlson, George, Kennedy, McNamara, Morse, Murray, Saltonstall, Schoeppel, Scott, Smith, N.J., Sparkman, Symington, Young.

So the nomination was confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith of the confirmation of the nomination of John Marshall Harlan, of New York, to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—Senate, May 5, 1959, Vol. 105, p. 7472]

CONFIRMATION OF JUDGE STEWART

I also announce that the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Symington) is necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Clark), the Senator from Utah (Mr. Moss), the Senator from Montana (Mr. Murray), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Randolph) and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Symington) would each vote "yea."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Allott), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Capehart), and the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. Wiley) are absent on official business.

The Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Curtis), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hickenlooper), and the Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) are necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Allott), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Capehart), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Curtis), the Senator from New York (Mr. Javits), and the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. Wiley) would each vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 70, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—70

Aiken, Anderson, Bartlett, Beall, Bennett, Bible, Bridges, Bush, Butler, Byrd, W. Va., Cannon, Carlson, Carroll, Case, N.J., Case, S. Dak., Chavez, Church, Cooper, Cotton, Dirksen, Dodd, Douglas, Dworshak, Engle.

Frear, Goldwater, Gore, Green, Gruening, Hart, Hartke, Hayden, Hennings, Hruska, Humphrey, Jackson, Johnson, Tex., Keating, Kefauver, Kennedy, Kerr, Kuchel, Langer, Lausche, McCarthy, McGee, McNamara, Magnuson.

Mansfield, Martin, Monroney, Morse, Morton, Mundt, Muskie, Neuberger, O'Mahoney, Pastore, Prouty, Proxmire, Saltonstall, Schoeppel, Scott, Smathers, Smith, Williams, N.J., Williams, Del., Yarborough, Young, N. Dak., Young, Ohio.

NAYS—17

Byrd, Va., Eastland, Ellender, Ervin, Fulbright, Hill, Holland, Johnson, S.C., Jordan, Long, McClellan, Robertson, Russell, Sparkman, Stennis, Talmadge, Thurmond.

NOT VOTING—11

Allott, Capehart, Clark, Curtis, Hickenlooper, Javits, Moss, Murray, Randolph, Symington, Wiley.

So the nomination of Potter Stewart to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States was confirmed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the nomination was confirmed be reconsidered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—Senate, Aug. 30, 1967, Vol. 113, p. 24656]

CONFIRMATION OF JUDGE THURGOOD MARSHALL

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination? On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD (after having voted in the affirmative). On this vote I have a live pair with the distinguished Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Stennis). If he were present and voting he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote I would vote "yea." I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Bible), the Senator from Virginia (Mr. Byrd), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Gruening), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Harris), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. McCarthy), the Senator from Maine (Mr. Muskie), and the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Montoya) are absent on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Hartke), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Jordan), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. McClellan), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGovern), the Senator from Montana (Mr. Metcalf), the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. Nelson), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. Russell), the Senator from Florida (Mr. Smathers), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Stennis) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Bible), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Gruening), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Hartke), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGovern), the Senator from Montana (Mr. Metcalf), the Senator from Maine (Mr. Muskie), and the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Montoya) would each vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Harris) is paired with the Senator from Florida (Mr. Smathers).

If present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "yea" and the Senator from Florida would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. Nelson) is paired with the Senator from Georgia (Mr. Russell).

If present and voting, the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "yea" and the Senator from Georgia would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. McCarthy) is paired with the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. McClellan).

If present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota would "yea" and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "nay."

Mr. KUCHEL. I announce that the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HICKENLOOPER) and the Senator from California (Mr. MURPHY) are absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN) is detained on official business.

If present and voting, the Senator from California (Mr. MURPHY) would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 69, nays, 11, as follows:

[No. 240 Ex.]

YEAS—69

Aiken, Allott, Anderson, Baker, Bartlett, Bayh, Bennett, Boggs, Brewster, Brooke, Burdick, Cannon, Carlson, Case, Church, Clark, Cooper, Cotton, Curtis, Dirksen, Dodd, Dominick, Fong.

Fulbright, Gore, Griffin, Hansen, Hart, Hatfield, Hayden, Hruska, Inouye, Jackson, Javits, Jordan, Idaho, Kennedy, Mass., Kennedy, N.Y., Kuchel, Lausche, Long, Mo., Magnuson, McGee, McIntyre, Miller, Mondale, Monroney.

Morse, Morton, Moss, Mundt, Pastore, Pearson, Pell, Percy, Prouty, Proxmire, Randolph, Ribicoff, Scott, Smith, Spong, Symington, Tower, Tydings, Williams, N.J., Williams, Del., Yarborough, Young, N. Dak., Young, Ohio.

NAYS—11

Byrd, W. Va., Eastland, Ellender, Ervin, Hill, Holland, Hollings, Long, La., Sparkman, Talmadge, Thurmond.

NOT VOTING—20

Bible, Byrd, Va., Fanning, Gruening, Harris, Hartke, Hickenlooper, Jordan, N.C., Mansfield, McCarthy, McClellan, McGovern, Metcalf, Montoya, Murphy, Muskie, Nelson, Russell, Smathers, Stennis.

So the nomination was confirmed.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[From Record Vote Analysis, Vote No. 27, June 9, 1969]

WARREN EARL BURGER—NOMINATION

Subject: Warren E. Burger—Nomination to be Chief Justice of the United States. Vote on confirmation.

Action: Confirmed.

Synopsis: Background—In June 1968, President Johnson accepted "effective at (his) pleasure" the resignation of Earl Warren as Chief Justice of the United States and he subsequently sent to the Senate the nomination of Abe Fortas, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, to succeed Earl Warren as Chief Justice. After hearings, that nomination was reported to the Senate in September 1968, where it was debated at some length until October 1, 1968, when a motion to invoke cloture failed (see Vote No. 569, 90th Cong., 2d sess.). On the following day President Johnson withdrew the nomination. On May 14, 1969, Associate Justice Fortas resigned, following disclosures concerning certain of his financial activities while on the bench.

On May 23, 1969, President Nixon sent to the Senate the nomination of Warren E. Burger, a judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia to succeed Earl Warren as Chief Justice.

Those favoring confirmation contended:

Judge Burger was superbly qualified to serve as Chief Justice. He was educated at the University of Minnesota and at St. Paul College of Law (St. Paul, Minn.) where he received an LL.B. degree, magna cum laude, in 1931. He thereafter practiced law in St. Paul until he was appointed by President Eisenhower to be an Assistant Attorney General of the United States in 1953. Since 1956 he had served on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

While on the bench, Judge Burger had been a strict constructionist of the Constitution. He had counseled judicial restraint in his opinions. Apparently he felt the court should interpret the law, but not legislate. His record indicated he believed in strong enforcement of the law, and in equal treatment—with favoritism toward none.

As Chief Justice, Judge Burger would have the chance to be the leader in the reform of judicial philosophy. By example and by leadership, as Chief Justice he could exert a powerful force to restore the reputation of the Supreme Court and to make the Court once again the object of universal respect.

Judge Burger had been subject to the acid test of having to pass upon highly controversial matters. No other circuit court in the Nation had more such matters submitted to it than did the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

The nominee had participated in 13 years of decisions, some written by him for the majority and some in which he agreed with the majority. However, a great many of them were dissenting opinions in which, without overstepping the bounds of decency and personal accommodation which must prevail on such a high court, he nevertheless was found speaking out fully and clearly for the high principles of constitutional law or of jurisdictional law. He had not hesitated to speak out strongly at times against decisions dominated by other members of the court. With him as Chief Justice one could look ahead to a time when the quality manifested by him so frequently in those 13 years would prove helpful to our country, to the restored strength of the meaning of the Constitution as it was meant to be interpreted, to law enforcement officers, to the lower courts, and to our whole people, in that the whole people would have greater confidence in our judicial processes.

It was a good thing at this juncture that the President had nominated as Chief Justice a person whose record as a lawyer and as a judge could be evaluated from objective information, from decisions he had rendered, and from his philosophy as illustrated by those decisions. His confirmation would have a stabilizing influence and would be welcomed throughout the United States. However, some speeches in favor of confirmation reflected upon the Court and upon the retiring Chief Justice. The Supreme Court, like other institutions, had made errors in decisions. But that Court, under the leadership of Chief Justice Warren had followed the spirit and intent of the Constitution. It had made notable strides to make the promise of the Constitution a living reality.

When a man had been nominated, admittedly for one of the highest offices in the land, he should be subjected to the closest scrutiny. But not one single cogent point had been raised during this debate why the Senators should not vote on this nomination.

With respect to criticism concerning procedure on this nomination, on May 26 a notice was placed in the Congressional Record giving public notice of the time and place at which the hearing would be held. Prior to that date one individual had requested the opportunity to testify. She was subsequently asked to submit a written statement to the commitee and she did so.

On the morning of June 3, the date of the hearing, the committee was open for business at 8 a.m. One individual sent a telegram to the committee counsel requesting a postponement for 3 days in order that he might testify on the nomination. The committee declined that request. Thereafter, committee counsel suggested he submit a statement to the committee but he failed to do so.

After the hearing started, a Mr. Randolph Phillips came into the committee office and complained that he had not been able to hear the testimony, but he did not request the opportunity to testify at any time.

Sixty or seventy witnesses were present in favor of confirmation, among them five or six former presidents of the American Bar Association. The committee did not hear them but it would have heard this gentleman if he had made a timely request. One could not come in just before a committee meeting and expect to be heard. Under the rules, he would have had no right to testify if someone had invoked the rule.

The members of the committee were unanimously satisfied, 13–0, that this nomination should be approved. The committee could not manufacture testimony against the nominee nor could it manufacture witnesses against him. The committee had before it no grounds of objection to the appointment.

This matter was on the calendar by action of the majority party. If there were those who thought it should not have been brought up on this day, they missed their forum. They could have taken it up within their own caucus or their own steering committee.

Those opposing confirmation contended:

They were opposing the nomination not on the merits, but because the hearing record had been received only that morning and they had not had a chance even to read it. After the recent unfortunate affair on the Court, assurances were being given by everyone that there would be a careful review of any of the appointments. The Senators had a responsibility to read the record of the hearings before voting for a Chief Justice.

There was also the statement circulated among some Senators by Randolph Phillips, chairman of the Committee Opposed to the Confirmation of Judge Warren Earl Burger to be Chief Justice of the United States. When Mr. Phillips saw on the day of the hearing that he would not be admitted to the hearing, he asked the Secretary to the committee counsel to seek from Senator Mansfield office authorization for him to be admitted. The secretary refused, saying that he was at the head of the line and would be admitted as soon as there was a seat.

Only 1 hour and 45 minutes was given to a public hearing before the committee. When lawyers wished to testify, who apparently were not publicity seekers, consideration should be given to deferring the matter for a few days.

One Senator opposed confirmation because in 1952 the nominee was an active participant against him in his campaign for reelection. The Senator objected to the manner in which the issues were presented to the people of his district that year because he felt they misrepresented his position and they were designed to elicit an emotional if not prejudiced response.

Action: The nomination was confirmed.

The result was announced—yeas 74, Nays 3, as follows:

YEAS 74

Aiken, Allen, Allott, Anderson, Baker, Bayh, Bellmon, Bennett, Bible, Boggs, Brooke, Burdick, Byrd, Va., Byrd, W. Va., Cannon, Case, Cooper, Cotton, Curtis, Dirksen, Dodd, Dole, Dominick, Eagleton, Eastland.

Ellender, Ervin, Fannin, Goodell, Griffin, Gurney, Hansen, Harris, Hartke, Hatfield, Holland, Hruska, Jackson, Jordan, N.C., Jordan, Idaho, Kennedy, Long, Magnuson, Mathias, McClellan, McGee, McGovern, Miller, Mondale, Montoya.

Mundt, Muskie, Packwood, Pearson, Proxmire, Randolph, Russell, Saxbe, Schweiker, Scott, Smith, Sparkman, Spong, Stennis, Stevens, Symington, Talmadge, Thurmond, Tower, Tydings, Williams, N.J., Williams, Del., Yarborough, Young, N. Dak.

NAYS 3

McCarthy, Nelson, Young, Ohio.

ANSWERED "PRESENT" 1

Fulbright.

NOT VOTING 22

Church, Cook, Cranston, Fong, Goldwater, Gore, Gravel, Hart.

Hollings, Hughes, Inouye, Javits, Mansfield, McIntyre, Metcalf, Moss.

Murphy, Pastore, Pell, Percy, Prouty, Ribicoff.

	Republicans (43)	Democrats (57)
Analysis of vote:
Yeas (74)	36	38
Nays (3)	0	3
Present (1)	0	1
Not voting (22)	7	15
Positions of Senators not voting:
Not paired—Position "yea"	[1] 7	[2] 11
Not paired—No position	0	[3] 4

Note: Absent: Official business: Church, Fong, Hart, Inouye' Javits, Mansfield, Percy. Necessarily absent: Cook, Cranston' Goldwater, Gore, Hollings, Hughes, McIntyre, Metcalf, Moss' Murphy, Pastore, Pell, Prouty, Ribicoff. Because of a death in the family: Gravel.

[1] Cook, Fong, Goldwater, Javits, Murphy, Percy, Prouty.

[2] Church, Cranston, Gravel, Hollings, Hughes, Mansfield, McIntyre, Moss, Pastore, Pell, Ribicoff.

[3] Gore, Hart, Inouye, Metcalf.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—Senate, Nov. 21, 1969, Vol. 115, p. 35396]

NOMINATION OF CLEMENT F. HAYNSWORTH, JR.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Clement Haynsworth, Jr., to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes to caution the gallery that there will be no outbursts at the announcement of this vote.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 55, as follows:

[No. 154 Ex.]

YEAS—45

Aiken, Allen, Allott, Baker, Bellmon, Bennett, Boggs, Byrd, Va., Byrd, W. Va., Cook, Cotton, Curtis, Dole, Dominick, Eastland.

Ellender, Ervin, Fannin, Fong, Fulbright, Goldwater, Gravel, Gurney, Hanson, Holland, Hollings, Hruska, Jordan, N.C., Long, McClellan.

Mundt, Murphy, Pearson, Prouty, Randolph, Russell, Smith, Ill., Sparkman, Spong, Stennis, Stevens, Talmadge, Thurmond, Tower, Young, N. Dak.

NAYS—55

Anderson, Bayh, Bible, Brooke, Burdick, Cannon, Case, Church, Cooper, Cranston, Dodd, Eagleton, Goodell, Gore, Griffin, Harris, Hart, Hartke, Hatfield.

Hughes, Inouye, Jackson, Javits, Jordan, Idaho, Kennedy, Magnuson, Mansfield, Mathias, McCarthy, McGee, McGovern, McIntyre, Metcalf, Miller, Mondale, Montoya, Moss, Muskie.

Nelson, Packwood, Pastore, Pell, Percy, Proxmire, Ribicoff, Saxbe, Schweiker, Scott, Smith, Maine, Symington, Tydings, Williams, N.J., Williams, Del., Yarborough, Young, Ohio.

So the nomination was rejected.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished Senator from Maryland whether he thinks that the American Bar Association has lived up to its responsibility in regard to the recommendation that has been received in the case of G. Harrold Carswell.

Mr. MATHIAS. As I have already indicated to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, I think whatever the members of the American Bar Association judicial selection committee may have felt about their conclusion, we ought to be entitled to feel that it was plenary, comprehensive, complete, and final; and I do not believe that the results have fulfilled that definition which the public expected.

Mr. BROOKE. I asked the Senator what weight, if any, he feels the Senate should give to the recommendation of the American Bar Association in this matter of the nomination of G. Harrold Carswell.

Mr. MATHIAS. I had felt, as a new Member of this body, when I approached the first confirmation proceeding in which I was involved, that we should give very great weight to it, that it would be very helpful in a decision—not final nor determinative, but worthy of great weight. But I must confess that I have retreated somewhat from that position.

Mr. BROOKE. I certainly do not want to thrust the Senator to the wall, but the Senator is a very distinguished member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and, as has been pointed out in this colloquy, the American Bar Association committee apparently did not have the benefit of the hearings of the Judiciary Committee and apparently did not conduct an extensive inquiry into the qualifications of the nominee, G. Harrold Carswell. So I ask the Senator from Maryland what weight he will give to its recommendation. Does he feel that he is bound in any way by the recommendation of the American Bar Association of G. Harrold Carswell?

Mr. MATHIAS. Let me say immediately that I consider myself bound in no way whatever, and that I am extremely disappointed in the course that events have taken. That is why I again point out that I think there may be some dichotomy between what the members of that committee thought they were doing and what we and the members of the general public thought they did. I think it would be of value, both in this case and in any future case, to understand fully what that dichotomy may be, if one does exist.

Mr. BROOKE. Did the Senator know that the American Bar Association generally rates nominees "highly qualified," "exceptionally well qualified," and "qualified"; and that it is my understanding—I may be corrected if I am in error—that this is the first time that a person nominated to be Supreme Court Justice has been recommended simply as "qualified," without the use of the adjectives "highly qualified" or "exceptionally well qualified"?

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, in its own report to our Committee on the Judiciary, the Bar Association Committee described exactly what it did. This is the first time that it has limited its judgment, or its expression of its judgment, on a Supreme Court Justice to the single word "qualified."

It had another formulation in regard to Judge Haynsworth, which, I am sorry, has been sent to the Office of the Official Reporters for inclusion in the RECORD; but it is obviously, as the Senator suggests, a much more comprehensive statement.

The thrust of the Senator's remarks is absolutely in the right direction. I personally have never seen a report which was so apologetic as the one which the American Bar Association committee, headed by Judge Walsh, from New York, made in this case. One of the most significant statements in it is that the committee is unhappy, in effect, because its critics have thought that it was rendering a comprehensive judgment, and it expressly disclaims having done that. It expressly states it is not rendering a comprehensive judgment on Judge Carswell's qualifications.

(At this point Mr. HART assumed the chair as Presiding Officer.)

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKE. I yield.

Mr. BAYH. The Senator from Massachusetts, who has the floor, has been very kind, and I must say that while acting as Presiding Officer I listened with great interest to the point that has been raised here. I appreciate the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART) making it possible for me to express a thought in this general direction.

As a relatively young Member of this body, and also a relatively young member of the American Bar Association, I must say very frankly that the exposition of the almost cavalier manner in which our professional association has treated these last two nominations to the Supreme Court is a matter of some significant concern to me, and I am hopeful that, because of the manner in which it is being discussed now, and because several learned members of the bar and legal scholars, I understand, have sent telegrams to the Bar Association asking that it be changed, the result of this discussion will be that greater attention will be given to this significant choice.

As Senators know, there was a considerable amount of concern over the approval given by the Bar Association committee to the Haynsworth nomination. At that particular time, the committee was called into an unusual second Sunday session, and they met most of the day. It seemed to me rather ironic that although there had been documented, at least to the satisfaction of the Senator from Indiana, several areas in which that nominee had violated specific canons of ethics that had been promulgated by the bar association itself, nevertheless, two-thirds of that committee still felt compelled to go ahead and endorse the nomination.

I just wonder if the members of the committee—and, indeed, all of us in the American Bar Association—realize that we are permitting this organization, of which we are all members, to more or less put the Good Housekeeping seal of approval on a nominee, with not the kind of attention that should be given to a decision of this consequence. I think the Senator from Massachusetts and the others who have participated in this colloquy have rendered a significant service, not just in permitting us to examine the nominee before us but, of greater consequence, in perhaps changing the approach to this by the bar association committee, to that in the future a greater degree of study will go into it before recommendation is made.

I salute the Senator from Massachusetts for bringing this matter to our attention.

Mr. BROOKE. I thank the distinguished Senator from Indiana.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an article entitled "The American Bar: A Failure of Responsibility," written by the distinguished columnist Anthony Lewis, and published in today's New York Times.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN BAR: A FAILURE OF RESPONSIBILITY

(By Anthony Lewis)

LONDON.—Some of us have an instinctive respect for the legal profession. We believe with Holmes that "the practice of law, in spite of popular jests, tends to make good citizens and good men." But the performance of the organized bar of the United States is making it hard to sustain that view.

The constitutional rights and legal traditions that protect Americans from arbitrary treatment by authority are under intense attack these days. Lawyers, of all people, might be expected to understand and speak out. But with some honorable exceptions, the voice of the bar is unheard.

RIGHTS UNDER ATTACK

For example, it has long been a fundamental assumption that the police may not invade a man's house or his person without some notice and some showing of cause. Now, in the name of fighting crime, legislation is being pushed to let policemen break into homes, and take blood or fingerprints or other physical evidence from suspects without their consent.

The Nixon Administration has sought, and the House has passed, legislation authorizing the "preventive detention" of men accused but not convicted of crime. There may be good arguments for the idea. But at the least it faces weighty objections in a constitutional system based on the assumption of trial first, sentence after.

The American Bar Association might have discussed some of the pressing issues of official power and individual freedom at its meeting last month in Atlanta. Instead, the delegates debated genocide—and managed to find dangers in the notion of a stand against mass murder. A small majority opposed the Administration's request that the United States join every other major country in ratifying the 1949 treaty on genocide.

Twenty years ago Philip L. Graham, late publisher of the Washington Post and a lawyer himself, told a group of lawyers that their profession had "substantially failed to meet its proper obligation of supporting individual freedom." It had silently acquiesced, he said, in restrictions that not long before "would have raised the collective hairs of this association straight on end."

Mr. Graham happened to be speaking to one legal group that did and does take a serious view of its public duty: The Association of the Bar of the City of New York. But for most of the profession has judgment is even more painfully true now than when he spoke.

THE BAR'S RESPONSIBILITY

The bar surely should feel a special responsibility toward the Supreme Court of the United States. In Britain it would be unthinkable for the profession to stay silent in the face of a political assault on the judicial process, yet that is what in fact is now happening in the United States.

Worse yet, the American Bar Association is playing a supporting role in what must be taken as a calculated effort to demean the Supreme Court. That is the nomination of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to the Court.

The A.B.A.'s Committee on the Federal Judiciary has found Judge Carswell "qualified." This of a nominee whose supporters have been unable to find a single opinion, a speech, a professional activity to which they can point as evidence of the slightest legal distinction. While Judge Carswell sat on the Federal District Court, his decisions taken to appeal were reversed 59 per cent of the time. If he is "qualified" to sit on the Supreme Court, it would be simpler for the A.B.A. committee to do its work by keeping current a list of lawyers who would be "unqualified"—possibly about five.

The irony is that the president of the A.B.A., Bernard G. Segal, must know as well as anyone what an insult to the Court and to the American legal profession the nomination of Judge Carswell is. Mr. Segal is an enlightened man who was for years the dedicated chairman of the A.B.A. Judiciary Committee. One understands the restraints upon him but still wishes he would speak out.

In failing to fulfill its public function the organized bar is surely inflicting wounds upon itself. Bright young people already question the outlook of the legal profession; the big firms are having a very difficult time attracting the best law graduates. If lawyers want to retain their traditional place of honor and influence in American life, they will have to remember, and live by, those other words of Justice Holmes: "The law is the witness and external deposit of our moral life. Its history is the history of the moral development of the race."

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, in view of this laxness on the part of the American Bar Association, I do not regard it as surprising that a number of outstanding legal scholars have recently petitioned the ABA to reconsider its recommendation, and to exercise its responsibility by applying to this nomination the same standards it would apply to nominees for lower courts. I concur in this request, and hope that another meeting of the ABA judiciary committee will be held in the near future.

At the same time that the view of the ABA judiciary committee is considered, attention should also be paid to the many hundreds of members of that organization who have openly expressed their strong opposition to the nomination. To cite but a few examples:

Four hundred and fifty-seven lawyers and legal scholars from all over the Nation signed a letter accusing Judge Carswell of having a "closed mind," and being unfit for service on the highest court in the land.

The entire faculty of the University of Iowa College of Law has let it be known, in letters to President Nixon and to Senator MILLER:

We are profoundly disturbed that you and others are willing to support apparent bias and proven mediocrity in order to find (a conservative justice).

The majority of the faculty at Florida State University School of Law in Tallahassee—the law school which Judge Carswell helped to found—has expressed their opposition to his confirmation.

The Washington State Trial Lawyers Association said a poll of its members showed 64 percent were opposed to the appointment of Judge Carswell to the Supreme Court.

A letter signed by over 50 percent of the students at the University of Colorado College of Law, future members of the ABA, registered their opposition to Judge Carswell's appointment.

There are a multitude of other examples which could be cited. But these are representative of the widespread feeling of dissatisfaction and dismay among members of the legal profession with the present nomination. They throw considerable question on the value of the ABA committee's own unanimous endorsement.

The judge's own qualifications are often cited as reason for the confirmation of his nomination. He is a graduate of law school, a former district attorney, a district judge, and a member of the circuit court of appeals: Seventeen years of continuous public service, in which his nomination was three times confirmed by the Senate for the positions he held.

Mr. President, I have serious doubts about the efficacy of a system which would three times give a man its unqualified support for increasingly responsible posts without once looking into his record. I have read the transcript of his three previous hearings. The longest hearing took 15 minutes, and at no time was an issue of substance raised. I give no credence whatsoever, therefore, to the fact that he has thrice been confirmed by his body.

His record of public service over the last several years has been widely debated in this body, and I do not intend to reiterate the innumerable points which have been made in nearly 2 weeks of public debate on the nomination.

It is worth noting, however, that this "record of public service" includes active participation of then U.S. Attorney Harrold Carswell in a scheme to circumvent the law of the land which he was sworn to uphold. It includes repeated charges of abuse and rudeness directed toward plaintiffs and counsel in numerous civil rights cases, which some have suggested is a violation of the Florida canon of ethics for judicial procedure. It includes a record of 59 percent reversals in his written decisions which were appealed to a higher court—a reversal rate which is 2½ times that of the national average for Federal judges. It includes five reversals in a single year in habeas corpus cases where previous appellate rulings should have governed. And it includes the incorporation in a property deed in the late 1960's of clauses requiring the enforcement of "white only" provisions, a practice declared illegal by the Supreme Court in 1948. (Shelley v. Kraemer, 334 U.S. 1, 1948).

"Seventeen years of public service" says nothing about the quality of that service. Judge Carswell's record in my judgment, hardly qualifies him for higher judicial appointment.

I have no quarrel with the argument that we need a "strict constructionist" on the Supreme Court of the United States. Indeed, I would be willing to vote for such a man if I were convinced that he went to the Court with a reasonably open mind, and that he had the capacity to be fair in his judgments. But I have no such confidence in the case of Judge Carswell. As I said in my speech of February 25, announcing my opposition to his confirmation after the most exhaustive—and discouraging—review of his record:

> The law is ever complex, and a judge's decisions must necessarily include some contradictions and ambiguities. Nevertheless, the judge's decisions afford no sufficient reassurance that he has come to recognize his responsibilities to protect the equal rights of all those appearing before him.

Several highlights stood out in the record then; for me, they stand out even more clearly now:

The judge gives the appearance of having consistently moved at the slowest possible pace, stretching out judicial action and effectively delaying relief for those seeking reasonable compliance with the 1954 Brown decision.

The judge consistently dismissed habeas corpus hearings without even granting the evidentiary hearing which an increasing number of appellate reversals clearly indicated were required.

The judge dismissed a civil rights case in 1968 purely on the basis of a defendant's affidavit, which previous higher court rulings had shown had no probative value.

Are such decisions the mark of a true conservative, a "strict constructionist" of constitutional law and requirements, or do these and other cases more properly suggest a pattern of dilatory, minimal action which tended to frustrate rather than promote the cause of justice?

Mr. President, I have tried to deal today with some more of the arguments which have been raised in Judge Carswell's favor. I find them lacking in substance. I continue to oppose the nomination, and will work actively toward that end.

But my concern is far broader than the prospects of having one unworthy man sit among the other eight distinguished Justices of this Nation. My concern is with respect for the law which is the essential component of a government of laws; with confidence in the justness of Government which is one of the twin pillars of democracy.

Let us look to the Nation, to its needs and expectations. Let us look to the future, to its hopes and aspirations. Let us reject the nomination now before us, and find us a man who, whatever his political philosophy or ideology, is a man of breadth and scope, and wise impartiality in the handling of the law.

Mr. President, a majority of the professors at my law school alma mater, Boston University, recently expressed in a joint letter to me their opposition to the confirmation of Judge Carswell's nomination. In their letter, these professors of the law stressed the need for "outstanding professional and intellectual qualifications" on the Supreme Court, and the need to appoint only fairminded individuals. On both counts, they believe Judge Carswell is lacking.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the letter be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOSTON UNIVERSITY, SCHOOL OF LAW,
Boston, Mass., March 13, 1970.

HON. EDWARD W. BROOKE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BROOKE: As law teachers deeply concerned about the law and its administration, we oppose the appointment of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to the United States Supreme Court.

We believe that no one should be appointed to our highest tribunal whose qualifications do not meet the most exacting standards. An appointment to the Supreme Court is the highest honor our nation can bestow on a lawyer. If our judiciary is to remain respected, that honor must be earned by outstanding professional and intellectual credentials. It is our considered judgment that Judge Carswell's record fails to show that he meets these requirements.

We further believe that in the present times only someone whose record of fairmindedness to all citizens is completely unblemished should be appointed to our highest tribunal. Judge Carswell does not meet this requirement. His racial statements in the past and the more recent charges of abuse to civil rights lawyers made against him by responsible members of the bar, inescapably cast doubt on his impartiality and fairness in civil rights cases. As we all know, in these matters it is more important than ever to avoid any grounds for suspicion of bias in our system of law.

A judiciary that can claim the respect of even those who disagree with its decisions is a foundation on which this nation has been built. We urge you not to undermine this foundation, for to do so will only fortify those disenchanted groups who claim that the courts and legal process offer no hope for meaningful justice.

We earnestly request that you vote not to confirm the appointment of Judge Carswell.

Respectfully yours,

David A. Rice, Daniel G. MacLeod, Paul McCarthy, Daniel G. Partan, Henry Paul Monaghan, Eugene C. Roemele, Phillip I. Blumberg, Leonard P. Strickman, Clarence R. Laing, Stanley Z. Fisher, Albert R. Beisel, Jr., Banks McDowell, Ernest M. Haddad, John P. Wilson, William E. Ryckman, Paul M. Siskind, Paul J. Liacos, Members of the Faculty of Law.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR HOLLAND TOMORROW

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, at the conclusion of the remarks by the able senior Senator from Maine (Mrs. SMITH) on tomorrow, the able senior Senator from Florida (Mr. HOLLAND) be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAYH). Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRESIDENT NIXON'S STATEMENT ON POSTAL STRIKE

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, President Nixon today has made a clear and concise statement regarding the postal strike now affecting many of the major cities of this Nation. I commend the President's determination to meet his constitutional obligation, and insure that the mails will go through.

I join the President in urging the striking postal employees to return to work so that negotiations concerning their legitimate grievances can begin.

Mr. President, Congress has declared strikes by Federal workers illegal because their services are essential to the orderly functioning of our Government and our society. The postal service must not be interrupted if we are to maintain our economic system, and insure the free flow of personal and private communications. Americans are particularly dependent on mail service and the country cannot tolerate prolonged interruption for any reason.

I am in agreement that the present postal salaries are inadequate. I have voted for increases in the past and intend to do so in the future. However, I am in total agreement with the President that negotiations cannot proceed under the club of an outlaw strike.

Perhaps even more dismaying is the fact that this illegal strike, if it is allowed to continue, may give encouragement to the lawless and the dissidents. If Federal employees are allowed to disregard their oath of office and blatantly violate Federal law, how can we ask others with grievances to act differently?

We simply cannot allow any Federal Government workers to defy the law and the injunction of the courts. If they succeed in this defiance, the Nation will be at the mercy of every public employee group with any sort of grievance.

Mr. President, I urge the striking postal workers to return to work so that we can get on with the business of negotiating a fair and just return for their services.

DISRUPTION OF POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the disruption of postal service is a tragedy for both the postal workers and the American public. It is already dealing a body blow at our business and national welfare, and soon can cause immense anguish to all social security and veterans' benefit recipients, including 122,271 Rhode Island recipients of social security checks and 33,884 Rhode Island recipients of veterans checks.

The tragedy lies in the fact that this disruption has resulted from the backfiring of the tactic of tying postal reform to the pay raise. Yet, while the President may have believed this justified, there has been too much cute legislative gamesmanship involved.

One thing is clear: Full postal service must be restored promptly throughout the country.

I sympathize deeply with the frustration of our postal workers with their wage structure, particularly in view of the general wage increases that have been occuring in private industry and their annoyance with our own action in having raised congressional salaries with raising their salaries.

The postal workers need and deserve a pay raise, and it should be granted to them promptly. At the same time, I am most disappointed that postal workers, in pursuit of a redress of their grievances, have seen fit to disregard their sworn obligation not to strike.

Personally, I have supported every postal pay raise bill that has come before the Congress since I became a Member of the Senate. During that time, since January 1961, I have voted for postal pay raises that have increased pay rates by more than 50 percent.

Indeed, 3 months ago, I voted in the Senate for a bill, H.R. 13000, that would have provided another pay raise for postal workers. But that bill has been effectively blocked in conference because the President decided there would be no pay raise unless it were linked to his postal reform proposal.

I urge the President, Members of Congress, and the postal workers, be they the leadership or rank and file, to work together in order that the mails may move quickly, the present unfair wage structure brought more nearly in line with that of others doing equivalent work, and agreement reached on the outline of a postal structure that can more efficiently handle our mails as we move into the 1970's.

REDEFINING THE LAW OF THE SEA

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I invite the attention of Senators to an editorial entitled "Redefining the Law of the Sea," published recently in the New York Times.

While the editorial bears primarily on the State Department's recent announcement in favor of a 12-mile territorial sea, the point is also made that this decision could be of little value unless the United States reaches a decision on the outer limits of the Continental Shelf. In this regard the editorial states:

> The United States has attempted to keep these questions separated. . . . But some American legal experts have pointed out that unlimited American claims to rights to exploit the sea bed could encourage claims by other nations to other rights above the ocean floor.

To point up the justification for this observation, I need only remind Senators of the 200-mile claims on the part of Chile, Ecuador, and Peru.

Mr. President, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Ocean Space of the Foreign Relations Committee, I know for the past couple of years that the executive branch has done little more than wring its hands over the Continental Shelf boundary issue, primarily as a delaying tactic to placate the oil industry. The Nation's interest can no longer afford the luxury of such contrived delay; and to paraphrase the memorable words of William Jennings Bryan, I think the American people have the right to demand that this administration stop sacrificing the national interest on a "cross of oil."

I hope that Senators will give serious consideration to the points raised in the New York Times editorial. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REDEFINING THE LAW OF THE SEA

The United States has taken a useful but limited first step toward redefining its position on the limits of national jurisdiction over the seas with the announcement by a State Department official that this country now favors extending territorial waters of all countries to a distance of 12 miles.

The United States decision, reversing longstanding insistence on a narrower territorial sea, will help speed United Nations plans for a new conference on the law of the sea to eliminate ambiguities left by earlier conferences in 1958 and 1960. It should assure agreement on the 12-mile limit, already widely accepted, providing that other nations go along with a reasonable American demand for guarantees of free passage through and above international straits that could otherwise be closed under a 12-mile regime.

In disclosing the decision in a speech at Philadelphia recently John R. Stevenson, the State Department's legal counselor, also called for "carefully defined preferential fishing rights for coastal states on the high seas." This proposal could indicate a disposition to move at last toward a compromise agreement to end this country's prolonged dispute with several Latin American states over American fishing activities off the West Coast of the Southern Hemisphere.

Unfortunately, the Stevenson address and a more recent United States statement before the United Nations Seabed Committee leave in doubt the American position on another sea law issue that is of more urgent interest to many U.N. members. That is the question of the limits of national rights on the continental shelf.

In calling for preparatory steps toward a conference on the Law of the Sea last December, the General Assembly made clear it expected the conference to deal with this issue, too, noting that "the problems relating to the high seas, territorial waters, contiguous zones, the continental shelf, the superjacent waters, and the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond national jurisdiction, are closely linked together."

The United States Government has attempted to keep these questions separated. It has appeared to drag its feet on efforts to limit national jurisdiction over the shelf and to establish an international regime that would oversee the orderly exploitation of the sea bed for the benefit of all mankind. This American posture helps to perpetuate an ambiguous 1958 agreement which permits practically unlimited exploitation of the sea bed, an anarchic state of affairs strongly favored by American oil interests, among others.

But some American legal experts have pointed out that unlimited American claims to rights to exploit the sea bed could encourage claims by other nations to other rights above the ocean floor. "I am persuaded wherever the coastal state has sovereign rights for the purposes of exploiting natural resources, it acquires in the long run . . . exclusive rights for other and probably all purposes," Professor Louis Henkin of Columbia University told a Senate subcommittee recently. "Wide continental shelves, then, will mean wide areas under the increasing control of other coastal states from which various uses by the United States could be effectively barred."

If professor Henkin's interpretation is correct—and it is persuasive—the new United States position on territorial seas will be of limited value unless it is accompanied by a decision also to join with other nations to curtail national exploitation of the continental shelves.

NEED FOR NEW WAYS TO VIEW THE WORLD

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the Saturday Review for March 7 contains an article written by Frank K. Kelly which I commend to Senators and other readers of the RECORD.

It is brought home to us in many ways that, if we are to survive, we must have some new ways of viewing the world. We need an end to hatred and violence among men and a new reverence for the earth which supports all life.

Mr. Kelly's article supports this view and contains an interesting proposal for action toward this end.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Kelly's article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE POSSIBILITIES OF TRANSFORMATION—A REPORT ON THE STATE OF MANKIND: 1970

(By Frank K. Kelly)

At the very moment of lift-off there is no sense of movement, an astronaut said. Man may have passed his own moment of lift-off into ultimate change. Now we have a sense of voyaging in ways that are stranger than our dreams.

The word has passed through cities and towns of Europe and the Americas, through the ancient streets and paths of Asia and Africa, to the nomads carrying transistor radios in the Himalayas and the Andes and along the Amazon and the Nile: Man lives on a beautiful colored ball, traveling at high speed through enormous darkness toward the fires of countless suns. The landing on the moon confirmed the solidity of other worlds. Many of us expected to see what we saw; many accepted it with a shrug or a smile. To young people already aware of science fiction, it was a happening that had happened long before. But the sight of our little globe shining in space made us realize that we can be inside and outside at the same time.

In each of us, now that we know so much and know how little that is, there are two states of being, embracing and struggling: Mankind I and Mankind II. We are still attached to the earth, but our minds move in and out in a dizzying rhythm. We are changing so swiftly that we do not know what we are or what we may become.

Since Hiroshima, we have known that the old man must die. The man of devouring ambition, the consuming man, must give way to the new man, the learning man, the man of understanding, the servant of life. The future depends upon our opening of ourselves to the emergence of the servant. The great transformation as we enter the Seventies is the realization that everything can be transformed. Men and nations still fight for land and resources, for principles and pride, but the skies are full of satellites riding high above the drawn lines. No one is dominant over his own destiny; no one can really control any territory anymore.

As we awaken to the knowledge that we have been lifted into ultimate changes beyond our dreams, some of us are fearful; others feel a terrible joy. Many believe that scientists will develop fairly clear explanations of where we are going or build a Great Computer that will bring together all the factors necessary to make a new web of life. There may be thousands, perhaps millions, of unknown factors—but they will be found, the worshipers of New Science believe.

Many have refused to think any longer about immortality of the soul; they contend that man is on the verge of discovering ways of everlasting physical survival. A temporary embodiment of invisible forces, he is learning how to remold the body in which he finds himself. With fabricated parts, man may go on and on from world to world. Death will be confined to lesser forms of life.

Many others believe they are participating in a revolution of the spirit. Institutional churches may be dying, but there are religious torrents running among the young and the old, among people of all ages and places. Mankind II may combine this spiritual revolution with an enormous effort to preserve or reconstruct the web of physical life. The blood sacrifices of Jesus and Gandhi, of Martin Luther King, of John and Robert Kennedy, of all those torn by violence, may be truly honored by those who make the future.

We now have a growing awareness of the importance of the person. Each man is a universe penetrated by other universes. A world begins with each of us, and no one knows its end. What spirals on toward an unknown destination cannot be contained in a vehicle of culture and civilization or described as a collection of invisible atoms linked together into a visible whole. The urgency that shook atoms together into a brain, that began to look through eyes and speak with tongues, is transforming man as man transforms all.

In this transformation we naturally want the strength and goodness of the old man to survive in the new. But the kind of valor and toughness in the old man may now have to yield to a new valor—the courage to surrender joyfully, to accept the fact that we are all closely related to one another, breathing upon one another, touching one another whether we want to touch or not.

The signals that will guide us in the continuing voyage into the future will be the signals of persons in contact—mysterious persons with universal human rights, men like women and women like men, aware that the whole wonder of mankind can be deciphered in every human face, aware that we are all going together and we won't know where we're going until we get there—and then we'll go beyond.

The spread of compassion in the midst of killing the world over indicates that the old man is being replaced. He may refuse to acknowledge that there is any grace in surrendering to peaceful change. He sinks slowly down within us, with roars and rages, retreating into darkness with his scarred shield firmly held, dying with a warning that he may return. Cool eyes of cameras in the skies record the monstrous miseries, the self-inflicted wounds, the crucifixions that men put upon others and upon themselves. But such things are not regarded as inevitable anymore. Even those who say that fighting cannot be quickly stopped—and a bitter truth is on their side—do not want war anymore.

In the United States, Japan, Germany, and other nations where radical groups have been controlled by force leaders seek better solutions to the problems that provoked the violence. Many are calling for drastic changes in the technological society that has crippled or alienated so many people. Wars are no longer considered profitable; industrialists and students alike have recognized that settlement of disputes by armed conflicts must be abandoned.

The gloomiest predictions made during the years since the establishment of the United Nations have not yet come true. The U.N. has been relatively feeble from the beginning—largely dependent upon the major nations, which have often failed to give that support. Yet the U.N. and related agencies—the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the International Labor Office, the International Bank, UNICEF, the U.N. Development Fund, and many others—have helped to build the foundations for a community of man. U Thant has cited the process of decolonization that has "liberated nearly a billion people in less than a quarter of a century—a development on a scale that was inconceivable in 1945 and in which the U.N. has played a central role. . . . The obligation of the rich nations to assist the poor ones is now widely regarded as a normal feature of life and a new moral precept in the international community. And I think of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the effort to make it increasingly applicable, and the endless struggle against racism and discrimination in all their different forms that has been and is being waged at the United Nations."

The Secretary General also has stressed the increasing internationalism of young people. "Nothing could do more," he commented, "to increase the effectiveness of the United Nations than a modification of the concept of national sovereignty in harmony with the intellectual and technological realities of our time. There I believe that artists, scientists, businessmen, those who deal with communications of all kinds, and the young people can help us in a decisive way."

The young sing of answers "blowin' in the wind." All people now realize that the world's winds blow from one continent to another. We breathe our neighbors' air, and they breathe ours. Without clean air, we will choke and die together.

In matters of environment, the implication is clear. Mankind will have to choose between material progress and the continuation of life on Earth.

Sverker Astrom, the Swedish Ambassador to the United Nations, recently proposed a resolution calling for a world conference on what man is doing to his environment. Representatives of fifty-three nations endorsed the proposal, and it was adopted unanimously by the General Assembly. The conference will be held in Stockholm in 1972, but all governments concerned by the swelling tide of pollution obviously have been confronted by demands for more immediate action.

Ambassador Astrom told the Assembly: "Even if we avoid the risk of blowing up the planet, we may, by changing its face, unwittingly be parties to a process with the same fatal outcome. Indiscriminate and uncontrolled use of modern technology, indispensable as such technology is for economic and social progress, may set trends in motion which lead to unforeseen harmful effects in unexpected places."

Ambassador Astrom suggested that the conference might prepare a "Universal Declaration on the Protection and Betterment of the Human Environment." He said he did not know whether many of the damaging effects of runaway technology are irreversible, but he felt that steps to halt pollution have to be taken as swiftly as possible.

In Sweden, a national Consultative Board for Environmental Problems has been created to check the contamination of air and water. Swedish experts found that many pollutants were coming from the high chimneys of Britain and West Germany. Builders of such chimneys in Britain had claimed that their acrid fumes would be carried far from the United Kingdom—perhaps as far as Moscow. The Russians, becoming alarmed, have begun to show more interest in international efforts to control pollution.

Man may have to consider the effects of weather-changing experiments. Should the weather-modifying projects conducted by the United States, Israel, and other countries be monitored by an international commission? Israel has produced rain vital to a parched land in the Middle East, but what will be the long-range consequences? Can computers take into account all the filth spewed by factory chimneys, fallout from hydrogen bombs tested in the atmosphere by Communist China and perhaps others, effects on the earth's crust of underground explosions set off by the Soviet Union and the United States, and all the other repercussions of technological devices?

The crisis of environment will certainly be one of the great issues of the Seventies. President Nixon has established a council to consider all environmental problems, and the governors of many states are studying what needs to be done. Representative Richard L. Ottinger and other members of Congress have proposed a Constitutional amendment that provides for an "Environmental Bill of Rights." Senator Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin has called for a "national land and ocean use policy that will set environmental standards with immediate sanctions for violations."

Political scientist Harvey Wheeler has predicted a "new politics of ecology." This issue, Wheeler said, produces "conflicts in the realm of knowledge and thought, in Teilhard de Chardin's 'noösphere.' Here we need new policy-forming institutions, based on a different kind of representation, eventually producing new parties devoted to the politics of ecology."

The question of saving life on Earth has become most pressing in the United States; the effects of pollution have become most noticeable here. In California and New York protesters with a wide range of political views have become almost as concerned about the preservation of environment as they are about the Vietnam War.

Divisions between reactionaries and radicals, conservatives and liberals, have become blurred in the struggle to save the air, water, and fertile earth necessary for human survival. Activist students participated in a conference convened by Governor Ronald Reagan of California and heard Mr. Reagan admit that California had been severely damaged. "We messed it up to begin with," Reagan said. "And we can clean it up. The opportunity is ours. The responsibility is ours."

Two powerfully phrased resolutions offered by California students were adopted at conferences on "People and Air" and "People and Water." A twenty-year-old girl from the University of California at Davis asked the state government to ban internal combustion engines in California by 1975. Another resolution, offered by a student from Berkeley, demanded reconsideration of a gigantic water project on which the California state government has already spent many millions of dollars. The resolution said: "Recycling of waste water and desalinization must be given a higher priority than long-distance water transport." It added that "the California water plan must not undergo any further development without further study of the degradation of the ecology of California." Meeting at Stanford University, 200 student leaders formed a confederation to create "more public awareness of our environmental crisis through wide-spread education, the electoral process, lobbying, economic boycotts, and public demonstrations of concern."

People in other states have prodded legislators and governors, judges and city managers, industrialists and union leaders to join the struggle while time remains.

The sign of unity is a sign of hope. This spring there will be a gathering in San Francisco to celebrate the first twenty-five years of the United Nations, to look at the dangers through which mankind has passed, and to renew mankind's confidence in the future. In my view, this would be the right time to present a report on mankind and life on Earth. California would be the right place to assemble those who might produce the ideas and the fiery determination needed to have Earth as a home for man.

Two other major issues to be faced by mankind are population control and the expansion of food production to feed the hungry millions now on the planet.

The prospects for many countries have improved enormously in the last few years, with the doubling of wheat, rice, and corn crops in Asia, Africa, and Latin America through the use of new types of gains, spoilage control, availability of fertilizers, better irrigation methods, and more use of machines. Barring unforeseen disasters, India expects to produce enough food for her 550 million people in 1970–71. Mexico now produces enough wheat for her population and ships a half-million tons of the grain to other countries. Indications are that Pakistan and Turkey will also be exporting grain in the next few years. A study recently released by the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization indicates that by 1985 the demand for food in the poorer countries will be about two-and-a-half times the 1962 level. New types of wheat, rice, and other cereals are expected to meet this demand, using only one-third of the area now under cultivation. Land not used for cereals will be released for other crops.

These trends may give us enough time to bring the world's population under control before mass starvation occurs. Two distinguished groups recently have issued reports strongly recommending the establishment of a U.N. Commissioner for Population. The United Nations Association Policy Panel—headed by John D. Rockefeller, 3rd—said that such a commissioner should be added to the U.N. Development Program and should administer a fund of $100-million annually for family planning activities. The Commission on International Development, supported by the World Bank and headed by Lester Pearson, former Prime Minister of Canada, recommended that "the United Nations should appoint a Commissioner for Population. An international program should be launched through the World Bank in consultation with the World Health Organization for the mobilization of research in the field of fertility control."

There has been a most hopeful change in attitude toward population control in India, Japan, Pakistan, and other countries, where thousands of men have submitted voluntarily to sterilization. If the new man—the man of compassion, cooperation, understanding—is to dominate the development of mankind in the future, every human being must cooperate. It is clear that people in all parts of the world are awakening to this necessity.

The material resources of the earth are limited and must be conserved. But limitations on the resources of the spirit—the functioning of the mind, the outreach of human sympathy, the awareness that many men still have of an awesome presence given the name of God—have not yet been discovered.

U Thant pointed out the bitter paradoxes of the last twenty years: "On the one hand, there is the remarkable effort of the international community to define common aspirations on a world-wide and regional basis. On the other hand, it is clear that, in spite of the greater awareness and demand for the respect of the individual, serious violations of human rights, including resort to violence and terror, continue to occur."

In 1970 the struggle for human rights will be given more attention than ever before. Many people, young and old, black and white, rich and poor, socialists and businessmen, intellectuals and activists, are now seeking ways of coming together. Huge gaps in understanding and communication have always existed. But this is an age in which these gaps are being recognized and fully explored.

As Mankind II develops, a global dialogue on the rights and duties of man must be initiated and supported by people with many varying views. As we travel outward and inward on the immense journey into an ultimate transformation, we must speak of what we owe to one another as well as what we expect of one another. Our duties to one another in the crisis of our age are very great.

Many eyes have been opened. Many governments have begun to see the folly of what is being done to the earth. The Strategic Arms Limitation Talks indicate that the United States and the Soviet Union want to turn away from the monstrous arms race that has been devouring our substance and shadowing our lives. The emergence of man as the servant of life must be encouraged. The reasons for hope must be shown as clearly as the reasons for alarm.

All education institutions and nongovernmental organizations concerned with the building of a "social and international order" for the attainment of universal human rights should unite to sponsor a continuing report on the state of mankind.

The Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, the World Man Fund, the Fund for Peace, the World Academy of Arts and Sciences, the John XXIII International Institute, the World Law Fund, the Center for the Study of the Future of Man, the United Nations Associations, the World Federalists, the Cooperators (a newly founded society), and others should devote part of their resources to the formation of a Council for Humanity. The council would present a series of statements by spokesmen for mankind: men and women from a wide variety of countries and cultures.

The council might be composed of leaders from the sponsoring organizations. Half the members would be chosen by youth organizations, and none could serve more than a year. The council would have a very small staff, so that no opportunity for the formation of a bureaucracy would arise.

The first council would simply be charged with beginning a discussion on the state of mankind. Council members would examine the vital issues and make recommendations for national and regional action. Every country would be asked to provide at least four hours of free broadcasting time each month for statements by council speakers. Additional time would be provided for commentaries and criticisms and suggestions for statements from other viewpoints. Newspapers and leading magazines in all nations would be asked to carry the texts of these statements or extensive summaries.

At the end of each year, a day for mankind might be celebrated. The statements of the spokesmen would be published in many languages, in an annual report, and distributed to schools and libraries all over the world. The people of the earth would be urged to write to the council, giving their views and their ideas of speeding the development of a world civilization.

The vast resources of information available through the U.N. and other organizations could be used by members in preparing their statements—but they would speak as persons, communicating with other persons, not as officials speaking for governments or to governments.

There is a turn against war. There is a turn toward the unity of man, stronger than all strife and divisions. There is a turn toward hope. There is a growing realization that we have lifted off into a new age. There is pain ahead. There is suffering. There is a stretching of the very being of man, and the fear that the transformation of this time will change us more than we ever want to change. But while there are voices that we can hear, let us listen to them. Beyond the darkness, there may be light.

PROGRAM

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President (Mr. BAYH), for the benefit of the Senate, and before the Senate shortly adjourns until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, I shall recapitulate the orders previously entered by the able majority leader.

Following the disposition of the reading of the Journal tomorrow morning, the able senior Senator from Maine (Mrs. SMITH) will be recognized for 10 minutes. The senior Senator from Florida (Mr. HOLLAND) will then be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes; after which there will be a brief period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to exceed 15 minutes with statements therein limited to 3 minutes, following which the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report on H.R. 514.

ADJOURNMENT TO 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order that the Senate stand in adjournment until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, March 24, 1970, at 10 o'clock a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 23, 1970:

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

John N. Nassikas, of New Hampshire, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission for the term of 5 years expiring June 22, 1975. (Reappointment)

U.S. MARSHAL

William B. Henderson, of Kentucky, to be U.S. marshal for the western district of Kentucky for the term of 4 years vice Harry M. Miller, retired.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate March 23, 1970:

AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Robert Harry Nooter, of Missouri, to be an Assistant Administrator of the Agency for International Development.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

SITUATION IN GREECE

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, the situation in Greece seems to be worsening every day. Not only are more and more individuals suffering the barbarism of a government which uses torture to keep its citizens in line, but the country which was the first democracy and remained a symbol to the free world for years, under the reign of the junta is turning more and more toward the East and away from the principles of freedom. I request that two articles which appeared in the most recent issue of News of Greece be included in the RECORD. The first is the preface from a new book by James Becket, "Barbarism in Greece," whose report for Amnesty International was the first comprehensive account of the use of torture by the Greek junta. The second describes the growing alliance of the junta with the Eastern European countries, while still enjoying a great deal of military support from the United States. How can the United States, in good conscience, still continue its support for such a government?

The articles follow:

BARBARISM IN GREECE

The subject of this book is horrible. Torture belongs on the darkest side of human behavior, yet in the Greek case there are entries to be made on the credit side of the human ledger. People outside of Greece, especially in Europe, have cared about what was going on, and public opinion has played a role. The European Press has vigorously pursued the subject. The international community through its oragnizations has shown that it is willing to try to do something about it. The Scandinavian governments brought their case before the European Commission of Human Rights not for any commercial or territorial advantage, but because they believed in human rights. Despite pressure from many sides, they had the perseverance to see the case through to its conclusion. The members of the Commission conscientiously discharged their duty, concluding that the Greek regime tortures political prisoners as a matter of policy. Most important of all. Greeks themselves, at great personal sacrifice, had the courage to tell their stories and give their names.

I am convinced that because of this fewer Greeks have been tortured than would have been if the regime had a free hand. Efforts from abroad, however, have their limits, which are tragically demonstrated by the fact the regime continues to torture prisoners. In a sense the possible international effort has now been made, and torture has not been stopped. The future is uncertain. All that has happened, all that is described in these pages cannot be simply forgotten by Greeks. If there is not a change soon, it is difficult to see how Greece can avoid great bloodshed.

GREECE AND THE WORLD: JUNTA TURNS EAST

Relations between the colonels and their Communist neighbors have always been based on expediency, rather than on the ringing denunciations of "communism" and "fascism" which the two parties have uttered for public consumption. They have become especially close in the past year, as both have been estranged from the West European democracies by the objections of the latter to torture in Greece and the invasion of Czechoslovakia.

Two recent developments are especially striking. One is the conclusion of a new economic agreement with the U.S.S.R., under which Soviet exports to Greece are to be stepped up and receive most-favored-nation treatment. At the same time, the Soviet Union is to send technicians to the area north of Kavalla to look for peat (and according to some reports other minerals) and prepare plans for electric production based on it. Greece is to pay for this survey with some of its perennially surplus tobacco. From the Soviet point of view, however, one cigaret might seem an adequate recompense. For the area in question is the site of major American top-secret radar installations. And the Soviet technicians, hunting for minerals with the aid of modern electronic devices, might reasonably be expected to discover other things as well.

The second development is the resumption of trade with Albania for the first time since the end of World War II. The announcement of this agreement between the junta and Communist China's only satellite does not specify what commodities are involved. An appropriate exchange, however, might give Greece a supply of the little red book of Mao's thoughts in return for an equal quantity of the book in which Papadopoulos has embalmed his commentaries.

The junta has also decided to station a permanent trade representative in East Germany, while agreeing to increase its trade with Bulgaria. And Hungary has sent a trade delegation to Athens in connection with the holding of a "Hungarian Festival" there—at a time when the intellectual and artistic world of democratic countries is engaged in a cultural boycott of the Greek dictatorship. "Agreement in principle" has also reportedly been reached on a trade pact with Peking.

The junta will certainly find itself more at home ideologically with the Eastern dictatorships than with the democracies which just chased it out of the Council of Europe. Yet in the present state of the world Papadopoulos may soon find himself faced with the necessity of making an agonizing choice between Moscow and Peking: "Under which king, Bezonian? Speak or die!"

FINAL ACTIONS IN APPROPRIATION BILLS, 91ST CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION—INCLUDING FOREIGN ASSISTANCE AND LABOR-HEW-OEO

HON. GEORGE H. MAHON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, as Members will recall, when the House adjourned sine die on December 23 last, two of the appropriation bills for the current fiscal year 1970 had not been finally enacted—the foreign assistance bill and the Labor-HEW-OEO bill. Conference reports on both bills were pending at adjournment.

Summaries of the appropriations business of the session—including those in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 115, part 30, page 41213—were made on the basis of the enacted bills plus the amounts in the two conference agreements.

The session-end summaries on the foregoing tentative basis disclosed that in the appropriation bills Congress had, with respect to budget requests for fiscal year 1970 appropriations, reduced the President's budget request by the net amount of $5,604,000,000.

In the final enactments with respect to the two pending bills on which action has now been completed, further reductions, aggregating $766,659,624, were made. The foreign assistance bill was reduced $54,650,000 from the original conference agreement. In the enacted Labor-HEW-OEO bill, H.R. 15931, further reductions, aggregating $712,009,624, were made from the conference agreement on H.R. 13111 which the President vetoed and the House failed to override. The $365,233,000 of the latter sum was in reductions against specific items. The remainder, $346,776,624, is the 2-percent reduction imposed by section 410 of the bill.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the revised aggregate net reduction by Congress in budget requests for appropriations for fiscal year 1970 in the appropriation bills is $6,370,000,000, that is, $766,000,000 more than the previously reported figure of $5,604,000,000.

I include a revised comparative table by bills of the session:

FINAL ACTIONS ON BUDGET ESTIMATES OF NEW BUDGET (OBLIGATIONAL) AUTHORITY IN APPROPRIATION BILLS—91ST CONG., 1ST SESS. (AS OF DEC. 23 1969), 91ST CONG., 2D SESS. (AS OF MAR. 5, 1970)

[Does not include any "back-door" type budget authority; or any permanent (Federal or trust) authority, under earlier or "permanent" law,[1] without further or annual action by the Congress]

Bill and fiscal year	House actions			Senate actions		Enacted	(+) or (−), latest action compared with budget requests
	Budget requests considered	Reported by committee	Approved by House	Budget requests considered	Approved by Senate
A. Bills for fiscal 1970:
1. Treasury-Post Office (H.R. 11582) (net of estimated postal revenues appropriated)	[2] $2,314,714,000	[2] $2,272,332,000	[2] $2,272,332,000	[2] $2,314,714,000	[2] $2,280,195,000	[2] $2,276,232,000	−$38,482,000
(Memoranda: Total, including authorizations out of postal funds)	(8,821,727,000)	(8,779,345,000)	(8,779,345,000)	(8,821,727,000)	(8,787,208,000)	(8,783,245,000)	(−38,482,000)
2. Agriculture (H.R. 11612)	6,967,562,050	6,806,655,000	6,806,655,000	7,237,562,050	7,642,797,650	7,488,903,150	+251,341,100
3. Independent offices-HUD (H.R. 12307) (including 1971 advance)	15,380,413,600	14,907,089,000	14,909,089,000	15,512,969,600	[3] 14,985,449,000	15,111,870,500	−401,099,100
(Fiscal year 1970 amounts only)	(15,205,413,600)	(14,732,089,000)	(14,734,089,000)	(15,337,969,600)	[3] (14,985,449,000)	(15,111,870,500)	(−226,099,100)
4. Interior (H.R. 12781)	1,390,096,500	1,374,434,000	1,374,286,700	1,390,856,500	1,382,766,900	1,380,375,300	−10,481,200
5. State, Justice, Commerce, and Judiciary (H.R. 12964)	2,475,704,600	2,534,134,200	2,335,634,200	2,475,704,600	2,382,354,700	2,354,432,700	−121,271,900
6. Labor-HEW-OEO:
The vetoed bill (H.R. 13111)	16,495,237,700	16,651,039,700	17,573,602,700	[4] 19,834,125,700	21,363,391,700	19,747,153,200	−86,972,500
(Fiscal year 1970 amounts only)	(16,495,237,700)	(16,651,039,700)	(17,573,602,700)	(18,608,125,700)	(20,245,811,700)	(19,747,153,200)	(+1,139,027,500)
The approved bill (H.R. 15931)	18,608,125,700	19,301,520,200	19,381,920,200	[4] 19,834,125,700	[5] 19,035,143,576	[5] 19,035,143,576	−798,982,124
(Fiscal year 1970 amounts only)	(18,608,125,700)	(19,301,520,200)	(19,381,920,200)	(18,608,125,700)	[5] (19,035,143,576)	[5] (19,035,143,576)	(+427,017,876)
7. Legislative (H.R. 13763)	311,374,273	284,524,057	284,524,057	372,152,949	342,310,817	344,326,817	−27,826,132
8. Public works (and AEC) (H.R. 14159)	4,203,978,000	4,505,446,500	4,505,446,500	4,203,978,000	4,993,428,500	4,756,007,500	+552,029,500
9. Military construction (H.R. 14751)	1,917,300,000	1,450,559,000	1,450,559,000	1,917,300,000	1,603,446,000	1,560,456,000	−356,844,000
10. Transportation (H.R. 14794) (including 1971 advances)	2,090,473,630	2,095,019,630	2,095,019,630	2,090,473,630	2,147,152,630	2,143,738,630	+53,265,000
(Fiscal year 1970 amounts only)	(1,840,473,630)	(1,875,019,630)	(1,875,019,630)	(1,840,473,630)	(1,947,152,630)	(1,929,738,630)	(+89,265,000)
11. District of Columbia (H.R. 14916) (Federal funds)	228,842,000	188,691,000	188,691,000	228,842,000	173,547,000	168,510,000	−60,332,000
(District of Columbia funds)	(751,575,300)	(683,106,300)	(683,106,300)	(752,944,300)	(657,064,600)	(650,249,600)	(−102,694,700)
12. Defense (H.R. 15090)	75,278,200,000	69,960,048,000	69,960,048,000	75,278,200,000	69,322,656,000	69,640,568,000	−5,637,632,000
13. Foreign assistance (H.R. 15149)	3,679,564,000	2,558,020,000	2,608,020,000	3,679,564,000	2,718,785,000	[7] 2,504,260,000	[7] −1,175,304,000
14. Supplemental (H.R. 15209)	298,547,261	235,057,761	244,225,933	314,597,852	296,877,318	278,281,318	−36,316,534
Total, these bills—
As to fiscal 1970 (including the vetoed Labor-HEW-OEO bill)	132,607,007,614	125,428,049,848	126,213,133,720	135,200,040,881	130,317,578,215	129,541,115,115	−5,658,925,766
As to fiscal 1970 (including the approved Labor-HEW-OEO bill)	134,719,895,614	128,078,530,368	128,021,451,220	135,200,040,881	129,106,910,091	128,829,105,491	−6,370,935,390
As to fiscal 1971 (including the vetoed Labor-HEW-OEO bill)	425,000,000	395,000,000	395,000,000	1,651,000,000	1,317,580,000	214,000,000	−1,437,000,000
As to fiscal 1971 (including the approved Labor-HEW-OEO bill)	425,000,000	395,000,000	395,000,000	1,651,000,000	200,000,000	214,000,000	−1,437,000,000
Total 1970 bills (including the vetoed Labor-HEW-OEO bill)	133,032,007,614	125,823,049,848	126,608,133,720	136,851,040,881	131,635,158,215	129,755,115,115	−7,095,925,766
Total 1970 bills (including the approved Labor-HEW-OEO bill)	135,144,895,614	128,473,530,368	128,416,451,220	136,851,040,881	129,306,910,091	129,043,105,491	−7,807,935,390
B. Bills for fiscal 1969:
1. Unemployment compensation (H.J. Res. 414)	36,000,000	36,000,000	36,000,000	36,000,000	36,000,000	36,000,000
2. Commodity Credit Corporation (H.J. Res. 584)	[6] 1,000,000,000	[6] 1,000,000,000	[6] 1,000,000,000	[6] 1,000,000,000	[6] 1,000,000,000	[6] 1,000,000,000
3. 2d supplemental (H.R. 11400)	4,364,006,956	3,783,212,766	3,783,212,766	4,814,305,334	4,459,669,644	4,352,357,644	−461,947,690
Release of reserves (under Public Law 90-364)	(82,463,000)	(82,766,000)	(82,766,000)	(79,999,000)	(80,230,000	(80,230,000)	(+231,000)
Total, 1969 bills	5,400,006,956	4,819,212,766	4,819,212,766	5,850,305,334	5,495,669,644	5,388,357,644	−461,947,690
C. Cumulative totals for the session:
1. Including vetoed Labor-HEW-OEO bill:
House	138,432,014,570	130,642,262,614	131,427,346,486				−7,004,668,084
Senate				142,701,346,215	137,130,827,859		−5,570,518,356
Enacted				142,701,346,215		[7] 135,143,472,759	[7] −7,557,873,456
2. Including approved Labor-HEW-OEO bill:
House	140,544,902,570	133,292,743,134	133,235,663,986				−7,309,238,584
Senate				142,701,346,215	134,802,579,735		−7,898,766,480
Enacted				142,701,346,215		134,431,463,135	−8,269,883,080

[1] In round amounts, the revised (April 1969) budget for fiscal 1970 tentatively estimated total new budget (obligational) authority for 1970 at $219,600,000,000 gross ($205,900,000,000 net of certain offsets made for budget summary purposes only), of which about $80,700,000,000 would become available, through so-called permanent authorizations, without further action by Congress, and about $138,900,000,000 would require "current" action by Congress (mostly in the appropriation bills). Also, the April Review of the budget contemplated budget requests for advance fiscal 1971 funding in 4 items totaling $1,661,000,000.

[2] These figures do not reflect the fiscal year 1970 budget proposal for postal rate increases, valued in the Summer Review of the 1970 budget at $315,800,000. Also, they do not reflect a revision downward of some $137,800,000 in postal revenues as estimated in the summer review.

[3] Reflects reduction of $175,000,000 for Appalachian highway program for 1970 and $175,000,000 for advance funding for 1971. Authorization act provided for contract authority in lieu of new obligational authority, with payments for liquidation to be appropriated later.

[4] Includes $1,226,000,000 fiscal 1971 advance funding estimate for elementary and secondary education, not considered by House in any bill (and not in the enacted bill).

[5] Reflects reduction of 2 percent ($346,776,624) imposed by section 410 of enacted bill (sec. 411 of Senate bill).

[6] Shifted from fiscal 1970 budget, a portion of which is technically classified in the budget as "liquidation of contract authorization" rather than as new budget (obligational) authority.

[7] Reflects further reduction of $54,650,000 (in the foreign assistance bill) as a result of the second conference agreement which took place in the 2d session.

Prepared in the House Committee on Appropriations.

THE CAREER EDUCATION PROGRAM

HON. ALBERT H. QUIE

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, the career education program proposed in the President's long needed message on higher education reform will bring the Federal Government further into partnership with the State in the formation and improvement of post high school educational institutions in critical skill areas. These have shown their great potential for providing occupational programs at a lower cost per student than 4-year institutions can. However, many States have been unable to provide postsecondary opportunities for career education because of fiscal problems. The entrance of the Federal Government into the field with the States will insure that we will be able to meet the demand for postsecondary programs.

The problem of postsecondary education goes beyond the construction and staffing of junior colleges. What is also needed is a well-defined vocational and technical education component in these schools, for we must recognize that all high school graduates need or can use a 4-year degree, while at the same time there is a growing need for technicians and trained personnel in industry, government, health, research, and many other fields. While not limited to them, the junior and community colleges are uniquely situated to provide these career programs, and yet many of the postsecondary institutions have not been able to provide these kinds of courses up until now. The emphasis of the President's message is on assisting the States in meeting the costs of starting new programs to teach critically needed skills. Thus, we can provide students with much-needed skills in fields in which they can establish careers. This is a most significant endeavor for the future of our country and its educational institutions. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this valuable program.

THE CLOSING OF TEXTILE PLANTS

HON. STROM THURMOND

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, in furtherance of the remarks I made on Friday, March 20, concerning the plight of the domestic textile industry, I wish to place in the RECORD an article published in the Greenville News of March 18, 1970, and an editorial published in the Greenville News of Thursday, March 19, 1970, concerning the closing of two textile plants in South Carolina and one in North Carolina. As a result of these closings, 2,000 employees will be without work between March 27 and April 5.

These people are out of work as a direct result of the continuing imports of synthetic fiber.

This is tragic news, as 2,000 people will be without paychecks and income with which to support their families during this time. This is the reason why we must curb imports immediately.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article, entitled "J. P. Stevens To Close Plants in North Carolina, South Carolina," and the editorial, entitled "Time To Act To Save Textiles," be printed in the Extensions of Remarks.

There being no objection, the article and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MONAGHAN, WATTS, TUXEDOS J. P. STEVENS TO CLOSE THREE PLANTS IN NORTH CAROLINA, SOUTH CAROLINA

J. P. Stevens & Co. Inc., confirmed Tuesday night that it would close two South Carolina plants and one in North Carolina for a week because of "poor business conditions and a need to adjust inventories."

A company spokesman said Monaghan mill here, the Watts plant at Laurens and the Tuxedo plant at Tuxedo, N.C., will be closed for the week, laying off more than 2,000 employees for the week of March 27–April 5.

An earlier report that the big Dunean mill Stevens operates at Greenville would be involved was denied by the company spokesman.

There were no other industry reports of other companies curtailing work at this time.

"We regret that business conditions are such that this curtailment has been necessary, but poor sales and abnormal inventories allow us no other choice.

"We are concerned that any of our people must lose work because of these conditions, one of the primary causes being the continuing imports of synthetic fibers such as these plants produce." the company official said.

The temporary layoffs brought an immediate reaction Tuesday in Washington, where 4th District Rep. James R. Mann reported he had taken the news to Chairman Wilbur Mills (D-Ark.) of the Ways and Means Committee and urged quick passage of pending legislation aimed at curbing textile imports.

"Although the reason given for the layoffs was simply 'business conditions,' I am persuaded that the great increase in cheap textile imports is at the root of the problem," Mann said.

"Mr. Mills was sympathetic and agreed that the situation is at the critical stage. I was very encouraged when he advised me that the committee would begin work on this problem 'very shortly'," Mann said.

Mann also said he was advising President Nixon of the development in this district "with the hope it will speed action by him."

"I feel Congress would give President Nixon any legislation he may need to deal with this critical problem that jeopardizes the economic well-being of so many people in our country," he said.

[From the Greenville News, Mar. 19, 1970]

TIME TO ACT TO SAVE TEXTILES

The one-week loss of work faced by more than 2,000 textile employes in Greenville, Laurens and Tuxedo, N.C., is a severe blow to them and their families and to the economy of this region and the state of South Carolina.

It represents a tragic loss of income for people who can ill afford it, especially as prices continue to rise. It is difficult to calculate the amount of individual hardship which will result from the shutdowns of Monaghan Mill in Greenville, Watts Mill in Laurens and the Tuxedo, N.C., plant during the week of March 27–April 5.

J. P. Stevens and Co., Inc., announcing the temporary closing of the synthetics fibers plants because of poor sales and rising inventories, rightly expressed concern for the people laid off for one week. There is cause for concern and reason to fear that more of the same may be in store in this region.

Although the textile industry long has been suffering general weakness in employment in the form of layoffs, overtime loss, curtailments and closing of some small, marginal plants, the drastic action by a major company brings home the full impact of the foreign imports problem faced by the industry, its workers and the region in which textile plants are concentrated.

The Stevens announcement noted that one of the primary causes for the shutdowns is "the continuing imports of synthetic fibers such as these plants produce."

This action by one of the nation's strongest textile companies ought to remove whatever doubts may have existed about the serious situation imposed on the industry by the unlimited flood of foreign imports into this country. There no longer is any excuse for Japan and other foreign countries to argue that the American textile industry has not been hurt.

At last report Japan continued to refuse any sort of voluntary agreement to limit the flood of Japanese textiles into the United States. That makes negotiations with other foreign nations impossible.

The time clearly has come for legislation to deal with a situation which threatens to ruin an industry vital to a wide area of the United States. Senators and House members from the textile area now must mount a concerted effort for relief in the form of action by Congress.

The time has come for the President of the United States strongly to advocate passage of relief legislation. President Nixon's administration has tried hard for months to deal with the Japanese. Apparently all efforts to negotiate have failed. As a result Mr. Nixon now must go to Congress in order to redeem the written pledge made to the textile industry and its workers to relieve them of the intolerable burden of unmerciful foreign competition in the domestic market.

The stark fact is that the textile industry cannot endure without serious damage the twin burdens of the domestic economic slowdown and unlimited foreign competition.

The nation cannot afford to let the industry deteriorate, because it is too important to the Southeast and to the effort to help lift minority groups up the economic ladder.

Rhetoric and maneuvering around no longer suffice. Concerted action by both the administration and Congress now becomes necessary.

IN MR. NIXON'S SILENCES IS A SHADOW OF A DOUBT

HON. HENRY HELSTOSKI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. HELSTOSKI. Mr. Speaker, it appears that we have another credibility gap on our hands. This time as it relates to Laos.

It is well spelled out in the following column by Mr. Stuart H. Loory as carried in the Record of Hackensack, N.J., on March 12, 1970:

IN MR. NIXON'S SILENCES IS A SHADOW OF A DOUBT

(By Stuart H. Loory)

Now President Nixon has bared some—but certainly not all—of the secrets of the clandestine war in Laos he inherited from two previous administrations. The United States, he openly admits, is neck deep in a part of the southeast Asia jungle war outside Vietnam.

In six years of fighting, 400 American airmen have become casualties, 400 airplanes have been lost—about as many as, maybe even more, than the number of fixed-wing airplanes the United States has lost over South Vietnam.

These facts emerged from the torpid calm of the Southern White House—the Key Biscayne, Fla., vacation retreat to which the President retired late last week to make his Laos statement.

Why not speak from Washington? If Mr. Nixon wanted to be completely candid, why not make the statement at a news conference where his words and intentions could really be probed and clarified?

Unfortunately, Mr. Nixon's statement on Laos was a politically reflexive reaction to a growing clamor for candor in the White House. It was intended to break the silence that has surrounded the secret war, to show that the nation harbors no secret guilt. But it was only half candid; and so it was wholly unsatisfactory.

The unhappy experience with the Gulf of Tonkin resolution of August 1964, originally presented as a show of solidarity behind President Lyndon B. Johnson but then construed by him as a virtual declaration of war, has taught Congress and the American people to read words carefully. The presentation of selected facts by the Johnson administration to bolster its case for the massive intervention in South Vietnam in 1965 has cautioned the American people to check and double-check on a President's facts.

And so, when Mr. Nixon says of Laos, "We have no plans for introducing combat forces into Laos," one must look for the loopholes like a Philadelphia lawyer.

No plans? Does that mean plans may be developed later? Maybe.

Ground combat forces? Does that mean more ground combat support forces—engineers to build roads and bridges, suppliers to carry ammunition to combat troops, repairmen to fix disabled weapons, advisers to aim and show the Laotians how to fire the weapons—might be dispatched?

Ground combat forces? What about escalating the American involvement through the introduction of more aircraft to fly cover for the CIA-trained and supplied Laotian forces as well as the Royal Laotian Army?

The President said: "The levels of our assistance have risen in response to the growth of North Vietnamese combat activities."

The clear implication of that sentence is that as North Vietnamese activities continue to grow, so will the United States'. And that, one remembers, was exactly the situation claimed in February 1965, when the State Department issued its famous white paper on South Vietnam as justification for escalating the Vietnam war.

Mr. Nixon says it is his goal to reduce American involvement in Laos. But he leaves no doubt that he is willing to escalate that involvement if necessary.

If Mr. Nixon wanted to dispel doubts about American intentions in Laos he could have started by promising not to send ground combat troops to Laos without consulting Congress. He could have been far more candid about the activities of the CIA in Laos. He could have admitted the United States' violation of the 1962 Geneva agreement on Laos more candidly at the same time he charged violation by the North Vietnamese. Then, starting from ground zero, he might win the true support of the American people.

Robert Bridges, the poet, once wrote:

"I told my secret out
So that none might be in doubt."

Unfortunately, there is still too much silence about Laos in the Nixon administration, and that leaves the suspicion that there is still secret guilt not only about actions there but about intentions.

A TEENAGER SPEAKS OUT IN BEHALF OF HER COUNTRY

HON. JOHN T. MYERS

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, there is increasing evidence that the silent majority among this Nation's young people are fed up with wearing the label of hippie, yippie, and peacenik which rightfully belongs to but a small percentage of their populace. An example of how one teenager has chosen to speak out in behalf of her country and those who have made the ultimate sacrifice to protect all that it stands for appeared recently in the Danville Commercial News in my district. When asked to name the American she most respected and why, this was the heart warming response from Miss Sharon Connor, 17, a high school senior from Rural Route 1, Covington, Ind.:

I don't know this particular man's name but I read about him everyday in the newspaper and I hear him everyday on the radio. I know that he has left his family, friends and everything he's ever had, except his pride, at home so that he and everyone may have the most important possession, freedom.

He's at work early in the morning before some of us have ever gone to bed and he works until it's impossible to go on. He doesn't receive much pay for the work he's doing even though this job is possibly the most important one in our country.

He takes a lot of criticism from other people who don't know a thing about his feelings. The man is ready to go to another country for long periods of time knowing that he may never come back to his country again.

He is willing to run across enemy territory if there is a chance of its doing any good for all the people back home.

I guess I could find out this man's name if I went to an airport where I could watch for a man in uniform to step from a plane.

Or I could take a drive through any cemetery. All I'd have to do is to look for the little American flag which would be waving across his grave. He had to be somewhere.

THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FUTURE HOMEMAKERS OF AMERICA

HON. WILLIAM H. NATCHER

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, the week of April 5 through 11 has been designated National Future Homemakers of America Week and this year's observance by 1,200 local high school chapters is particularly significant since it marks the 25th anniversary of this outstanding organization.

The theme for this national week is "25 Years of Sterling Opportunity" and this, together with the 1970 objective—"To Promote Communication for the Enrichment of Human Relationships"—goes a long way toward accurately describing exactly what the FHA is all about.

During these 25 years some 15 million home economic students in junior and senior high schools have been provided the training and experiences that broaden the home economic education program and the opportunities for improving their personal, family, and community life. In reflecting upon the splendid accomplishments of the 604,000 members of this voluntary organization since it was founded June 11, 1945, I think it is especially gratifying to know that these constructive and commendable activities have taken place not only in the United States but also in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and in a number of our American schools overseas. I have a special reason for this statement because I have the high honor and good fortune to be an honorary member of the Future Homemakers of America and am naturally very much in favor of increasing its scope wherever possible so that these young people can, through meaningful communication, promote understanding, and strengthen our relationship with all peoples.

Furthermore, I take particular pride in the fact that Kentucky was the first State FHA Association to affiliate with the national organization. We now have 261 chapters with a membership of 17,328 and, based upon the splendid achievements of the chapters in the Second Congressional District, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that this organization continues to be an impressive asset in our State.

Certainly during these days of dissent and demonstrations it is good to know that above the din of confusion and revolt we have thousands of fine young people hard at work on projects and programs to promote this country's future. In my opinion the Future Homemakers of America long ago established themselves as a vital and integral part of this country's youth community. I am confident that they are fully aware that they are the future of their country and that they are not only equipped but eager to meet the challenges that lie ahead. The creed of this organization assures the concern and consideration of these young people for their fellowman.

In extending congratulations for 25 years of pride, progress, and purpose, and in paying tribute to these outstanding young individuals I want to express the hope that the unlimited enthusiasm and endurance which they have exhibited in pursuing their various projects during this quarter of a century will continue to flourish at a pace in keeping with their remarkable accomplishments of the past.

HIGHER EDUCATION OPPORTUNITY ACT OF 1970

HON. KEITH G. SEBELIUS

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. SEBELIUS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the administration has proposed, through the Higher Education Opportunity Act of 1970, to do something about increasing funds available to college students for educational loans. As you may remember, during the last session Congress was called upon to provide remedy when banks were unable to make further guaranteed student loans because the prime rate had exceeded the ceiling which the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare was authorized to certify. The President has prepared legislation which should prevent such a situation in the future, and which, in fact, should encourage even greater participation by banks.

Basically, the proposal calls for the creation of a National Student Loan Association to provide liquidity in the student loan credit market. This institution would buy student loans back from the banks, colleges, and universities allowing them to use these funds to make additional loans. The President has estimated that at least $1 billion in new funds would be drawn into the student loan market by the NSLA, all of it at no additional cost to the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I urge speedy action on this very worthwhile proposal.

POLLUTION COSTLY PROBLEM TO SOLVE

HON. JOHN M. ZWACH

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. ZWACH. Mr. Speaker, this is to be the decade of the environment. The administration, the Congress, and the people are committed to cleaning up the pollution problems we have been creating since the birth of our country.

While everyone agrees that this is a most worthwhile endeavor, too many people fail to give the cost factor the serious consideration it deserves. However, many of our newspaper editors in the Sixth Congressional District do not have veils over their eyes.

They are pointing out to their readers that this is a costly campaign that must be pursued carefully and patiently.

Typical of these comments is an editorial by Gordon E. Duenow, editor of the Little Falls Daily Transcript. I commend for reading to my colleagues and insert it in the RECORD:

POLLUTION COSTLY PROBLEM TO SOLVE

"The time has come when we can wait no longer to repair the damage already done and to guide us in the future," President Nixon told Congress in his special message yesterday in which he asked for huge federal expenditures to control pollution. Nixon's proposal calls for federal expenditures of $4 billion with states and local governments contributing another $6 billion.

Nixon urged "total mobilization" of all Americans in a concentrated effort to clean the air and purify the nation's polluted waters.

The president had indicated in his "state of the union" message that he would send a special message on pollution to Congress.

What response will be received at the state and local government level remains to be seen. These governmental units are hard pressed for money just to meet operating costs without adding millions for pollution control even though it is evident that the problem is rapidly becoming desperate.

Response of industry, which is the cause of much of the pollution problem we have, is another question. In fact, U.S. Steel Monday told the Minnesota Pollution Control Agency it does not intend to spend money to clean up smoke output from open hearth furnaces at Duluth. "Although U.S. Steel does not intend to quit making steel in Minnesota, that would be the alternative if pollution control standards and deadlines are enforced," Dunsmore said.

U.S. Steel estimates it will cost $4.5 to $5 million to install air cleaners for the furnaces.

Attorney General Douglas Head also has initiated three separate court actions in an effort to stop further pollution of the Watonwan River in southern Minnesota and Stanchfield Creek in Isanti County. He also has obtained a permanent injunction against Aldrich Milk Products, Inc., prohibiting them from further polluting the Partridge River in Wadena County.

The village of Madelia was one of those involved in court action as it was charged with causing pollution of the Watonwan River.

Several years ago the state itself was involved in Morrison County when an inadequate sewer system at Camp Ripley contributed to a pollution problem in the Mississippi River. This problem now has been corrected.

Little Falls also was forced to initiate an extensive storm sewer system project in order to alleviate a serious condition at the sanitary sewer plant. This project cost thousands of dollars and the problem still has not been entirely eliminated. It also remains a possibility that the expansion of home building along the Mississippi River may create additional pollution problems in the future.

So it can easily be seen that there is a serious problem but hard pressed local governmental units find it almost impossible to finance the needed projects. A little government aid will help but probably will not be adequate to do the job without placing new and serious burdens on already desperate property taxpayers.

Without question the problem is there, looking us right in the face. But where do we find the money?

PUBLIC OPINION POLL IN FOURTH DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE REFLECTS DEEP CONCERN OVER NATIONAL PROBLEMS

HON. JOE L. EVINS

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. EVINS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a public opinion poll which I recently conducted in the Fourth Congressional District of Tennessee, which I am honored to represent in the Congress, indicates a deep and growing concern over such national problems as the conflict in Vietnam, pollution, crime, and security for our older citizens, among others.

Because of the interest of the American people and my colleagues in these major problems, I place my newsletter concerning the poll in the RECORD herewith.

My newsletter, Capitol Comments, follows:

CAPITOL COMMENTS

(By Hon. JOE L. EVINS)

PUBLIC OPINION POLL REFLECTS DEEP CONCERN OVER NATIONAL PROBLEMS: VIETNAM, POLLUTION, CRIME, SECURITY FOR OLDER CITIZENS, AMONG OTHERS

The tremendous response to my recent public opinion poll in the Fourth Congressional District indicates a deep and growing concern over major national problems. Results of the poll have just been released to the press of Tennessee. Hundreds of citizens felt so strongly about issues of current public interest and importance that they wrote letters explaining their views and opinions in more detail. A total of 12,589 responses have been received to date.

Concerning major national issues, the poll showed that:

Virtually all of our people responding want our American troops to be returned home from Vietnam as soon as possible—80 percent favored gradual withdrawal as the South Vietnamese assume an increasingly greater share of combat responsibility, while 17 percent favored immediate withdrawal.

The matter of pollution of air and water and our environment is a grave concern to our people with 89 percent responding favoring increased Federal expenditures to curb pollution.

Crime and lawlessness is another major issue of great concern. A total of 85 percent favored increased Federal appropriations to strengthen state and law enforcement agencies with only 10 percent opposed.

Concern for security for our older citizens was also apparent. A total of 74 percent of those responding favored a system of cost-of-living increases in Social Security.

Inflation is an over-riding concern. A total of 66 percent of those responding favored price and wage controls in the battle against inflation and 60 percent opposed the present policy of high interest rates.

Rural development is considered vital and necessary. Sixty-six percent favored legislation to provide for tax credit for business and industry as an incentive for locating or expanding in rural and small town areas.

Other important results of the poll include these:

72 percent opposed the proposed new welfare legislation which would provide for a minimum income of $1,600 guaranteed to all families at an initial annual cost of $5 billion.

47 percent favored a professional volunteer army with 41 percent opposed—and 44 percent favored further reform of the Selective Service System.

56 percent were opposed to turning the Post Office Department over to a private corporation, 54 percent favored substantial reductions in the space program and 59 percent were opposed to foreign aid.

This informed opinion poll reflects the concern of our citizens over current public issues.

MAURITIUS INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. ADAM C. POWELL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, the people of this small island in the Indian Ocean attained their full independence on March 12, 1968. These ethnically quite various peoples seem to have been united in their aim of achieving independence, following the end of the last war they succeeded in proving it to their overlords. Fortunately for them the British Government, which had ruled the people of Mauritius for more than 100 years, was not in position to deny them the claim of self-government and eventual full national independence.

Mauritius is a rather crowded island, with an area of about 720 square miles and a population of more than 800,000. Its inhabitants are mostly agriculturists, and their most valuable product is sugar, though tea and tobacco are also raised there. They have a parliamentary form of government. The government has chosen to remain in the British Commonwealth. Mauritius is also a member of the United Nations. The leaders and people of Mauritius have shown the ability and maturity to govern themselves peaceably and have attained some measure of economic independence. We wish them power to continue their progress in peace.

JOHN WILL ANDERSON BOYS' CLUB OF GARY, IND.

HON. RAY J. MADDEN

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the great Calumet industrial region, located in the northwest corner of Indiana immediately adjacent to the city of Chicago, Ill., boasts of many large industries. In this area are located three major steel mills, many oil refineries operated by the Nation's leading oil companies, and several hundred other major and smaller industries.

The community is especially proud of an internationally known manufacturing company, the Anderson Co., which is the Nation's largest manufacturer of automobile and airplane windshield wipers known as Anco products.

The founder of this company was John Will Anderson, internationally known industrialist and one of the Indiana Calumet region's outstanding citizens. The former head of the Anderson Co. passed away several years ago. Previous to his passing he, along with Mr. Edward C. Larson and other officials of the company, conceived and established the John Will Anderson Boys' Club. Recently, I attended ceremonies in Gary, Ind., honoring Mr. John W. Anderson and his cooriginators of the John Will Anderson Boys' Club. Special tribute during the ceremony was paid to Mr. Edward C. Larson, president of the Anderson Co. of Gary, and also the director who continued the great work of the John Will Anderson Boys' Club and expanded its facilities and multiplied its membership to accommodate additional thousands of boys in the Gary and surrounding community.

EDWARD C. LARSON, PRESIDENT OF THE ANDERSON COMPANY

Mr. Larson has been elected a National Director of the Boys' Clubs of America, and this honor to him was announced at a White House dinner for the Board of Directors of the National Boys' Clubs of America.

The people of Gary are justifiably proud of the accomplishments of Mr. Larson and the John Will Anderson Boys' Club. This club in little over 2 years of operation has made a tremendous contribution to the lives of the young people of their community.

The scope of the John Will Anderson Boys' Club, which operates in conjunction with the Steel City Boys' Club, Inc., includes promotion of educational and recreational activities which aim at the development of character and the finest qualities of citizenship among youth in the Gary area.

The club, founded by the late John Will Anderson and directed by Einar Johansen, provides comprehensive programs and facilities for over 2,000 young people. These include athletic and physical development programs, specialized job training, arts and crafts schooling, musical and photography training. A boys' club library is available, for reading and studying, as well as for the development of powers of expression and communication on the part of young boys.

Of special significance in the clubs' operation is the furnishing of complete and well-balanced meals to young members each day, under a program conducted in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's special food service program for children.

Through the Edward C. Larson scholarship fund, any young member of the Anderson Boys' Club is eligible for financial aid in order to pursue a course of study at either a liberal arts college or a technical vocational school.

Earn and learn programs offer boys an opportunity to work with hand and power tools. A metal finishing class provides young men from 15 to 18 years of age job training in the field of metal refinishing of office equipment. An agreement between the John Will Anderson Boys' Club and one of Gary's largest office equipment dealers has made this job training both a source of income and a vehicle of community good will for the club.

In addition, the club's physical department offers both team and individual sports to members. During the basketball season, the boys' clubs had four teams representing Gary in boys' club State tournaments. The ages of boys on the teams ranged from 10 to 18. The team for players 13 and 14 years of age won the Indiana State Boys Club Association championship. Along with basketball, gymnastics, tumbling, four bowling lanes are available at the club. Instructional, league and individual bowling are offered daily.

Educational opportunities are both numerous and diversified at the boys' club. A year-round schedule of trips affords members many opportunities to visit interesting sites both in Gary and elsewhere. Boys' club members have visited museums in Chicago, farms in southern Indiana, the Great Lakes Naval Training Center, sporting events in Chicago, and the time trials at the Indianapolis 500. Through such activities, boys have a chance to travel outside of their immediate area, meet new people, and see places they had previously only heard of or read about.

Indeed, the successful operation of the John Will Anderson Boys' Club is a source of pride to the people of Gary. But beyond this, the contribution being made by this club serves as a source of inspiration and dedication for citizens throughout the country to give added support to boys' club operations in their own communities.

MAN'S INHUMANITY TO MAN—HOW LONG?

HON. WILLIAM J. SCHERLE

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. SCHERLE. Mr. Speaker, a child asks: "Where is daddy?" A mother asks: "How is my son?" A wife asks: "Is my husband alive or dead?"

Communist North Vietnam is sadistically practicing spiritual and mental genocide on over 1,400 American prisoners of war and their families.

How long?

OIL IMPORT CONTROL

HON. WILLIAM D. HATHAWAY

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues a letter signed by 48 Members and sent to President Nixon last week. The letter urges the President to immediately implement the recent recommendation of his own Task Force on Oil Import Control by replacing the current quota system with a system of tariffs. The letter also urges the President to consider eventual removal of all control over oil imports—a move which could save the average American family nearly $100 a year in fuel costs.

I insert the letter in the RECORD at this point:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., March 18, 1970.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We are disappointed by your failure to implement the recommendations of your Cabinet Task Force on Oil Import Control. The present restrictions on oil imports, which will remain unchanged unless you act, forced American consumers to pay an extra $5 billion for oil products last year. The annual cost to consumers will rise to $8.4 billion per year by 1930 unless changes are made.

Last year alone, the oil import quota system cost the average American family of four an extra $96 for gasoline and heating oil. In many parts of the country the extra cost greatly exceeded this—in Vermont the average family of four paid an extra $180, and in Wyoming it paid $228 extra.

We can understand your concern for the well-being of the oil industry. However, it is the security of the nation, and not that of the oil industry, that the oil import control program is intended to protect. As your Cabinet Task Force put it:

"The governing statute authorizes government intervention in support of domestic price and production only for the extraordinary and compelling purpose of protecting the national security."

The Task Force then went on to state that the fixed quota limitations, which you are retaining, "bear no reasonable relation to current requirements for protection either of the national economy or of essential oil consumption.

"We find," the Task Force said, "that a phased-in liberalization of import controls would not so injure the domestic industry as to weaken the national economy to the extent of impairing our national security."

The Task Force then recommended that the current import quota system be phased out over a period of three to five years, and that a system of variable tariffs be substituted for it. The initial tariff on Eastern Hemisphere crude oil would be $1.45 a barrel, with a ceiling (10 percent of domestic demand) on oil from that region. Oil from more secure Western Hemisphere sources would be subject to preferential lower tariffs. The immediate effect of the plan would be a reduction in the price of domestic crude oil from $3.30 to $3.00 per barrel, with savings to consumers estimated at less than a penny per gallon of gasoline.

This is truly a modest proposal, since removing import controls entirely would save consumers around 4 cents a gallon on gasoline. But it is a step in the right direction and we regret that you have declined to take it.

A necessary further step has been recommended by the Chairman of the Task Force, Labor Secretary George P. Shultz. He has urged that a planning schedule be established now to phase in a reduction of the tariff to $1.00 over a three to five year period. This would reduce the price the consumer has to pay for gasoline by another one cent per gallon.

Finally, we are concerned that the Cabinet Task Force may have dismissed the alternative of total removal of all import controls too hastily. The benefit to American consumers from this alternative—more than $8 billion a year by 1980—requires that it receive careful and continuing consideration. The Task Force said only that it was "unable on present evidence to rule out the possibility" that adopting this alternative would, in the case of certain "conceivable" supply interruptions, leave us with an inadequate supply of oil. "Whether such conceivable interruptions are "reasonably possible," the Task Force said, "is a matter on which judgments may vary."

We urge you, therefore, to direct the Oil Policy Committee which you have established to give full consideration to the possibility of totally eliminating controls on oil imports as part of their task of considering "both interim and long-term adjustments that will increase the effectiveness and enhance the equity of the oil import program."

Sincerely,

Henry S. Reuss, Lee H. Hamilton, Clarence D. Long, Richard Bolling, Edward P. Boland, Richard L. Ottinger, Brock Adams, James G. O'Hara, Donald M. Fraser, Allard K. Lowenstein, George E. Brown, Jr., Thomas M. Rees, Peter W. Rodino, Jr., William D. Ford, Louis Stokes, John C. Culver.

William Clay, James H. Scheuer, Lester L. Wolff, Robert O. Tiernan, Hugh L. Carey, Peter N. Kyros, Robert N. Giaimo, Edward I. Koch, William D. Hathaway, David R. Obey, Benjamin S. Rosenthal, Joshua Eilberg, Leonard Farbstein, William L. St. Onge, John V. Tunney, Abner Mikva.

John Brademas, Joseph P. Addabbo, Sam M. Gibbons, Michael J. Harrington, Dante B. Fascell, Bertram L. Podell, Jonathan B. Bingham, William S. Moorhead, Richard D. McCarthy, Frank J. Brasco, William F. Ryan, James J. Howard, Torbert H. Macdonald, Emilio Q. Daddario, Henry Helstoski, Don Edwards.

GIVE US MORE AGNEWS

HON. E. Y. BERRY

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, what the public needs is more Agnews to give the public views to the news media.

The news media has been spoon feeding the public with half-truths and innuendoes with no one else in high public life to give the public the truth.

Another glaring example was in the Sunday Washington Post in the column of Richard Harwood who wrote among other things:

It was an electorate that proved, in the 1960's, to be murderous enough to assassinate three national leaders, vengeful enough to depose a sitting President, fickle enough to switch nearly a third of its votes between 1964 and 1968, apathetic enough that more people (40 million plus) failed to vote in 1968 than voted for any of the candidates for the presidency.

How can anyone say it was the electorate who assassinated any of the three. The truth is it was three "maniacs" who did it—not the American electorate.

But this is part of the great propaganda program. Give us more Agnews to give the views of the public and the electorate.

HIGHER EDUCATION REFORM

HON. CHESTER L. MIZE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. MIZE. Mr. Speaker, President Nixon's message on higher education reform spelled out several areas which are in need of change. Not the least of these is in the area of Federal assistance to students in institutions of higher learning. For many years we have supported a whole range of programs designed to help students finance their educations. For the most part, these programs assisted students from both low- and middle-income families alike, and strains on the Federal budget made it impossible to provide enough assistance for all who wished to receive it. But now the President has proposed a thorough realinement of these programs to insure that there are loans and grants available to the children of the Nation's poorest families for higher education. For students whose families are better able to assist their education, he has proposed the creation of the National Student Loan Association to enable students to obtain Government-guaranteed loans.

This NSLA will serve to widen the availability of guaranteed student loans by creating a market for existing loans to which the banks and other lending institutions can sell their loan paper, thus increasing the pool of resources available for lending to students. Liquidity of student loans will solve the main problem which has kept a large percentage of the Nation's banks from participating in the program. By expanding credit in this manner it would be possible to terminate the payments now made to banks to induce them to make student loans, and interest rates on these loans will fluctuate at the market rate. Additionally, the length of time over which recipients must repay their loans will be expanded to ease the burden on those who have received the loans.

The proposals contained in the President's message are worthy of our support. I urge all my colleagues to get behind this effort.

MAINE SUGARBEET INDUSTRY

HON. ODIN LANGEN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. LANGEN. Mr. Speaker, my heart is always gladdened when an individual or a group of people tries to give a hand to someone less fortunate. In 1962, it seemed on the surface that it was in good faith that the Federal Government through its Area Redevelopment Administration and later the Economic Development Administration tried to lend a hand in providing jobs and economic stability to Aroostook County, Maine.

However, Mr. Speaker, there were some who said at the time that what appeared to be a worthwhile project on the surface was neither beneficial to the northern New England area nor was it economically practical. Those who made these observations in 1962 and in 1963 have been proven correct in their analysis.

Many of these same people are now charging that continued meddling in the agricultural industry and the ecology of Aroostook County is disruptive, expensive, and politically motivated. If the Economic Development Administration persists in its efforts to salvage a losing venture by further investment of taxpayers' money in the Aroostook County sugarbeet processing plant, it can easily damage its own credibility and impair its ability to secure private financing in its future efforts to expand economic opportunities.

I am one who, in 1963, called to the attention of this Congress the errors in judgment that compounded themselves in Aroostook County. My area of concern was the allocation of the sugarbeet quota to an area of the country which was not proven a sugarbeet producing region. I was deeply concerned because there is a strictly enforced sugarbeet acreage allotment. If the allotment is divided in such a way as to restrict sugarbeet production in an area where sugarbeet production is a major source of income and is a thriving industry in order to entice sugarbeet production where it is not economical, then the Department of Agriculture is cooperating in a gross violation of faith placed in it by Congress and America's farmers. But this is exactly what it has done.

Today, some $10 million in Federal funds has been invested in the Aroostook County plant of Maine Sugar Industries. Another $8 million has been secured through private financing which is guaranteed by the State of Maine and which may soon become the liability of the taxpayers of that State. The damage to Prestile Stream in the form of pollution may never be estimated in terms of dollars. The loss of revenue suffered by two other New England sugar processors is continuing and I have not seen the estimates by these private, free-enterprise firms who have found it necessary to compete with Maine Sugar Industries, a federally subsidized operation.

We should have taken a cue from Great Western Sugar Co., a large national sugar refining firm, who decided that the investment was unwarranted. But, instead, EDA found a firm which had never been involved in sugar refining.

Not to say that this is not enough of a loss to warrant an investigation of the EDA procedures involved, but my concern is for the sugarbeet producers in States like mine where the industry is successful and where the sugar is refined by hard-working businessmen who not only operate their businesses to compete with Maine Sugar Industries, but who also have to pay the taxes we are spending to try to make job opportunity out of a sow's ear.

Whatever errors in judgment were made in 1962 and 1963 by the Area Redevelopment Administration and the Economic Development Administration were abetted by the Department of Agriculture in April 1964, when it announced it was allocating 33,000 acres of the national sugarbeet quota to Aroostook County, Maine. I said at the time that job opportunity and economic development could best be realized by expanding the sugarbeet quota in the Red River Valley of North Dakota and Minnesota where farmers have a proven record of efficient sugarbeet production and where the industry has been built through years of hard work and free enterprise.

In a recent issue of the Wall Street Journal, I note that Maine Sugar Industries has offered 3 million common shares at $6 a share on the open market. The company anticipates revenue from the sales of $18 million. Firm records indicate that the company showed a loss of $2.4 million during the 9-month fiscal period ending last July 31. Moreover, three creditors have filed suit against Maine Sugar Industries asking a U.S. district court to adjudge the company bankrupt. The losses were blamed, according to the March 16 issue of the paper, on a disappointing sugarbeet crop.

Even the German variety of beets which were imported just for this fiasco did not meet expectations. Farmers will not grow them because they have neither the inclination to experiment with a new crop which they cannot trust nor the confidence in the failing firm which has failed to pay farmers for nearly $1.5 million worth of the crop planted, harvested, and processed. The New York beet growers who have not received payment for their product are now considering suit against Maine Sugar Industries.

The community of Easton, Maine, where the plant is located, is owed $300,000 in back taxes and the Federal Water Pollution Control Agency has granted $196,000 to help clean up Prestile Stream, a stream where 5 years ago the trout fishing was considered excellent. Of the 33,000 acres of the national sugarbeet quota allocated to Maine, a mere 3,000 acres has been planted.

Since there was obviously not enough local sugarbeet production, EDA has already advanced Maine Sugar Industries another $2.5 million to convert its plant to a sugarcane processing plant. Now, raw sugar is imported from overseas to again try to bail out the Aroostook plant. The end result is that the domestic sugarbeet quota is limited by the allocation to New England where the beets are not grown. The domestic sugar industry further pays the bill for MSI because of the impact of imported sugar. Everyone pays the taxes that are used to hold up the Easton, Maine, plant. And everyone pays the taxes that are used to try to clean up the river that their tax money has been used to pollute.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in development and I support many Federal and State efforts to improve economic opportunity wherever opportunity is needed. I would be the first to support a plan to help improve the economic stability of Aroostook County, Maine. I have supported in the past and continue to support plans to improve the economic condition of rural America.

But I have never advocated or approved of a plan that simply steals what rightfully belongs in one place in an attempt to curry favor in another place. And I do not continue to defend an unworkable and impractical project after it has proved to be failure.

Mr. Speaker, the Red River Valley of Minnesota and North Dakota is not a wealthy area. There are many hard-working, business-like, and independent people in the valley. A good number of them raise sugarbeets in order to make a living for themselves and their families. There are over 100,000 acres of sugarbeets under cultivation in the Red River Valley. By allocating the 33,000 acres to this area instead of to New England, the benefits can be reaped by Minnesota and North Dakota farmers. They ask no Federal funds and no heavy EDA investment in a charity drive. They ask only the opportunity to work and to expand their industry.

If there is also a need for economic development in Aroostook County, Maine, I will support a well-considered plan of assistance. But there is also a need for economic development in an area with which I am familiar.

The Department of Agriculture can provide an economic boost in the Red River Valley and it can do it for about $20 million less than in Aroostook County, Maine. This is an example of what I have been saying on this floor for many years: People solve problems: Federal money does not solve problems. Give people a chance where they have demonstrated their ability and industry. They will not fail us. Take from their right to earn a living in order to bolster a dubious venture such as this one and you will destroy the incentive of both the people of the Red River Valley and the people of Aroostook County, Maine.

SCHOOL PRAYER

HON. JAMES A. BURKE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I had the great pleasure of recently conversing with the Reverend Robert G. Howes, national coordinator, Citizens for Public Prayer. Father Howes also holds an associate professorship and is chairman of City and Regional Planning at Catholic University, Washington, D.C.

I think that Father Howes' remarks on the subject of school prayer will prove of interest to the Members of this body and I would like to take this opportunity to submit them for the RECORD.

The article is as follows:

CHALLENGE TO THE DEMOCRACY: PUBLIC REVERENCE

(By Rev. Robert G. Howes)

When the U.S. Supreme Court interprets the First Amendment of the Federal Constitution in a manner which radically contradicts the consistent practice of the majority of the states, it does no singular, minimal thing. Whatever the particular practice, that interpretation immediately becomes a precedent affecting the whole future of religion in our public life. As such it must deeply concern not only those whose practice is denied but also those who are involved in any way with religion as subject to and supportive of public policy.

On June 25, 1962, the Supreme Court interpreted the First Amendment as barring the following prayer:

"Almighty God, we acknowledge our dependence upon Thee and we ask Thy blessings upon us, our parents, our teachers, and our country."

The prayer had been composed by a committee of religious leaders. It was made available by the State of New York for an entirely voluntary recitation by pupils and teachers in its public schools. Justice Stewart, in dissent, noted:

"The Court has misapplied a great constitutional principle . . . What is relevant to the issue here is not the history of an established church in 16th century England or in 18th century America, but the history of the religious traditions of our people, reflected in countless practices of the institutions and officials of our government."

On June 17, 1962, the Supreme Court widened this interpretation to ban the Lord's Prayer and Bible reading in the public schools of Maryland and Pennsylvania. Once again, no teacher had been required to lead prayer, no pupil to join in reciting it. Specific provision was made for abstention on the part of those who did not wish to participate. There are many pleasant phrases in the two majority decisions. Most of them are collateral remarks, obiter dicta, that is remarks incidental to the real deciding reason. One could, and some did, assemble such remarks and claim that the court had done nothing more serious than to rule out a residual unfairness, leaving public religion itself wholly intact.

There are, however, other obiter dicta which are less sanguine. For instance, in the first decision Justice Douglas enumerates various instances of government accommodation to religion. Bishop James Pike, appearing before a Senate committee in 1962, called such reasonable accommodation "the great American middle way." Justice Douglas says "our system at the federal and state levels is presently honey-combed" with accommodation. "Nevertheless," he continues, "I think it is an unconstitutional undertaking whatever form it takes." In fact, the deed of the decisions, what the then Harvard Law School Dean Erwin Griswold called "the absolute and . . . extreme" reasoning of the court, is dangerously basic. Henry P. Van Dusen, then President of Union Theological Seminary, wrote:

"The corollary in both law and logic of the Supreme Court's recent interdictions is inescapable, prohibition of the affirmative recognition and collaboration by government at all levels with all organs of religion in all relationships and circumstances." [1]

Fordham University Law School Professor Charles E. Rice said:

"The school prayer decisions, if followed, predictably will have the effect of raising agnosticism to the rank of the official public religion of the United States. The Court has now cast aside the historical affirmation by government in this country of the essential truth of theism, has embarked upon a search for 'neutrality,' a search incapable of success, and has substituted agnosticism for the theistic affirmation to which a small minority has objected so strongly. And for its action the Court can point to no durable justification beyond its own inflated rhetoric and a tortured historical interpretation." [2]

The Boston Pilot editorialized:

"All Public Life Affected.

"The Supreme Court in the Lord's Prayer and Bible ruling has continued along a path unhappily familiar to all from its earlier decisions. The same tedious arguments emphasizing the 'establishment of religion' clause are brought forth to support a position which turns its back on the total American tradition and outlaws the present practices of 39 states . . . Let us suppose that the Lord's Prayer and the Bible are excluded from the American public schools for precisely the reasons given by the Supreme Court. What is the next step? Clearly, all other expression of religion in public life must now be deleted . . ." [3]

To suggest that pleasant phrases en route to decision can override the deed of the decisions themselves is to ignore the heart of the matter. That heart clearly is the equation by the Supreme Court of "establishment" with public reverence, whether free or not, whether institutional and sectarian or not. Even to question such an equation, the court said in its second decision, is "of value only as academic exercises!" The situation is, in short, as it was a century ago when Abraham Lincoln commented on the Dred Scott decision;

"When all the words, the collateral matter was cleared away from it, all the chaff was fanned out of it, it was a bare absurdity. . . . The Dred Scott decision covers the whole ground, and while it occupies it, there is no room for the shadow of a starved pigeon to occupy the same ground." [4]

Five years have passed since the first prayer ban. In those years, several significant things have happened.

(1) Literally hundreds of bills were introduced in both the House and Senate calling for a clarifying amendment to restore the First Amendment to its preban interpretation and to forestall a further widening of the court's logic. There were 117 such bills on the House side alone in the spring of 1964. Senate Joint Resolution Number 1 of the 90th Congress was signed by 42 senators of both parties. It proposed a restorative constitutional amendment which would read:

"Nothing contained in this Constitution shall abridge the right of persons lawfully assembled in any public building which is supported in whole or in part through the expenditure of public funds, to participate in nondenominational prayer."

(2) Catholic response to the prayer bans was openly mixed, though there is no possible doubt that Catholics were in great numbers part of the massive proamendment majority across the nation. The National Council of Catholic Youth officially recorded itself as opposed to the prayer bans and called upon all of its local units to work for reversal. Otherwise, where Catholic apathy and even support of the decisions showed itself, it has been suggested that an underlying cause was self-interest:

"It may be that some of it is motivated by the thought that if public education can be completely secularized (so that, as it has been said, 'religion' in such quarters becomes 'a dirty word'), then there will be an increased public demand for sectarian education which can combine religion with general education. This could then be an argument in favor of parochial schools, and as public schools decline, the argument for public support of parochial schools can be advanced in one guise or another." [5]

I hope this estimate is inaccurate. I fear it may be, in at least a partial sense, accurate. Our bishops wrote once that "religion is our chief national asset," and as such what happened to it anywhere at law must affect it everywhere. I am afraid some of us have simply failed to make the vital connection between what occurred in the prayer ban decisions and those aspects of the First Amendment which preoccupy us more immediately. Too many Catholics have simply failed to appreciate that any fundamental interpretation of the First Amendment by the Supreme Court must over a period of time operate in all areas of religion and public policy, including the area of government aid to nonpublic schools under religious auspices.

(3) Eleven of the 13 justices who passed on the New York prayer issue prior to its arrival at the Supreme Court ruled it constitutional. The attorneys general of 19 states submitted a "friend of the court" brief to the Supreme Court, prior to the first decision, which said in part:

"Our founding fathers, together with the great and God-fearing leaders of the last century and a half, would be profoundly shocked were they to have been told in their day that in this year of our Lord . . . a voluntary nondenominational acknowledgment of a Supreme Being and a petition for His blessings recited by American children in their classrooms is being seriously attacked as a violation of the Constitution of the United States." [6]

It was clear from Congressional reaction that a massive mail concurring with such judgments was hitting Capitol Hill. "Kingsize" was how Senator Dirksen described it. Resolutions endorsing what came to be called the Peoples Amendment for Public Prayer came from the National Conference of Governors, the National Conference of Mayors, legislatures of several states, the National Jaycees, the Veterans of Foreigns Wars, the American Legion, and from such men as Billy Graham, Cardinal Cushing, the late Cardinal Spellman and Bishop Fulton Sheen. Sampling after sampling confirmed the will of the nation. The Gallup Poll in September 1963 recorded a three-to-one majority for reversing the court in its prayer decisions. In October 1964 the Harris Poll put the figure at 82 percent for amendment. Congressional home district polls backed the national sampling. Again and again there was no subject on which more of a congressman's constituents were united than on the need for a prayer amendment, and no subject in which "don't knows" ran lower, or majorities ran consistently higher. At each hearing on prayer amendment proposals, thousands of proamendment petitions were presented. About 40,000 petitions were introduced on the very first day of the House hearings (1964) by Congressman Fallon of Maryland. To the Senate hearings (1966), we introduced in behalf of amendment 35,000 petitions from Pennsylvania, 30,000 from New York and 50,000 from the Midwest. In the spring of 1967 Good Housekeeping magazine came up again with an 80-plus percentage for amendment.

(4) Despite all this, not one single normal floor vote has been held in five-and-a half years in either house of Congress on even the technicality of proposing a prayer amendment to the nation. And hearings in this critical matter were forced in the House Judiciary Committee only after a discharge petition to by-pass Chairman Emanuel Celler, who was bitterly negative, had nearly succeeded.

(5) In the wake of the prayer ban decisions, things have not stood still. A number of trends have developed. Two are of major importance. First, a trend toward a kind of fearful indecision on the part of public authority. School boards everywhere were from the start anxiously uncertain about whether and how religion was to survive in the public classroom. In some instances, boards have defiled the court, but this is, patently, no solution to the problem. In a few instances, boards have tried to substitute various procedures, such as God sandwiched between Thoreau and Ben Franklin for morning assembly reading. These instances, however, remain so are that each one is the subject of national notice. In most cases the net result has been one of the following: a) to rule religion out entirely; b) to emasculate religion before it is permitted in the school, thus reducing it to the merest art, history or literature; c) to decide any particular question involving religion in the classroom in favor of parents who might conceivably object to it along lines indicated in the prayer ban record. Secondly, there has been a trend toward enlargement of the prayer ban to affect other practices of public reverence. Courts and some attorneys general have relied on prayer ban decisions to strike down kindergarten prayers and such substitutes as the singing of patriotic anthems. In the fall of 1966 the Supreme Court relied significantly on the decisions to knock out aid for church-related colleges in Maryland.

Meanwhile, it was again and again made clear by such opponents of religion in public life as Madalyn Murray O'Hair that the prayer ban would be used as a launching pad for further attacks on all surviving instances of public reverence. It is, of course, impossible to predict with precision just how far the court will go toward accommodating these attacks, but its defenses against them must be seriously weakened by the majority reasoning in the prayer ban cases.

Of course, at the very base of the prayer amendment issue stands the issue of parental rights. There is no question that God belongs in the homes and the churches of America. There is no question that a serious reexamination of His presence there is imperative. But religion is not strengthened at the hearth and the sectarian altar by denying it entry to the public classroom. Religion is not strengthened in the heads and hearts of American youth by wiping it off their lips precisely where most of them prepare for citizenship in a reverent society. What is rather indicated in a joint activity, carefully respectful of the right of dissent, which involves church, home and school. In its 1951 Statement of Belief, which recommended school prayer, the New York State Board of Regents said:

"We believe that thus the school will fulfill its high function of supplementing the training of the home, even intensifying in the child that love for God, for parents and for home which is the mark of true character training and the sure guarantee of a country's welfare."

In its Decree on Education Vatican II underlined how the principle of subsidiarity applies in public education:

"The Church gives high praise to those civil authorities and civil societies that show regard for the pluralistic character of modern society and take into account the right of religious liberty, by helping families in such a way that in all schools the education of their children can be carried out according to the moral and religious convictions of each family."

It is suggested by those who oppose a prayer amendment that the court banned only "prescribed" prayer and that other types of religious presence in the public classroom stand unaffected, indeed encouraged. There is at the very base of the court's decisions a fatal, secularizing equation. Once this equation has been repealed, there is certainly place for reexamination of the entire gamut of that presence. Various approaches to religion as a force for morality and civic strength can and should be tested. Citizens for Public Prayer fully support such testing, but at the right time. So long as the prayer ban remains, however, there can be no compromise. Generally, those who ask substitutes for the brotherhood of prayer call for a moment of silent mediation, classes in comparative religion or the rendition of God strictly in paintings, dates and poetry. Each substitution has its weakness. Collectively, they are totally inadequate to the need of the situation.

Footnotes at end of article.

Let's take mediation first. It is most significant that the same day the Massachusetts legislature sanctioned mediation in the public schools of the state it petitioned Congress in support of a prayer amendment. A quiet God is better than no God. But a quiet God cannot provide that experience in pluralism which a spoken God encourages. One great advantage of the brotherhood of prayer consists, precisely, in the fact that through it children from various religious backgrounds are taught that although they go freely to their separate churches and synagogues over the weekend, still they can freely find and pronounce together common words of uniting reverence each day during the week. Besides, mediation is extremely difficult even for adults. To suppose that grade school youngsters can meditate properly is a delusion.

As for classes in comparative religion, it may be that once the prayer ban is repealed we can move along these lines. But such classes will require teachers who have the wisdom of Solomon, and are objective enough to relate one religion to another without bias. And should these teachers fail even slightly, offended parents will rise to challenge them in the courts, just as parents who objected to the earlier prayer did.

In regard to religion as art, history and literature, it is true that under these aspects it belongs in many classes, so that children of a reverent people may review their inheritance. But what a tragedy it would be if God could come into school only as a footnote in classes otherwise preoccupied and minus any factor of reverence whatsoever! Religion is more than dates and pretty pictures and nice phrases. Religion is reverence. Any proposal which drains it of its prayerful blood is anemic to start with. In short, none of the suggested substitutes is, at least in its present state of refinement, adequate. None would in any way remove the tragic precedent of the two prayer ban decisions. Finally, the closer any one of them came to being a real collective reverence, the more likely it is that it would be challenged and struck down by courts under the compulsion of prayer ban logic.

MAJORITY-MINORITY PROBLEM

There is another item in the prayer amendment debate which must be pondered. This is the item of majority-minority relationships in a democracy. It has two facets. The first is: How should society accommodate in its practices a majority will against which there is marshaled a loud minority will? The second is: In the public classroom how should the dissent from prayer and the desire for prayer be handled with justice all around? In regard to the first question, it must at the outset be agreed that 50 percent plus one does not of itself make a thing right. Democracy must never be a matter of a bullheaded majority tyrannizing over a cowed minority. Neither must it ever be an oligarchy in which a miniscule elite, somehow wiser, forces its preference on an unwilling majority. This latter state becomes what The Boston Pilot has called a "tyranny of the few." One thing is clear: As in all such controversial situations, a dissenting minority must be assured to the maximum reasonable extent its right of silence and abstention. To permit a minority's preference to dominate public practice, however, thus denying to an overwhelming majority its will, is an intolerable travesty of democracy. In this case, a strong argument can be mounted in support of the traditional, pre-ban interpretation of the First Amendment. Even Justice Brennan, siding with the majority in the second prayer ban decision, concedes that its factual position is far from conclusive:

"On our precise problem, the historical record is at best ambiguous, and statements can readily be found to support either side of the proposition.[1]

But even if the court's reading of the history and the semantics were accurate, the case for a clarifying amendment would still stand. No people in a free society are required to be prisoners of words which, in that hypothesis, do not say what the people wish them to say and do not permit practices which the people overwhelmingly wish to provide for themselves and for their children. As in the flag salute situation, what is required of a wise judiciary is not a decision rendering the majority silent before an intolerant minority but one that allows the greatest prudential accommodation for dissent while the majority will prevails. The second facet of majority-minority relationships here can be expressed in a question: Is school prayer an unconscionable intrusion on the rights of the dissenting child and his parents? It must be repeated that in the three prayer ban states, school prayer had been entirely voluntary for both teacher and pupil. Tolerance is, and must continue to be, a two-way street. So long as he is respected in his right to be different, the dissenting child must learn to respect the right of the majority of his fellow students who wish to pray together. Dean Griswold's treatment of this critical matter is excellent:

"Must all refrain because one does not wish to join? . . . No compulsion is put upon him (i.e. the dissenting child). He need not participate. But he, too, has the opportunity to be tolerant. He allows the majority of the group to follow their own tradition, perhaps coming to understand and respect what they feel is significant to them. Is not this a useful and valuable and educational and, indeed, a spiritual experience for the children of what I have called the minority group?"[7]

A related question is often posed. Whose prayer? The answer is simple. Once the civil right of public reverence is restored in the public school, the American people again will select, with a minimum of mistakes and a maximum of good common sense, a reasonably nondenominational prayer. To suppose that any group of Americans with a sectarian majority would be so callous of its neighbors as to insist on a sectarian prayer in their public schools is to fly in the face of the great bulk of American experience. But even should, in a rare instance, such a prayer be proposed, recourse for remedy would still be open with the courts. What is clearly urgent in this entire issue of majority-minority rights is a reasonable pluralism, the kind of adjustment and prudential accommodation which mature men make with their neighbors in any complex matter in which a common decision is required. With such a responsible pluralism, the solution to difficulties such as wording a proper amendment and coming up with consensus prayers is easy. Without it, we become quickly a jungle of selfish predatory religious groups, careless of neighbors and haggling over every approach to that harmony which has so long been the major motif of our people.

A few words of prayer by children in a public place will not alone change the world. The brotherhood of prayer remains an important part of an important pattern. Clearly, however, much more than this is at stake in the fight to write a Peoples Amendment for Public Prayer. The whole matter of a reasonable and reasoned pluralism is involved here. So is the survival intact of all practices of public reverence. So is every other controversial aspect of church-state relationship. So, finally, is the very workability of the democracy itself. It is simply incredible that there are still Catholics concerned with democracy, education and pluralism who cannot, or will not, understand these things. John Donne wrote that "no man is an island!" It can be said with equal force that no decision of the Supreme Court fundamentally interpreting the First Amendment against the expressed will of the nation is an island—a minimal, a singular thing. Remedial action now, loud and long, is emphatically indicted. Seldom has the alternative to such action been more strongly put than by Father Joseph Costanzo, S.J., professor of history jurisprudence at Fordham University: [8]

"American believers are losing by default. They have taken their spiritual heritage for granted. They have allowed a creeping gradualism of secularism, under the specious pretext or another, to take over their public schools. A vociferous and highly organized pressure is exercising its own form of indirect coercive pressure upon the American community.

FOOTNOTES

[1] The New York Times, July 7, 1963.

[2] The Supreme Court and Public Prayer (New York, 1964), page 24.

[3] June 21, 1963, The Boston Pilot is the official publication of the Catholic Archdiocese of Boston.

[4] Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 16, 1859; Galesburg, Ill., Oct. 13, 1858.

[5] Griswold, Erwin N., Utah Law Review, Vol. 8, No. 3 (Summer 1963).

[6] United States Supreme Court, October term, 1961, Document No. 168.

[7] Op. cit.

[8] This Nation Under God (New York, 1964), pp. 131–32.

PRAYER IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOL—QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(This material is provided by Citizens for Public Prayer, 3004 Adams Street, N.E., Washington, D.C. 20018. It is meant to help you join us in a leadership role. Use it to familiarize yourself with the basic arguments for our common cause and the frequent objections raised to it. Seek chances to spread the word wherever and as often as you can. Remember, it is critically important that we offer the nation the whole truth about school prayer to counteract arguments and pamphlets which minimize and oppose our great cause. Some of this opposition, it must be noted, emerges from so-called "religious" groups. You may re-print this material in any way you like. Try to get it into as many hands as possible. We have been too long a silent majority who wish to see the civil right of free public prayer restored in America. We can be silent no longer. Will you help? Will you take this material, study it and then go out yourself to speak, write and otherwise press loud and long until with the grace of God we win?)

1. What happened which makes a Peoples' Amendment for Public Prayer necessary?

(a) On June 25, 1962, the Supreme Court said, without citing any precedent, that the following prayer freely recited by pupils and teachers in New York State public schools was unconstitutional:

"Almighty God, we acknowledge our dependence upon Thee and we ask Thy blessings upon us, our parents, our teachers, and our country."

(b) On June 17, 1963, the Supreme Court banned the Lords prayer and Bible reading from the Schools of Maryland and Pennsylvania though in both instances recitation had been by statute free.

(c) The only effective way to reverse a precedent-making decision by the Supreme Court is through a carefully worded Constitutional amendment. This we propose.

2. What did the Court really do?

As in all Court decisions there are brave and good words here. What is important, however, is not the incidental remarks but the deed of the decisions. President Abraham Lincoln had once commented on the Dred Scott decision—"When all the words, the collateral matter was cleared away from it, all the chaff was fanned out of it, it was a bare absurdity." Such is the case here. In its first decision, the Court equated "establishment" with public reverence, whether free or not, whether institutional or not, whether sectarian or not. In its second decision, the Court said that even to question the historic validity of this equation was "of value only as academic exercises." Inserted into such an equation, despite the Court's occasional assurance to the contrary, all practices of public reverence among us must fall. This, in fact, is what the Court did. The fight for a Peoples' Amendment for Public Prayer is, thus, a fight to eradicate what we have called the fatal equation. Much more is involved here than the prayer alone!

3. Are we attacking the Court?

We attack the integrity neither of the persons nor the institutions of the Court as then constituted. Simply, following in the steps of Abraham Lincoln and many others, we seriously question the traditional, historic and legal validity of its prayer-ban decisions.

4. What, then, is really at stake here?

First and foremost, return of the civil right of free public prayer to the classroom.

Second, a process of creeping secularism which, unless now radically checked, could continue to wipe out one by one all other practices of public reverence among us. Examples: attack on the Christmas prayer of the astronauts (1968), on the Pageant of Peace near the White House (1969), on other spiritual exercises in public schools! By forcing the issue of free school prayer, we ask the American people to reflect again on the role of God in their midst, to examine the national conscience again. This could be the critical beginning in a great grass roots effort to make American again a Nation on its knees. Fourth, to reaffirm the democratic process in which the will of the vast majority of our people determines the law under which we shall live.

5. Some say we can still teach about religion in public schools. Is this true?

Religion is more than dates and pictures and which pope ruled when and who reformed what! Religion is essentially effective, the up-reach of the spirit toward a concerned God. Religion, stripped of affection and spirit, is not religion at all. Teaching about religion may be useful. It cannot suffice. Besides any surviving religion in public schools, while it may last for a time, will most surely be subject to attack by the same intolerant few who succeeded in having the prayer-ban decisions handed down. Besides, to accept teaching about religion in places of the civil right of free school prayer does absolutely nothing to erase the fatal precedent now placed by the two prayer-ban decisions.

6. What about substitutions for prayer in the public schools—such as meditation, classes in comparative religion, God sandwiched between Buddha and Einstein in a series of morning exercises?

The same argument holds as in 5 above. Many proposed substitutions are not religion at all. Meditation, of course, is better than nothing. A silent God is better than no God. But since when can little children effectively meditate? Why must God be quiet when He enters a school? Besides, silent meditation by its very nature is individual. It does nothing to fulfill the purpose accomplished by the beautiful brotherhood of free prayer with which most of our school districts began the school day for many decades prior to the prayer-ban decisions. In any case, no substitute would do anything to remove the fatal precedent of the prayer-ban decisions. Those who use the argument from substitution to oppose a prayer amendment (and most substitutors do not support an amendment) are, quite frankly, our foes just as much as those who want all religion removed from the public classroom. They fail to see, honestly or dishonestly, that by accepting a substitute they are permitting a cancer to remain and grow while applying salve to the external wound. All effective substitutes are susceptible to attack from the same kind of intolerant few who secured the prayer-ban in the first place. What is necessary is that a Peoples' Amendment for Public Prayer be written into the Constitution and then further thought be given to the whole matter of religion and morality in education not vice versa!

7. Why should we tamper with the First Amendment?

The First Amendment has already been tampered with by the Court. We propose simply to restore it to its original and traditional meaning. S.J. Res. 6, a sample of possible prayer amendment wording, reads: "Nothing contained in this Constitution shall abridge the right of persons lawfully assembled in any public building which is supported in whole or in part through the expenditure of public funds, to participate in nondenominational prayer."

8. Would not a "sense of the Senate resolution" be enough?

There are some Congressmen who may be using this device honestly. We cannot help but feel, however, that many are using it dishonestly. A sense of the Senate resolution would change nothing whatsoever. Only a carefully worded amendment will accomplish what must be done—namely a fundamental reversal of the two prayer-ban decisions.

9. Suppose the Court in fact accurately interpreted the words of the First Amendment?

Even if this were true—and it is not—still our case remains. The people must not be made prisoners of words which do not say what they clearly wish the Amendment to say.

10. Doesn't religion belong rather in home and church than in school?

Religion belongs everywhere in the life of a reverent republic. We do not, certainly, strengthen religion in the heads and hearts of children by wiping it off their lips in that place where they begin to learn the arts and sciences of life together. A God reduced to purely private dimensions is wholly foreign to the religious traditions of the nation.

11. Whose prayer would be used in public schools if an amendment passes?

For generations, with a maximum of good sense and a minimum of error, the American people had free prayer in their public schools. There is no reason why this cannot again be accomplished, and particularly in this new era of enlightened relations between all religions among us. As in all such delicate matters, the question can and will be adjudicated in each school district. Should anyone of these districts be so callous and so foolish as to institute a sectarian prayer, recourse would still lie with the courts.

12. What about minority rights and tolerance?

Tolerance is a two way street. So long as his rights to silence or abstention are recognized the dissenting child can do one of two things. He can deny others their rights by loudly demanding his selfish privilege, or he can refrain from participation recognizing in the process that others think differently than he and respecting their rights to do so. This is a perfect preparation for citizenship in a pluralistic society in which, often, delicate decisions have to be made in which there are majorities and minorities. The dissenter must always be free in his conscience, no pressure must be put on him to conform. But to suggest that this entitles him to deny the great majority the right to do what they feel in their consciences they should do is a travesty of the democratic process. A responsible pluralism in this, as in similar matters, is the very basis of our way of life together.

13. Is common prayer not in fact harmful to real religion?

By no means. True some children mumbled the morning prayer, but some children sing "The Star Spangled Banner" badly and some look out the window while reciting "The Gettysburg Address." This is no reason for abolishing the practice. What a magnificent experience, the children who have attended no religious exercise on the week-end or who have gone to various temples and churches on different days during that week-end come together on Monday and find common words to say to a common though differently experienced father! Who shall say that this experience is not meaningful?

14. How will the prayer-ban decisions effect other church-state cases?

Once the First Amendment has been fundamentally misinterpreted, it is clear that all other cases arising under it will be tainted by that misinterpretation. Make no mistake, the prayer-ban decisions are not dead but living. They will rise in case after case to affect the outcome.

15. What connection is there between the prayer-ban decisions and national sanity?

We cannot, nor do we, contend that all the tragic occurrences in the United States since 1962 can be traced back to the prayer-ban decisions. We do suggest a serious decline in morality among us. We do point to anarchy, arrogance, crime-increase, over-sexism and all the rest. We do say that the prospect of making America again a nation on its knees through a prayer amendment might do much to reverse the national moral crisis.

For further information read: "The Supreme Court and Public Prayer" by Professor Charles E. Rice, Fordham University Press, New York City, 1964.

Whenever you write us, please enclose a self-addressed and stamped envelope. Union in prayer.

The Restoration of the Civil Right of Free Public Prayer Could be the Critical Beginning of a National Return to God

(Testimony of Rev. Robert G. Howes, National Coordinator of Citizens for Public Prayer, Washington, D.C., and Associate Professor at the Catholic University of America, before the City Council of Baltimore, Maryland, on 2 March 1970, supporting a bill to provide for free non-denominational prayer in the public schools of Baltimore.)

How very appropriate that we meet tonight in Baltimore, Maryland, the city from which once Madalyn Murray O'Hair succeeded in driving free school prayer! How very appropriate that the instant resolution bears the signatures of a Councillor Gallagher and a Councillor Kaplan!

The subject before us all here is, technically, a moment in the morning, nothing more. And yet in an extremely real sense, the subject is the future of this nation. I do not suggest, of course, that restoration of the civil right of free public prayer in the classrooms of Baltimore will in and by itself cure the deep diseases now eating inside us. I do suggest that there is in such a restoration the same potential which existed in the penny on the pound of tea which once activated Boston toward revolution. I do suggest there is here a great symbolic moment, a critical break-boundary as Marshall

McLuhan would call it, a turning point. Your action in restoring the civil right of free prayer to school children in that city which now stands blotted before the American people as the first city from which school prayer was specifically banned could indeed begin Operation Break-through for a great national crusade to make America again a nation on its knees! And never in our history together since Valley Forge has such a crusade been essential!

I am here, then, both to support the resolution before you and to invite your attention to the larger issue within it. We in Citizens for Public Prayer have fought for nearly seven years to reverse the two tragic prayer-ban decisions of the United States Supreme Court. We continue to fight. We remained convinced that, while what you do is important, only a carefully worded Peoples' Amendment for Public Prayer is adequate to the need of the situation. Only an amendment which will forever wipe out the precedent of those two decisions can do the job which must be done. Even as you deliberate on this resolution, we invite you and the people of Baltimore to look upon it not as an end but as a vital and triumphant beginning in a process the term of which will be the type of Peoples' Amendment for Public Prayer now supported by 44 Senators of both parties on the Hill but unfortunately bearing the signature of neither of the two Senators from the State of Maryland!

What is actually at stake in the matter before us here?

(a) first and foremost, the restoration of that free brotherhood in prayer with which for long and good decades American young people began their school day. This was accomplished with a minimum of mistake and a maximum of common sense. It is a wonderful preparation for responsible citizenship in this pluralistic republic.

(b) the democratic process itself. Despite hundreds of bills and evidence of massive public support, in nearly eight years since the first prayer-ban decision not one single proposal for a prayer amendment has reached the floor of either House or Senate for a normal vote. All bills remain blocked in committee. This is almost unbelievable. Even those who disagree with supporters of free public prayer should now join them in demanding a free and fair chance for the issue to be heard first in the Congress, then in the fifty States!

(c) a re-affirmation of the role of God in our life together as a people. As school prayer is debated in fifty States, a re-examinaiton of our national conscience and a re-dedication to our national purposes "under God" are inevitable. Seldom has this been more necessary.

(d) the reversal of a process of creeping secularism. Attacks on the moon prayer of the Christmas astronauts (1968), on the Peace Pageant at the White House (1969), and similar practices demonstrate conclusively that denial of free school prayer is by no means the end but rather a significant beginning in the creeping secularism which now threatens our reverential national practices. Mrs. Madalyn Murray O'Hair is fully aware of this. Too many who disagree with her are not. Only reversal of the two prayer-ban decisions can once and for all prevent a widening of the ban to strike down one by one all other surviving instances of public reverence among us.

Who supports prayer in the public school?

It will often be contended that only the people support prayer in the public school. And this, of course, is in part true. Somewhere in the vicinity of 75% of the nation endorse free school prayer. It will also be contend that "church leaders" agree with the Court. And this too is in part true. Many whom we call "generals without armies", so-called religious leaders who do not speak for their own congregations, have incredibly refused to recognize the evil in the two prayer-ban decisions. But, all the same, the list of supporters of free school prayer is significant. It includes Patrick Cardinal O'Boyle of Washington whose Thanksgiving Day 1969 address to the Kiwanis and Rotary Clubs in Washington, D.C., strongly criticized the Court for its prayer-ban rulings. Also included are Dr. Billy Graham, the National Association of Evangelicals, the National Council of Catholic Youth, the Daughters of Isabella nationally, the Jaycees, the National Governors' Conference, the National Conference of Mayors, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Diocesan Council of Catholic Women in Buffalo, New York, and the legislatures of Maryland, Massachusetts and New Jersey! There are many others. A recent poll by Congressman Lawrence J. Hogan (5th Maryland District) showed 71% of all respondents in favor of a constitutional prayer amendment.

Again congratulations. Indeed tonight you may begin to fire the shot which will be heard around the country.

THE LINK BETWEEN THE PROBLEMS OF RURAL AND URBAN AMERICA

HON. JOHN WOLD

OF WYOMING

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. WOLD. Mr. Speaker, in the period since 1914 there has been a great demographic shift in the United States. Attendant with this shift has been an equally great social and economic restructuring of the United States.

In short the United States has been transformed from a rural agrarian, sparsely settled society to an urban, industrialized, and populated nation. The transformation has not been without benefits, but increasingly we are finding that a tremendous economic and social cost has been exacted in the process.

The scope of the problem is vividly portrayed in an editorial by James M. Flinchum, the editor of the Cheyenne, Wyo., State Tribune.

I include it in the RECORD at this point in my remarks:

[From the Cheyenne (Wyo.) State Tribune, Mar. 6, 1970]

NO ANT HILLS ON OUR HORIZON

The Wall Street Journal in an editorial this week headed "Danger: Anthills Ahead" says that high on the list of national priorities should be a program aimed at preventing America from degenerating into an anthill society.

The anthills mentioned in the editorial amounts to a metaphorical refernce to our urban centers, and as the Journal notes, was used by Secretary of Commerce Maurice Stans recently in warning about what could happen to America in the next 30 years when by the year 2000 a total population of 300,000,000 may be expected in this country, 85 per cent of that concentrated in the urban centers.

It is not very pleasant to contemplate what such an anthill society would mean to this nation," said Stans. Among the probable evils likely are increases in congestion, pollution, crimes and youthful alienations; some local governments might be unable to provide the necessary services for their citizens and thus disintegrate heading to megalopolitan governments of a police state nature.

"Skyrocketing costs of public services, moreover," says the Journal, "could drain so much tax revenue as to produce practically a state-controlled economy."

In one respect we disagree with this thesis: The anthill society is not in the future. It already is here. Consider the problem of New York City; constant friction of one kind or another in this teaming, over-crowded community has led to certain forms of stagnation. An example is a gravediggers' strike that has led to the accumulation of hundreds of bodies that are stacked up in the cemeteries because they cannot be placed underground. Garbage collection is another prime problem, rampant crime in the streets another.

All about us in the nation's megapolitan areas, the anthills are teeming; the situation exists on both coasts: Vast concentrations of people who by their very numbers create an almost insuperable problem. But at the same time the concentrations are encouraged; the tremors of social disorder that are set off by these antheaps are contributed to by the herd instincts of industry and commerce. There is some sign that the danger is recognized; a few industries are moving out of megalopolis and into the hustings, but not in sufficient volume yet.

Perhaps more encouragement is necessary; this need not be in the form of government compulsion, says the Wall Street Journal, but through devices of encouragement such as investment tax credits, liberalized depreciation allowances, planned decentralization of government facilities and continued assistance to new communities.

From a social standpoint, the problem deserves the intense scrutiny and study of the Nixon Administration for it has shown that it possesses the courage and candor to make such an approach rather than contribute to further escalation of the antheaps through the social action programs espoused by its two predecessor administrations which shore up the anthills rather than arrest their development or erode them.

Finally, we wish some public-spirited citizen or agency might take out a full page ad in a publication such as the Wall Street Journal that would convey the message that there are no anthills in Wyoming.

Perhaps a photograph or one of Connie Schwiering's great paintings depicting the Tetons would aid such a message; no anthills, only mountains and magnificent, but largely, empty landscapes.

A little people distribution would help everybody all around.

Our cities would be even more overburdened; our rural areas would have deteriorated even more had it not been for the reluctance of legislators from rural areas of the United States to adopt the great social programs of the past decades.

But the onc man-one vote ruling has increased the power of urban areas and soon will give political power to direct the Nation's resources and energies solely toward the solution of the Nation's urban problems.

Another article which sheds light on the problems and outlines some general starting points toward rural development is the recently published findings of the President's Task Force on Rural Development.

As Mr. Flinchum has stated so eloquently, however, problems cannot be solved through ignoring rural America. To do so would be a very unwise policy and would multiply the already existing problems of both areas.

In the past decade, a few farsighted individuals have noted the link. But these findings were buried in the clarion cries for help by the cities.

Despite this an increasing number of persons have noticed the connection. Indeed, the recognition has progressed to the point where urban leaders recognize that at least a portion of the Nation's resources must be directed toward a solution of the Nation's rural problems if theirs are not to be compounded.

There are many paths the revitalization of the Nation's rural areas may take. Mr. Flinchum points out some possibilities—investment tax credits, liberalized depreciation allowances, planned decentralization of Government facilities, and continued assistance to new communities.

THE STUDENT IN THE UNIVERSITY AND SOCIETY OF TODAY, NO. 5

HON. ROBERT McCLORY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Speaker, I include in the RECORD as a part of my remarks today the second half of a report by the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges entitled "Constructive Changes To Ease Campus Tensions: State and Land-Grant Universities Take Positive Steps To Involve Students and Curtail Campus Disruptions."

The remarks follow:

POLICIES AND PROCEDURES ON CONDUCT AND DISRUPTION

Largely in response to the growing threat of violence and disruption on college and university campuses, institutions of higher learning throughout the country have in the past two years developed specific procedures and policies to protect their campuses and to guarantee the rights of those engaged in normal university activities to continue their pursuits unhampered. The examples in the following sections illustrate recent activities along these lines. Institutions not listed here have been excluded not because they have not been taking steps to deal with disruptive demonstrations but only because the Office of Institutional Research lacked specific information on their activities at the time this compilation went to press.

POLICIES ON OBSTRUCTION AND DISRUPTION

In this section are examples of the kinds of specific policy and warning statements state universities have been adopting recently with regard to campus disruption. These statements make it clear that state universities will not tolerate violence, disruption, and interference with the rights of others and that they will initiate disciplinary proceedings against those who engage in such tactics. Penalties are clearly spelled out, and in many cases include expulsion or suspension.

Alabama

Auburn University in October 1969, revised its policy for campus disruptions, to warn that students "engaged in or contributing to any disruptive or destructive activity will be subject to prompt disciplinary action and, if appropriate, to civil action." Non-students, it warns, will be brought before the proper civil authorities.

Furthermore, in response to concern expressed by student leaders, disciplinary procedures and penalties for offenses including rioting, disruption of University operations, dishonesty, and possession or use of illegal drugs have been clearly defined and published in the student handbook.

Arizona

In July 1968, the Arizona Board of Regents adopted a policy clamping down on acts of disruption or violence on university property.

Arizona State University's new code of conduct warns expulsion or suspension may result from offenses including the following:

"Intentional obstruction or disruption of teaching, research, administration, disciplinary proceedings, or other University activities, including public service functions and other duly authorized activities on University premises.

"Occupation or seizure in any manner of University property, a university facility or any portion thereof for a use inconsistent with prescribed, customary, or authorized use; preventing, obstructing, or substantially interfering with the use of a facility or a portion thereof by those persons for whom or to whom the space is assigned.

"Participating in or conducting an assembly, demonstration, or gathering in a manner which threatens or causes injury to person or property; which interfers with free access, ingress, or egress to University facilities . . . remaining at the scene of such an assembly after being asked to leave by a representative of the Office of Student Affairs or a campus security officer."

California

University-wide rules which are applicable on all nine campuses of the University of California state that one of the specific categories of misconduct for which students are subject to discipline is "obstruction or disruption of teaching, research, administration, disciplinary procedures, or other University activities, including its public service functions, or of other authorized activities on University premises."

Colorado

In September 1968, Regents of the University of Colorado approved a general tightening up of regulations governing student conduct. This was the first major revision of the Laws of the Regents since 1960. The new laws spell out standards of conduct expected of students in more detail than the old ones and they specifically state that CU officials shall not discuss student grievances "under conditions of coercion, intimidation or where ultimatums are present or implied."

The ultimate authority for disciplinary action is vested in a Faculty Committee.

In addition, a resolution passed by the Faculty Council empowers the chairman of any public meeting held on campus to take all necessary steps to see that speakers can be heard and are treated with courtesy.

Colorado State University's "procedure for accommodating peaceful assembly on campus" was revised in March, 1969. This policy statement guarantees the rights of peaceful assembly and prohibits demonstrations which interfere with educational functions. Demonstrations are prohibited in classrooms during hours they are scheduled for use. Demonstrators refusing to leave when directed by authorized university personnel are subject to immediate temporary suspension and arrest under applicable city and state laws.

Connecticut

At the University of Connecticut during the past two years, students have comprised a large majority of the special committee which formulated policies related to recruitment and related demonstrations. Several students now serve as voting members on a special committee developing guidelines for responsible dissent and demonstration on the campus.

All matters of student conduct and disciplines are accountable to the Student Conduct Committee. This board is comprised of three faculty members and seven students and acts autonomously under the authority of the Dean of Students.

Delaware

In August 1968, the Delaware State College Board of Trustees declared its college policy "to make clearly understood that vandalism, disruptive activity, taking over or otherwise occupying or using the College grounds, buildings or facilities without proper authorization, intimidation and violence are unacceptable modes of behavior and will not be tolerated."

The Delaware State College student handbook warns that "any student who initiates or participates in a demonstration or any form of protest on campus that obstructs the academic process, interferes with the rights of others on campus, or results in physical violence or property damage is subject to serious disciplinary action."

Delaware State College and the University of Delaware have declared they will permit students to demonstrate, picket, and distribute leaflets. But whatever steps necessary will be taken to control picketing that interferes with university functions.

Florida

At Florida State University, a new student code details "offenses" which may lead to expulsion or lesser penalties:

"Deliberately impeding or interfering with the rights of others to enter, use, or leave any University facility, service, or scheduled activity.

"Deliberate interference with members of the University community in carrying out their normal functions or duties.

"Participation in unlawful demonstrations, riots, affrays, or assemblies in violation of policies, rules and regulations of the Board of Regents and the Florida State University, or in violation of the law.

"Destruction, damage, or misuse of University property . . .

"Unlawful or unauthorized entry into or upon University owned or controlled buildings, property or facilities."

The University of Florida's policy governing demonstrations was adopted by and has the support of faculty and student leaders. As explained by UF President Stephen C. O'Connell: "The policy is a simple one. Briefly stated, under it freedom of speech and action is guaranteed everyone entitled to be on our campus, so long as the individual obeys the law, does not interfere with the rights of others, or interfere with the orderly operation of the University. If anyone by his action threatens to disrupt, he is warned to desist. If he persists, he will be suspended pending hearing. If he still doesn't stop, he will be arrested."

Georgia

The Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia has adopted a policy on disruptive and obstructive behavior, which is said to be consistent with resolutions adopted in 1968 by the AAUP, AAC, and AHE Executive Committee condemning actions taken to disrupt the operations of institutions of higher education. It warns as follows:

"Any student, faculty member, administrator, or employee, acting individually or in concert with others, who clearly obstructs or disrupts, or attempts to obstruct or disrupt any teaching, research, administrative, disciplinary or public service activity, or any other activity authorized to be discharged or help on any campus of the University System of Georgia is considered by the Board to have committed an act of gross irresponsibility and shall be subject to disciplinary procedures, possibly resulting in dismissal or termination of employment.

Hawaii

A proposed addition to the Student Handbook of the University of Hawaii pertaining to judicial procedures is currently before the university's governing bodies. It specifies a variety of sanctions that could be involved in cases where students are found guilty of actions which disrupt any university function.

Idaho

In April, the University of Idaho Board of Regents adopted a Faculty Council-approved University policy calling for "prompt and firm action" interminating any disruptive protest demonstration or sit-in.

Illinois

In September 1968, the University of Illinois Board of Trustees warned that "acts of violence, disruption, and interference with the rights of others" . . . (are) wholly antagonistic to the spirit and purpose of the University . . . Such actions constitute unacceptable behavior on the part of any University student or member of the faculty and staff."

The University of Illinois has a new "Policy on Demonstrations," which brings together all current policies and procedures of the University for maintaining order on its various campuses. Included are actions of the Board of Trustees and the president and a statement adopted by the Senate committee on Student Discipline. A step by step approach to the handling of disruptive activity has been set up at each campus of the University, according to the document. It also notes that liaison with state, county and local law enforcement bodies has been established to assure their availability if needed. The "Policy" is signed by President David D. Henry.

Indiana

On August 28, 1969, the Purdue University Board of Trustees amended its June 8, 1968, resolution covering conditions of student conduct leading to suspension or expulsion from the University to include obstruction and disruption of university activities as grounds for automatic suspension for a minimum of one full academic semester plus the remainder of the semester during which the offense occurred.

The resolution also noted that "demonstrations are not of themselves misconduct. Demonstrations which do not involve conduct beyond the scope of Constitutionally-protected rights of free speech and assembly are, of course, permissible. However, conduct which is otherwise improper cannot be justified merely because it occurs in the context of a demonstration."

In September, Purdue added to its statement of principles and policies for academic tenure originally issued in October 1964 a section warning that faculty staff members would be dismissed if found guilty of disruption or obstruction of university activities.

Iowa

In February 1968, the State Board of Regents in Iowa designated as acts of misconduct subjecting the violator to disciplinary action "intentionally disrupting the orderly processes of the university; intentionally obstructing or denying access to services or facilities by those entitled to use such services or facilities; or intentionally interfering with the lawful rights of other persons on the campus, or inciting others to do these acts."

This policy applies to all Regents institutions in the state.

At the University of Iowa, it has been incorporated in the current Code of Student Life distributed to all students and in the general catalog.

At Iowa State University, it has been incorporated into the regulations concerning student behavior that appear in the 1969–71 student handbook.

Iowa State University also warns that admission or re-entry to the university as a student may be qualified or denied to anyone who while not registered as a student commits acts that would have subjected a registered student to disciplinary proceedings.

Kentucky

The University of Kentucky Student Code warns students that disruptive or coercive acts may lead to suspension or expulsion. Any action constituting "interference with, or coercive action against, any registered, organization or any individual on property owned or operated by the University . . . or prevention of ingress to and egress from buildings" is a disciplinary offense at the University.

Louisiana

Louisiana State University has banned Students for a Democratic Society from all its campuses. The Board of Regents said it could "find no reason why it should encourage destruction of the university system by according SDS, or any other similar organization, official status."

Maine

The University of Maine has distributed a Statement on Campus Disorder, approved in October, 1969 by the Student Senate and the Council of Colleges. The statement includes policies approved in 1967 by the Faculty Council and Board of Trustees stating that normal university functions may not be disturbed and the free flow of traffic may not be disrupted by individuals or groups. The statement also outlines relevant disciplinary regulations and procedural guidelines for dealing with campus disorders.

In addition, the University's Code of Student Conduct, currently under review, confines demonstrations to the outside of University buildings and warns that demonstrations must not block access to buildings or interfere with either the free movement of anyone on university grounds or the normal conduct of university affairs.

Maryland

Current regulations of the University of Maryland warn that "disciplinary sanctions will be imposed not only for individual misconduct which demonstrates a disregard for institutional behavioral standards, but, as well, for conduct which indicates disregard for the rights and welfare of others, as members of an academic community. Such conduct may ultimately call into question the student's membership in the university community, either because he has violated elementary standards of behavior necessary for the maintenance of an educational milieu, or because his continued presence at the University adversely affects the ability of others to pursue their educational goals."

The University of Maryland regulations also forbid destruction or theft of personal or university property and warn that disciplinary action may include restitution to the University or to the individual(s) involved.

Massachusetts

Under the leadership of the President, Provost, Dean of Institute Affairs, and the Chairman of the Faculty, a code of behavior relating to dissent on the campus has been developed at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Faculty-student committees have been appointed to apply this policy to specific instances of disruption and violence which may involve the civil authorities or the Discipline Committee of M.I.T.

The Code of Student Conduct for the University of Massachusetts has been amended by joint committee action to include defined limits and procedures for campus protest and dissent. These standards are under continuing study by the committee at the direction of the Board of Trustees Committee on Student Activities.

Minnesota

On April 24, 1968, a student-faculty committee at the University of Minnesota issued a report on campus demonstrations and made various recommendations. The implementation of the report has been initiated and supported by faculty and students. In summary, the report states that orderly demonstrations as an expression of favor or dissent should be permitted and encouraged on a university campus, because of the very purpose, nature and functions of a university. It adds, however, that "demonstrations which disrupt the functioning of a university endanger its existence."

Michigan

University of Michigan President R. W. Fleming at a faculty meeting on September 29 of 1969 said: "We can within the University of Michigan, tolerate as much dissent and turbulence, I suppose, as any university in the country. But we cannot tolerate continued harassment and disruption which makes our primary purpose for being here impossible."

In June 1968, the Michigan State University Board of Trustees passed a resolution warning that attempts to interfere with university activity may subject participants to legal and disciplinary action, "including suspension and expulsion."

Mississippi

Mississippi State University has revised certain regulations and procedures relating to campus disturbances.

Missouri

A strong policy statement warning that the University of Missouri will not tolerate actions by any groups or individuals that interfere with its normal and regular activities was issued in fall 1968 by President John C. Weaver. The statement has the unanimous support of the Board of Curators and applies to all four University campuses. It warns that any students or employees who interfere with normal activities "will face immediate suspension and may suffer ultimate dismissal."

Montana

The University of Montana has long had a general policy which insures the student's right to freedom of speech and expression through demonstrations or otherwise so long as the exercise of this right does not interfere with the normal operation of the university. In the event the normal operation of the university is in fact interfered with, then a policy statement has been prepared to be read to the students participating in any such violation of University regulations which informs them that if the violation continues, the university will, upon recommendation of the Attorney General of the State of Montana, take the necessary steps to obtain an injunction against its continuance.

Nebraska

The University of Nebraska Board of Regents adopted a policy on "campus disorders and response to disruptive action" on April 19, 1969. In this instance, students, faculty, and administration agreed on the policy which was presented to the Regents for approval. This policy states in effect that when disruption occurs, sanctions will be imposed on the spot. If these sanctions are ignored, university officials can invoke police force. The policy also provides for the right of any individual or group to petition for public hearing.

New Hampshire

At the University of New Hampshire, faculty, student, and administration committees dealing with specific issues, such as ROTC, recruitment as well as student rights, have all emphatically rejected physical disruption of the University's normal operations as a tactic. The committees also suggested peaceful means for recording opposition to campus situations that seem undesirable.

New Jersey

The Rutgers University policy on demonstrations states that any demonstration that interferes with the freedom of other members of the academic community will not be tolerated. This includes all actions which interrupt the normal activity of the institution, e.g., occupying buildings, obstructing traffic, or committing any act of trespass or vandalism. The University warns that such activities, if carried out, can result in disciplinary measures, including possible suspension, expulsion, or the application of civil remedies as appropriate. Where disciplinary measures are required, due process will be observed in accordance with well-defined procedures established by each college and division of the university.

New Mexico

In January 1968, the Deans' Council of New Mexico State University, working with the President's office, widely publicized the University's position on rights and responsibilities of students. The statement specifically warns against activities "which hinder a faculty member or administrative officer in the performance of his university duties or which put obstacles in the way of students going about their legitimate university concerns." Such activities "must be considered irresponsible, and the individuals involved will be subject to disciplinary action," the statement continues.

The Regents of the University of New Mexico approved a Student Standards Policy for the University several years ago. It guarantees procedural due process to students in violation of university regulations and sets up standards of student behavior. The policy calls for disciplinary action "if a students acts in such a way as to affect adversely the University's educational function or disrupt community living on campus."

New York

In July 1969, the State University of New York Board of Trustees adopted new rules and regulations for maintaining public order on state university campuses. These regulations were distributed on SUNY campuses this fall. They are binding on all persons on university-controlled premises. They detail "prohibited conduct" which may subject violators to penalties including expulsion and/or dismissal. Among the prohibited activities are the following:

Entering into private administration or faculty offices without permission "express or implied."

Remaining in any building or facility without authorization after normal closing hours.

Deliberately disrupting or preventing the orderely conduct of classes, lectures, and meetings; or deliberately interfering with the freedom of any person to express his views, including invited speakers.

Willfully damaging or destroying property of the institution or under its jurisdiction.

Entering or remaining in any building in a manner that obstructs its authorized use by others.

A report by a Special Trustees' Committee on Campus Unrest at Cornell University endorsed the adoption of a new university-wide judicial system, formulated and approved by both the Faculty Council and Board of Trustees. The major thrust of the new system is that there will be no negotiations under duress and no amnesty to offenders. Students refusing to abide by university codes and regulations will be suspended or expelled.

New regulations designed to prevent disruption of public order are also in force this year at Cornell. The rules were adopted by the Board of Trustees in compliance with a new section of the New York State Education Law.

The regulations affirm the rights of peaceful dissent and free speech on campus. Regarding "Standards of Conduct," they summarize as follows: "All persons shall conduct themselves on University premises in a manner which does not disrupt or obstruct university operations or functions or infringe upon or interfere with the lawful exercise of the rights and freedoms of others." Specific kinds of prohibited conduct are listed, including using force against persons or property, obstructing access to University premises, and preventing the participation of others in employment interviews and other authorized activities.

To help enforce the regulations, the Trustees, acting on recommendations from a student-faculty-administration task force, created two boards to hear cases and appeals involving alleged violations and also created the post of judicial administrator. These positions were filled this fall.

In June, 1969, the Board of Higher Education of The City University of New York adopted an eight-rule code dealing with the maintenance of order on its campuses. Included are specific prohibitions against: Obstruction or forcible prevention of others from the exercise of their rights; interference with the institution's educational process or facilities; unauthorized occupancy or obstruction of university facilities; disorderly/or indecent conduct; possession of weapons on campus; theft or damage to university property or the property of any person on university premises, and use of language or actions likely to provoke or encourage physical violence.

A range of specific penalties to which violators will be subject is also spelled out. The rules were drafted by the Board's Education's Law Committee following consultations with representatives of the university's Faculty Senate, Student Advisory Council, and Deans of Students.

North Carolina

The Executive Committee of the University of North Carolina Board of Trustees adopted on July 7, 1969, a statement defining University policy in cases of disruption of the educational process; and on September 12, 1969, a statement of procedures to implement the policy.

It defines disruptive conduct and warns as follows:

"Any student, faculty member (including full-time or part-time instructor), or employee who willfully by use of violence, force, coercion, threat, intimidation or fear, obstructs, disrupts, or attempts to obstruct or disrupt the normal operations or functions of any of the component institutions of the University, or who advises, procures, or incites others to do so, shall be subject to suspension, expulsion, discharge, or dismissal from the University."

In implementing the statements, each chancellor was to appoint a student-faculty-administration board of inquiry and a university hearings committee.

In September the Chancellors of the six units of the University of North Carolina distributed copies of these statements to all students, staff, and faculty.

At North Carolina A & T State University, a code to student life, widely distributed this fall, sets down guidelines for protests, picketing, and demonstrations by student groups. It requires specific grievances, issues, "or other potential protest or demonstration concerns" to be submitted 96 hours in advance to the president of the Student Government Association, who will conduct a hearing on them and submit his findings and recommendations to the Dean of Student Affairs. Applications to assemble for purposes of protests in the case of unreconciled grievances must be made at least 24 hours in advance. Assemblies and demonstrations must be conducted so as not to interfere with or obstruct normal traffic flow onto, about or around the campus. The use of the campus "as a staging area" for off-campus protests or demonstrations will be discouraged.

The code to student life also warns that "any student or faculty member who willfully, by use of violence, force, coercion, threat, intimidation or fear, obstructs, disrupts, or attempts to obstruct or disrupt the normal operations or functions of the University, or who advises, procures, or incites others to do so, shall be subject to suspension, expulsion, discharge, or dismissal from the University."

North Dakota

A statute enacted by the 1969 session of the North Dakota Legislature mandates the State Board of Higher Education or the administration on the campus involved to take certain steps in the event that any person is found to have willfully damaged any university property or willfully obstructed the normal administration of the university.

The course of action required includes the following:

(1) The filing of a civil suit for damages against the person;

(2) The signing of a criminal complaint charging him with a violation of the law;

(3) If the person is a student, his expulsion from the school; and

(4) If the person is a faculty or staff member, the bringing of a hearing on the charge of breach of his employment contract.

The statute does not grant the administration of a college the authority to withdraw the civil or criminal complaints once they are filed. Therefore, no requests for amnesty or withdrawal of charges can be honored.

In a policy statement on campus disruption, the North Dakota State University Administrative Council cited the provisions of the statute. The statement added that, in the event that any seizure or forcible occupation of university property falls short of the willful destruction or obstruction prohibited, the Academic Council of NDSU will take action, including:

(1) All negotiations, if any, with the occupying group will be terminated immediately.

(2) The occupying group will be advised that the university authorities are prepared to meet with a limited number of representatives of that group at a time and place when and where reasoned discussion can be had, but only after the seizure or forcible occupancy has ceased, and only with the understanding that such seizure or forcible occupancy will not be repeated.

(3) The occupying group will be notified publicly to vacate.

(4) If the notice to vacate is not followed, all necessary steps to ensure compliance will be taken.

The University of North Dakota is currently in the process of drawing up more detailed statements of policy and procedures to be followed in the case of serious interruptions of normal university activities than are found in its "Conduct Code and Disciplinary Procedures," its current guide in handling student violations of regulations.

Ohio

The Ohio State University Board of Trustees has adopted a set of rules dealing with disruption of university operations and with the university committee on discipline. The rules provide that students found to have engaged in disruptive acts may be subject to expulsion, with or without prosecution in civil courts.

The Policy for the Conduct of Members of the Ohio University Community was adopted in September, 1968. It specifically declares as unacceptable conduct for members of the University community and visitors "obstruction or disruption of teaching, research, administration, disciplinary procedures, or other university activities, including the University's public service functions, or of other authorized activities, on University-owned or controlled property."

Violators may be ejected from University property, suspended or expelled from the University, or liable to legal prosecution as appropriate.

Oregon

The University of Oregon Code of Student Conduct has detailed provisions which include offenses relating to the physical abuse of another person in the academic community and to the malicious destruction, damage, or misuse of University property or of private property on campus. It also proscribes improper disruptions of classes.

Oregon State University's Student Handbook has undergone considerable revision to insure that it defines in detail the code of conduct for all students. Sections include: Responsibility of Individuals, All University Policies and Regulations, Disciplinary Actions and Procedures, Responsibility of Student Organizations, and the recently adopted statement on "Students Rights, Freedoms and Responsibilities at Oregon State University."

Pennsylvania

Last March, in a letter to parents, Pennsylvania State University President Eric A. Walker reaffirmed the University's determination "that no class shall be interrupted nor action tolerated that threatens others or interferes with the educational programs of the University."

South Carolina

A policy concerning the conduct of students, adopted by the Board of Trustees in 1965, still is the standard at Clemson University. The policy recognizes that "there is a valid function performed by faculty and student body alike in considering and supporting any and all issues controversial or noncontroversial within the framework of orderly peaceful and lawful decorum, demeanor and processes." At the same time, it empowers the president of the university to take any disciplinary action that he feels the circumstances warrant to prevent acts of violence, unlawful use and misappropriation of institutional property and facilities, criminal acts and public acts which reflect adversely on the maintenance of discipline and on the good name and reputation of the university, its student body, and faculty.

A statement in the rules and regulations of the University of South Carolina recognizes the rights of students to peaceable assembly, freedom of opinion, freedom of speech, and freedom to engage in the normal educational and institutional processes of the university. It adds that the university will use all of its resources to see that no one connected with the university interferes with the free exercise of these rights. Appropriate legal and disciplinary sanctions will be invoked in cases of "physical obstruction or interference, interference by noise, and actions which offend or outrage normal sensibilities . . ."

South Dakota

South Dakota State University's regulations state that students may have peaceful demonstrations but they cannot interfere with the normal operations of the institution in teaching, research, and extension. They cannot interfere with the rights of any other student or citizen, and they cannot destroy property which belongs to individuals, the state, or federal government.

A policy adopted at the University of South Dakota states that student demonstrations are recognized as a legitimate means of expression to the point that there is no interference with the freedom of others or disruption of regular scheduled university activities.

Tennessee

On June 20, 1968, the University of Tennessee's Board of Trustees approved a resolution that "conduct or activities which are disruptive of the educational process will not be tolerated on any campus of the University of Tennessee." The Board authorized the president and administration of the University to take "any lawful action which is necessary to maintain law and order and the integrity of the institution . . . This board will not tolerate any form of civil disobedience or disruption of the University's orderly business."

The University's policy permits campus demonstrations in areas generally available to the public provided demonstrations are orderly and do not interfere with university traffic and activities.

On March 27, 1969, the University of Tennessee Administrative Council approved an itemized list of "misconduct for which students are subject to discipline." It includes "obstruction or disruption of teaching, research, administration, discriminary procedures, or other University activities, including its public service functions, or of other authorized activities on University premises."

Student regulations have been updated at Tennessee State University to be more specific regarding penalties for disruptive acts.

Texas

In April 1968, the Board of Regents of the ten-institution University of Texas System amended its rules and regulations dealing with disruption of educational activities by force or violence. Penalties including expulsion for students and dismissal for employees were set for those who "acting singly or in concert with others, obstruct or disrupt, or attempt to obstruct or disrupt, by force or violence, or by threat of force or violence, any teaching, research, administrative, disciplinary, public service or other activity authorized to be held or conducted on the campus of a component institution of the UT System."

Texas Tech University regulations forbid "the use of force or violence which in fact causes obstruction or disruption of teaching, research, administration, disciplinary procedures, or other university-authorized activities, including its public service functions, or of other authorized activities on university premises . . . The words 'force or violence' include such acts, for example, as are commonly called 'stand-ins,' 'sit-ins' and 'lie-ins' only when such acts are in fact obstructive or disruptive of any of the authorized activities as set out above."

Texas Tech President Grover E. Murray has warned that "the administration and the Board of Directors of the university neither condones, nor will tolerate, irresponsibility of actions or interruptions of the orderly processes conducive to maintenance of a desirable learning atmosphere. The administration and the Board of Directors of Texas Tech intend unequivocally that abrogation of the university's requirements of conduct and behavior shall make the offender liable to disciplinary action including separation from the University community."

In a statement issued last May, the Texas A & M University Board of Directors noted that "the doors of Texas A & M University have been, and will continue to be, open for orderly constructive change as recommended by anyone with noble purpose. But change which would disrupt due academic processes—change thrust upon this institution under the ugly veil of threat or demand—will not be considered or tolerated."

A statement issued last March by University of Houston President Philip Hoffman warned students that disrupting the normal educational program or threatening life or property could lead to fines or prison. He specifically warned that occupation of buildings, classrooms, offices, laboratories, or other University facilities in such a way as to interfere with their normal use would not be tolerated, nor would blocking of access of those facilities be allowed. Persons failing to end disruptions when so requested by university spokesmen will be subject to university disciplinary action, as well as civil arrest and prosecution. In making his statement, President Hoffman noted that he also represented "the unanimous viewpoint of the Board of Regents."

Virginia

At the University of Virginia, in May, 1968, University President Edgar F. Shannon, following a meeting with student leaders, stressed that "University officials will not negotiate . . . under conditions of duress, such as unauthorized occupation of university property." In September, 1969, he issued a statement confirming the university's commitment to academic freedom, freedom of speech, and the right of students to indicate publicly their views in ways not disruptive of academic activities, scheduled events, or other normal university functions. The university's catalogs state that "any student found guilty of participating in or inciting a riot or an unauthorized or disorderly assembly is subject to suspension."

A detailed statement on procedures to be observed in the event disruptive activities develop was adopted in 1968 by the University Council and Board of Visitors at Virginia Polytechnic Institute. The statement was distributed to all students and faculty during fall registration for the 1968–69 and 1969–70 academic sessions. The statement outlines procedures for orderly picketing and demonstrations. In the event these activities become disruptive or interfere with normal University programs or the individual rights of others, specific steps for restoring order are outlined in the statement.

Washington

Washington State University President Glenn Terrell last March in an open letter reiterated university policy of using all resources available "to prevent disruptive action on the campus on the part of anyone—faculty, students, staff, or outsiders." Members of the university community "who violate the rights of others" are subject to disciplinary procedures.

Last November, the University of Washington Regents issued a statement declaring explicitly "what it has regarded as implicit heretofore, namely, that it will not condone actions on the university campus . . . which threaten the destruction of university facilities, records, or property, or which prevent students, faculty, or staff from carrying forward their regular activities and responsibilities . . ." The Regents warned that individuals resorting to disruptive activities "expose themselves to university discipline or action of the courts, or both."

Wisconsin

Recently-enacted Regent regulations applying to all University of Wisconsin campuses prohibit intentional conduct which seriously damages university property, indicates serious danger to the personal safety of members of the university community, and which obstructs or seriously impairs university activities. Other new regulations require identification cards, authorize chancellors to close campuses to outsiders in emergencies, severely limit the use of bullhorns at campus rallies, regulate picketing and other assemblies to limit interference to regular campus activities, and prohibit the entry on campus for specified periods by students who have been suspended or expelled as a result of obstructive or dangerous conduct and by non-students who are convicted of crimes involving danger to persons or property on campus.

Wyoming

The University of Wyoming has declared it will permit students to demonstrate, picket, and distribute leaflets so long as the procedures are orderly and do not interfere with the rights of others or hamper normal university functions.

STUDENT CODES

At a number of institutions, all regulations pertaining to student behavior have been assembled into a comprehensive document known as the student code. Students are expected to familiarize themselves with their codes and to abide by the regulations laid out in them. These codes have in many cases been developed by and/or with the assistance of students. In recent years, a number of these codes have been revised to deal more explicitly with disruption of campus activities and the penalties for such disruption. The Office of Institutional Research has in its files complete copies of a number of these student codes and will furnish further information or samples upon request.

Alabama

Although the University of Alabama has no official Code of Conduct, officials are now bringing together all policies and procedures relating to students, with a view toward making these more readily available to students.

Arizona

Following more than two years of work by the Student Affairs Committee and other groups, Arizona State University has for the first time this fall a single code of conduct, bringing together in one document materials formerly found in a variety of publications not spelled out at all. Pending formal adoption by appropriate campus governing groups, the code of conduct went into effect this summer as a "provisional but operating regulation."

California

At the nine campuses of the University of California each enrolled student is given a student handbook which includes an extensive section on the rights and obligations of students and the procedures involved in disciplinary action. Revision of these rules at either the campus or University-wide level occurs only after extensive consultation between students, faculty, and administrators.

Colorado

Colorado State University distributes a handbook entitled "The Rights and Responsibilities of Students and Student Groups at Colorado State University." The handbook contains general policy statements affecting students and their organizations along with pertinent city and state regulations.

Delaware

University of Delaware President E. A. Trabant has set as a major "problem" to be solved this year the development of documents on student rights and responsibilities, along with the development of a new judicial system and a new constitution for the Student Government Association. Drafts of the needed documents were prepared last year by student-faculty committees. They currently are awaiting revisions needed to eliminate conflicts with the University's charter and inconsistencies.

Florida

At Florida State University, a new code of conduct, entitled "Rights and Responsibilities of Students at the Florida State University" went into effect this fall. The code was developed with the assistance of both students and faculty.

President Stanley Marshall early in the fall of 1969 was to appoint a commission representing all segments of the University to undertake an extensive study of the relationships of the students to the University and to recommend additional changes in the code as needed during the academic year.

The University of Florida has a Student-Affairs Committee which constantly reviews the need for changes in the University Code of Conduct. A revised code is now receiving the consideration of the committee.

Georgia

Each institution in the University System of Georgia either has revised or is in the process of revising its rules governing student conduct in the light of recent court decisions in this area. Generally students are being given a more active role in decision making, particularly with regard to the discipline of their fellow-students.

Hawaii

A detailed Statement of Standards for the University of Hawaii is currently under consideration by the university's governing bodies. The document consists of a community bill of rights plus a designation of behavior that would be unacceptable from students, faculty or administrators. The statement notes that "the achievement of excellence in the University is promoted by the unification of the academic community in a common purpose: The mutual enhancement of educational experiences." The statement guarantees rights to academic freedom to participate with equal status in formulation of purposes and policies of an all-university nature to engage in peaceful protest, and to due process, among other rights listed.

Idaho

The University of Idaho is now revising its rules and regulations as well as procedures for handling disturbances to determine whether they need strengthening. A new student code of conduct is expected to be developed soon.

Indiana

The Indiana University Board of Trustees presented a new student code of conduct to all students during registration for the fall quarter this year. It spells out in detail the rights of students to appeal and to due process of law. The document received an enthusiastic endorsement from the student body president.

Iowa

At the University of Iowa, a current "Code of Student Life" has been published as the result of last year's work of an all-university Committee on Student Life, which establishes rules and regulations governing standards of conduct at the University. Six years ago only four students sat on this committee; now there are seven student members on the 15-man committee. Although in effect now, the code is subject to refinements and revisions.

At Iowa State University, the "Code of the Student Community" is published as part of the student handbook, "The Chart." A subcommittee of the Council on Student Affairs is currently developing a procedure for greater consultation with students and other segments of the university community in making future revisions of "The Chart."

Kansas

At the University of Kansas a subcommittee of the Student Senate is currently developing a new Student Code of Conduct for ratification by the Student Senate.

Kentucky

The University of Kentucky Board of Trustees revised the University's Code of Student Conduct in July 1969. The revised code spells out penalties for disruptive and coercive actions. Student and faculty trustee representatives were included on the Board committee that studied the code.

Maine

A Disciplinary Code adopted at the University of Maine in 1968 deals quite specifically with the maximum sanctions that may be imposed for various forms of conduct. Dismissal is the maximum sanction for acts of destruction of property or for knowingly giving false information to university officials in pursuit of their official duties. Suspension is the maximum sanction for trespass, or intentionally placing a person in fear of physical harm. Disciplinary probation is the maximum sanction for disorderly behavior. The code also outlines the procedure to be followed by the University in disciplining a student when policies are violated.

In addition, the University's current Student Handbook includes a Code of Student Conduct adopted in May, 1967. The Student Matters Committee of the Student Senate is reviewing this code this year and Student Senate action on a revised code is expected before the end of the year.

Massachusetts

The Student Matters Committee of the Senate at the University of Massachusetts is presently reviewing the university's Code of Student Conduct, and Student Senate action on a revised code is expected before the end of the academic year.

Michigan

The Commission on Student Government of Wayne State University is currently completing a comprehensive bill of student rights and responsibilities. It will enlarge and make current a similar bill enacted by the university's Student-Faculty Council four years ago.

Minnesota

At the University of Minnesota a new Student Code of Conduct is presently being considered by a special Study Committee on Student Affairs. The committee will make its report early in 1970.

Montana

At the University of Montana, Standards of Student Conduct have been adopted and approved jointly by the students, faculty, and administration. All violations are concerned with the lawful missions, processes, or functions of the University.

Montana State University is currently reviewing all disciplinary rules, regulations, and penalties, as well as the philosophy behind required student conduct. Revised rules will be compiled for distribution to all students.

Nebraska

The University of Nebraska Board of Regents, Faculty Senate, and the Associated Students of the University of Nebraska have adopted, as institutional policy, a document on "The Student in the Academic Community." This document outlines general rights and responsibilities, rights and responsibilities in the classroom, and rights and responsibilities in the instructional settings. The new University Council on Student Life is an outgrowth of this effort.

During the summer of 1969, a publication entitled "Expectations for University Students" was mailed to each student's home address. This publication included information on student conduct, codes, the policy on disruptive action and the document on "the Student in the Academic Community."

Nevada

At the University of Nevada, Reno, a subcommittee of the Office of Student Affairs, including the student body president and a faculty member, has been delegated the responsibility of surveying, organizing, and collating existing policies and regulations affecting students.

New Hampshire

A joint student-faculty-administration committee established by the University of New Hampshire Senate in 1968–69 developed a lengthy "Declaration of Student Rights and Responsibilities" which sets forth University policy guidelines in eight areas—freedom to learn, freedom of access to higher education, faculty-student relations, student records, student affairs, student conduct on and off the campus, procedural standards for student discipline, and enforcement of the Declaration's provisions. In brief, the Declaration establishes that "students are free to learn and to challenge" and to "support causes by orderly means which do not disrupt the regular and essential operation of the University or violate the rights of other members of the academic community and of the community at large." The Declaration, now incorporated as the introductory section of UNH's Student Rights and Rules Book, makes clear provision for due process procedures in any disciplinary actions undertaken by University officials.

New Jersey

Rutgers University has endorsed the principles espoused in the "Joint Statement on the Rights and Freedoms of Students."

New Mexico

A Statement of Rights and Responsibilities for the University of New Mexico, adopted by the Board of Regents, affirms the student's right of free speech and honest expression of opinion. It calls for disciplinary action only in cases where "a student acts in such a way as to affect adversely University's educational function or disrupt community living on campus."

New York

New codes and student conduct are being developed on campuses of the State University of New York during the 1969–70 academic year in compliance with the requirements of the new New York State Education Law. The law requires that all colleges "chartered by the regents or incorporated by special act of the legislature shall adopt rules and regulations for the maintenance of public order on college campuses and other college property used for educational purposes and provide and program for the enforcement thereof." The new rules must govern the conduct of students, faculty and other staff as well as visitors and other licencees and invitees on campus. The document must also clearly set forth penalties for violation of the rules. The new codes will be used concurrently with the new "Rules and Regulations for Maintenance of Public Order on Premises of State-Operated Institutions of the State University of New York," adopted by the SUNY Board of Trustees.

Rules of Student Conduct regarding drug violations have recently been revised at the State University of New York, Stony Brook. The new rules provide sanctions which vary according to the character and quantity of the drugs involved and the nature of the offense itself. Students are prohibited from possessing marijuana; central nervous system stimulants, such as amphetamine or barbiturates; Peyote, LSD or other hallucinogenic drugs, and narcotic drugs such as opium or heroin. The maximum sanction for possession of the former two types of drugs is suspension, and the maximum sanction for possession of the latter two types is explusion.

The penalty for selling marijuana and stimulant and depressant drugs is suspension for a first offense and explusion for any subsequent violations. The penalty for selling narcotics or hallucinogenic drugs is expulsion.

Cornell University's student code, which was first issued in 1963, was revised last year. The updated code went into effect, on at least an interim basis, this fall.

In August, Cornell published a "Policy Notebook for Students," containing the University's basic documents concerning student conduct. The booklet states that "the establishment of policies concerned with student life has been the result of the combined efforts of students, faculty, and administration."

North Carolina

Student codes of conduct are under constant revision at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill either by the Student Legislature or by the referendum device. Two matters of current concern to students are:

A belief that action should be taken by the university only when the offense occurs "on campus."

A desire to add the Double Jeopardy amendment to the Constitution which will bar action by the university in cases where a student is being prosecuted in the civil courts.

North Carolina A & T State University this year has distributed a booklet called "Code to Student Life: Some Policies and Guidelines."

Ohio

At Miami University, faculty, students, and administration have worked cooperatively in the last few years to define reasonable and effective student conduct regulations.

In response to a state legislative mandate, representatives of the faculty, student body, and administration at Ohio University developed a statement of campus conduct standards, which was approved by the Board of Trustees in September 1968. Copies of this statement were distributed by Ohio University President Claude R. Sowle to all members of the Ohio University community this fall.

Oregon

A document on Student Rights, Freedoms and Responsibilities is in effect this fall at Oregon State University. It was approved by the Associated Students OSU Senate and the OSU Faculty Senate and signed by the OSU president. The document deals with academics, student affairs—particularly pertaining to freedom of association and freedom of inquiry and expression, off-campus freedom, and disciplinary measures.

South Carolina

Contained in "Student Rules and Regulations" of the University of South Carolina is a "Statement of Student Rights and Freedoms Within the Academic Community," initiated by the Student Senate, passed by the Faculty, and approved by the Board of Trustees.

South Dakota

At the University of South Dakota students publish their own handbook and, under the Student Court System, they have developed their own codes of conduct and penalties for infractions thereof.

Texas

Rules on student services and activities at the University of Texas at Austin have been compiled and are published in the General Information Bulletin of the university as well as in a separate pamphlet. Areas dealt with include: Orientation, admissions policies, student financial aid, the Student Health Center, housing, student organizations, intramural sports, the Texas Union, student records, the use of university facilities, and student discipline and conduct.

Utah

At Utah State University, a student-faculty committee last year reviewed and rewrote, where advisable, all university policies involving the student community and collected them into a single document referred to as "The Student Code."

Washington

At the University of Washington, major revisions in regulations covering student conduct and discipline have been adopted by the Regents on recommendation of the University Senate in the first major restructuring of regulations since 1959. A major point of the new code is creation of a Joint Council on Student Conduct and Activities, composed of students and faculty. It will be responsible for a "continuous review of the general standards of conduct . . . rules and regulations on student activities and procedures for student discipline as they affect both individual students and student organizations."

The new code places regulations and discipline in a more specific framework than previously with more highly specified and regulated student participation.

West Virginia

At West Virginia University, students wrote and voted approval of a Statement on Student Rights and Responsibilities, commonly called the Student Code. The University Senate referred the Statement to a conference committee consisting of five students and five faculty members to develop a jointly prepared statement that will be presented to the University Senate and the student body for approval.

Wyoming

Every enrolled student of the University of Wyoming receives a student handbook which outlines the rights and obligations of students and details procedures to be followed in disciplinary actions. At the present time, administrators and students are completing work on a student Bill of Rights.

UNIVERSITY PREPAREDNESS FOR DISRUPTION

Although university officials have increased their efforts to maintain viable channels of communication and to deal with legitimate student concerns, they remain alert to the possibility that disruption of their operations may in fact be threatened. Rather than be caught unprepared, most institutions have developed detailed plans for handling disturbances should they occur. In many cases, these plans include coordination among students, faculty, and administration groups, as well as with campus and local police authorities.

Alabama

Auburn University has worked out a detailed procedure which will be followed should protest activities interfere with the normal activities of the University. The procedure provides for injunctions and criminal prosecution. It also outlines activities for the campus security officers, Office of Student Affairs staff, student leaders, and others. Approximately 30 student leaders have agreed to help control mass demonstrations under the direction of the Student Affairs staff.

Arizona

The University of Arizona has in the past sought and secured restraining orders in certain cases and has been ready in other cases, if necessary, to secure the action of civil authorities to maintain an orderly campus. It would not resort to court action and police enforcement, however, unless necessary. As President Richard A. Harvill says: "Preparedness though is absolutely essential."

Arkansas

In 1967, the Arkansas Legislature passed an act enabling all Arkansas agencies and institutions to confer peace officer status upon their security personnel. The act also defined certain violations of the law and the actions that the agency or institution could take. With other existing laws, the University believes it has the tools needed to handle disturbances that might occur on a campus.

California

UCLA Assistant Dean of Student Activities, Allan Wiesblott, reported: "We have avoided a battle plan, believing it would lead to a war situation. Instead of planning for trouble we're trying to prevent it."

Colorado

Colorado State University's administration began developing plans for handling disruption shortly after the 1964 occupation of Sproul Hall at Berkeley. These plans have been reviewed and modified at regular intervals. The University's student handbook and "procedure for accommodating peaceful assembly on campus" outline the procedure to be followed by campus administrators and security officers in the case of demonstrations that are not peaceful.

Florida

On October 1, the University of Florida added to the staff of the Vice President for Student Affairs a special assistant on matters of student conduct. The new official's duties will include representing the University in investigating alleged violations of the Student Conduct Code, and, when necessary, presenting the facts of a charge before the Committee on Student Conduct; determining matters of conflicting jurisdiction between campus judicial bodies; referring charged persons to appropriate University counseling courses; maintaining files of all charges and dispositions; acting as a depository for records of the Committee on Student Conduct and for current rules of procedure of all judicial branches; recommending changes needed in such procedures; and preparing orders of expulsion for signature by the chairman of the Committee on Student Conduct.

Georgia

In the case of disruption, the University of Georgia will handle the situation in accordance with guidelines set down in a formal written memorandum between the Department of Public Safety (Campus Police) and the Division of Student Affairs.

Maine

The University of Maine's 1969 Statement on Campus Disorder spells out in some detail procedural guidelines to be followed "whenever possible" in dealing with campus disorders. It calls for a "control group" made up of students, faculty, and administrators to advise the university president in "extraordinary" situations.

Maryland

University of Maryland President Wilson H. Elkins has noted that "It is the policy of this university to deal with disruption, seizures, or other illegal action as quickly as possible with whatever legal means are necessary." He added that Maryland "will not negotiate with any individual or group under threat of force."

Massachusetts

The president of the University of Massachusetts has a formally established emergency advisory committee, composed of members of both the Faculty Senate and the Student Senate. This body provides broad-based community involvement and advice to the president in the event that emergency situations may require community participation in developing a decision.

In the single instance where there was a disturbance on campus, the university terminated it with the assistance of state police. Violators were brought before the civil courts. This process was successful in that neither damage nor injury resulted to any person involved in the action.

In the case of a recent disruption, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology obtained a restraining order from the court prior to any instance of violence. Separate committees of students, faculty, and administrators have been set up to deal with the problem of disruption. A Task Force of administrators works closely with the Campus Patrol and the civil authorities in dealing with problems of violence.

Michigan

The University of Michigan last summer developed plans for use in case of building occupations or violent demonstrations. The University also fireproofed and bombproofed files containing important documents.

Minnesota

In a policy statement issued September 29, University of Minnesota President Malcolm Moos listed standards for determining whether an event is to be considered "disruptive," set down procedures for faculty members faced with disruptions, and defined the disciplinary procedures followed by the University after a disruption. Faculty chairmen of public meetings, and other university officers are instructed to call university police immediately if a disruption appears to threaten life or property. In the event of potential or pending disruption, staff members of the Office of Student Affairs are to be called to assist in resolving any conflict which could escalate into a serious disruption. The guidelines are considered interim procedures pending the report of an extensive study expected in 1970.

Missouri

At Lincoln University the "Student Handbook" has been revised with special emphasis given to the "University's expectation of students regarding change, dissent and unrest." While certain specific infractions are listed along with possible University actions, the "Handbook" employs a positive approach by emphasizing expectations rather than an exhaustive list of "do's and don'ts," replete with matching penalties. This "Code of Expectations" is being emphasized in the release of the "Handbook" by the University's Office of Public Affairs.

Montana

At the University of Montana, plans to deal with campus disruption have been worked out in some detail among the faculty and the administration in conjunction with local and state authorities. It has been determined, upon the advice of the Attorney General of the State of Montana, that the injunction is the proper legal tool to be used in the event of campus disruption, and the University has been assured by civil authorities that adequate force will be made available upon request in a timely manner to deal with any disruption which may occur.

Montana State University has developed procedures which will go into effect should the normal operation of the university be obstructed.

New Hampshire

At the University of New Hampshire, during 1968–69, when some kind of student disruption seemed possible, a group of interested faculty and administrators, all of whom had had direct contact with students, met to develop a policy for handling disturbances. This group proved to be invaluable in controversies which developed over recruiting by organizations such as Dow Chemical, CIA, and others. This group also helped formulate a plan which could be implemented in case of subsequent confrontations. That plan is currently being updated to take account of new issues and new personalities which have arisen in the course of this new academic year.

New Jersey

The various colleges of Rutgers University have adopted specific and detailed policy statements on campus dissent, demonstrations and disruptions, spelling out the steps to be taken in case of disruption. As an example, Rutgers' University College has established a student-faculty-administration Committee on Campus Disruptions with the authority to deal with emergencies.

New Mexico

As student disturbances increased on various campuses around the country last year, it was decided at New Mexico State University that additional policy statements of a specific nature were needed. Two such statements were adopted for use in case of disruption at NMSU. Both statements warn participants to desist and spell out the possible consequences they face. The first statement deals with the problem of students attempting to take over University buildings. The second concerns student sit-ins. Both have been publicized on campus.

The University of New Mexico developed a plan for dealing with violence on campus in 1966. It assigns responsibilities aimed at maintaining and/or restoring to various members of the university community, including the Student Body President. The student officer will also be consulted in decisions on appropriate steps to be taken following a demonstration.

New York

At the State University of New York at Buffalo, guidelines articulated by President Myerson outline procedures used since fall of 1968 in response to threatening disruption on campus. When disruption threatens, a student-faculty-administration special security task force and a student-faculty observer corps go into operation.

The task force is convened to maintain campus procedures. If disruption or violation increases rather than diminishes, the task force considers calling campus security guards. At the same time, the observer corps tries to provide a moral influence against the use of force. Should the problem go beyond the influence of the observers or the campus security agents, calling for outside law enforcement assistance is considered. A representative of the task force is to suggest to the outside police, if called, the importance of avoiding violence and actions against innocent persons. The security task force remains in session for further decisions. The observers remain prepared to serve as witnesses at any subsequent judicial proceedings and to receive reports of any infringement of rights and liberties.

Cornell University President Dale Corson announced in September that he would appoint two committees, one representing students and the other faculty, to advise the administration in the event of campus disruptions involving public order. The committees will be developed "to meet quickly when a crisis is pending or has developed in order to provide the administration with assessments of student and faculty sentiment regarding both the situation confronting the University and the various courses of action which could be pursued at such times."

In September 1969, The City University of New York's Administrative Council, composed of college presidents and the chancellor, passed a resolution calling for the establishment on each college campus of a consultative committee composed of elected representatives of the faculty and student body which would participate along with the college administration in formulating general policy guidelines in advance of emergency situations and which would be available for immediate consultation in emergency situations.

The resolution also called for the establishment of a university-wide consultative committee composed of representatives from each of the college consultative committees with university-level purposes and functions similar to those of the college committees. The chairman and vice chairman of the Faculty Senate, the chairman of the Student Advisory Council, and the chancellor serve ex officio on this university committee.

In the event of serious disruptive activity on a college campus, no action is taken until the above consultative procedures have been implemented except in extreme situations where it would be impossible to implement such procedures.

Ohio

At Kent State University last April 1, temporary restraining orders—which have been used at other colleges primarily to break up demonstrations—were used to enjoin certain persons from coming onto the campus. The persons were non-students who were major leaders fo SDS and who took part in a demonstration at the Kent State Administration Building the previous day. Had they come on the campus, they would have been in contempt of court and subject to immediate arrest. The University is reported ready to use such orders again should the occasion arise.

Miami University has "planned for appropriate firmness, if necessary, in order to maintain order" according to President Phillip Shriver. "The Ohio legislature has provided adequately for state support to maintain order should such support be required. Provision has also been made for the utilization of court injunctions if necessary . . . . We believe that we are adequately prepared for campus disorders and violence should such occur."

In a letter to all members of the university community this September, Ohio University President Claude R. Sowle warned that should disruption of normal campus operations occur, "I would have no choice but to use any and all means at my disposal to restore order and permit the University to return to its proper activities and pursuits."

Ohio State University administrators have adopted a set of procedures to be followed in the event of a disruption.

Oklahoma

In the event of a disturbance, officials at Langston University have developed a plan with which to deal with it. The plan has not been made publics, but is known to the few key people who would be responsible for putting it into effect. It would subject disrupters to both university suspension and criminal arrest.

Oregon

Plans are in existence at Oregon State University to deal with all forms of disorder, with emphasis being placed on cooperative efforts by all members of the university community to resolve problems and forestall impending campus disruptions through the means of rational discussion. These plans were utilized in the summer of 1969 during a "sit-in" at the office of the Dean of Humanities and Social Sciences and provided an effective means to minimize the disturbance.

Rhode Island

Guidelines adopted by the Board of Trustees of the University of Rhode Island call for a meeting between the president of the university or his designated representative and any probable protesting group or groups prior to a campus visit by a potentially controversial person. Purpose of the meeting is to establish mutually agreeable arrangements.

The guidelines also prohibit demonstrations that block sight, hearing, access or egress, or otherwise interfere with the orderly conduct of an event being protested. To attain this objective, certain areas in which protest activity is prohibited may be defined in advance by mutual agreement between the University and the protesting parties.

A special university committee, representing the administration, the campus police force, the faculty, and the student body has been set up to formulate special rules and procedures in the event of a visit by a highly placed government official or highly controversial person.

South Dakota

In the event that action occurs on the University of South Dakota campus which interferes with the freedom of others, disruption of regular university activities, or destruction of property, university security officials are instructed to inform the offenders that they have a given time to disperse or they will be subject to arrest and possible suspension from the university.

Texas

A letter signed by Grover E. Murray, President of Texas Tech University, including ten key university regulations that were adopted by the College's Board of Directors in June 1968, is reproduced annually in the Code of Student Affairs, a copy of which is given each student each year at registration.

The regulations were carefully developed with legal counsel and are under constant review by the college's new resident legal counsel to ensure that Texas Tech is in a secure, legal position to take fast and effective action in the event of any destructive or disruptive activities on the campus.

Officials of the University of Texas system have "anticipated contingencies and set out certain procedures" for dealing with unrest.

Utah

Utah State University's administration has plans for dealing with student interruption of university programs if these should occur.

Virginia

Under detailed procedures worked out in the spring of 1968 by the University Council and Board of Visitors, Virginia Polytechnic Institute has specific plans for dealing with disruption. Persons involved in a disruptive act will be asked by the Director of Security to disperse immediately. Failure to respond when advised will lead to arrest. Following arrest, university actions with regard to those arrested will be held in abeyance until each case is resolved in the courts. In accordance with university policies, all students and staff members involved in disruptive activities will be held individually responsible for their actions.

Wisconsin

The University of Wisconsin last summer developed plans for use in case of building occupations or violent demonstrations.

Wyoming

According to University of Wyoming President William D. Carlson, plans have been developed for use in case of disruptions, seizures, or other illegal actions.

POLICIES AND PRACTICES REGARDING POLICE

Realizing that the use of police on campus has in the past caused problems, a number of institutions have taken steps to coordinate their activities in advance with local and campus police authorities. A few examples of such activities, as well as policies on police involvement that have been adopted, are listed in this section. There are no doubt many similar examples but the OIR is simply listing those in its files. These activities further reflect the advance planning many institutions have engaged in to be sure they are prepared to deal with potential campus disruption.

Alabama

A plan developed by Auburn University in conference with Auburn City personnel includes specific provisions for the role of campus and city police. When an emergency situation exists, campus police will alert the city police who will position themselves as observers until called upon for assistance by campus police. Auburn's policy for campus disturbances specifies that accusers must be prepared to identify positively those accused of committing violent acts and to swear out warrants for their arrests.

Arkansas

At the University of Arkansas, appropriate University officials have been working closely with the county sheriff, the Mayor and Chief of Police of the city of Fayetteville, and other law enforcement officials in developing plans to handle disruptions. "We believe we have developed procedures which will be effective in maintaining control in the event of disturbances," says UA President David W. Mullins.

California

The University of California at Berkeley is doubling its campus police force this year.

Connecticut

The University of Connecticut has, in consultation with students, developed a working relationship with both on-campus and state authorities designed to provide for public safety and security.

Georgia

The University of Georgia has an established procedure for coordinating activities with local police. This is outlined in a memorandum of agreement involving the president of the university, the Public Safety Department, and the Division of Student Affairs.

Maine

Noting that "the presence of uniformed officers at the scene of a student disturbance frequently incites the group to expanded action," the University of Maine's Statement on Campus Disorder states that in general only the ranking or senior officer available on campus is authorized to call campus security forces. Exceptions are made 'in the unlikely event that personal injury, bloodshed, fire or other destruction of public property occurs without prior warning so as to constitute an emergency situation."

Maryland

The University of Maryland this year expects increased participation by campus police in enforcing regulations. The campus police force has been doubled. The University also has a new supervisor of public safety and security and 47 security officers. The new director, who is 29 years old and holds a degree in criminology from Florida State University, hopes to foster better relationship between his department and students. "I can react better to students because I haven't been out of college that long myself," he says.

Massachusetts

At Massachusetts Institute of Technology a general policy has been adopted for solving problems on campus without calling the police. All other avenues for solving the problem will be explored prior to calling in outside authorities.

Minnesota

At the University of Minnesota close coordination is maintained among the campus police, the administration, and city police.

Montana

Montana State University meets annually with representatives of the various law enforcement bodies to exchange ideas and information and to agree on practices. In extreme emergencies campus security will summon assistance from off-campus law enforcement bodies. Otherwise this is done only at the direction of the president or his representative.

At the University of Montana, repeated conferences have been held with the city administration and city police officials, as well as county enforcement officers and the County Attorney's office, and the office of the Attorney General of the State of Montana. Lines of communication have been established and alternative courses of action in response to possible situations have been explored at length.

Nebraska

The University of Nebraska has adopted a policy making clear that the institution "abhors the use of force as a method for settling disagreement and will always make exhaustive attempts to deal with issues by rational methods." When, however, such rational efforts prove ineffective or when imminent danger to life or property exists, more forceful methods shall be used to protect the rights and property of members of the community.

New Jersey

Rutgers University policy is that violators will be dealt with by University authorities in all cases possible. But the president of the University or his designated representative has the right to call upon the civil authorities if he deems it necessary.

At the same time, through the efforts of its Security Department, Rutgers University has established good working relationships with all enforcement agencies which might be involved with campus disruptions. No such agency will "invade" any campus of the University unless invited or unless it has proper warrant, in which case university authorities are to be informed before the warrant is enforced.

New Mexico

New Mexico State University reports that in the past year in particular and in the years before that, University officials have met on numerous occasions with the law enforcement personnel of the community and state. As a consequence, the University has a close working relationship with the local police, state police, and New Mexico National Guard. If disruption does occur, procedures are clear and well-planned. Officials hope there is no occasion to resort to force; but they also state that if force is necessary, they will act promptly and decisively. "Experience at other campuses tells us that prompt and decisive action is one of the important keys to the successful handling of student-caused disruption," says Phil S. Ambrose, Vice President-Student Affairs.

During the 1968–69 school year, conferences were held between the University of New Mexico and state and city police. It was decided that if the university required major police assistance, the president would contact off-campus security forces.

North Carolina

The campus security force of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has been strengthened during the past year. In addition, a detective agency is now providing night watchmen around residence halls occupied by women students. Excellent liaison exists between the campus security force and city and state police authorities in the event that additional police are needed on campus.

Oregon

Campus security personnel are appointed as peace officers by Oregon law and have authority to deal with all violations of the law or of university regulations. By university policy, however, they normally restrict their activities to campus traffic control and the enforcement of university regulations, with offenses that violate state or local laws being left to local law enforcement officers with whom the Campus Marshal maintains continuous liaison and coordination.

South Dakota

South Dakota State University has decided on procedures to be followed by administrators if an interruption occurs on the campus. First, either the president or the next in line of authority will appear and warn the students that they have five minutes to move. If they do not move in that time, the administration will act to bring in first of all the campus police, secondly the city police and highway patrol, and if that does not work, the National Guard. The president has outlined the procedure he will follow to his Board of Regents.

In the case of a disturbance of a critical nature in which police action would be required, a "command car" concept has been organized at the University of South Dakota. The President, the Director of Student Affairs, the Sheriff, the Chief of Campus Security, and the Chief of Police would ride together in this car. Any decisions made, therefore, would be representative of a combined opinion on action to be taken.

Texas

The University of Texas at Austin has increased its security force on all campuses this year "partly because we want to be ready for anything," says a spokesman. The force includes some 50 officers trained in FBI-sponsored schools for peace officers.

Utah

The Utah State University administration has reviewed its relationship with local law enforcement officials in providing assistance if help is needed.

Wisconsin

During the last year, the administrations of the Madison and Milwaukee campuses of the University of Wisconsin have not hesitated to invite the local police on their campuses whenever student demonstrations were likely to grow too large for the campus security forces to handle.

Wyoming

The University of Wyoming has conferred with city, county, and state officials concerning the roles of campus and off-campus police units in emergency situations.

POLICIES ON FIREARMS

In this section are examples of specific university policies in effect regarding the use and possession of firearms on the campus. In many cases these policies are part of an overall student code. In all of the examples that follow firearms are expressly banned from the campus. A majority of state universities have policies regulating firearms.

Alabama

At the University of Alabama possession of firearms or dangerous weapons is prohibited.

Arizona

Arizona State University's new code of conduct forbids "possession or use of any firearm, incendiary device or explosive, except in connection with a university-approved activity."

Connecticut

The University of Connecticut for many years has explicitly prohibited the possession or use on its campus of firearms and other weapons defined by state statute to be dangerous. It also prohibits specifically a wide range of other dangerous materials and devices. A specific prohibition against firearms and dangerous weapons was also enacted a year ago by the Student Senate.

Delaware

The current Student Handbook of Delaware State College notes that "the use and/or storage of firearms, ammunition, or explosives of any kind in motor vehicles, buildings, or elsewhere on the college premises is prohibited. The possession or discharge of firearms, firecrackers, or any lethal weapon, the use of candles and starting a fire on the college premises are not permitted."

Florida

Florida State University's new code of conduct lists as a specific violation "unauthorized possession or discharge on the FSU campus or property of ammunition, weapons, explosives, or fireworks."

Georgia

Students are prohibited from possessing firearms on University of Georgia property except with permission from the Department of Public Safety.

Iowa

The University of Iowa's Code of Student Life lists as an act of misconduct "use or possession of serviceable firearms, ammunition, explosives, fireworks, or other dangerous articles within any University building or University approved housing, on the campus, or at any University sponsored or supervised function or event, except in authorized facilities."

Iowa State University's "Code of the Student Community" states that students "shall not possess or use serviceable firearms, ammunition, explosive or other dangerous weapons or materials on the campus except as specifically described by the Department of Residence for purpose of storage, or as authorized by the chief of campus security or as authorized for instructional and research purposes."

Kansas

At the University of Kansas, firearms may be carried only by "persons authorized to do so by the Chancellor or his designated representative." The University warns that "violation of this rule will result in immediate dismissal from the University."

Maryland

At the University of Maryland, 1969–70 University Regulations forbid the use or possession of fireworks or firearms.

Massachusetts

A new Massachusetts law bans all firearms on college and university campuses in the Commonwealth except for certain weapons required for security purposes by authorized personnel. This reinforces existing regulations at the University of Massachusetts and Massachusetts Institute of Technology banning firearms.

Minnesota

State statutes forbidding unauthorized firearms on state property apply to University of Minnesota students.

Montana

Students at Montana State University are permitted to have hunting rifles or shotguns. Gun rooms are provided in the residence halls where all guns and ammunition must be stored and signed in and out. No handguns are permitted. Concealed weapons are a violation of the law and campus regulation.

Nebraska

University of Nebraska students residing in residence halls are allowed to have firearms but they must store them in a central area. Special storage areas for firearms are provided on the first floor of each residence hall.

New Hampshire

The University of New Hampshire's "Student Rights and Rules Book" has for many years carried strict prohibitions against the keeping of "firearms, explosives and fireworks" in men's and women's residence halls and provides for confiscation of such materials and disciplinary action against the owner. During 1968–69, the University also developed and instituted policies which are designed to restrict the use of armed campus police officers. Under the new policy, campus police officers are not armed while they are performing routine traffic control duties or normal day-time patrols of the campus.

New Jersey

Each of the several colleges of Rutgers University has had policies prohibiting firearms for at least 25 years. In addition, the New Jersey state legislature in 1969 passed a bill prohibiting unauthorized persons from possessing firearms while on the premises of an educational institution.

New York

Regulations adopted by the trustees of the State University of New York last summer include as prohibited conduct knowingly possessing upon university premises "any rifle, shotgun, pistol, revolver, or other firearm or weapon without the written authorization of the chief administrative officer whether or not a license to possess the same has been issued."

New regulations in effect this year at Cornell University contain this section dealing with firearms: "The possession, carrying, or use of firearms, including rifles and shotguns, ammunition, explosives, or other dangerous weapons, instruments, or substances in or upon University premises, except by law enforcement officers or except as specifically authorized by the University, is prohibited." Students may have such weapons on university property only by depositing them with the Division of Safety and Security for safekeeping until the students leave the city to go home. Rules and regulations for the maintenance of public order adopted by the Board of Higher Education of The City University of New York contain a section on firearms which states:

"No individual shall have in his possession a rifle, shotgun or firearm or knowingly have in his possession any other dangerous instrument or material that can be used to inflict bodily harm on an individual or damage upon a building or the grounds of the University/college without the written authorization of such educational institution."

North Carolina

The Consolidated University of North Carolina, and North Carolina A & T State University expressly forbids "the possession of bowie knives, dirks, daggers, loaded canes, sword canes, machetes, pistols, rifles, repeating rifles, shotguns, pump guns, or other firearms or explosives upon any University campus or in any University-owned or operated facility, unless explicitly permitted by the appropriate Chancellor or his designated representative in writing." Violation of this prohibition is grounds for suspension from the University.

South Dakota

The use of firearms or the possession of firearms on any state-owned property within the University of South Dakota campus is prohibited.

Tennessee

Following an incident in which a student was injured at Tennessee State University, President Andrew P. Torrence issued a firm memorandum to all students of the university, in which he cited the university policy with reference to firearms. The policy states that the possession of any type of firearms, long knives, pellet guns, or any other type of weapons or firecrackers is prohibited on campus. The president warned that the policy would be rigidly enforced and that violation of the policy is grounds for immediate expulsion from the university.

The University of Tennessee lists in its standards of conduct as a category of misconduct for which students are subject to discipline "possession, while on University-owned or controlled property or at University-sponsored or supervised activities, or any weapons such as, but not limited to rifles, shotguns, ammunition, handguns and air guns, including explosives such as firecrackers, etc., unless authorized in writing by the Superintendent of Safety and Security."

Texas

Rules of the University of Texas System include a section which quotes the state law making it unlawful to interfere with the normal activities of any institution of higher education by "exhibiting or using or threatening to exhibit or use a firearm."

Virginia

At the University of Virginia the possession, storage, and use of any kind of ammunition, firearms, fireworks, explosives, air rifles, or air pistols on university property, in fraternity houses, and on fraternity property, is prohibited.

Washington

A new gun control policy at Washington State University provides for locked storage of all student-owned guns in residence halls or the Safety Building. The policy was recommended by the student-faculty Student Affairs Advisory Committee.

West Virginia

Possession of firearms, firecrackers, or other explosives on university property, including in university-supervised residence halls, has long been prohibited at West Virginia University. This regulation is clearly spelled out in a new Student Handbook published in 1969.

Wisconsin

Regent regulations applicable to all campuses of the University of Wisconsin prohibit carrying or using firearms on university property with certain exceptions.

Wyoming

University of Wyoming regulations forbid the possession of firearms, incendiary devices, or explosives within university buildings or university housing.

STATEMENT IN EXPLANATION OF A BILL TO AMEND THE LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT

HON. WILLIAM H. AYRES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to improve the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act by increasing benefits, liberalizing certain provisions of the act, and removing the dual liability of stevedore and ship repair contractors for employment injuries to employees covered by the act. At the present time, these employers are liable for compensation required by the act and may also be liable for reimbursement to shipowners of amounts paid in damages by the shipowners to the same employees for the same injuries.

A comparatively small number of employees now recover substantial damages for their employment injuries from shipowners which must be ultimately paid by the Longshore Act employer, while the benefits under the act, which the great majority of employees depend on for income when disabled, are inadequate and out of date. The proposal combines provisions to break the circular liability chain and significantly improve benefits.

CIRCULAR LIABILITY CHAIN—LONGSHOREMEN V. SHIPOWNERS V. STEVEDORES

The initial point for consideration in the present circular liability chain which exists with respect to the Longshore Act is that the act explicitly states that the liability of the employer for damages for injury or death resulting from employment of employees covered by it shall be exclusive.

The Longshore Act covers approximately 266,000 longshoremen and harbor workers. Of this number, 14,464 received workmen's compensation at some time during fiscal year 1968. In that same fiscal year, 1,320 cases were filed by Longshore Act employees in the U.S. district courts against third-party shipowners for damages for employment injuries.

Beginning in 1946 the courts established the principle that a shipowner owes an absolute warranty for seaworthiness to Longshore Act employees. This warranty has no relation to negligence and, under the decisions, makes a shipowner a virtual insurer for any employment injury which befalls a longshoreman, ship repairman, or harbor worker aboard ship.

Under existing principles also formulated by the courts and first stated in 1955, the Longshore Act employer is liable to reimburse the shipowner for recoveries by Longshore Act employees for injuries for which the employer stands primarily liable under the act. Since election between receiving compensation from an employer and bringing suit against a shipowner for the same injury is not required, the same employees are involved in an unknown number of both claim and litigation cases. Recoveries made by employees against shipowners, however, are offset against compensation payments under the act. The courts in 1963 began applying the new principle that a shipowner employing longshoremen directly to unload his ship—acting as his own stevedore—is subject to damage suits by the longshoremen for employment injury, despite the fact that the shipowner is an employer under the Longshore Act.

The provisions of this bill relating to the circular and enhanced liability of Longshore Act employers are intended to reinstate the exclusive liability principle of the act.

INCREASE OF PRESENT MAXIMUM AND MINIMUM COMPENSATION

The existing minimum disability compensation payment of $18 weekly was established in 1956 and the existing maximum payment of $70 weekly was established in 1961. In the interim since 1961 to June 1969, the average weekly wage in ship and boat building and repair has increased by 35 percent.

We estimate that in 1970 most longshoremen will be earning nearly $200 a week. The base rate under union contracts will be $4.60 an hour in all ports except San Francisco and the Great Lakes. The base rate in San Francisco will average $4.81 an hour for a standard 8-hour day, including a guarantee of 2 hours overtime daily. In the Great Lakes the basic rate will be $4.02 an hour, increasing to $4.71 an hour in 1971. The 1970 rates for the west coast become effective in June 1970, for the east and gulf coasts in October 1970, and April for the Great Lakes.

In 1961, when the present $70 weekly maximum was put into effect, the average earnings of a longshoreman working a 40-hour week, handling general cargo, were $129.60. In 1970, the comparable figure will be $192.60 an increase of 49 percent. The weekly earnings in 1970, again assuming a 40-hour week and using the general cargo rate, will be $184 in most east and gulf coast ports and $160.80 on the Great Lakes. These earnings represent increases over 1961 of more than 50 percent. It should be noted, however, that these calculations are made on basic general cargo rates. Most workers will earn considerably more because of penalty cargo rates paid for handling certain types of cargo and for different working conditions.

In view of the above facts, an increase in the maximum compensation under the Longshore Act to $119 a week is recommended.

Since wages in the District of Columbia, to which the Longshore Act applies, average approximately $132 a week, a lower maximum of $85 is set for employment injuries in that jurisdiction and a proportionate overall maximum increase for temporary total disability to $29,160.

The minimum compensation would also be increased from $18 to $35 weekly to provide a totally disabled employee with sufficient funds to meet the cost of minimum subsistence. Employees whose wages do not exceed the new minimum are entitled to their entire wages free of the act's percentage limitation otherwise applicable. With today's living costs it is evident that employees making less than $35 weekly would not be able to subsist on 66⅔ percent of their earnings.

The act presently provides that temporary total disability benefits may not exceed $24,000. An increase in this overall maximum proportionate to the increase in the weekly maximum is provided. The increase would be to $40,800 except in the District of Columbia.

INCREASE IN DEATH BENEFIT PERCENTAGES AND AUTHORIZATION OF STUDENT BENEFITS

The percentage of an employee's wage which may be drawn by a widow is increased from 35 to 45 percent, and of surviving grandchildren and sisters and brothers eligible for benefits, from 15 to 20 percent.

Further, surviving children in a student status, as defined by the bill, would be authorized to continue to receive benefits after reaching 18 years of age.

DISFIGUREMENT

The lump sum payment of $3,500 is extended to be paid for disfigurement of the neck, as well as of the face and head, and also of other normally exposed areas which would affect employability.

REDUCTION IN LENGTH OF DISABILITY BEFORE ELIMINATION OF WAITING PERIOD AND EXTENSION NOTICE AND CLAIM TIME

Since 1956 the act has provided that there must be a 3-day waiting period unless the disability continues for at least 28 days. The bill reduces the period to 21 days, after which compensation is payable for the waiting period. This improvement is in line with modern workmen's compensation law trends.

The act now provides that notice of injury or death shall be given within 30 days and claim for compensation or death shall be filed within 1 year after the injury or death. These time limits do not take into consideration the later development of latent disability from a relatively minor accident, or disease causally related to the employment. The time for giving notice of injury and filing claim for compensation or death is, therefore, extended to 60 days after the employee or the beneficiary is aware, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should have been aware, of a relationship between the disabling condition or the death and the employment.

SPECIAL FUNDS

Two special funds are established under the act. One, is for employees covered by the Longshore Act and its extensions; and the other, for workers in the District of Columbia. The funds provide continuing compensation for permanently disabled workers, or their survivors, when so-called second injuries are suffered by employees with existing physical impairments. The special fund payments begin when payments attributable to the second injury have been completed by the employer or insurance carrier who is liable.

The funds also provide compensation payments when an employer becomes insolvent, and for expenses of vocational rehabilitation when necessary in certain cases, including a living allowance not to exceed $25 a week.

Financing of the funds is provided by fines and penalties collected under the act, interest, and sums of $1,000 paid into the fund in nonsurvivor death cases. The Longshore Act fund is now in a precarious state. Annual disbursements are in excess of annual income, and the outstanding liabilities against the fund exceed the amounts it contains.

In order to finance the Longshore special funds adequately, the bill requires that employers or insurance carriers in cases where an employee suffering employment injury dies and there is no eligible beneficiary pay into the funds any amounts remaining unpaid under a schedule award. It also increases from $1,000 to $20,000 the amount which must be contributed by employers or carriers into the funds in all cases where an employee dies from an employment injury and there is no eligible beneficiary. At present compensation levels, the average compensation paid in fatal cases under the Longshore Act is $35,000. The contribution of $20,000, therefore, where the potential liability is so much greater appears reasonable.

Provision is made also for an appropriation when necessary to supplement the special fund.

ADMINISTRATION EXPENSES

In line with the policy of defraying the cost of Government programs related to particular industries by charges on the industries, the bill also authorizes financing of the cost of the act's administration, including the safety program conducted pursuant to section 41, by a pro rata assessement made by the Secretary upon carriers and self-insurers upon the basis of gross premiums paid to the carriers or the amounts self-insurers would have paid if they purchased insurance. Procedures for making the assessment are provided. Authorization is made for appropriation from Congress until the assessments are collected and when funds are not otherwise available.

In view of the length of time since improvements have been made in the compensation program under the Longshore Act early action is sought to provide income maintenance for injured employees within its terms in keeping with wages and other current economic factors.

A summary of the bill to amend the act follows:

SECTION BY SECTION SUMMARY OF BILL TO AMEND THE LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT

Section 1—Definitions—(a) Amends section 2(4) of the Act to extend the definition of "employer" to include "vessel."

(b) Amends section 2 of the Act by renumbering paragraph (20) and adding a new paragraph (19) to define "vessel."

Section 2—Liability for Compensation—Amends section 4 of the Act, requiring employers to secure compensation, to except vessels unless another employer of an employee entitled to benefits under the Longshore Act does not secure compensation. Provides further that when an employer, as defined under the Act, secures compensation, such compensation shall be the exclusive remedy against any employer.

Section 3—Waiting Period—Amends section 6(a) of the Act to permit payment of compensation without a waiting period when the disability exceeds 21 days. A three-day waiting period is now specified unless the disability exceeds 28 days.

Section 4(a) and (b)—Maximum and Minimum—Amends section 6(b) of the Act to increase the maximum of $70 a week to $119 a week; the minimum from $18 to $35; and amends section 14(m) to increase the overall money limit for temporary and partial disability from $24,000 to $40,800.

Section 5—Disfigurement—Amends section 8(c)(20) of the Act to expand the meaning of compensable disfigurement to include, in addition to the face and head, disfigurement of neck, or of any other area normally exposed while employed which would handicap an employee in obtaining or holding employment.

Section 6—Injury following previous impairment—Amends section 8(f)(1) to clarify and make definite the conditions under which an employer provides compensation for disability caused by subsequent injuries and thus to encourage employment of handicapped persons.

Section 7—Student benefits—(a) Amends section 2(14) of the Act to add "student" to definition of eligible "child" and adds a new paragraph (21) to define "student" for the purpose of continuing benefits to certain surviving dependents while they are in school.

(b) Amends section 8(d) to allow surviving dependents to receive benefits beyond 18 years of age if in a student status.

Section 8—Death benefits—(a) Amends section 9 (b) and (c) of the Act to increase the death benefits to the surviving wife or dependent husband from 35 to 45 percent of the deceased employee's average wages.

(b) Amends section 9(d) to increase the death benefit for dependent grandchildren, brothers or sisters from 15 to 20 percent of such average wages.

(d) Amends section 9(e) to increase the maximum weekly wages for computation of death benefits from $105 to $178.50 and increases the minimum from $27 to $52.50.

(d) Amends section 9(g), which provides for the commutation of compensation benefits to certain aliens who are not residents of the United States or Canada. The section now requires the Secretary, upon application of an insurance company, to commute future installments of compensation to such aliens by paying one-half the commuted amount of future compensation. The amendment removes the requirement for commutation payments and permits the Secretary to commute in his discretion.

Section 9—Defense Base Act—Benefits to Alien Survivors—The Defense Base Act extends the benefits of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act to employees of contractors at United States bases or on public works where such contracts are performed outside the continental United States. Section 2(b) of that Act respecting compensation payments for nonresident aliens is similar to section 9(g) of the Longshoremen's Act. This bill, therefore, amends section 2(b) of the Defense Base Act to conform to amendment to Longshore Act described in preceding section.

Section 10—Time for Notice and Claim—Amends section 12(a) to extend the time for giving notice of injury or death to the deputy commissioner and to the employer, from 30 days after the injury or death to 60 days after the employee or the beneficiary is aware or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should have been aware of a relationship between the injury or death and the employment.

(b) Amend section 13(a) to defer the time for filing a claim for compensation for injury or death in latent disability cases. The Act now provides that a claim must be filed within one year after the injury or death, or if payment of compensation has been made without an award a claim may be filed within one year after the date of the last payment. The amendment provides that the time for filing claim shall not begin to run until the employee or beneficiary is aware, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence should have been aware of the relationship between the injury or death and the employment.

Section 11—Special Fund—(a) Amends section 8(d) by providing for payment into the special fund, described in section 44(a) of the Act, of any disability compensation due to an employee under a scheduled award when he has no survivors.

(b) Amends section 44(c)(1) by substituting $20,000 for the $1,000 now required to be paid into the special fund by the employer or insurance carrier upon the death of an employee resulting from employment injury when there are no survivors.

Section 12—Administration Expenses—Amends section 45(a) to add new subsections (c) through (1) providing for the Secretary at the end of each fiscal year to assess carriers and self-insurers for cost of administration for next fiscal year.

Section 13—Appropriation—Amends section 46, (a) to authorize appropriation of amounts necessary for administration of Act in fiscal year beginning July 1, 1970, pending receipt of assessments authorized by section 45, (b) authorizes appropriations for administration when sufficient assessments are not collected, and (c) authorizes supplementary funds as necessary to meet obligations of special fund under section 44 of the Act.

Section 14—D.C. Workmen's Compensation Act—(a), (b) and (c)—Provides that the maximum compensation rate in the District of Columbia under extension of the Longshore Act in 45 Stat. 600, will be $85 a week and the overall maximum in temporary total disability cases will be $29,160.

(d) Provides the basis for computing death benefits shall be considered to be no more than $127.50.

Section 15—Technical Amendment—Makes grammatical change of substituting "or" for "nor" in Section 3(a)(1) of the Act.

Section 16—Repeals section 47 "Availability of Appropriations." No longer needed.

Section 17—Effective Date—Provides for effective dates for different sections and that higher benefits and other related provisions shall apply only to injuries and deaths therefrom sustained after the effective date indicated.

FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT

HON. CLARENCE J. BROWN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Family Assistance Act is now ready for House action.

I want to underscore the fact that this is a program of employment assistance as much as it is a program of income assistance, workfare rather than welfare.

Among its many advantages, the family assistance approach separates the making of financial payments from the provision of social services.

Our graduate schools train social workers. But what these social workers then do mostly is perform the paperwork of administering allowance payments. They also serve as investigators.

Social workers who have no time to do social work are not going to get people off the welfare rolls.

Social workers who are the welfare "detectives" are not going to establish the kind of helping relationship with their clients that will enable those who need held to become self-supporting.

Under the family assistance plan, social workers will be able to do their job, and a separate agency will worry about the money.

I consider this a critical reform.

ABNER MIKVA DOES IT AGAIN

HON. EDWARD I. KOCH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Speaker, our colleague, ABNER MIKVA, has introduced a bill entitled "Handgun Control Act of 1970." It is superb legislation, absolutely necessary, and should be enacted immediately. His proposal has received the editorial support of the New York Times. With the thought it would be of interest to the Members of this House, I am setting forth a copy.

The editorial follows:

SATURDAY NIGHT SPECIALS

The 1968 gun control laws were passed in the wake of the assassinations of Robert F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King as the beginning of efforts by the Federal Government to prohibit interstate mail-order sales of firearms and over-the-counter sales to minors. Because Federal licensing and registration were not built into the laws, the burden was placed on states and municipalities to fill the breach with strong regulations of their own.

The states have failed to tighten the loopholes, especially in the hidden area of handguns. The National Violence Commission rated only New York, Massachusetts and New Jersey as strict enforcers of their permit requirements.

Gun control is both a Federal and a state concern. Neither type of limitation works without enforcement by the other. A startling example is the "Saturday night special" the cheap, nonsporting concealed gun that is the criminal's favorite weapon. The 1968 gun laws helped to stop the importation of such guns; they were coming into the United States at a rate of 750,000 a year.

However, a new "cottage industry" has grown up in this country to replace the imported handguns. Through use of cheap parts from abroad, "Saturday night specials" are now being produced by the hundreds of thousands here. The Internal Revenue Service estimates that domestic production equals and possibly exceeds the flow of cheap handguns that the 1968 law was supposed to stop.

A Handgun Control Act of 1970, introduced in Congress by Representative Abner J. Mikva of Illinois, is directed at pistols, revolvers and other concealable weapons. It would halt the importation, manufacture, transfer and transportation within the United States of any handgun, except by law enforcement officers, military personnel and certain qualified persons licensed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The bill does not go so far as to ban possession of handguns by those legally owning them now. There is, however, a procedure for giving up weapons to law enforcement officials.

The new proposal could be an important advance because it prohibits the further legal manufacture of "Saturday night specials." It could also be the basis for regulation of a similar nature by states and municipalities. Confiscation cannot get past the legislatures, but controls can and must, to stop the stockpiling of private arsenals.

U.S. DISTRICT COURT OF COLORADO DECISION IN PROJECT RULISON CASE

HON. CRAIG HOSMER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. HOSMER. Mr. Speaker, Project Rulison is an AEC experiment being conducted with the cooperation of the Department of the Interior and Austral Oil Co. CER Geonuclear Corp. is the program manager. It is part of AEC's Plowshare program, a research and development effort to develop peaceful uses of nuclear explosive technology.

Project Rulison is essentially a study of the economic and technical feasibility of nuclear stimulation of the low permeability gas-bearing Mesaverde sandstone formation in the Rulison area of Colorado. Nuclear stimulation is accompanied by the detonation of a nuclear device to create a cavity and a fracture system to stimulate the production of natural gas. Because of its low permeability, the Mesaverde formation does not produce natural gas in commercial quantities, although it does contain a significant gas reserve.

Several plaintiffs brought suit against AEC, Austral Oil Co., Inc., and CER Geonuclear Corp. to stop Project Rulison. The plaintiffs were comprised of a number of individuals, the Colorado Open Space Coordinating Council, Inc.—a nonprofit public benefit Colorado corporation—and a Colorado district attorney.

Before the nuclear device was detonated at a depth of 8,431 feet on September 10, 1969, this lawsuit sought to prevent the shot; however, the court denied the request for an injunction and the denial was sustained by the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals. Plaintiffs then sought a permanent injunction to prohibit the planned flaring of the gas contained within the cavity created by the nuclear detonation. The general purpose of the proposed flaring is to determine the extent of stimulation of production, the dimensions and configuration of the cavity and fracture system, and the feasibility of the entire project.

The court's decision on March 16, 1970, was generally in favor of AEC's position, and will permit Project Rulison to proceed. The judge found AEC's project plans to be reasonable and adequate from health and safety standpoints.

Several issues of law and of fact were before the court. On the issues of law, the court essentially found as follows:

First. Did the plaintiffs have standing to sue? The court held that they did—except for the district attorney—that there was a question of possible irreparable injury to their health and safety as a consequence of an action by AEC beyond its statutory limits.

Second. Was there a justiciable controversy? The court held that there was—that the principal question revolved around the proposed flaring and whether that activity would be carried out with due regard to public health and safety as required by the Atomic Energy Act.

Third. Was this a suit against the sovereign and consequently barred by the doctrine of sovereign immunity? The court held that it was not because the complaint was to the effect that the proposed action would be beyond AEC's statutory authority.

Fourth. Were plaintiffs attempting to stop discretionary acts of the AEC that were not really subject to judicial review? The court decided that its review should be limited to whether the health and safety arrangements of the AEC for the proposed flaring constituted an abuse of discretion. The judge indicated his belief that "there is clearly a necessity for review to insure that the AEC discretion does not become a citadel impregnable to challenge by the concerned public, to insure that it is not so exercised as to fail to exercise the standard established by law, that is, the protection of the public health and safety." The court decided that the plaintiffs were not seeking review of discretionary acts immune from judicial review.

Fifth. Were plaintiffs entitled to their requested order to direct AEC to answer all questions and to turn over to plaintiffs all information regarding the project? The court held in the negative.

Sixth. Were AEC's plans for protecting health and minimizing danger to life and property a reasonable exercise of its statutory authority? The court found that they were.

With respect to the issues of fact, the key question was whether the proposed flaring of the gas from the Rulison cavity would endanger the life, health or property of the plaintiffs in contravention of the requirements of the Atomic Energy Act respecting health and safety. In pursuing this main inquiry, five subsidiary points were entailed:

First. Were AEC's plans reasonably adequate?

Second. Was the plan for flaring within the radiation protection standards of the AEC and the Federal Radiation Council?

Third. Were the defendants prepared and equipped actually to implement the plans, thereby insuring health and safety protection?

Fourth. Were AEC and FRC radiation protection standards reasonably adequate to protect life, health, and property?

Fifth. Were there safe economical alternatives to the proposed flaring as a means of determining the effectiveness of the Rulison shot?

The judge answered the key factual issue and the first four subsidiary questions in the affirmative; regarding the last question, he found that the plaintiffs had failed to establish that any such alternative existed and, besides, that the proposed flaring was reasonable.

In considering the factual questions, Judge Arraj reviewed the effects of the detonation, the plans for reentry and the attendant provisions for health and safety of the public. He discussed at length AEC's plans for reentry into the Rulison cavity. He then proceeded to consider the plan for production testing, including the monitoring program, the processing of the gas produced during the flaring operations, the analysis systems, and the planned environmental surveillance activities to be carried out under the supervision and control of the Southwestern Radiological Health Laboratory of the U.S. Public Health Service. This will include elaborate sampling and monitoring before reentry, in order to establish background levels of radiation, as well as during reentry and flaring operations. The decision specifies that all of the data gathered under the surveillance plan, the meteorological support plan and the onsite monitoring program are to be disseminated by AEC to the public.

With respect to releases of tritium and krypton-85, the court noted that AEC's plans were based upon a maximum release of 10,000 curies of tritium and 960 curies of krypton-85 The court found from the evidence in all probability the Rulison device produced significantly less tritium that the plans contemplated. The judge referred to Dr. Holzer's testimony to the effect that the maximum percentage of tritium that would probably reach the surface in the flaring operation was 19 percent of which about 9 percent would be flared—a small fraction of what AEC included in its plans for its postulated "maximum hypothetical accident." The judge found AEC's plans for limiting releases of radionuclides within established levels to be reasonable. Judge Arraj referred to the testimony of Dr. Victor Bond, Associate Director of Brookhaven National Laboratory, in regard to the properties of tritium and krypton-85 and dosage implications. He noted that plaintiffs offered no substantial testimony to contradict Dr. Bond's testimony; he also noted the testimony offered in November 1969 by Dr. Radford before the Subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution of the Senate Committee on Public Works, and found that it does not controvert Dr. Bond's testimony that the dose from the Rulison flaring will not constitute a health threat. The court concluded that the preponderance of the evidence shows that the Rulison plans for the release of gas from the cavity "make reasonable provision for the protection of the health and safety of human, plant, and animal life."

The decision includes a detailed consideration of the reasonable adequacy of the FRC and AEC radiation protection standards for the protection of life, health, and property. Much of the evidence and testimony at the trial went to this particular point. The court refused to insinuate itself into the risk-benefit evaluation, inherent in the setting of exposure standards, with respect to the need for the natural gas locked in the Mesaverde formation at Rulison. The decision states that this was for Congress to decide, and that the court's task is "to insure that the AEC has not exceeded congressional standards established to protect the public in a utilization of atomic energy which Congress has authorized, presumably after having evaluated the risk-benefit equation presented by the Rulison project." The court found that Rulison plans did not entail a departure from the protection standards.

The decision discusses the concept of linear relation between dose and damage to living cells. The decision states:

> We find that the adoption of this assumption constitutes a conservative approach by the standards setters and does not constitute a recognition of the scientific validity of the linear theory.

In regard to the expressed views of Drs. Tamplin and Gofman, the judge says:

> Thus, although the plaintiffs claim that their demand for a lowering of the standards is supported by "hard evidence," they have failed to produce in this Court any "hard evidence" of radiation effects at or below the low dose levels of the radiation protection standards.

The decision includes a discussion of the practical threshold theory, and the court finds that there is evidential support for the theories of threshold and practical threshold; the court notes that this evidence was not taken into consideration in the establishment of the current standards. The court expresses the following opinion:

> The field of radiation protection is constantly changing with the appearance of new scientific knowledge on the biological effects of ionizing radiation. Careful decisions must be made in the context of contemporaneous knowledge. Such decisions cannot be indefinitely postponed if the potentials of atomic energy are to be fully realized. All that is required to establish reasonableness of the decision setting a standard under the statutory directive to protect the public health and safety is that it be made carefully in light of the best of available scientific knowledge. Absolute certainty is neither required nor possible.

The concluding portion of the decision includes these statements:

> We conclude that the evidence shows that the AEC is following the Congressional mandate and its own rules and regulations, and that the actions and plans of the AEC in the prosecution of the conclusory phase of Project Rulison constitute a reasonable exercise of its statutory authority to conduct research in the utilization of atomic energy while providing for the protection of the health and safety of the public. * * *

Lest our ruling today be misunderstood, some additional words are required. This opinion, our findings, conclusions and ruling apply only to the specific factual situation presented by this litigation. We approve only of the flaring of the gas from the one well in the Rulison unit in which a nuclear device was detonated on September 10, 1969. We are not here and now approving continued detonations and flaring operations in the Rulison field. Such determination must be made in the context of a specific factual situation, in light of contemporary knowledge of science and medicine of the dangers of radioactivity, at the time such projects are conceived and executed.

Further although we have found that the plans for the flaring do provide reasonably for the health and safety of the public and that the specific plans for surveillance are reasonable, we determine that the Court should retain jurisdiction in order to insure that the plans we today approve as reasonable are in fact reasonably and safely executed. To aid this retention of jurisdiction we further determine that the defendants should file with this Court data and reports of the information collected by the surveillance system outlined in Appendix A.

A copy of this more than 60-page decision is available in the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy office, Room H403 in the Capitol.

VFW VOICE OF DEMOCRACY WINNING ESSAY

HON. OLIN E. TEAGUE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, each year the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States sponsors a Voice of Democracy program in which high school students are asked to write a broadcast script. All five winners of this year's contest on "Freedom's Challenge" were guests of honor at the VFW congressional dinner and received a personal congratulation from President Nixon. I would like to include the essay of the first place winner, Lawrence N. Slaughter, of North Charleston, S.C. A 17-year-old North Charleston High School student, Lawrence is vice president of the student council, and plans to study for the ministry at Emory University in Atlanta. The VFW should be commended for their sponsorship of such a fine program. After reading this essay, I think you will agree that we all can take pride in the patriotism and faith in America displayed by this young student.

The essay follows:

FREEDOM'S CHALLENGE

(By Lawrence N. Slaughter)

Well, what is it, I mean, I hear you talking all the time about it, but I don't know what you mean. I just can't get it. What is this thing—"freedom."

It isn't that I haven't tried to find out what it is; I looked it up in the dictionary and it said that it was the "lack of restraint." That sounded good to me—"lack of restraint." But then I got confused all over again. You told me that I had freedom. But I can't drive on the left side of the street. I cant' scream and yell outside if I want to. There's a lot of things that I can't do. Who's lying, you or Noah Webster?

I wonder if I'll ever know what it means. I wonder if anyone ever knew what it really means. I know that I'm not the only one that was ever told that he had freedom. What did freedom mean to the man that enlisted in the army of Adolf Hitler and was told that he was of the superior race and he should kill to have freedom. What did freedom mean to the Russian peasant whose land was burned—for freedom? What does freedom mean to the Vietnamese whose family is killed—for freedom? What is freedom to the poverty stricken American who is bound by hunger in this the "land of the free." But what I really want to know is what is freedom to me. You say that I have freedom; but the militants tell me that I don't, and I ought to kill you to get it and the radical right says I ought to kill the militant so that I can keep this freedom that I'm not sure I even have. I'm confused.

Wait you say that my freedom "stops when another man's freedom begins." Hey now that makes sense. That's why I can't exercise my freedom to scream and yell, because it violates another man's freedom to have peace. I can have freedom as long as I let another man have his. That means I can have freedom of speech as long as I don't yell "fire" in a crowded theater. I can have freedom of the press as long as I don't use it to use the paper to lie about someone else. Now, that makes sense; I guess you could say that I'm "free and bound."

That's quite a responsibility isn't it. I've been given this freedom and I guess it was given to me so that I might keep it long enough to give it to someone else. That must be what you mean by this "Freedom's Challenge" bit. It is a challenge and the challenge seems twofold. I've got to keep this freedom and I've got to give it away, too. Now that's a paradox. I've got to protect my freedom so that someone else may have it after I'm gone. I've got to cherish this thing, freedom; but then again, I can't cherish it so much that I won't let others have this right that I enjoy. I guess I've got to protect his freedom as much as I have to protect mine. If that means that I've got to work with him to save our freedom together, I guess that's what I'll have to do. If it means that I have to leave him alone because he doesn't like me, that's his freedom, and I've got to protect it.

Now I know what freedom means and this worries me more than not knowing. Now that I know, I'm worried. It's staggering to think that I have this responsibility of protecting both mine and others' freedom. I am free—and I am bound to protect this freedom. What a responsibility; and what a challenge! I hope I can live up to it. Can you?

WCOC RADIO STATION IS TOPS

Hon. G. V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise today in recognition of radio station WCOC in my hometown of Meridian, Miss. Owner and manager of the station is Mr. Withers Gavin, who also publishes an outstanding weekly newspaper in Quitman, Miss.—the Clarke County Tribune. WCOC has been in continuous operation for 45 years and has been an affiliate of the Columbia Broadcasting System since May 1, 1937. It was only recently that CBS presented WCOC and Mr. Gavin a gold microphone in recognition of this affiliation. WCOC is tops in my book. I am pleased to be able to recognize this outstanding station and call its accomplishments to the attention of my colleagues.

MR. A. B. CULBERTSON PROVIDES A TIMELY MESSAGE

HON. ALBERT W. WATSON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, my good friend, Mr. A. B. Culbertson of Laurens, S.C., has generously provided me with two very timely and inspirational poems which I would like to share with my colleagues. Mr. Culbertson speaks from the heart; yet, his thoughts reflect his deep wisdom and keen awareness of life. I commend his poems to the attention of the Congress as follows:

OUR HERITAGE WE PONDER

(By A. B. Culbertson)

From the blue-capped hills of South Carolina
To the wave-kissed sands on the plains below;
Out where we live in the wide open spaces
Down where the blessed breezes blow;
Where the cotton fields all bid you welcome
And the textile mills are humming low,
There's a simple pride in honest living
And the legions yet to come must keep it so.

From the hallowed walls of old Fort Sumter
Where patriots stormed in the long ago
For the sovereign rights of America's childhood,
South Carolina is the place you know,
To the sacred shrine of John C. Calhoun
Where lives the spirit of devotion of yore
To the things we love in the good old Southland,
The dreams of long ago will keep it so.

Let me go forth on the sunset trail,
In a land where the sweet magnolias grow;
Where the honey bees mingle with the golden jasmine
And the sparkling streams will always flow;
Where the peaches bloom in perfumed splendor
And the luscious fruit hangs row on row;
Where the sun shines through in every window
And the heavens, smiling down, will forever keep it so.

OUR PLIGHT WE PONDER

(By A. B. Culbertson)

There is a horde of depraved souls
Where filth and sin abound
On hand-out alley's sorry domain
And the vicious cycle goes round.

The soothing dole goes up and up
And the morals still come down
On the cradle that rocks the wretchedness
In degradation town.

The time has come to remove this curse,
So hopelessly unsound,
To protect the ones who deserve a hand
And assist them off the ground.

To restore in each the founding faith
And guide them safely around
The crippling snares of "The Great Society,"
Where the vultures of graft abound.

To redeem the pride in honest work,
Wherever it is found,
And the way of life that's far removed
From degradation town.

Arise ye patriots, your country calls again,
To restore a government that is sound
And make the lights to shine again
On every soul in every town.

THE POSTAL STRIKE

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, it finally came—the threatened postal strike that I tried to warn the Congress about on February 19.

My warnings and those of 16 of my distinguished colleagues from the New York City metropolitan area went unheeded, and as a result of continued foot dragging here in the Congress and at the White House, frustrated and bitter postal employees carried out the first postal strike in history.

On March 10, 1970, my colleagues and I wrote a letter to the Postmaster General, urging him to give immediate attention to this serious situation in New York City. We asked him at that time to call for the establishment of a special interim measure which would enact and employ title VI, section 5303 of the United States Code, providing for the higher rates of basic compensation for New York postal employees. But, our efforts went unnoticed.

Despite their pleas for action, and their desire to be heard, New York postal employees received no interim relief from extremely low and relatively unattractive entrance salary levels.

If the Postmaster General had moved to institute this interim pay policy until promised postal pay legislation was passed, the wildcat strike might have been averted.

I am disturbed, Mr. Speaker, because too few took seriously the appeal of Gustave Johnson, president of the Metropolitan Postal Council and Local Branch 36, and of Mr. Moe Biller, of the National Postal Union. These gentlemen did all they could to avert this walkout. They made a special trip to Washington to meet with members of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee and New York City delegation "to tell it like it was."

Their main appeal was to urge the House membership to move promised postal pay legislation through the Congress as quickly as possible, but this cry fell on deaf ears.

I find it hard to understand why the President would promise postal pay equality with private enterprise and then use "budget considerations" to deny it shortly thereafter. To make matters worse, the President publicly threatened to veto postal pay raises if they were not accompanied by his postal reform bill. And, if that were not enough, the pay increase in the bill provides for a 5.4 percent raise, retroactive to January 1, 1970, for postal workers in grades 1 through 6 only. What happened to the postal supervisors? Do they not have to eat, too? Does inflation affect them less than it does any other citizen and taxpayer?

I feel our postal workers must be given every hope that they will not be sidetracked again in their efforts to finally obtain pay parity with other Government employees and workers in private industry. The 5.4-percent salary increase included in the House bill is just a first step in this direction. Another necessary step would be a guarantee that they will receive an additional 5.7-percent increase on July 1, 1970, as previously promised.

Short-lived promises can only bring harsh reaction. We're dealing with bread-and-butter issues for those who must try to feed and shelter their families on unbelievably low postal salaries. With the high cost of living in New York, postal workers must struggle on their low salaries just to make ends meet—I know, because I myself experienced these conditions when I was a postal worker.

It is a pity that my warnings to Congress in my initial remarks on this subject went unheeded and my fears were confirmed. In Italy, the postal workers had to strike before their promised and deserved benefits were obtained. Regrettably, their American counterparts were driven to the same measure in an effort to obtain their just deserts. This, only after all other forms of redress were exhausted. This is only the case because the administration has insisted on tying salary issues to unrelated organizational reform.

Now a serious burden has been placed on our shoulders. The public and business communities in the largest city in the United States are suffering because the U.S. mails are not being delivered.

I fully sympathize with the public and the business communities, but I also appreciate the plight of the woefully underpaid postal worker.

The responsibility for reestablishing the mail service rests with us, Mr. Speaker, and with the President. Court injunctions will not end the miserable salary conditions of postal employees—only fast and equitable salary increases will.

Yesterday I met with Mr. Gustave J. Johnson, president of the Metropolitan Postal Council in New York. I appealed to him and his membership to move through "mercy mail," which includes mail to and from Vietnam and other major military areas, social security mail for widows, widowers, and pensioners, and similar essential mail of a humanitarian nature.

While Mr. Johnson feels this appeal involves several complicated facets, he expressed a willingness to ask his membership to comply. He also stated, in response to my request, that if the strike continues beyond the first few days of April—when social security and the bulk of other welfare-type mail passes through the system—postal employees will enter the postal stations to identify and move as much of this mail as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the postal crisis is rapidly spreading across the Nation. I urge the Congress to prevent this crisis from becoming one of overwhelming proportions by considering immediately salary action for our postal employees.

Personally, I have wired the President to use the power of his Office to stimulate such action. In addition, I will do all I can to guarantee our postal employees, of every level, fair salary treatment and to return normal mail service to our Nation.

MASS TRANSPORTATION

HON. JAMES W. SYMINGTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. Speaker, the Housing Subcommittee of the House Banking and Currency Committee has recently completed hearings on mass transportation proposals. Two distinguished St. Louis area officials, Mayor Raymond S. Zielinski of Bellefontaine Neighbors, representing the East-West Gateway Coordinating Council and the County Municipal League, and Mr. Robert S. Knapp, chairman of the Bi-State Development Agency of the Missouri-Illinois Metropolitan District, submitted testimony to the committee to urge substantial Federal contributions toward the solution of urban transportation problems. While the text of the hearings will be published at a later date, I feel their statements enumerate the plight of many of our Nation's urban areas and I include them, and my own, at this point in the RECORD:

STATEMENT OF CONGRESSMAN JAMES W. SYMINGTON, SECOND DISTRICT, MISSOURI

The inscription on Sir Christopher Wren's tomb at St. Paul's Cathedral in London reads: "If you seek my monument look around you." In this decade of the 70's, the quality of the environment will be our monument. And the quality of our environment, in such a highly mobile society, depends on the quality of transportation we provide. Automotive pollution, traffic congestion and paved-over land reflect the impact of our transportation system and the need for better solutions to the transit problem. We have the technology and the resources to leave a proud legacy in this decade—we need only the commitment. H.R. 6007, the bill which I have co-sponsored, seeks to provide that commitment.

The need for resolve is clear. In the U.S. we are experiencing rapid growth in urbanization, industrialization and in automotive usage. In fact, we are now producing automobiles faster than we are producing people. In Metropolitan St. Louis, the total area population increased 32 percent between 1950 and 1965, while during this same period the rise in automobile registration was 87%, or 2.7 times the rise in population. Moreover, between 1957 and 1965, the total number of vehicles entering and leaving the central business district of St. Louis during an average weekday increased by 30 percent. This increase, stimulated by completion, and improvement of two major highways and construction of new parking areas, only underscores the urgent need to develop and use fast and convenient mass transportation vehicles and systems.

We cannot continue to encourage the American love affair with the automobile, at the expense of rapid transit. In most of our major urban areas the transit systems available are inadequate to say the least. Local, state and Federal agencies responsible for development of these systems have been encouraged to overlook pollution and the congestion caused by various transportation designs, while emphasizing expanded highway construction. There is today no attractive alternative to the automobile for those who can afford private vehicles and even less comfort for those who must patronize public transportation.

It is not difficult to believe, therefore, that the average American commuter spends 13% of each workday breathing the fumes of the car in front of him. In fact, these automobile fumes have become the most important single source of air pollution in the United States today. In his statement before the Senate Public Works Subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution the Honorable Lawrence K. Roos, Supervisor of St. Louis County, pointed to the increase in and the difficulty of controlling, pollution from automotive sources:

"According to the best available estimates the sources of air pollution emanating from St. Louis County breaks down as follows: 5% open burning, 25% industrial sources, and 65% motor vehicles. Six years ago, prior to the inception of our air pollution control program, 30% of estimated pollution came from open burning, 30% from industrial sources and 40% from motor vehicles."

Clearly, the control of auto pollution has not kept pace with efforts in other areas. Even with stricter standards of emission we cannot be assured of adequate protection since the increase in the auto population will offset any reduced emission per vehicle. It is quite clear, in terms of congestion and pollution, that we can little longer afford the privilege of individual transportation by means of internal combustion engines within our metropolitan areas.

Even relatively modest support of innovations with existing transit systems have had noticeable effects on automobile usage. As an example, a recent high speed rail project from the Village of Skokie to downtown Chicago initiated by the Chicago Transit Authority with financial assistance from the Department of Housing and Urban Development, shifted approximately 2,000 auto trips to mass transit facilities. While this achievement, not imposing in itself, gives cause for optimism, it is equally clear that we must make a massive Federal investment in the development and installation of mass transit systems.

There is also some optimism that such an investment is forthcoming. The Senate has passed S3154 which provides $1.86 billion over the next five years with contract authority totaling $3.1 billion. H.R. 6007 would also make a substantial commitment, providing $10 billion over the next four years. It would establish an Urban Mass Transportation Trust Fund, financed by the existing 7% automobile manufacturer's excise tax, which would be very similar to the Highway Trust Fund now financed by the 4¢ gasoline tax. This bill would also provide a major improvement in mass transit funding by raising the limitation on federal participation from the current 2/3 to 90%.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that H.R. 6007 provides both long term assured financing and a more meaningful level of funding. Without an investment of such magnitude, municipalities will not be able to develop physical and financial plans of sufficient scope to have a measurable effect on our transportation problem. Whichever method of funding the committee adopts, however, the primary concern must be an adequate level of financing.

This critical need for financial support was emphasized by Robert S. Knapp, Chairman of the Bi-State Development Agency of the Missouri-Illinois Metropolitan District, in his statement to this Committee:

"In six years since the enactment of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964, we have been able to raise only $650,000 of the general obligation funds needed to furnish the local share necessary for implementing a program of $38,000,000. Without long range commitment in advance of federal help, there is scant possibility of raising the local general obligation share needed to implement a rapid transit plan of hundreds of millions of dollars."

Our cities and municipalities, faced with this problem of raising the local one-third of the funds prior to receiving a federal commitment to a capital grant, have not been successful. We have witnessed the repeated failures of local school bond issues in recent years as taxpayers refuse to authorize further municipal expenditures. I think it is safe to say that taxpayers who refuse school bonds will give little consideration to transportation revenue raising. Moreover, many metropolitan areas such as mine are divided into many small governmental jurisdictions with diversified budget cycles and funding restrictions, covering 100 or more separate municipalities. This fragmentation makes raising the necessary local revenues for mass transit an insurmountable task.

Mr. Chairman, as I have said we must seek massive funds to do justice to our urban areas in their quest for adequate, safe transportation systems. I believe H.R. 6007 provides these funds with equitable and realistic financing provisions.

We cannot permit our urban centers to continue this fight with token assistance from the federal government. It is a common problem crucial to us all and we must secure funds to complete the task. Without real progress on mass transit in this decade, the legacy we leave will not be a proud one.

STATEMENT OF MAYOR RAYMOND S. ZIELINSKI OF BELLEFONTAINE NEIGHBORS

I am Raymond S. Zielinski, mayor of the city of Bellefontaine Neighbors, Missouri. I serve on the board of directors of the East-West Gateway Coordinating Council in the Metropolitan St. Louis area: am president of the St. Louis County League of Municipalities; and also serve on the transportation committee for the National League of Cities. I am here in consideration of the Public Transportation Assistance Act of 1969—Senate Bill 3154.

Because of my enthusiasm for the development of a rapid transit system, I was asked by Governor Warren E. Hearnes of Missouri to organize a group to study the transit facilities in Montreal and Toronto, Canada in October 1969. Mayors of twenty county municipalities, thirty-six other city officials in and around St. Louis County, and representatives of most daily and weekly newspapers in the metropolitan area made the two day trip. They were absolutely excited about the transit systems they saw in operation in Canada and the desirability of promoting similar facilities in the St. Louis metropolitan area.

This encouraging response prompted Governor Hearnes to invite State legislators from the metropolitan area to accompany him on December 3 on a similar study. Strong support for the project in the legislature is essential because enabling legislation to authorize the establishment of a transit tax district will be the first step toward making the idea a reality.

Governor Hearnes has promised me that he well make every effort to introduce enabling legislation in the very near future.

A rapid transit system could be a major step toward elimination of air pollution. Other advantages are speed, safety, convenience, and economy.

"Social acceptability" is the key to the ultimate success of any rapid transit system in the St. Louis metropolitan area. We have to educate residents of St. Louis and St. Louis County to believe, as our Canadian neighbors do, that it's perfectly proper to hop into a subway train whatever the occasion. When that day arrives, we will have no problem getting the public support we need to finance the transit system the St. Louis metropolitan area must have if it is going to pay the necessary cost of a rapid transit system.

The public must be informed about these advantages, as well as the disturbing prediction that by 1980 the local highway system will be so clogged with cars that movement will be practically impossible.

I believe the project very definitely feasible, however, financing it will require a tremendous amount of money. This fact, not lack of local interest or a belief that the system is not needed or practical, is the principal barrier to progress with definite plans for rapid transit here.

No one familiar with existing rapid transit systems suggests that it is possible for them to be self-supporting, although an official for the Toronto system predicts that in time, it will be recognized as so valuable that the system will be supported entirely by taxation and there will be no charge for riders!

I am sure that any system developed in the St. Louis metropolitan area will require extensive Federal and State aid, in addition to funds raised by local taxation. The public Transportation Assistance Act of 1969, Senate Bill 3154, is a step in the proper direction as far as rapid transit is concerned.

Federal aid must be provided at a level substantially higher than the present program. In addition, that assistance must be provided in a manner consistent with the realities of financing local long term capital improvements.

Adding more dollars to the present program will not do the complete job. A firm long term commitment of Federal assistance for better urban public transportation services is necessary.

Any new Federal mass transit funding program must meet three criteria:

1. A level of funds sufficient to provide enough Federal dollars to pay that share of the cost of improvements to local public transportation systems which cannot be financed from local sources.

2. Assured availability of funds which localities can depend upon to implement long term capital improvement programs in public transportation.

3. A financing method which is parallel to that of other programs aiding improvement of urban transportation systems so that system development can proceed without distortions caused by ease in financing one mode over another in the total system.

Improvements to public transportation on the scale necessary to solve the urban transportation crisis will require major long term local capital commitments. Before localities make these commitments, they must have reciprocal long term commitments of Federal aid.

Too often in the recent past, proponents of assistance to local governments have succeeded in winning substantial authorizations for new programs to aid local governments, creating great expectations that substantial Federal aid would be forthcoming, only to see these authorizations turn into shallow promises unfulfilled when tested against the hard realities of the appropriations process.

Localities which went ahead and made commitments for new programs on the assumption that authorized Federal aid would be forthcoming have faced fiscal crisis when authorized funds were not appropriated. They have had to scrape the bottom of the financial barrel to get cash to finish projects which it was assumed could not be completed without Federal aid when the project started. Now, the cities say, "We must have a commitment we can depend upon in new public transportation legislation."

Programs aiding housing, education, highway safety, air pollution, crime control, and public transportation have all been funded at well below authorized levels. Experience in the water pollution program has been particularly bitter. There, the Nation's cities supported and agreed to enforcement of Federal standards on the assumption that substantial Federal assistance would be available to aid construction of waste treatment facilities. Now, the standards are being enforced, but Federal aid has fallen behind. This pattern should not be repeated for public transportation.

There is a vast difference between the capital improvement program we are discussing here and operating programs whose level of expenditure can be regulated on a year-to-year or even a month-to-month basis. When a community undertakes to buy a new fleet of buses or construct a subway system, firm contracts must immediately be made requiring set dollar commitments over a number of years. These contracts provide funds to support planning, design, construction or manufacture, and other related functions. At the same time, contracts for the capital goods and facilities are made, other contracts establish the financing for the local share of the cost of these goods and facilities—such contracts establish commitments often ranging from ten to thirty years with set payments to be made at fixed times and enforceable penalties charged in case of default. The local element of these long term programs must be supported by an equally guaranteed Federal commitment. It cannot be a commitment which is scaled up or down in the shifting nature of short term priorities. Such shifting can create disaster in local Capital programs which depend on availability of specific dollar amounts at set points as the program progresses.

Senate bill 3154 uses the same mechanism as the Federal Aid Highway program to assure substantial and continuing federal assistance. It also preserves legislative oversight of program management and effectiveness; and, recognizes that financing by user charges would be self defeating and that the whole community benefits from improved transportation; as well as avoids the necessity of earmarking other tax revenues into a trust fund account. The source of funds would be provided from general funds. The measure authorizes loans for advance acquisition of land for transit right-of-way and inclusion of such costs in capital grants. It requires that copies of grant applications be sent to the governor of the state for his comments. It requires public hearings on project applications under certain conditions. Participation in the program would be further encouraged by clarifying provision of existing law relating to private carrier contribution of local share of project costs.

Submitted herewith is a motion made at our last regular meeting wherein the St. Louis County League of Municipalities requests that consideration be given by Congress to solving the serious problems of mass transportation as expeditiously as possible with a view towards the best possible methods of funding nad financing rapid mass transportation systems throughout the United States; and, further, that this motion be presented to Congress, as I am doing today, for appropriate action. This was unanimously adopted by our entire membership.

Also submitted is a motion from the city of Bellefontaine neighbors wherein the board of aldermen requests that this measure be adopted.

Submitted also is a resolution wherein the east-west gateway coordinating council of the metropolitan St. Louis area recommends that the Congress pass this measure as being essential for the implementation of a rapid transit system in this area and does further memorialize Congress to provide in this public transportation act the same 90%–10% federal grant program as is currently provided in the Interstate Highway System Act, in lieu of the ⅔–⅓ grant program currently provided in the bill.

I wish to thank you for this opportunity to be heard and urge prompt speed in the consideration of various types of funding measures by your committee.

STATEMENT OF MR. ROBERT S. KNAPP, CHAIRMAN OF BI-STATE DEVELOPMENT AGENCY OF THE MISSOURI-ILLINOIS METROPOLITAN DISTRICT

The Bi-State Development Agency is a body corporate and politic established in 1949 by Compact between the States of Missouri and Illinois, and consented to by the Congress. The Agency is similar in concept to the Port of New York Authority, and is empowered to own and operate many types of facilities in the general field of transportation. Its operations are limited to the geographic area of the Missouri-Illinois Metropolitan District comprising the City of St. Louis and the Counties of St. Louis, St. Charles and Jefferson in Missouri and St. Clair, Madison and Monroe Counties in Illinois. The Agency has no taxing authority and must raise all project funds by means of revenue bonds.

Prior to the formation of the consolidated, area-wide Bi-State Transit System on April 1, 1963, metropolitan St. Louis was served by 15 privately-owned transit companies each operating as a separate entity. From the standpoint of the transit rider, the then existing situation was most unsatisfactory for many reasons. Further, most of the privately-owned transit companies were in financial distress and, as a result, they were forced to provide poor service with run-down equipment. In fact, if Bi-State had not entered the picture, many of the communities would have been without transit service today.

Much has been accomplished during the past seven years in the improvement of transit service in this metropolitan area. However, despite the many advantages gained under Bi-State ownership, our transit system is confronted with a serious situation brought about by increased costs and a decline in riding due primarily to the tremendous and continuing increase in the sale of automobiles. During the past two decades, the number of automobiles in our nation has approximately tripled, while the population itself has grown only one-third. Billions of tax dollars have been spent for improvement of streets and highways with the result that more and more automobiles are clogging the streets of our city every day. In turn, there has been a decreasing use of transit facilities forcing a deterioration of service, all of which threatens the very existence of our cities, including St. Louis. Thus the problem we face is a part of a national trend.

With automobile usage growing much faster than the population, and with the estimated upward surge of population in the metropolitan area during the next decade, there is an urgent need for achieving a balanced transportation system. By balanced, we mean that as much attention must be made to the development and improvement of transit as made to highway and parking facilities.

We are of the opinion that a grade-separated, high-speed rapid transit network to complement the present surface system is a must for all cities such as St. Louis. Steps in this direction for our area have already been taken by Bi-State and a rapid transit study is being undertaken by a firm of transportation engineers selected by the Agency. Although we must continue to work toward the goal of rapid transit, we know that its construction is still many years in the future.

In view of this time lag, it is obvious that immediate steps should be taken now to improve our present bus surface network while awaiting the development of a rapid transit system, it would, of course, have to be coordinated with the surface system—so whatever steps are taken to improve the present operation would continue to be of benefit to the future.

Unfortunately, the revenues of our Bi-State Transit System do not permit any such steps to be taken without outside financial assistance. In fact, the present trends of increase in costs and decline in riding can only result in a continuing cycle of higher fares and curtailed service. Certainly this is not what we want to do and we are confident that it is not what the people of the St. Louis Metropolitan Area want. We believe that it is essential to preserve and improve the usefulness and attractiveness of our present transit system. With this end in view, we have recently developed a broad scale plan to accomplish this end during the period between now and the eventual achievement of a rapid transit network.

Our Transit Development Program 1969–1975, which was adopted last year, will require for revitalization and modernization of our existing bus system the expenditure of $38,000,000 over the next six years. Although the final report on our rapid transit system will not be due for approximately one year, our preliminary estimates indicate a total system cost could be in the range of 500 to 600 million dollars. Thus, our Agency, on its own, will need expenditures in the range of 25 to 100 million dollars annually over the next 8 to 10 years.

Although Bi-State has been eligible under existing laws for federal capital grants for the purchase of new equipment, the necessity of raising the local one-third prior to obtaining a federal commitment has proved an almost insurmountable barrier. The area served by our Bi-State Transit System is fragmented into numerous small governmental jurisdictions. Approximately 20 percent of our mileage is in Illinois and 80 percent in Missouri, and each State operates on different budgetary cycles and has its own constitutional restriction on obligation of funds. The Missouri area is further fragmented between the City of St. Louis and about 100 outlying municipalities beyond the St. Louis City limits. Our Illinois service is similarly broken down into 20 smaller communities.

In the six years since enactment of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964, we have been able to raise only $650,000 of the general obligation fund needed to furnish the local share necessary for implementing a program of $38,000,000. Without long-range commitment in advance of federal help, there is scant possibility of raising the local general obligation share needed to implement a rapid transit plan of hundreds of millions of dollars.

We believe that the provisions of S–3154 as now written will go a long way toward restoring the concept of balanced transportation to our urban areas. However, progress must not stop here. We feel that continuous long run additional support for urban transportation systems is needed, and that ultimately there must be provisions for an assured source of income and the acceptance for a greater federal share in the overall cost.

We urge the enactment of the Public Transportation Assistance Act of 1969 in the general form as given in Senate Bill 3154.

NATIONAL POSTAL CRISIS

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, Washington fiddles while the Nation faces economic chaos.

In a telegram to President Nixon, I said:

I respectfully implore your full support in behalf of pay increases for the Nation's dedicated postal workers.

Each and every working American is entitled to just compensation for work he performs. It is written, "A laborer is worthy of his hire."

Immediate action in the form of postal pay increases is essential to avoid unnecessary hardship and economic chaos to the people of our Nation.

This unjustifiable situation strikes at the very conscience and integrity of our representative government.

The attitude of Congress and the administration is callous and there is a lack of forthright action on the postal crisis. This attitude is forcing postal workers into the poverty class, how can the Congress talk about welfare reform if its present posture in regard to postal workers will force these dedicated employees to seek Federal welfare in order to survive.

In telegrams to Speaker of the House, JOHN W. MCCORMACK, Majority Leader CARL ALBERT, and Representative THADDEUS J. DULSKI, chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, I said:

The unjust treatment of dedicated postal workers is a national disgrace—immediate, forthright action on the past of Congress is essential to avoid national economic chaos.

Recommend immediate suspension of all cumbersome procedures of the House to clear the way for immediate action on pending legislation for pay increases for all postal employees.

Any protracted delay will be economically disastrous to the people of the Nation.

It is abundantly clear that not only is the Federal Government's position not justified, but it is wreaking havoc with the Nation's economy. If the postal strike continues, hundreds of thousands of people will be thrown out of work. Already we are hearing the plaintiff cries of mail order houses, banks, stock markets, senior citizens waiting for their checks, retirees, and others.

Who can deny that the postal workers of the Nation are entitled to a decent living salary. Their starting pay is a little over $6,000 a year and it takes them 21 years to reach the top of $8,400—I unequivocally support the pay increases for postal workers.

I think that it is reprehensible that a situation such as the Nation is now involved in can continue. The control of inflation is not working when the administration and Congress express concern about inflation but then agree to a $1.8 billion allocation for foreign aid and deny a decent salary to hundreds of thousands of American citizens working in a crucial area involving the entire Nation. There is something fundamentally wrong with this kind of thinking.

The Federal postal pay is now 21 months behind comparable scales in private enterpise. A 5-percent increase in postal workers' pay was passed by the House of Representatives last October 14, the Senate approved the increase in December, and now President Nixon asks that the pay increase be delayed until January 1, 1971, because "It is inflationary."

These people have gone on strike in sheer desperation, over 50 percent of them hold two jobs and many depend on their wives to work in order to meet family living expenses. They have got to feed their families and educate their children and you cannot do this on a substandard salary. While the cost of living is increasing every month, Washington dilly-dallies on a meager pay increase that will not even come up to last year's increase in the cost of living.

I want immediate action for the postal workers of this country.

UNITED NATIONAL CONFERENCE AT GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY

HON. JOEL T. BROYHILL

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a young constituent of mine, Bradford J. Wing of Annandale, Va., recently informed me of his participation in the North American Invitational Model United National Conference at Georgetown University, February 19 through 22, an event which went largely unnoticed in the Washington press in spite of the fact that some 2,500 high school students from all over the Nation were involved.

As I feel participation in this activity represents a very real interest on the part of many of our young people in developing realistic attitudes toward international affairs, I insert Bradford's report on the conference at this point in the RECORD:

THE NORTH AMERICAN INVITATIONAL, MODEL UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE

(By Bradford J. Wing)

International understanding is one of the most important things for people to strive for. Toward that goal, the United Nations provides a forum for nations to discuss their views of world problems. Similarly, the North American Invitational Model United Nations (NAIMUN) Conference is one of the best ways for students to become aware of the virtue of facing and resolving issues over a conference table.

NAIMUN is sponsored by Georgetown University and was last held from the 19th through the 22nd of February, 1970, at the Shoreham Hotel here in Washington, D.C. About 2500 high school students came from all over the United States to represent various nations in the four-day conference of the model U.N. Much research is done prior to the convention so that the participants will understand their adopted nation's point of view. Students leave the convention more appreciative of the world's problems, having been brought to understand why most of those problems can't be solved overnight. Compromise and the art of diplomacy are found to be necessary for a nation to survive.

Another facet of the NAIMUN Conference is represented by the "political games." There, students take on the roles of officials responsible for imaginary nations confronted with realistic problems. The political make-up, economics, social nature, resources (human and natural), and the military situation of the country must all be taken into account. Trade agreements, military alliances and/or mutual non-agression pacts consistent with the nation's internal and foreign policies must all be negotiated. The variables in the functioning of a nation's economy, as well as the pressures on that country's leaders, are much better felt at the end of involvement in these political games.

The net effect of the whole NAIMUN Conference is to instill a more realistic attitude toward international affairs in those participating. This attitude turns out to be contagious. For example, the group from W. T. Woodson High School, Fairfax, Virginia, that has twice played a part in NAIMUN was so enthusiastic about the possibilities of such conventions that they organized the Fairfax Area Model United Nations (FAMUN) for Fairfax County high school students.

It is through projects such as these, that today's youth can favorably influence the future of the world.

THE FAMILY ASSISTANCE ACT

HON. J. GLENN BEALL, JR.

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. BEALL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I think the President's Family Assistance Act, which is now before us, is the most constructive social legislation in decades.

We have finally stopped trying to patch the AFDC program. It cannot be done, because that approach is a failure, and the record has proven it.

The Family Assistance Act replaces AFDC. It changes the whole structure of welfare by—

Establishing a Federal floor to reduce inequities among the States;

Providing uniform eligibility standards;

Creating a payment system that encourages work;

Improving the manpower training program for welfare recipients;

Providing a uniform, and firm, work requirement; and

Providing adequate day care so mothers can go to work.

The time has come to take bold action. I commend the President and the Ways and Means Committee for their wisdom in taking the first steps toward building a welfare system aimed not at perpetuating the dole but at taking and keeping people off of it.

LEAA ORGANIZED CRIME TRAINING CONFERENCE

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, among the critical items on the agenda for the 91st Congress requiring prompt congressional action are the legislative proposals aimed at eradicating the menace of organized crime. While we must reshape some of our laws and create new ones to achieve that purpose, we must do more to train all elements of the criminal justice system, at all levels of government, to deal more effectively with syndicated criminal operations.

The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration of the Department of Justice has held three regional organized crime law enforcement training conferences for the purpose of extending to State and local criminal justice personnel new techniques and procedures for use against organized crime. An indirect and significant benefit of these conferences is the establishment of rapport among the participants. Trust and rapport constitute the foundation for cooperation and coordination.

At the most recent LEAA Organized Crime Law Enforcement Training Conference held at Norman, Okla., more than 300 State and local investigators, judges, and prosecutors, attended a 4-day working session at which many of the country's experts on organized crime conducted seminars on every aspect of the problem. An indication of the value of such conferences is the following joint statement drafted subsequent to the conference by the 21-man delegation from the State of Washington:

The delegates from the State of Washington to the Third Organized Crime Law Enforcement Training Conference sponsored last week in Norman, Oklahoma, by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration of the U.S. Department of Justice, stated they planned to work toward the development of a statewide pooling of information on organized crime activities in this state. They said that the information gained at the conference, when considered in the light of their experience, indicates that organized crime exists in the State of Washington today. They agreed that only through a cooperative effort could our state guarantee that it is ready to meet this challenge. The delegates said they hoped to obtain Federal funds to implement this project.

The delegates represented all parts of the criminal justice system and all areas of the State of Washington.

Because it can serve as a model for future conferences by groups in the public or private sector, I am inserting the agenda of the recent LEAA Organized Crime Law Enforcement Training Conference at Norman, Okla.:

MONDAY, MARCH 2, 1970

GENERAL SESSION

9:00–9:30 a.m.—Orientation: Martin Danziger, Forum Room.

9:30–10:30 a.m.—Speech: "Patterns of Organized Crime," Ralph Salerno, Forum Room.

10:30–10:45 a.m.—Refreshment Break, Corridor B.

10:45–12:00 noon—Workshops: "Defining Organized Crime":

Police	Prosecutors	Planners	Judges
1–20	1–5	1–9	1–3	Dennis M. Crowley, seminar room B1.
21–40	6–10	10–18	4–5	Harold Yarnell, seminar room B2.
41–60	11–15	19–27	6–7	Vincent Piersante, seminar room B3.
61–80	16–20	28–36	8–9	Earl Johnson, seminar room B4.
81–101	21–25	37–45	10–11	Joseph A. Nardoza, conference room A.
102–122	26–30	46–55	12–13	Ralph Salerno, conference room B.

12:00–1:30 p.m.—Lunch, Commons Dining Room.

2:00–2:15 p.m.—Introduction: Dale Crowder, Executive Director, Oklahoma Crime Commission, Forum Room.

Welcoming Remarks: Honorable Dewey Bartlett, Governor of Oklahoma.

2:15–2:45 p.m.—Speech: "Intelligence Sharing," Harold Yarnell, Forum Room.

POLICE, JUDGES AND PLANNERS SESSION

2:45–3:45 p.m.—Workshops: "The Intelligence Function"—1. Organization of an Intelligence Unit; 2. Selection and Training of Intelligence Agents; and 3. Sharing Intelligence:

Police	Planners	Judges
1–17	1–8	1	Ray Holt, seminar room B–1
18–34	9–16	2	Joseph A. Nardoza, seminar. room B–2.
35–51	17–24	3	Vincent Pierstante, seminar room B–3.
52–68	25–32	4	Marion B. Phillips and Don Lowe, seminar room B–4.
69–86	33–40	5	Harold Yarnell, seminar room B–5.
87–104	41–48	6–7	Dennis M. Crowley, seminar room B–6.
105–122	49–55	8–9	Ralph Salerno, conference room B.

3:45–4:00 p.m.—Refreshment Break.

4:00–5:00 p.m.—Workshops: "The Intelligence Function," Return to same Seminar Rooms.

PROSECUTORS AND JUDGES SESSION

2:45–3:45 p.m.—Workshops: "The Prosecutor's Role in the Investigatory Process"—1. Investigations; 2. Preparation for Grand Jury; and 3. Grand Jury:

Prosecutors	Judges
1–10	1–5	Michael DeFeo, seminar room A2.
11–20	6–9	Edward Joyce, seminar room A4.
21–30	10–13	Louis Scalzo, seminar room A5.

3:45–4:00 p.m.—Refreshment Break, Corridor B.

4:00–5:00 p.m.—Talk: "Contempt and Immunity," Conference Room A.

GENERAL SESSION

6:00–7:00 p.m.—Dinner, Commons Dining Room.

8:00–9:00 p.m.—Talk: "The Nature and Scope of La Cosa Nostra"; "New Demands for Sophisticated Intelligence Capability"—Gerald Shur, Forum Room.

TUESDAY, MARCH 3, 1970

GENERAL SESSION

9:00–9:30 a.m.—Talk: "Title III, Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, Wiretapping and Electronic Surveillance"—Charles Ruff, Forum Room.

9:30–10:00 a.m.—Speech and Demonstration: "Electronic Equipment," Frank J. Jameson, Forum Room.

10:00–10:15 a.m.—Refreshment Break, Corridor B.

10:15–10:30 a.m.—Talk: "Confidential Funds," Frederick Rody, Forum Room.

10:30–12:00 noon—Panel: "Electronic Surveillance Equipment." 1. Special Uses; 2. Limitations; 3. Quality of Equipment; 4. Training; and 5. Counter-Measures—Frank J. Jameson, Joseph A. Nardoza, Frederick Rody, Forum Room.

12.00–1:30 p.m.—Lunch.

2:00–2:45 p.m.—Panel: "Development of Tax Cases; Cases Involving Commercial Transactions and Frauds"—Intelligence Division, United States Internal Revenue Service—Richard A. Nossen; William Owens; Joseph R. Rosetti.

PLANNERS AND JUDGES SESSION

2:45–3:45 p.m.—Panel: "Planning Organized Crime Components of State Law Enforcement Plans"—Martin B. Danziger; Melvin Axilbund; Donald R. Cressey; Earl Johnson; Sheldon Krantz; and Raymond McConnell—Forum Room.

3:45–4:00 p.m.—Refreshment Break, Corridor B.

4:00–5:00 p.m.—Workshops: "Planning Organized Crime Components of State Law Enforcement Plans":

Planners	Judges
1–27	1–3	Sheldon Krantz, Donald R. Cressey, seminar room A2.
28–55	4–7	Raymond McConnell, Earl Johnson, seminar room A4.

POLICE, PROSECUTORS, JUDGES SESSION

2:45–3:45 p.m.—Workshops: "Development of Tax Cases; Cases Involving Commercial Transactions; and Frauds":

Police	Prosecutors	Judges
1–61	1–15	8–10	Richard Nossen, conference room A.
62–122	16–30	11–13	Joseph R. Rosetti, conference room B.

3:45–4:00 p.m.—Refreshment Break, Corridor B.

4:00–5:00 p.m.—Continuation of Workshops: "Development of Tax Cases; Cases Involving Commercial Transactions; and Frauds," Conference Rooms A and B.

GENERAL SESSION

6:00–7:00 p.m.—Dinner, Commons Dining Room.

Introduction: Calvin K. Hamilton—Speech: "Corruption and Organized Crime"—Clarence M. Kelley, Chief of Police, Kansas City, Missouri Police Department. Forum Room.

8:00 p.m.—Movies: "The Corrupt City"; "Biography of a Bookie Joint."

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1970

GENERAL SESSION

9:00–10:15 a.m.—Panel: "Federal Investigative Agencies—Relation to State and Local Efforts to Combat Organized Crime"—William Behen; Ralph Erickson; Charles A. Miller; Patrick P. O'Carroll; Frederick Rody; Robert Snow; and Theodore Thoma—Forum Room.

10:15–10:30 a.m.—Refreshment Break, Corridor B.

PLANNERS AND JUDGES SESSION

10:30–12:30 noon.—Workshops: "Planning Organized Crime Components of State Law Enforcements Plans."

Planners	Judges
1–27	1–3	Sheldon Krantz, Donald R. Cressey, seminar room A2.
28–55	4–7	Raymond McConnell, Earl Johnson, seminar room A4.

POLICE, PROSECUTORS AND JUDGES SESSION

10:30–12:00 noon—Workshops: "Federal Investigative Agencies—Relation to State and Local Efforts to Combat Organized Crime":

Police	Prosecutors	Judges
1–61	1–15	8–10	Group I[1], conference room A.
62–122	16–30	11–13	Group II[2], conference room B.

[1] 10:30–11:15 a.m.—Charles A. Miller, Patrick P. O'Carroll, Robert Snow. 11:15–12 noon—William Behen, Ralph Erickson, Frederick Rody, Theodore Thoma.

[2] 10:30–11:15 a.m.—William Behen, Ralph Erickson, Frederick Rody, Theodore Thoma. 11:15–12 noon—Charles A. Miller, Patrick P. O'Carroll, Robert Snow.

GENERAL SESSION

12:00–1:30 p.m.—Lunch, Commons Dining Room.

2:00–3:00 p.m.—Talk: "Undercover Operations," Forum Room.

3:00–3:15 p.m.—Refreshment Break, Corridor B.

3:15–4:45 p.m.—Workshops: "Corruption and Organized Crime":

Police	Prosecutors	Planners	Judges
1–20	1–5	1–9	1–3	Louis Scalzo, seminar room, B1.
21–40	6–10	10–18	4–5	John Gardiner, seminar room, B2.
41–60	11–15	19–27	6–7	Raymond McConnell, seminar room, B3.
61–80	16–20	28–36	8–9	Joseph A. Nardoz, seminar room, B4.
81–101	21–25	37–45	10–11	Joseph R. Rosetti, seminar room, B5.
102–122	26–30	46–55	12–13	Martin B. Danziger, conference room, B.

4:45–5:30 p.m.—Panel: "Combating Organized Crime Through Business and Professional Organizations"—Mark H. Furstenberg; Patrick F. Healy; and Wayne Hopkins—Forum Room.

6:00–7:00 p.m.—Dinner—Speech: "Combating Organized Crime—Concepts and Methods"—William S. Lynch, Chief, Organized Crime and Racketeering Section, Department of Justice—Commons Dining Room.

THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1970

GENERAL SESSION

9:00–10:00 a.m.—Panel: "Sentencing in Organized Crime Cases"—Clayton Anderson; Richard Hecht; Sol Rubin, and Judge Pearce Young—Forum Room.

10:00–10:15 a.m.—Refreshment Break, Corridor B.

10:15–10:30 a.m.—Evaluation, Forum Room.

10:30–10:45 a.m.—Talk: "The Role of LEAA"— Ivan E. Levin—Forum Room.

10:45–11:45 a.m.—Speech: "Organized Crime in the Ghetto"—Oliver Lofton—Forum Room.

11:45–12:00 noon—Closing Remarks—Forum Room.

(Numbers in grids reflect those assigned to participants.)

NEEDED BOOST FOR CAREER EDUCATION

HON. WILLIAM A. STEIGER

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, during the past few years, many educators have noted the frustrations felt by students who have little interest in the traditional 4-year course of study, but have the desire to acquire some form of post-secondary education. For these students the junior or community college and the technical institute have often filled the bill.

President Nixon took note of the unique characteristic of these schools in his recent message on higher education, and commented that "a traditional diploma is not the exclusive symbol of an educated human being." It might also be noted that this traditional diploma is not the exclusive key to a well-paying occupation. Many of the skills taught by these 2-year schools are in great demand. I am certain that persons of all ages who wish to further their education will benefit from the proposed career education program. This program would provide $100 million in fiscal 1972 to assist the States and colleges in starting career education programs in community and junior colleges and technical institutes. I think that these sums will be some of the best ever spent by the U.S. Government.

A RESOLUTION BY THE ZIONIST ORGANIZATION OF DETROIT

HON. WILLIAM S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it was my great pleasure recently to address the Zionist Organization of Detroit concerning the worsening situation in the Middle East. Following my talk the organization adopted the following resolution which I call to the attention of my colleagues. A copy has been forwarded to the President with my endorsement:

Be it resolved, by the Zionist Organization of Detroit that it hereby respectfully implores Richard Nixon, the President of the United States, to immediately take steps to ship necessary aircraft and other weapons of defense under favorable terms to the State of Israel; that the long term and short term interests of the United States are parallel and co-extensive with the needs and aspirations of the State of Israel and its valiant people. As loyal American citizens of the Jewish faith, we urge you to counter Russian influences in the Near East at once by reaffirming the traditional policy of the United States to stand by the Jewish people as it struggles to fashion a new life and a new world for its peoples who have made it its home in the last several decades, and who are each day absorbing new immigrants from various parts of the world.

DOMESTIC TRANQUILLITY THREATENED BY INTERNAL SUBVERSION

HON. LAURENCE J. BURTON

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. BURTON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues an article in this week's issue of Barron's the well-known national weekly of the business and financial community. It concerns the systematic assault that has been taking place against American universities and industries, and the alarming fact that much of this revolutionary action is instigated by young people from the "best" homes and schools in America. The article follows:

[From Barron's, Mar. 23, 1970]

NO MAD BOMBERS: SUBVERSION HAS BECOME A CLEAR AND PRESENT DANGER

To the handful of bankers who stand up to be counted (Barron's, March 16) albeit belatedly or reluctantly, add the names of Messrs. A. W. Clausen and Louis B. Lundborg, president and chairman of the board of directors, respectively, of the Bank of America. At the annual meeting of the largest commercial bank in the U.S. last week, both executives, in response to the sniping of a few dissident shareholders and to outside radical attacks, succeeded in taking a stand of sorts. Mr. Lundborg ruled out of order a resolution offered by a group of respectable peaceniks urging an immediate, total withdrawal of U.S. forces from South Vietnam. He also defended the bank's financial activities in that embattled land, and refused "positively" to consider shutting up shop in Saigon. Mr. Clausen, in turn, assailed the "pernicious propaganda" spread by "agitators" from Isla Vista, small community near the University of California campus and site of a Bank of America branch which "rampaging demonstrators—students and nonstudents"—burned to the ground late in February. At that time Bank of America, in full-page advertisements, broke the majority's silence on the issue of violence, which it urged all its countrymen, heedless of differences, to join hands in shunning. "We believe that at some time and in some place Americans must decide whether they intend to have their decisions, indeed their lives, ruled by a violent minority. We are but one bank, but we have decided to take our stand in Isla Vista."

Nothing like a burning branch to make one see the light. Or perhaps coercive picket lines flung around the homes of executives, demonstrations on company property and dynamite blasts at offices and plants will do just as well. If so, business and banking alike can scarcely fail to realize that they are under siege. Last spring, Barron's warned: "'Enlightened' or otherwise, capitalism has come under direct assault from a hit-and-run coalition of radical students and alienated members of minority groups who seek not to achieve higher wages, improved working conditions or more jobs, but . . . to shake the Establishment and ultimately bring it down. Scorning such bourgeois expedients as collective bargaining, they opt for tactics like infiltration, intimidation, boycott, sabotage and violence." Since then the plot, so to speak, has thickened. In one labor dispute after another, left-wing extremists have sought to forge an alliance between students and workers. To judge by what happened last week at the Bank of America and Hercules Powder—as well as by disclosures in the underground press of plans for a widespread campaign against "war profiteers" and "polluters"—the annual meeting, like the campus, is destined to become a battleground. Corporate headquarters, after a spate of recent bombings, already have wound up on the casualty list.

Along with the office equipment, furniture and files, the explosions should have shattered a few pervasive myths about the origins of revolution and the means needed to combat it. Communism is supposed to spring from misery and poverty, yet the most ruthless of the plotters emerge as daughters (and sons) of riches. "Workers of the world unite," cry Students for a Democratic Society (obscene misnomer); if they succeed, however, all power will be wielded by so-called intellectuals, who, from secure command posts deep in the groves of academe, push the buttons. Neither free enterprise nor freedom, finally, can long endure without learning how to protect itself. As Eastman Kodak and Ford, two early targets, found out the hard way, corporate statesmanship and a social conscience are open invitations to trouble; IBM, showcase of enlightened capitalism, is still cleaning up the bomb-blasted rubble. Instead, commerce and industry should close ranks behind internal security legislation (now pending in the Senate Judiciary Committee) which would rebuild the nation's defenses against sedition and subversion. Full-page ads denouncing violence are all well and good as expressions of moral indignation and righteous wrath; amidst a clear and present danger, survival demands more.

The thrust at the corporate jugular takes many forms, some at the outset at least, little more than harassment. Last week, for example, 30 young militants picketed headquarters of Hercules, Inc., handing out leaflets accusing the company, which supplies the military in Vietnam, of "war crimes." Radical "agitators" denounced the Bank of America as capitalist "profiteers," charges which the top executives indignantly denied. During the next six weeks or so, other strategic annual meeting throughout the country are targeted for demonstration, invective or worse. Here are the militants' marching orders, as disclosed in the latest issue of "New Mobilizer": "April is seen as the time to focus on the the economic issues of the war around the theme 'Who Pays for the War? Who Profits From the War?' . . . In East Hartford, Conn., on April 14 we will bring publicity to bear on United Aircraft. In Seattle, Washington, on April 27 we will confront Boeing. . . . Plans for April 15 in Cleveland are moving ahead well. A lot of work has gone into demonstrations at the annual stockholders' meeting of AT&T to be held at the Public Auditorium in Cleveland on the 15th . . . Buffalo . . . A detailed scenario has been mapped out. Leafleting will take place at three local steel plants early in the week of April 15: Bethlehem, Republic and Allegheny-Ludlum . . . On April 28 we will be demonstrating at Gulf Oil in Pittsburgh and Honeywell, Inc., in Minneapolis . . . Honeywell, Inc., makes the antipersonnel fragmentation bomb, the most hideous weapon presently used against the Vietnamese."

Violent words, moreover, long ago escalated to deeds. In February of last year, hundreds of students from riot-torn San Francisco State College joined the picket line of refinery workers striking against Standard Oil Co. of California. In Seattle the University of Washington SDS pinned a United Fruit recruiter against a wall and forced him to watch a film purporting to depict his company's depredations in Latin America. In Washington, D.C., nine anti-war demonstrators broke into the offices of Dow Chemical Co., ransacked the files and splattered blood on the walls. At Ford Motor Co 's assembly plant in Mahwah, N.J., a group of workers known as the United Black Brothers staged a wildcat strike, and, with SDS help, set up a picket line that temporarily disrupted production. During the prolonged shutdown at General Electric, a cause which SDS and its allies in the Progressive Labor Party promptly embraced as their own, student activists sought to run GE recruiters off college campuses at Michigan State, Princeton, Rutgers and the University of Chicago. "The revolutionary assault on American universities and industries," warned Representative William E. Brock (R., Tenn.) at the December Congress of the National Association of Manufacturers, "is a calculated attempt to weaken and eventually destroy private enterprise in America. Students for a Democratic Society and their allies are trying to forge a Marxist student-worker alliance which will create disruption in industry."

Violence inevitably has led to destruction of property, personal injury and death (which fate, with fine irony, so far has reserved for the radicals). Last August an explosive device with the force of 24 sticks of dynamite ripped through the Marine Midland Building in New York City, devastating the eighth floor and injuring 19; "It was a miracle," said one victim, "that nobody was killed." Others were hurt in mid-November, when bombs went off in the Chase Manhattan, General Motors and RCA Buildings. Two weeks ago bombs caused extensive damage in offices of General Telephone & Electronics, IBM, and Mobil, while an accidental detonation recently destroyed a bomb factory (and killed several activists) in a town house in Greenwich Village. Repeated bombings also have occurred in San Francisco, Seattle and Detroit.

The first explosions were something of a mystery—The New York Times even speculated that they might be the handiwork of some new Mad Bomber. Subsequent events soon disclosed the method in the madness. In November an anonymous letter to the newspapers, denouncing "the giant corporations," acknowledged the deed. This month a group which calls itself "Revolutionary Force 9" claimed the credit. "IBM, Mobile (sic) and GTE are enemies of all life," said the market communique. "All three profit not only from death in Vietnam, but also from American imperialism in the Third World. They profit from racist oppression, from the exploitation and degradation of employes forced into lives of antihuman work, from the pollution and destruction of our environment."

Beginning to get the picture? A closer look at those who have been arrested in connection with the bombings, or managed to blow themselves up, reveals a clear-cut pattern of left-wing extremism. Not that squalor is much in evidence—on the contrary, two of the victims found in the ruins of the Greenwich Village townhouse, as well as one of the survivors (whose father owned the $250,000 dwelling), came from wealthy families. They were graduates of "good" schools (notably Swarthmore and Bryn Mawr, which, on the basis of the fragmentary evidence to date, assay remarkably high in radicalism; Bryn Mawr last fall appointed as Professor of Black Studies Herbert Aptheker, noted "theoretician" of the Communist Party, U.S.A.) Most of them had traveled to Cuba, rioted in Chicago or elsewhere and belonged to the "Weathermen" or some other ultra-violent wing of SDS, which J. Edgar Hoover, in the FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin for June 1969 has described as "rapidly gaining a definite Marxist-Leninist coloration."

Such disclosures seemed to astound both the so-called communications media and the public. They should have come as no surprise to readers of Barron's, who, thanks to the skill and courage of crusading journalists like Alice Widener, have long been alerted to the growing menace of the New Left and their Old Left mentors. Year-by-year Mrs. Widener, virtually single-handed, has covered the annual conferences of Socialist Scholars, at which blueprints for the radicalization of American college youth have been unveiled with increasingly open arrogance. At the first such affair (held, fittingly, at McMillin Theater, Columbia University, scene of bloody student riots several years later) Prof. Staughton Lynd, then of Yale University (and then and now associated with organizations cited by the U.S. Attorney-General as subversive), urged his fellow scholars to be ready at any time to put aside their books and go for "the jugular." "I wonder whether every teacher who calls himself a Socialist," he mused, "doesn't have the duty to become a professional revolutionary."

The Second Conference played host to a meeting of leaders of the Radical Education Project, an enterprise of SDS, which outlined a proposed "network of people in the U.S. and abroad who will serve the movement as quick, incisive sources of intelligence . . . such a network, including scholars, journalists, leftist youth leaders, government officials, guerrilla leaders etc. can provide us with firsthand reports of the action of insurgent movements, the workings of the foreign policy apparatus, impending developments. . . ." Guest of honor at the Third Conference was Owen Lattimore, whom the U.S. Senate Internal Security subcommittee has labeld "a conscious, articulate instrument of the Soviet conspiracy," while the Fourth, held at Rutgers in September 1968 featured an address by Ernest Mandel, Belgian Marxist and a chief strategist of the bloody French student revolts (for which he has been banned from France). Mandel advocated "mass strikes and mass movements," with students as the "detonators in the formula for triggering a social explosion, creating a revolutionary situation."

Barred from the U.S. as well, he used blunter language in a taped message to a rapt audience in New York's Town Hall last fall: "As a revolutionary Marxist you must know that you cannot destroy capitalism piecemeal. You can abolish the structure only by overthrowing it." Yet The New York Times denounced his ban as the the "blacklisting" of a distinguished person who only sought to participate in "academic discussions," while last week, it reported, "six American Scholars" (in point of fact, four of them Socialist Scholars) brought suit in federal court to restrain the Attorney-General from barring M. Mandel and keeping him from a scheduled "lecture tour."

Finally, at the Fifth Annual Conference, the Socialists dropped all pretense of scholarship. According to the official program, they plan the widespread reproduction and distribution of SSC papers in pamphlets "for assignment in the college classroom of materials written from an explicitly socialist perspective. . . ." As Mrs. Widener summed up (Barron's, September 15, 1969): "There you have it. Sure of immunity, the Socialist Scholars no longer need the 'convenience' of dissimilation concerning aims, methods and acts. They no longer need put on a false front of academic objectivity; they no longer need pretend that there is a separation between activities off-campus and on-campus, out-of-classroom and in-class.'

Whence comes such immunity? Why, largely from the U.S. Supreme Court, which, under the influence of Earl Warren and his fellow-traveling associate, William O. Douglas (whose new book openly sanctions violent revolution) over the years has systematically gutted the nation's internal security laws. It would come to an abrupt end if Congress enacted various measures now in committee. One bill, supported by Rep. J. Herbert Burke, (R., Fla.), would restore the power of the Secretary of State (stricken down by the High Court in 1967) to limit the travel of U.S. citizens to hostile countries, notably Cuba; Fidel Castro, charged the Congressmen, "is operating a university of revolution in the hills of Pinar del Rio, where new left Americans receive training in bombing tactics and guerrilla warfare." A more comprehensive piece of legislation, currently in the Senate Judiciary Committee, would prohibit, without regard to the immediate effect thereof, the willful or knowing teaching or advocacy of the duty or need to overthrow by force or violence the government of the United States. If such statutes were passed and enforced few Socialist Scholars or SDS members would be walking around loose.

McCarthyism, some will cry, repression! We say that actions—notably dynamite bomb blasts—speak louder than words. The Preamble to the U.S. Constitution, following "in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice," sets forth as the next high purpose "to insure domestic tranquility." Today no task is more compelling.

SGT. RICHARD G. HILL

HON. CLARENCE D. LONG

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, one of my constituents, Mrs. Carmine Danesie, Jr., lost a fine young son in Vietnam. Sgt. Richard G. Hill was an outstanding soldier and I am proud to know he was representing Maryland. His mother sent me the following letter which she received from the Department of the Army, listing the numerous awards her son won while serving in the Army. I would like to honor Sergeant Hill's memory by including that letter in the RECORD:

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
OFFICE OF THE ADJUTANT GENERAL,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. AND MRS. DANESIE: I have the honor to inform you that your son has been awarded posthumously the Distinguished Service Cross for heroism, Bronze Star Medal (First Oak Leaf Cluster), Air Medal, Purple Heart, and the Good Conduct Medal.

Prior to death, Richard had been awarded the Bronze Star Medal, Army Commendation Medal for heroism, Purple Heart with Third Oak Leaf Cluster, National Defense Service Medal, Vietnam Service Medal with One Bronze Service Star, Vietnam Campaign Medal, Combat Infantryman Badge, and the Sharpshooter Badge with rifle and pistol bars.

Arrangements are being made to have these awards presented to you in the near future by a representative of the Commanding General, First United States Army.

The representative selected will communicate with you in the next few weeks to arrange for presentation. Any inquiry or correspondence concerning presentation should be addressed to the Commanding General, First United States Army, Fort George G. Meade, Maryland 20755.

My continued sympathy is with you.

Sincerely,

ROBERT E. LYNCH,
Colonel, AGC,
Acting, the Adjutant General.

CONFRONTATION IN THE MIDDLE EAST

HON. EMANUEL CELLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am pleased to include the keynote address delivered by Eugene V. Rostow, sterling professor of law and public affairs, Yale University, 1966–69, formerly Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs, at the Emergency Connecticut Jewish Leadership Delegate Assembly on Peace in the Middle East, Millard Auditorium, University of Hartford, West Hartford, Conn., on March 8, 1970. The address follows:

CONFRONTATION IN THE MIDDLE EAST

We have come together today as citizens to consider the problem of peace and war in the Middle East. Naturally, those of us who are Jews feel a special concern for the Jews of Israel. But there is no conflict between our obligations as citizens, and our sympathies as Jews. The policy of Israel is to make peace with its Arab neighbors, in accordance with the Security Council Resolution of November 22, 1967. The national interest of the United States is the same—that the parties to the conflict make peace in the Middle East, pursuant to the Resolution, and in ways which are fair and dignified for Israel, for the Arab refugees, and for the Arab nations alike.

Our government, and that of Israel, do not always agree. That is normal in the relations of even the most friendly states. We and our European Allies have important interests in the Arab Middle East, which Israel respects, but doesn't necessarily share. But on the central problem of the Middle East crisis, the United States and Israel are fully agreed:—the time has come to make peace, not to restore the Armistice of 1949. On this critical issue, President Nixon and Secretary of State Rogers are just as clear and explicit as President Johnson and Secretary of State Rusk. This fact is the rock on which all else must be built.

I stress this point at the outset, for I believe it to be fundamental for all of us.

I shall discuss the crisis in the Middle East in the framework of our foreign policy as a whole. Within that framework, I shall try to concentrate on the broader and more basic problems, and put issues of detail, however urgent, into the context of larger considerations.

The situation in the Middle East is poisonously difficult and poisonously dangerous. There is no magic which can persuade the Arabs to give up their sense of grievance as to the existence of Israel. At best, that bitter feeling will take many, many years to fade. And most of the issues of the transient headlines have no real bearing on the course of events. It would be a mistake, for example, to divert much attention from the underlying problems to secondary ones like the French sale of planes to Libya. Egypt hardly lacks planes. There has been much criticism, too, of Secretary Rogers' recent speech. I think concern about that speech is unjustified. The speech parallels President Johnson's speeches of June 19, 1967, and September 10, 1968. While the diplomatic application of these policies may show change—a possibility on which I have no information—the principles on which they rest are sound, and deserve bipartisan support. In any event, the nuances of a particular speech or statement mean little in themselves. President Nasser will not be brought to the table of peace by a speech. The pattern of events is dominated by something quite different: the massive, ominous, increasing pressure of Soviet policy, which is exploiting Arab hostility to Israel in order to transform the whole region. There is no hope of containing and controlling that pressure without the calm and steady application of the full influence of the United States. No other force in world politics can deter such prolonged and determined Soviet pressure.

I submit that no citizen has the right to urge the invocation of that influence—that is, the full influence of the United States—unless vital interests of the nation are at stake. Our first post-war Presidents, and the Congresses which passed and reaffirmed the Middle East Resolutions in 1957 and 1961, have believed that vital national security interests of the United States are indeed at stake in the Middle East. I fully agree with their assessment. These interests are now affected by the process of Soviet penetration of the area. They would be critically threatened by a threat to Israel, both in itself, and for the consequences in Saudi Arabia, Egypt, South Arabia and the Levant; in the Magreb of North Africa; and in the Persion Gulf. Such changes would imperil our access, and the access of Europe and Japan, to the oil and the space of this strategic region, and call into question our position in Europe and the Mediterranean. As President Nixon has recently said, "The United States would view any effort by the Soviet Union to seek predominance in the Middle East as a matter of grave concern."

But present trends could well lead to this dangerous end—the end, that is, of Soviet predominance—unless the process of Soviet penetration is halted.

For the Arab-Israeli conflict has become more than a regional quarrel; it has been used by the Soviet Union to generate a major confrontation with NATO as a whole. President Pompidou was right the other day when he said the Mediterranean was the soft underbelly of Europe, and compared the Soviet presence there to the Cuban missile crisis. These are words of tremendous resonance. But they are not exaggerated. They underscore the importance of our acting promptly, quietly, and firmly, in concern with our Allies where possible, to prevent these nightmares from becoming reality. The United States can have no objections to the presence of the Soviet Union in the Mediterranean. We should have no wish to claim these vital international waters as a NATO lake. But the possibility of hegemony and predominance is another matter, especially when the Soviet Union states as official policy that one of its goals is the withdrawal of the Sixth Fleet from the Mediterranean.

I propose to open the discussion this afternoon in that perspective—the perspective, that is, of a bipartisan foreign policy, addressed to basic national concerns and interests. No other premise for policy matches the gravity of events. The American people have long had a warm and admiring interest in Israel, and we have taken on deep moral and political responsibilities, both by sponsoring the creation of Israel in a hostile Arab world, and by committing ourselves repeatedly to uphold her freedom, and that of the other states of the region. These aspects of our relationship to Israel are important, and I do not minimize them. But they should be viewed, I believe, as reinforcing our interests as a nation, which could be adversely affected in many ways by a continuance of present trends in the region.

This is not the ocacsion for a full review of the history of the twenty years' crisis in the area. But the suggestions I shall make today require a few points of reference, by way of background.

II

The basic positive element in the situation, and the compass of our policy, and of Israel's, is the Security Council Resolution of November 22, 1967. After months of diplomatic effort, including the Glassboro meetings, that Resolution received unanimous support from the Council. It was backed by the assurance of the key countries that they would accept the Resolution, and work with Ambassador Jarring to implement it.

It is important to recall what the Resolution requires. It calls upon the parties to reach an agreement which would definitively settle the Arab-Israeli controversy, and establish conditions of just and lasting peace in the area. That agreement, the Security Council said, should establish secure and recognized boundaries between Israel and its neighbors, to replace the Armistice Demarcation Lines established in 1949, and the cease-fire lines of June, 1967. The Israeli armed forces should withdraw to such lines, as part of a package deal, dealing with all the issues of the Resolution, and in a condition of peace. The agreement should establish demilitarization and other security arrangements, guarantees for maritime rights in the Suez Canal and the Strait of Tiran, embody a fair settlement of the refugee problem, and assure the right of every nation in the region to live in security and peace. It was provided that the Secretary General should appoint a representative to consult with the parties, and assist them in reaching the agreement required by the Resolution.

Thus far, it has been impossible to initiate the final stages of the processes of consultation and negotiation which are necessary to the fulfillment of the Resolution. The reason for the stalemate is simple. The government of the United Arab Republic has refused to implement the Resolution. It has rejected procedures for negotiation accepted by other parties to the conflict. And thus far it has been backed in that posture by the Soviet Union. President Nasser could not long persist in this stand against the will of the Soviet Union. Under these circumstances, and in the nature of Arab opinion, no other party to the conflict can move towards peace.

I am convinced that a peace in accordance with the principles of the Resolution is possible, if the United Arab Republic reaches the conclusion that peace is in its best interests, and must be made.

There is a great skepticism among the parties: a skepticism altogether natural against the background of more than twenty years of history. The Arabs fear that Israel has no intention of withdrawing, even to secure and recognized boundaries; Israel fears that the Arabs have no intention of making peace. After the deceptions and disappointments of 1957, Britain, the United States, and many other countries have said that Israel must not be asked to withdraw except to a condition of secure peace. That is the basic idea of the Security Council Resolution.

But Israel has said repeatedly and officially that it has no territorial claims as such; that its sole interest in the territorial problem is to assure its security, and to obtain real guarantees of its maritime rights; and that even on the difficult issue of Jerusalem, it is willing to stretch its imagination in the interest of accommodating Jordanian and international interests in the Holy City.

These assurances by Israel have been the foundation and the predicate of the American position in the long months since June, 1967. If the Arabs are skeptical of Israeli professions, their remedy is obvious: put them to the test of negotiation. They could be sure, as Prime Minister Golda Meir remarked the other day, that the position of the United States in negotiating process would come more than half way to meet their claims.

It is by no means self-evident that either the Soviet Union or the United Arab Republic is now interested in peace. They have gained positions, and aroused forces, which seem for the moment to enhance their influence, and diminish that of Nasser's Arab rivals. Arab raids and Israeli reprisals have generated an atmosphere of turbulence and violence which is dissolving many sectors of Arab society, and bringing more and more extremists to positions of influence and power. As Nasser has recently said, recent changes in Libya and the Sudan are basic changes in the whole Middle Eastern situation.

Despite the attractions of continued war and proxy war in the Middle East to Soviet and Egyptian policy makers, however, they should also be conscious of its risks, which directly threaten the life of Israel, and other fundamental state interests of the United States and its Allies.

One consequence of President Nixon's recent statement on Soviet predominance in the Middle East, which I read a few moments ago, should be to make sure that there is no misunderstanding, and no miscalculation, by anyone on this critical point.

III

How can the dangerous stalemate in the Jarring Mission be brought to an end?

I should like to suggest seven lines of political action as the key elements of an urgent and coordinated diplomatic camgaign—a crash program, undertaken to achieve a prompt breakthrough in the Jarring Mission. The danger is mounting. We should act on a crisis basis now, to prevent another round of full-scale war in the not very distant future.

1. The first, obviously, is to persuade President Nasser, and the Soviet Union, that their present course involves risks which no man can foresee or control.

Diplomacy has ways of conveying such thoughts discreetly, and reinforcing their implications with action. On this basic issue, we should not venture to formulate a program here, save to note its primordial importance. Unless President Nasser and the leaders of the Soviet Union are led to this conclusion, we can expect the situation to deteriorate, and perhaps to explode. It is hardly a favorable sign that the Soviet Union has recently refused even to support the restoration of the cease-fire, and has launched a menacing propoganda campaign against Israel, both within the Soviet Union, and in the world community.

It is in this setting that we should view the question of providing Phantoms and other arms to Israel. Obviously, such arms are important in themselves. They should help to convince both President Nasser and the Soviet Union that a "war of attrition" against Israel is not only a crime but a folly. And they should underscore the fact that there can be no alternative in the Middle East but a fair political settlement under the Security Council Resolution—a settlement establishing a condition of peace. On arms supply, I believe, the American government agonizes too much. Our policy in this regard should be crisp and predictable, and dominated by the idea, which both President Johnson and Secretary of State Rogers have expressed, that the military situation must not become an incentive for war, from any quarter. If this point is clearly understood, the chance of peace should be improved.

Assuming that this basic condition is met, what other courses of action are open to us to achieve a breakthrough?

2. The second step I should suggest is to press for a restoration of the cease-fire in the Security Council, despite Soviet opposition at the moment. In connection with the restoration of the cease-fire, we should propose effective police action to treat the war against airliners, and other aspects of the guerrilla campaign, as international piracy. Under international law, a state is fully responsible for irregular hostilities conducted from its territories. If it cannot control such activities, the international community is authorized to do so. You will recall that one of our earliest ventures in international politics was the suppression of the Barbary pirates in the Mediterranean in the late eighteenth century.

3. The attempt to renew the cease-fire should be linked, I believe, to a direction by the Security Council that Ambassador Jarring convene a conference of the parties in his presence, on or before a day named by the Council, to initiate the process of reaching the agreement of peace called for by the Security Council Resolution of November 22, 1967. This action should be based on the assurances Ambassador Jarring has received that the parties have accepted the Resolution, and are prepared to implement it. President Nasser once said publicly that he could accept a procedure like that at Rhodes in 1949. The Security Council should insist on pressing the point.

Even if the Soviet Union should be prepared to veto a restoration of the cease-fire, and a call to a conference, the effort of seeking Council consensus should help to crystallize public opinion and concern, and lead governments, particularly those of our European Allies, to take responsible positions in a crisis that directly and vitally affects their interest.

4. Parallel to these efforts, we should vigorously and visibly pursue NATO consultations on the Middle East, and develop the Middle East programs and initiatives the NATO Council decided to undertake in 1967. These steps, especially if they involved increased naval and air activities by the Alliance, and a presence in Malta, could help to deveolp the counter-currents the situation so manifestly requires.

5. It would be irresponsible dangerous, at this point, to withdraw American forces from Europe. I should oppose that course for many reasons, which have just been restated both by President Nixon and Undersecretary of State Richardson. But the situation of the Middle East is a special and distinct reason for maintaining our troop strength in Europe. With the Middle Eastern crisis becoming more and more volatile, the availability of mobile forces may become criticaly important both as a deterrent, and as an emollient influence. No one should wish to have the President face such problems with only nuclear weapons in his hand. And a withdrawal at this stage would be the wrong diplomatic signal in every sense, if our goal as it must be, to exert every influence at our command to deter catastrophe.

I should therefore urge that the Mansfield Resolution on troop withdrawals be deferred, as an act to strengthen the President's diplomatic position, and give him every possible resource for minimizing the risk of war, and of great power confrontation, in the Middle East.

6. If troop withdrawal would be a dangerous and misleading signal of our intentions in the Middle East, it would be twice as dangerous even to consider Senator Mathias' proposal to repeal President Eisenhower's Middle Eastern Resolution, which authorizes the use of force in the area. Sentaor Mathias is an attractive and intelligent man, whom I admire and respect. But in this venture, he is emulating King Canute. Repealing the Resolution can't repeal the problem. Our legitimate interests in the Middle East are under far more pressure today than was the case in 1957. We cannot hope to protect those interests, and lessen the danger of war, by intensifying doubt about the seriousness of our purpose.

7. Finally, I should propose that we offer to guarantee an agreement of peace reached by the parties in accordance with the Security Council Resolution of November 22, 1967. I can conceive of no step more likely to change the political climate, to overcome Arab fears, however irrational, and to offer the Arabs a genuine alternative to their present course. With an American guarantee for the peace, Arab reliance on Soviet support should lose some of its attractiveness. And with such assurances, it should become possible for Israel to sign the Non-Proliferation Treaty.

It might be contended that such a step would increase our obligations in world politics. This is not the case. We now have the inescapable obligation to protect our interests in the Middle East, under circumstances of rising and changing pressure. Since 1950, we have repeatedly promised, often with our Allies, to support the territorial integrity and political independence of all the states of the area, and we have acted many times in the name of that principle in behalf of Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Egypt, Israel and other countries. And the Eisenhower Doctrine stands on the statute books, far more general and open ended than the Treaty I am recommending.

What I propose is something limited, and greatly in our interest, an American guarantee to a condition of peace for Israel, for Egypt, for Lebanon, for Jordan, and indeed for Syria and Iraq, if they choose to make peace. Such a guarantee should help make negotiations possible, and end the war which has brought so much waste, and so much tragedy to the peoples of the Middle East, and has become, in President Johnson's phrase, a burden to world peace.

IV

I have tried today to stress what I consider to be the most important elements of the situation in the Middle East, and those which most urgently require considered and responsible action. I have talked only about what our government should do, and what it should not do, to protect our interests in the Middle East, including our national interest in Israel. The situation is not easy. It cannot be brought to a successful resolution if we falter.

But there is no reason for despair, if American opinion soberly faces the facts. We have the resources, the influence, and the will, to bring about an era of negotiation with the Soviet Union, which might genuinely end the Cold War. But that goal cannot be achieved without the hardest kind of national effort, based on a clear national understanding.

We may not succeed, but we must try. For the prospect would be dismal to put it mildly if the world had to endure another twenty years of increasing hostility in the Middle East, backed by increasingly sophisticated arms—a process which could always threaten to escalate into nuclear war. On the other hand, with peace achieved, Israel could start a new phase of its mission among the nations. And its neighbors could turn to policies and programs which represent their interests far more truly than the sterile yearning for revenge.

THE GREAT SOUTH ASIAN WAR

HON. WILLIAM F. RYAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, the revelations of past weeks about U.S. military and paramilitary activities in Laos portend a repetition of the tragic history of our involvement in Vietnam.

Any student of these events must conclude that there is more than happenstance which accounts for America's involvement in Vietnam. Nor is the United States increasing role in Laos unintentioned.

Michael Klare, a staff member of the North American Congress on Latin America, has written a remarkable analysis of U.S. policy in Asia entitled "The Great South Asian War." This article appeared in the March 9, 1970, issue of the Nation. It is Mr. Klare's thesis that:

To gain a world-historical perspective on the war in Vietnam, one must see it as but one episode in a Great South Asian War that began almost immediately after World War II, and can be expected to continue into the 1970's, if not well beyond them.

In support of this thesis, Mr. Klare points out that—

United States military activity in Southeast Asia has actually increased in the past few months, with most of this increase taking place in Laos.

And he maintains that—

The Pentagon is now preparing for combat operations in the neighboring regions of South Asia.

Mr. Klare predicts that future conflicts are inevitable. These conflicts stem from the United States' "stabilization of Asia's dependent status vis-a-vis the United States, as a supplier of raw materials and market for manufactured goods." This strategy "will doom South Asia to a condition of permanent underdevelopment, and most of its inhabitants—especially those in rural areas—to a condition of permanent impoverishment."

Michael Klare concludes:

It has become abundantly clear that American plans for creation of a mercantile empire in South Asia will require the continued presence and intervention of United States troops (or native troops under American command) for as long as one can see into the future.

I commend this article to my colleagues, and urge that they give it the most careful and thoughtful consideration.

I further urge them to support the creation of a joint congressional Committee on Foreign Policy, which I have proposed in House Concurrent Resolution 531, and in which 17 of my colleagues have joined. This instrument would enable Congress to analyze and assess from all aspects those political and economic moves by this Nation which all too often result in military involvement up to, and even including, intervention. Clearly, the warning Mr. Klare sounds in his article should awaken Congress so it defaults no longer on its responsibility to the American people by failing to render effective oversight of our foreign policy.

The article referred to follows:

[From the Nation, Mar. 9, 1970]

THE GREAT SOUTH ASIAN WAR

(By Michael Klare)

(Mr. Klare, a staff member of the North American Congress on Latin America, is completing a book on counterinsurgency planning in the United States.)

To gain a world-historical perspective on the war in Vietnam, one must see it as but one episode in a Great South Asian War that began almost immediately after World War II, and can be expected to continue into the 1970s, if not well beyond them. The Great War has already encompassed the Indo-Chinese War of Independence (1946–54), the guerrilla war in Malaya (1948–60), intermittent warfare in Laos (continuing), guerrilla skirmishes in Thailand (continuing), and other armed struggles in Burma, Malaysia and Indonesia. Combatants in these conflicts have included, in addition to troops of the countries named, the armies of Great Britain, France, Australia, New Zealand, South Korea, Nationalist China and, of course, the United States.

These episodes constitute a common war not only because they occupy overlapping zones in a single theatre of war but also because they spring from a common cause: the determination of the advanced industrial nations of the West (led by the United States) to intensify their control over the destinies of the underdeveloped lands of Asia. The Western presence in South Asia is naturally a military and economic challenge to Communist China, whose real or imagined influence has been a factor in each of these struggles. But it is not the threat of Chinese bellicosity that lends unity to all these episodes; it is rather the determination of the region's indigenous peoples to secure a future that will be free of foreign control. Because the nations of South Asia are frozen in a state of underdevelopment, and because national boundaries (which, more often than not, were established by European powers) do not always conform to ethnic distribution, these conflicts often take the form of "insurgencies"—i.e., local struggles against centralized authority—and the response to them has been a succession of "counterinsurgencies." Although the doctrine of counterinsurgency was originally formulated to substitute a strategy of "limited warfare" for the obsolete strategies of "all-out" (i.e., nuclear) warfare, in South Asia counterinsurgency threatens to become unlimited in its duration.

At the end of World War II, the United States and its allies in Western Europe agreed to sanction the re-establishment of one another's spheres of influence in Asia. The United States, having conquered Japan, was to be dominant in the western Pacific (China, Japan, the Philippines, etc.); France would remain in Indo-China, and Britain in the Indian Ocean area (India, Burma, Malaya, Signapore, etc.). The Allies also apportioned responsibility for the maintenance of a defense perimeter, corresponding to their colonial holdings, which encircled the eastern half of Asia from Korea to Kashmir, and pledged to assist one another if any point on the perimeter came under heavy attack. This "gentleman's agreement" was soon put to the test, for the restoration of colonial regimes in South Asia (revoking wartime promises of independence) produced guerrilla warfare throughout the region. Several countries won their independence this way, where continued occupation would have been unprofitable (Burma) or beyond the capacity of the home economy (Indonesia). But in Southeast Asia proper, the colonialists were prepared to engage in protracted counterguerrilla struggles to maintain their control of the area's resources. In Malayia it took Britain (with the aid of Australia and Gurkha tribesmen) twelve years to force the last remnants of the Malayan Races Liberation Army across the border into Thailand. In Indo-China, France faced an even more formidable foe. In 1950, confronted with a deteriorating military situation in Vietnam and growing discontent at home, France appealed to the United States to honor its commitment and help prevent a breach of the Asian defense perimeter. Although the United States had already deployed its troops in South Korea to protect the northern flank of the perimeter, it nevertheless agreed to supply France with arms and badly needed funds (the total U.S. contributions to the French military struggle in Indo-China amounted to $2.6 billion, or 80 per cent of the cost of the war).

Despite this help, the Viet Minh won at Dienbienphu, and the French army withdrew from Southeast Asia, leaving a substantial military vacuum at the mid-point of the Asian defense perimeter. The United States—which until this time had considered Southeast Asia to be of secondary importance to its Pacific territories—quickly moved in. The French colonial apparatus had not completed its removal from Saigon when America's first paramilitary legions began arriving. To circumvent the Geneva Accords, which prohibited the introduction of new weapons or foreign military personnel into Vietnam, the Michigan State University Group (MSUG) was established to provide a "cover" for the CIA team which armed and trained Ngo Dinh Diem's secret police and palace guard. The gradual intensification of U.S. military activity in Vietnam—from the arrival of the first Special Forces "advisers" to the deployment of a half-million-man army—is too familiar to need repeating. Less familiar, perhaps, is the history of U.S. involvement in Laos and Thailand; it is only in the past few months, in fact, that the public has learned that the United States maintains a substantial—and active—military establishment in Laos, and that we are bound to the Bangkok government by secret military protocols. Despite the well-publicized U.S. troop withdrawals from South Vietnam, U.S. military activity in Southeast Asia has actually increased in the past few months, with most of this increase taking place in Laos.

During his recent eleven-nation tour of Asia, Vice President Spiro Agnew stated in Australia that "despite a great deal of speculation and rumor, the United States is not withdrawing from Asia and the Pacific." Thanks to the assiduous journalism of a few "Establishment" newspapers—particularly those which have come under attack from Mr. Agnew—there can no longer be any denying that the U.S. war effort in Vietnam has "spilled over" into the rest of Southeast Asia. What is not known by most Americans is that the Pentagon is now preparing for combat operations in the neighboring regions of South Asia.

On January 16, 1968, Prime Minister Harold Wilson announced that Great Britain would withdraw all its troops stationed east of the Suez Canal by the end of 1971. British bases in Asia—located in Singapore, Malaysia and several Persian Gulf sites—formed the backbone of a defense line extending across the entire Indian Ocean. Britain's impending withdrawal from this region produced consternation in Washington, where it had always been assumed that the English could be counted upon to protect America's western flank in Asia. One U.S. strategist, James D. Atkinson, wrote: "For almost a century the vast Red Sea-Persian Gulf-Indian Ocean complex was an area of relative stability. This was so because . . . British forces were on hand throughout these sea spaces and able to respond quickly for any needed police actions." With Britain no longer willing to perform this police function, the Pentagon began making plans to assume responsibility for defense of the Indian Ocean area. These preparations—including the acquisition of new bases and the development of new combat capabilities—have been artfully camouflaged in Defense Department statements, with the result that very few Americans know that such plans exist. Nevertheless, it can be shown that the United States is developing the ability to fight a naval war in the Indian Ocean or a land war on the peaks of the Himalayas.

The military does not plan in a milieu devoid of political and economic considerations; before proceeding with a discussion of U.S. military strategy in South Asia it is necessary, therefore, to investigate the principal nonmilitary factors which have determined the limits of that strategy.

The Pacific-Indian Ocean area has achieved parity with Latin America and Europe as an outlet for U.S. trade and investment. According to the Commerce Department, U.S. trade with Asia and Oceania amounted to $12.9 billion in 1967, compared with $9.4 billion in Latin America and $18.5 billion in Europe. Direct U.S. investment in this area is only $6.8 billion, the comparable figures for Latin America and Europe being $10.3 billion and $17.9 billion, but earnings are unusually high: $1.7 billion in 1968, compared with $1.4 billion for Latin America and only $1.3 billion for Europe. While trade with Japan (America's leading trading partner after Canada) accounts for a large bulk of U.S. commerce in the Pacific, our economic relation with other Asian countries are growing steadily. To be sure, the current boom in favored Pacific countries is largely the result of Vietnamese War spending—Japan, Okinawa, South Korea and the Philippines all provide essential goods and services for the U.S. forces, and profit handsomely from our installations on their territory. But long-term investments—particularly in mining and oil refining—indicate that U.S. economic interest in the area will grow.

Closer examination of trade and investment data suggests that the center of gravity of U.S. economic activity in Asia is shifting southwestward, from the North Pacific to Southeast Asia, Australia and Indonesia (thus following the line of military advance sketched above). Although direct American trade and investment in the Indian Ocean has not increased as rapidly as in the Pacific, the region is a principal market for countries like Australia and Japan whose economies, through the agency of "multinational corporations," are becoming increasingly linked to that of the United States. Furthermore, the Indian Ocean itelf has acquired considerable strategic importance (particularly since the closing of the Suez Canal) as a major sea route for oil. The Middle East's abundant fields now supply 50 per cent of the oil imports of Western Europe, 90 per cent of Japan, 65 per cent of Australia's, and 83 per cent of Africa's (as well as most of the oil used by the United States in Vietnam). Some of it is carried by pipe line to the Mediterranean, but the bulk of it goes by tanker across or around the Indian Ocean. Finally, one must never forget that the Indian Ocean borders on the second, fifth and sixth most populous countries in the world (India, Indonesia and Pakistan), whose allegiance to the West is considered a major objective of U.S. policy. If any of these countries were to undergo a Communist revolution, Western domination of the entire area would be threatened as other Asian countries readjusted their trade and political relations to accommodate the changed strategic balance.

Long-term U.S. strategy in the Pacific and Indian Ocean areas can perhaps best be described as the "Latin Americanization" of South Asia—i.e., the stabilization of Asia's dependent status vis-à-vis the United States, as a supplier of raw materials and market for manufactured goods. As in other parts of the Third World, the United States has cultivated partnership arrangements with the more advanced nations in the region (in this case, Australia and Japan), in order to exploit more efficiently the resources of the whole area. Because this strategy will doom South Asia to a condition of permanent underdevelopment, and most of its inhabitants (especially those in rural areas) to a condition of permanent impoverishment, conflict is inevitable. The revolutionary tide which swept through the colonial nations after World War II has not diminished with the attainment of nominal self-rule: everywhere in the Third World rebellious peasants are demanding that their economic emancipation be postponed no longer. In Vietnam, the United States has learned at tremendous cost the hard lesson that even poor farmers—once inspired by the promise of a better life for their children—can stop the most powerful armies in the world. It has become abundantly clear that American plans for the creation of a mercantile empire in South Asia will require the continued presence and intervention of U.S. troops (or native troops under American command) for as long as one can see into the future.

This analysis is evidently shared by military planners in the Pentagon, for despite Presidential promises of a U.S. troop withdrawal from Asia following the cessation of hostilities in Vietnam, the Pentagon has shown that it expects to maintain a military establishment in the area for the indefinite future. In its fiscal 1970 budget report to the Congress, the Defense Department stated that it will "be necessary for the United States to continue some form of military presence in the region for some time and this must include appropriate basing arrangements." But popular disaffection with the Vietnamese War in particular, and with defense spending in general, has created a problem for Pentagon strategists. To solve it, they have evolved a three-pronged strategy that is designed to minimize direct U.S. involvement in Asia, while assuring our mastery of future guerrilla battlefields. This scheme, constituting the U.S. defense plan for the Great South Asian War, can be summarized as follows:

The creation of client regimes in each Asian nation, backed by the native military establishment and dependent on U.S. economic assistance for survival, which are obliged to provide indigenous troops for counterinsurgency operations planned and directed by U.S. "advisers."

The establishment of an "Anglo-Saxon Alliance"—the United States, New Zealand, Australia and ultimately the Union of South Africa—to protect the Asian interests of the (white) people inhabiting these former British colonies.

The formation of an elite counterinsurgency "fire brigade," composed of U.S. servicemen trained and equipped for combat in irregular jungle and mountain terrain, which can be flown to trouble spots in Asia from rear-area bases in the United States when serious emergencies occur.

Each of these goals will now be discussed in detail.

Client regimes. Throughout the Third World, the United States has so manipulated the social and economic relationships of native populations as to create subgroups which place loyalty to Washington over that to their fellow countrymen. U.S. foreign aid programs, import subsidies and military grants are all designed to create in each country a privilege stratum dependent upon continued American beneficence for its prosperity. When such a group acquires control of the national government, the United States ultimately exercises the power. Since the ruling group remains dependent on U.S. aid even when in control of the governmental apparatus (in order to finance development projects and meet military payrolls), Washington can compel a client regime to provide troops for U.S.-led counterinsurgency campaigns. This process of cultural subversion is easily discerned in South Vietnam, but the same mechanisms prevail elsewhere in Asia, particularly in Thailand, South Korean and Laos. This arrangement affords two advantages to the United States: it reduces the need to maintain large overseas garrisons, and avoids local antagonism to the overt American presence.

In every country where U.S. funds provide a significant percentage of the military budget, native troops are being armed and trained for counterguerrilla operations. In Thailand, for instance, the U.S. military assistance program (estimated at $100 million per year) is being used to provide the entire army of more than 100,000 men with M16 rifles, machine guns, radios and other standard light equipment designed for jungle conditions. Thai recruits are trained in their homeland by U.S. Special Forces instructors, and then sent for further "on-the-job" experience in Vietnam and Laos, where they participate in combat operations under U.S. command. Thai troops in Vietnam (now numbering 11,000) are rotated frequently, so that as many soldiers as possible acquire some familiarity with anti-guerrilla warfare. Whereas most Americans assume that these troops were brought in as a publicity gesture to "internationalize" the U.S. intervention, it is now clear that an equally important objective is to provide advanced counterguerrilla training to troops that may some day be called upon to employ their skills in other countries (or perhaps in their own).

The Pentagon apparently prefers to concentrate its efforts on the formation of small, well-equipped and highly motivated units, rather than on large, general purpose armies made up of undisciplined recruits of questionable loyalty. Thus each country receiving substantial military aid has been obliged to create special counterguerrilla units, variously called "Rangers" or "Special Forces" after their American counterparts. They usually receive their training from Special Forces instructors, and attend special indoctrination courses developed by American social scientists. Again taking Thailand as an example, the Green Berets have helped organize the Thai Special Forces Group, a 1,000-man unit regarded by some observers as the best military force in Thailand. Crack units of this sort often develop a closer relationship to their American advisers (who, moreover, pay their salaries), than to native officers. It is not surprising, therefore, that in Vietnam, such units often outperform regular South Vietnamese troops.

Though most U.S. military assistance programs in Asia are designed to strengthen the internal security capabilities of the regular armed forces, in some instances the Pentagon and CIA have by-passed the native military establishment to create irregular military forces which operate independently of the regular army, and usually under direct U.S. command. The mercenaries who serve in these independent armies are frequently recruited from the minority groups which can be found in most South Asian countries. Many of them have suffered at the hands of the dominant ethnic group, and are thus susceptible to psychological pressure designed to turn them against guerrilla units drawn from the majority group. Thus in Vietnam the Americans created the Civilian Irregular Defense Groups, made up of Montagnard tribesmen, and stationed them in border areas where they could be used for raids into Cambodia, Laos and North Vietnam. A similar force, know as the Armée Clandestine and composed of Meo tribesmen, has been active in Laos since the 1950s. According to The New York Times, this force of 15,000 mercenaries, "is armed, equipped, fed, paid, guided strategically and tactically, and often transported into and out of action by the United States." The Armée Clandestine is commanded by CIA operatives attached to the U.S. Embassy in Vientiane, and functions independently of the Laotian High Command. It is credited with several recent victories against Pathet Lao troops, and is considered more reliable than regular Laotian units, which often retreat in the face of concerted enemy attacks.

Even the "nonmilitary" components of the U.S. foreign aid program are designed to foster the development of surrogate counterguerrilla armies in Asia. It has been established that a major portion of funds channeled through AID are used to subsidize the police forces of many Asian nations. Approximately half of the AID budget in Thailand, for instance, is devoted to this purpose; U.S. funds are being used to construct 1,000 new police stations in rural areas (especially in the troubled Northeast), each of which is to be manned by at least twenty members of the Thai National Police or paramilitary Border Patrol Police. Before assuming their new posts, these officers will receive six weeks of counterinsurgency and jungle warfare training provided by AID's "Public Safety Advisers."

The long-range objectives of U.S. assistance programs in Asia were summed up by former Defense Secretary Clark M. Clifford in an unusually candid statement to Congress on January 15, 1969:

"Clearly, the overriding goal of our collective defense efforts in Asia must be to assist our allies in building a capability to defend themselves. Besides costing substantially less (an Asian soldier costs about 1/15 as much as his American counterpart), there are compelling political and psychological advantages on both sides of the Pacific for such a policy. [Emphasis added.] Moreover, as our experience with the South Korean Army has so well demonstrated, there are no insuperable obstacles to the development of good local land forces capable of offering a credible deterrent to a Communist aggression."

Aside from the curious remark on the dollar value of Asian soldiers, this statement is noteworthy as a straightforward expression of the policies discussed above.

Anglo-Saxon alliance. In the alliances which the United States has contracted during the cold-war era, there exists an unspoken but evident differentiation between contracts of convenience and contracts of conviction. While the State Department may speak glowingly of U.S.-Vietnamese friendship, U.S.-Korean friendship, or U.S.-Thai friendship, there are very few countries which Washington trusts implicitly—trusts, that is, with secret military information or access to the inner circles of defense policy making. The small group of countries which do enjoy these privileges have two striking characteristics in common: they are all former colonies of Great Britain, and are all ruled by the white descendants of European immigrants. At present, this select group includes Canada, Australia and New Zealand; if the Pentagon had its way, and diplomatic considerations were set aside, the Union of South Africa would also be admitted to this exclusive club. Military officers of these favored countries routinely receive copies of secret U.S. intelligence reports, are kept informed of Pentagon work on chemical and biological warfare and other secret projects, and participate as equals in military strategy conferences. In order to cement this working relationship still more firmly, the Pentagon has initiated Project Mallard, which will ultimately provide a "joint tactical international communication system for the armies, navies and air forces of the United States, United Kingdom, Canada and Australia." One does not share military communications channels with any but the closest allies.

Anglo-Saxon cooperation in the Pacific is guaranteed by the ANZUS Pact (Security Treaty Between Australia, New Zealand and the United States), which commits these countries to assist one another in the event of an attack on any one of them, or upon any of their Pacific dependencies. Australia and New Zealand are further associated with the United States as members of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization (the only other Asian members are Thailand and the Philippines—both heavily dependent upon U.S. military assistance). The strength of the ties which bind the military establishments of Australia and New Zealand to that of the United States is perhaps best shown by the fact that both countries have supplied combat troops for Vietnam, despite widespread domestic opposition. When Vice President Agnew arrived in Canberra, he referred to Australia's contribution to the U.S. war effort in Korea and Vietnam, and stated that in its future endeavors, Australia "will always have the unfailing support and loyal friendship of the United States of America." In a subsequent press conference, Agnew spoke of the "common English ancestry" of Australia and America. The Vice President was told by Prime Minister Gorton that "you have never been more welcome than you are here in the capital of Australia."

The close relations that developed in recent years among the United States, Australia and New Zealand spring not just from a common language and cultural heritage but also from some very real policy considerations. The United States, as said above, seeks to replace its forces in Asia with foreign troops whose loyalty to U.S. objectives can be relied upon; Australia and New Zealand, for their part, must be assured of unhampered trade with, and sea routes to, the nations bordering the Pacific and Indian Oceans. Australia, moreover, is motivated by policies of racial exclusion; like the whites of South Africa. Australians dread the traditional southward migration patterns of colored peoples, and are therefore willing to provide military assistance to their northern neighbors (Australia provides such aid to Malaysia and Singapore, just as South Africa does to Rhodesia) in order to establish a buffer zone against further migrations. These racial considerations are not incompatible with U.S. policy, which seeks to maintain Western (i.e., white) hegemony in the Pacific-Indian Ocean area. Thus in return for its promise to come to the assistance of Australia and New Zealand in any future emergencies, the United States has been invited to establish new military installations in those countries, and can expect their help in the reconstitution of the Asian defense perimeter following the withdrawal of Great Britain in 1971.

The U.S. naval operations in the South Pacific and Indian Ocean will be greatly facilitated upon completion of communications facilities in Canterbury, New Zealand, and North West Cape, Australia. These will house very low frequency (VLF) radio transmitters (for use in communicating with submerged Polaris submarines) in addition to conventional transmitters. The Canterbury station, part of the "Omega" communications system, has provoked some local opposition, but the Australian facility is well under construction. Known as U.S. Naval Communications Station Harold E. Holt (for the late Prime Minister), the North West Cape installation will house the most powerful VLF transmitter in the world.

When it is completed, the United States will have acquired the requisite communications capacity for expanded naval operations along the eastern rim of the Indian Ocean (a similar facility at Asmara, Ethiopia, performs the same role in the western part of the ocean). The operational capability of U.S. naval vessels sent to the Indian Ocean would be enhanced even further if present diplomatic sanctions against South Africa were dropped. The Navy is particularly eager to gain access to the Simonstown naval base, strategically located on the Cape of Good Hope, for refueling and repair work. The Defense Department would also like to cooperate with South Africa in the collection of intelligence data on naval and maritime activity along the coast of Africa. Although the Pentagon has heretofore spoken cautiously on this subject, a number of influential Congressmen, including Sen. Strom Thurmond, are urging the White House to adopt some kind of formula for limited military cooperation (excluding internal security ventures) with South Africa.

The cooperation of Australia and New Zealand will become even more useful to the United States in December 1971 when the last British troops leave South Asia. Britain is currently pledged to provide for the defense of the Federation of Malaysia (which incorporates the former colonies of Malaya, Sarawak and North Borneo and the island state of Singapore. These two countries, whose combined armies boast only 40,000 men and a handful of aircraft, are threatened by lingering guerrilla activity along the Thai border, by territorial disputes with the Philippines and Indonesia, and by internal racist unrest. Because of their strategic location, and the high potential for conflict, the impending British withdrawal has compelled the United States to contemplate some police role. Since, however, the stability of this area is also considered vital to the security of Australia and New Zealand, the United States will be able to leave primary defense to its Anglo-Saxon allies. Australia and New Zealand will jointly maintain a battalion each at Singapore, with one company on rotation in Malaysia. They will each station a naval vessel in the area at all times, and Australia will keep two squadrons of jet aircraft at Butterworth, near the Thai border. Australia has also promised to supply the Malaysian Air Force with ten Sabre-jet fighters and the necessary maintenance equipment.

While neither Australia nor New Zealand—with armies of 84,000 men and 13,000 men—can be considered major military powers, their role in maintaining the Asian defense perimeter is not insigificant and renders the burden of the United States that much more manageable.

The Fire Brigade. It now appears that upon the conclusion of the war in Vietnam, the United States will remove most of its troops from the mainland of Asia, leaving behind only those communications, supply and intelligence officers and Special Forces personnel necessary for the reliable performance of native armies. (Defense Secretary Laird recently stated that we would maintain several thousand men for advisory and training duty in Vietnam after the fighting had ceased.) In previous epochs, this move would have denied a colonial power the ability to intervene quickly when native insurrections threatened the status quo. Thanks to the foresight of Robert McNamara, however, the Pentagon now has the capacity to intervene in any future emergency by airlifting its counterinsurgency "fire brigade" from bases in the United States to back-country airfields in Asia. The fire brigade concept, made possible by new advances in aircraft technology, permits the United States to give up the overseas bases usually associated with a large empire, while nevertheless retaining the option of employing its troops whenever it deems intrusion necessary.

In a 1965 message to the Senate Appropriations Committee, Defense Secretary McNamara outlined America's strategic alternatives: "Either we can station large numbers of men and quantities of equipment and supplies overseas near all potential trouble spots, or we can maintain a much smaller force in a central reserve in the United States and deploy it rapidly where needed." Of these two approaches, McNamara argued, "a mobile 'fire brigade' reserve, centrally located . . . and ready for quick deployment to any threatened area in the world, is, basically, a more economical and flexible use of our military forces." Selecting a unit to serve as such a mobile reserve was easy enough (the 82nd Airborne Division was given the job), but McNamara soon discovered that our existing air-lift capability—consisting mainly of propeller-driven C–124 Globemasters and jet-powered C–141 Starlifters—did not have the range, speed or capacity to provide a satisfactory alternative to locally based troops. His solution was to develop the CX–HLS Heavy Logistics Transport—now famous as the C–5A transport aircraft.

The C–5A was the subject of considerable Congressional debate in 1969 because of excessive cost "overruns" (the final procurement program, involving 120 aircraft, would have cost an estimated $6 billion, or $2.6 billion more than originally calculated). In order to overcome mounting Congressional criticism of defense contracting procedures, the Pentagon finally decided in November to limit its purchase to the eighty-one aircraft previously authorized by Congress. Even the curtailed C–5A program will, however, provide the United States with a vastly expanded air-lift capacity. Each super-jet can carry 600 troops and their equipment, or an equivalent combintion of troops, vehicles and artillery. The initial group of fifty-eight C–5As will permit the Pentagon to ship an entire combat division, plus ammunition and supplies, a distance of 5,800 nautical miles (more than enough range to fly from San Francisco to Tokyo) without stopping for fuel. Once arriving in a theatre of combat, the transport's "high flotation" landing gear permits it to land on short, relatively primitive airfields.

Unfortunately, the budgetary aspects of the C–5A debate have had the effect of obscuring the long-run strategic implications of the whole air-lift program. But if there were any doubts concerning the Pentagon's intentions, they were dispelled in mid-March 1969 when the Defense Department staged its first air-lift exercise in the Far East. Some 2,500 soldiers of the 82nd Airborne Division were flown 8,500 miles from their regular quarters in Fort Bragg, N.C., to a training area 40 miles south of Seoul, South Korea. Immediately upon arrival in the test area, the paratroopers joined South Korean troops in simulated counterguerrilla maneuvers. (The whole trip was to have taken thirty-one hours, but a snow storm caused a twenty-five-hour delay in Okinawa.) According to Pentagon press statements, the exercise was designed "to test the rapid reaction capability of the United States-based strike command forces to deploy in the Pacific Command ready for tactical employment." From what has been published concerning the event, the Defense Department was satisfied with the outcome of the exercise.

When the first squadrons of C–5As are stationed at bases in the United States, Robert McNamara's fire brigade concept—best described as garrisons in absentia—will have finally come of age.

At this point, my review of U.S. military strategy in the Pacific-Indian Ocean area would be substantially complete if it were not for the fact that southern Asia harbors some of the most rugged terrain to be found on the face of the earth. Men and equipment that can be counted on to perform respectably in temperate regions—and even elite units like the 82nd Airborne—can be defeated by harsh and unfamiliar environments. While many extreme terrain conditions can be found in South Asia, two are of particular concern to the military: the tropical rain forest and high-mountain environments. The geological, biological and climatic conditions which characterize these regions have become the subject of what the Pentagon calls research on "environmental extremes." A number of little known Army agencies participate in these studies, among them the U.S. Army Institute of Environmental Medicine, and the Cold Regions Research and Engineering Laboratories. Much of this research appears to be relatively innocuous; the function of the former, for instance, is to conduct "basic and applied research to determine how heat, cold, high terrestrial altitude, and work affect the soldier's life processes, his performance, and his health. The goal is to understand . . . the techniques, equipment, and procedures best calculated to make the soldier operationally effective to the optimal degree." Nevertheless, an awareness of this research enables one to anticipate some of the Pentagon's incursions into new areas. Thus if in 1962 we had known what kinds of studies were being undertaken at the Army Tropic Test Center in the Panama Canal Zone and at the Thai-U.S. Military Research and Development Center in Bangkok (e.g., engineering studies of vehicle movement in the "swamp forest environment"), the subsequent build-up of U.S. troops in Vietnam would have been somewhat less surprising. With this experience as background, a final word must be said about the Army's program of research on "high terrestrial altitude."

Between July 29 and August 26, 1966, some 200 soldiers of the 3rd Special Forces Group participated in an unprecedented troop exercise in the vicinity of Mt. Evans, Colo. According to Army spokesmen, these Green Berets staged "the first field maneuver conducted by the U.S. Army above the critical 10,000-foot terrestrial elevation level." Mt. Evans was chosen for the exercise because it "provided the desired terrain at 11,500 to 13,500 feet, the minimal elevation considered essential to evaluate effects of 'thin atmosphere' on performance and health." These maneuvers, identified as a part of the "High Terrestrial Altitude Research Program," were sponsored by the U.S. Army Institute of Environmental Medicine and the Pentagon's Advanced Research Projects Agency. The program was designed, according to Army statements, "to insure a functional U.S. soldier properly adjusted, trained, equipped and supported to engage in combat at high elevations." A year later, the Army established "the world's highest research station" at the 17,600-foot level of Mt. Logan in the Yukon Territory of Canada. The Mt. Logan project was sponsored by the Cold Regions Laboratories and other Army agencies, and conducted by the Arctic Institute of North America. Like the Mt. Evans exercise, this project was designed to increase "U.S. Army knowledge of physiological factors associated with operations in a high-mountain environment."

Why is the Army so concerned with "physiological factors" occurring above the "critical 10,000-foot-level"? The answer can be found in a close reading of Army research reports. In a paper on "The Military Significance of Mountain Environment Studies," appearing in the May 1967 issue of Army Research and Development, a Pentagon scientist explains that mountainous terrain "occupies the whole southern frontier of Communist power from Central Europe to Vietnam." Since "mountains in many strategic areas will be barred to us for study purposes . . . it will often be necessary to find an accessible mountain range in which the environment seems quite similar, and study the nature of such [physiological] stresses there." With this advice in mind, one notes that the Mt. Logan project was intended to investigate "factors generally associated with activities in similar high altitudes in other parts of the world, such as the Himalayan Mountains in India." [Emphasis added.] The Himalayan Mountains constitute the western flank of the Asian defense perimeter, now being vacated by Great Britain.

The army says of the Mt. Evans maneuvers that "in view of the likelihood that the enemy may be fully acclimatized" to high elevations, the United States must be able to overcome the environmental effects of such regions on troop performance. Since the only "enemy" likely to be acclimatized to 10,000-foot-plus elevations are the inhabitants of the Himalayan region, it is becoming ominously clear that the U.S. counterinsurgency intervention in South Asia may some day stretch from the beaches of Danang to the furthest reaches of Nepal and Tibet.

UNITED STATES DONATES $600,000 FOR RADICAL UNITS

HON. JOHN M. ASHBROOK

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, the March 20 issue of the Chicago Tribune carried an account of how more Federal funds have been used to finance the activities of subversive and militant organizations. Based on the testimony of Sgt. Robert Thoms of the Los Angeles Police Department, the story provides further depressing evidence of how funds emanating from Washington are used to forment disruption in other parts of the Nation, in this case in Los Angeles. It seems the best that the involved Federal agencies can do in the way of corrective action is to cut off the funds—after the funds have been spent and the damage done. Perhaps if more of the people in the Federal agencies responsible for these abuses were fired, a marked decline in this area would result.

I include the above-mentioned article by Ron Koziol of the Chicago Tribune in the RECORD at this point:

UNITED STATES DONATES $600,000 FOR RADICAL UNITS

(By Ronald Koziol)

Federal funds totaling more than $600,000 have been given to subversive and militant organizations and individuals in the last two years, Senate investigators have discovered.

The story of taxpayers' money being used to finance known radicals and militant groups, many committed to bringing about a revolution in this country, is contained in formerly secret testimony released today by the Senate subcommittee on internal security.

It includes detailed evidence that the government gave a $2,000 scholarship to at least one identified Communist, and other scholarships to 42 militants who have participated in disorders on the west coast.

FINANCE RADICAL PROGRAM

Taxpayers also financed a student leadership program in which participants were instructed in methods of making demands and carrying out disruptive measures.

Government agencies involved in the grants are the office of economic opportunity [OEO], the department of health, education, and welfare [HEW], and the department of housing and urban development [HUD].

The testimony was given to the subcommittee, headed by Sen. James O. Eastland [D., Miss.], by Sgt. Robert Thoms of the Los Angeles police department.

Thoms' testimony was based on an eight-month investigation of militant and subversive funding in the Los Angeles area. He later told THE TRIBUNE that he has received information that the government funding of known militants is prevalent throughout the country.

THE TRIBUNE disclosed in December that the Student Health organization, which openly has supported the Communist party, received more than one million dollars in federal funds in the last two years. The disclosure led to congressional demands of an investigation which has been ordered by Robert Finch, secretary of HEW.

In 1968, the Senate permanent investigations subcommittee heard testimony concerning one million dollars in OEO funds which were channeled to leaders of the Blackstone Rangers street gang, and used to aid and abet criminal activity. The charges led to the OEO dropping further funding of the south side program.

In his testimony, Thoms said that $250,000 was funded by HEW for an educational project at California State College of Los Angeles for 124 students. Scholarships from $2,000 each were given to the individual students for the one-year program.

Thoms said that David Mares, who has been identified as a member of the Communist party, was one of the recipients of the money. Another 42 were members of militant groups, many of whom participated in high school demonstrations and later were indicted by a county grand jury.

A $50,000 grant made by HEW for a student leadership program at the University of California in Los Angeles also was explained by Thoms. Among the lecturers of the one-month course were several militant figures, including Sal Castro, the leader of a series of high school disruptions.

The alleged purpose of the program was to take hard-core students with radical views and teach them there are means of accomplishing their goals without resorting to violence, said Thoms.

However, Thoms testified, an informant said the students were taught methods of making demands and carrying out disruptive tactics.

According to Thoms, when the proposal was submitted to HEW, certain films and books were listed as training aids. Among the films were, "The Chicago Riot," "No Vietnamese Ever Called Me a Nigger," "Off the Pig," "Mexican American Student Revolt," "Malcolm X," and the "Battle of Algiers."

The books listed were, "The Rebel," "Mao's Red Book," "Black Power" by Stokeley Carmichael, and "Essays on Liberation," by Herbert Marcuse, a controversial teacher at San Diego State college. Marcuse also served as a lecturer for the course.

Thoms also cited the Venice Community Improvement union in Los Angeles which is funded thru an OEO grant of $183,000.

"Its chairman, Robert Castile, is one of the most militant anti-police figures in Venice," said Thoms. "The funds are alleged to have been used to finance the legal defense of persons arrested in the Venice community, and to purchase property."

According to Thoms, the property purchased by the group follows the proposed boundaries of a Federal Housing administration site for low income housing project to be financed thru the FHA, and includes 20 locations.

THE PUBLIC TRUST REQUIRES FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE

HON. AL ULLMAN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. ULLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the ethical standard of elected and appointed Government officials is a critical issue in the Nation today. Public concern that minimum standards of official conduct should be raised is reflected in the searching inquiry of recent weeks in the Senate as it has reviewed nominations to the Supreme Court. The Senate has probed more deeply than perhaps ever before to enlighten itself and the public of the ethical standards of the Court nominees. Its investigation has included a demand for full financial disclosures.

These high standards should apply for all branches of Government. Certainly Members of Congress should be accountable for any possible conflict between the public interest and their private financial holdings.

Regulations under House Resolution 1099 passed by the 90th Congress already require House Members to disclose certain financial interests. These include income from ownership or management in corporations doing business with the Federal Government, and remuneration for official services in any professional organization. Hearings were held last month by the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct to consider a proposal designed to strengthen this disclosure system.

Because of justifiable public concern about this problem, I submit for publication in the RECORD the following statement of my current financial affairs:

Annual statement of income and investments, December 31, 1969, Congressman Al Ullman

INCOME, 1969

Salary	$39,375
Dividends/interest	2,473
Rentals	1,220
Capital gains/losses	Net loss
Honorariums	1,750

INVESTMENTS

	Current value
Stocks and bonds:
U.S. Government notes	$13,000
	Assessed value
Real estate:
1 acre unimproved—California	$1,050
47 acres farmland—Virginia	15,560
10 acres unimproved—Baker, Oreg.	7,300
2 lots unimproved—Baker, Oreg	600
Accounts/notes receivable:
Real estate contract—Baker, Oreg.	6,997
Accounts/notes payable:
Real estate mortgage—National Permanent Savings & Loan	32,000

ST. CLAIR SHORES, MICH., "ROADRUNNERS" DEFEND NATIONAL PEE WEE HOCKEY LEAGUE TITLE

HON. JAMES G. O'HARA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to report that the St. Clair Shores, Mich., "Roadrunners," defending national Pee Wee Hockey League champions have again won the Michigan State title and this coming weekend will defend their national championship in Portland, Oreg.

These 15 youngsters—all 11 and 12 years old—led by Capt. Keith Zoldak are exemplary athletes and fine young Americans.

They are recognized as such by the community of St. Clair Shores, Macomb County, and the State of Michigan, which are now joined in an effort to raise the funds required to send the team to the national championships.

I want to take this opportunity to call the team's achievement to the attention of my colleagues and to endorse the efforts of the community to assist them in their trip to Portland.

POTENTIAL HAZARD OF THERMAL POLLUTION

HON. LESTER L. WOLFF

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. WOLFF. Mr. Speaker, I have been most concerned with the potential impact upon the environment of nuclear powerplants. In light of the importance of this matter, I would like to extend my remarks to include a recent editorial from the distinguished Long Island newspaper, Newsday. This editorial which deals with the problem of thermal pollution is a most informative and well-written editorial, and one which I feel we all can benefit from. It follows:

ATOMS ON THE SOUND

"Pollution is not within our jurisdiction," a spokesman for the Atomic Energy Commission told Newsday a few weeks ago. Neither, when the licensing of atomic power plants is at issue, are land use, or ecological balance, or any of the many other considerations that ought to go into a decision on construction of any power generating station. AEC has contended for years that nuclear issues are the only ones it can legitimately concern itself with. There is considerable question how even-handedly it has been concerned with these. It has scattered 19 nuclear plants around the country over the past 13 years. Many of these have proved white elephants, producing little or no power. All have proved expensive when compared with power from coal or hydroelectric generation. There is also the question of safety. Two noted experts from AEC's own Lawrence Radiation Laboratory at Livermore, Calif., have stirred a storm into the atomic community by insisting that AEC's standards for radiation exposure by the public are 10 times too high. AEC managed for months to avoid acting on the warnings of its own experts, and has finally agreed to examine its standards only after being asked to do so by Robert Finch, the secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. Whatever the relationship of the present radiation standards to power reactors, we can find little confidence in the circumstance that an agency so reluctant to examine the one is responsible for assuring the safety of the other.

Conflict of interest is built into AEC's charter. It is charged both with promoting the development of atomic energy, and with regulating its allies in the promotion effort.

And this is the agency which will decide whether Long Island Sound should become the atomic generation center of the United States. The prospect is for at least three reactors percolating along on the Long Island shore alone, and another four in Connecticut. This must, we feel, not be permitted to happen without the kind of fact-finding AEC has never yet provided on any previously authorized power reactor.

The immediate issue is the Shoreham plant, between Shoreham and Wading River, where the Long Island Lighting Co. proposes to generate 829,000 kilowatts of electricity. It is some indication of AEC's approach to the atomic power question that, after two years of work by LILCO, much of it in close cooperation with the commission, AEC gave opponents of the reactor 30 days to prepare a case against the plant. AEC has now postponed its hearing, at the request of the Lloyd Harbor Study Group, until May 25, thus providing almost three months for the preparation of an opposition case. This is a very short time indeed to pull together the relevant material, especially when the majority of experts who might provide technical assistance have direct or indirect financial relationships with AEC or interested corporations.

We do not mean to say that the atomic power issue is settled and that the country should forget about nuclear generation. The United States is going to have to find ways to satisfy its gargantuan electrical appetites and nuclear plants may, over the long run, prove the best mechanisms for doing this job. The problem is that the issue now is virtually settled in favor of atomic power, despite a poor performance record and the intimidating potentialities inherent in nuclear powerplants.

LEONARD CARRIERE

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, Leonard Carriere is a columnist for the Blue Island, Ill., Star and an outstanding attorney. Therefore his commentary on the complications in the nomination of Judge Carswell as well as the performance of Attorney Kunstler is extremely penetrating coming as it does from a man highly respected in the legal profession:

IN PASSING

(By Leonard Carriere)

We have indeed reached a sad state of affairs to have mediocrity proclaimed as virtue. It is this "asset" that has been ascribed to Judge Carswell, most recent appointee to the U.S. Supreme Court.

I fully realize that over the years there have been at most a couple of hundred U.S. Supreme Court Justices, most of whom would be categorized as having average ability for the position, and only a few of whom turned out to be outstanding. This is in the nature of things. Most of us, in all walks of life are but average. Society is structured for the average man, and when performing at an average level one is doing the job expected of him.

"Average" is at least a much better designation than "mediocre". Somehow, his adherents, in using the terminology, demean the man. He certainly cannot feel too flattered. Now, it must be understood that they are talking about the man's intellectual and academic background, which, even if mediocre, would not preclude him from performing at a satisfactory level if a member of the Court.

Nixon has had more than his share of trouble with his Court appointments. While Carswell may not be blocked, it will get him off to a poor start. It's unfortunate that the Court, because of recent difficulties, has come under a cloud.

The legal profession has been in the limelight in various ways of late, none of them flattering. Time was when the advocacy took place at the bar, now both sides take it to the streets. Kunstler has been on the lecture-tour, ostensibly to raise money. The government doesn't have that excuse.

Somehow none of this seems right to me, whatever their reasons may be—for either of them.

SCHWENGEL COMMENDS IOWA COUNTY DRUG EDUCATION PROGRAM

HON. FRED SCHWENGEL

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. SCHWENGEL. Mr. Speaker, recently when speaking to constituents in Iowa County, they informed me of a program they have launched to combat drug abuse. Because I feel this kind of local effort should be encouraged, I want to briefly outline the program which is presently being organized in Iowa County.

The effort in Iowa County was spurred by the sheriff, William Spurrier, who called a meeting of interested people last November to discuss the drug abuse problem.

By February 1970, a decision was made to set up a formal organization. Larry Gile, of the Iowa County Department of Special Education along with students Guy Wendler and Howard Dietrich of Amana, Rich Gerard and Larry Hurd of Millersburg, and Loren Wilkinson of Marengo were responsible for drawing the organizational plans. With minor changes, the plans were approved at a March meeting.

Student cochairmen of the Iowa County Committee on Drug Abuse elected are Joe Fraker of Victor and Howard Dietrich of Amana. Larry Gile, staff psychologist of the Iowa County Special Education Department was selected to serve as the adult chairman.

The objectives of the Iowa County Committee on Drug Abuse are clear.

First. To inform the community of the possible hazards of drug abuse.

Second. To establish a continuing dialog between parent and student, student and student, parent and parent, young and old.

Third. To determine and work toward the alleviation of the causality of drug abuse and related symptoms.

The committee's "main body" will consist of 35 members; these students from each school district, one adult from each school district, one community leader from each school district, county attorney, county sheriff, school psychologist, a physician, and a minister. The main body plans to meet quarterly with the meetings open to the public.

The main body will provide overall coordination of programs and efforts. It will share specific concerns, provide advice and disseminate information and it will mobilize countywide support and concern for the purpose of the group.

The main body will elect from its own membership a guidance council consisting of 12 people, one student, and one adult from each school district. The guidance council will direct and assign specific activities to six subcommittees and will be responsible for the ongoing functions of the Iowa County Committee on Drug Abuse.

As noted earlier, there will be six subcommittees. A school district subcommittee will work directly with each school district to develop activities within each one relating to drug education. The subcommittee will keep the guidance council and main body informed as to activities in each of the schools.

A publicity subcommittee will attempt to keep the public informed as to the Iowa County committee activities in each of the schools and the communities.

A school education program subcommittee will work on developing effective special programs and on making any changes in the curriculum which would enhance the chances of meeting objectives of the county committee.

An adult education program subcommittee will develop, organize, and carry out educational programs aimed at the adult population in Iowa County.

A resources subcommittee will act as a gathering agency for sample resources from throughout the county. It will establish a central library of available resources and will develop resources for use by county schools and other groups and organizations.

A liaison subcommittee will act as a contact for the county committee with other organizations throughout the State, county, and country in an effort to share ideas and activities.

The effort undertaken in Iowa County is to be commended. While no serious drug abuse problem exists there today, it is apparent people in Iowa County are determined to see that it does not occur.

The primary effort in Iowa County for rest of this school year will be to develop their organization. Next year, they hope to be in full operation.

Mr. Speaker, I believe what the people in Iowa County have done can be a model for other areas. I will be sending information on the Iowa County program to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Department of Justice, and the White House. I commend the program to the attention of all Members of the House.

CANTON, OHIO, LETTER CARRIERS VOTE TO STAY ON JOB

HON. FRANK T. BOW

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, the letter carriers of Canton, Ohio, voted on Saturday to continue on the job despite the very real temptation to follow the lead of less responsible persons in some of the major cities. I applaud that decision and wish to include with my remarks the text of a telegram I have sent to Mr. Karl Shank, the new president of the Canton letter carriers who assumed office Saturday night; Mr. Nick Amantides who was the letter carriers' president up to and including their meeting earlier on Saturday and whose leadership helped to prevent a work stoppage in Canton, and to Hanley Wheeler, president of the Canton clerks who voted to follow the example of the carriers. The telegram follows:

I want you to know that I approve and am deeply gratified by your decisions to remain on the job, thus placing the welfare of postal patrons above self-interest, and that I will do all in my power to bring about necessary wage adjustments to give your members equity. The majority party leadership could have brought such a package to the House for passage at any time and can still do so. President Nixon has difficult job of keeping vital services operating, but the President has no authority to raise wages. Only Congress has responsibility and authority to enact legislation to satisfy your demands and Congress should do so at once. Your patience and support are appreciated. In return I will support your legislation as I have always done.

FRANK T. BOW,
Member of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I have watched the television programs and listened to the radio reports over the weekend, and I am beginning to be dismayed by the emphasis on "who struck John" and whose political ox is being gored. I have been hearing how the President inhibited any legislation that could have prevented this walkout. I deplore the interjection of politics in this serious situation, but I must speak out at this time for the President.

The President has endeavored sincerely and openly for the past 13 months to bring about postal reform and improved working conditions. His proposals have been the subject of endless hearings and executive meetings in both Houses of the Congress while the problem grew, frustration increased and post office employees remained in uncertainty about the future of their jobs and whether or not any wage increase would be forthcoming. The leadership in this body could have brought a reasonable pay and reform package to the floor any time since May of last year. The other body could have done the same. Either body can do so tomorrow.

The President has the grave responsibility of keeping postal service in operation. He is doing his best to discharge his duty, repugnant as it must be for him to call troops into service in this way. But no matter what is said, in the last analysis it is not the President who can negotiate these issues and it is not the Secretary of Labor nor the Postmaster General who can negotiate the issues. It is the Congress of the United States that must take action now to enact proper and suitable legislation. There can be no doubt in anyone's mind about the issue. We do have to negotiate to identify the grievances. We only need to act on the basis of the volumes of testimony that have been available to us for the past year and more.

I want to state at this time that I support fully the President's determination to provide mail service despite this illegal walkout. I want to state further that I would like to be able to vote tomorrow on a postal package that would pay these men adequately and give them fair working conditions and provide the postal reform that is necessary to keep these working conditions abreast of the rest of society while at the same time reorganizing the service so that we can give the kind of postal service the people are paying for and to which they are entitled. I have supported fair postal wages in the past and I will do so again.

RESULTS OF PUBLIC OPINION POLL IN FOURTH DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE ANNOUNCED

HON. JOE L. EVINS

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. EVINS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make available to my colleagues and to the American people the results of a public opinion poll which I conducted in the Fourth Congressional District on important national issues and matters before the Congress.

The response to the poll was excellent, as 12,589 responses were received.

My news release on the results of the poll follows:

REPRESENTATIVE EVINS ANNOUNCES RESULTS OF PUBLIC OPINION POLL

Representative Joe L. Evins (D-Tenn.) today announced the results of a public opinion poll he conducted in the 21 counties of the Fourth Congressional District of Tennessee.

"I am pleased by the response," Evins said, "and I am gratified by the interest and participation in the poll."

Evins said hundreds of citizens wrote letters in addition to their responses to the questions, outlining in detail their concerns and views on current public issues.

"Some 12,589 responses have been received to date," the Fourth District Congressman said, "an impressive percentage return and display of expression of public opinion."

Results of the poll showed the following of those responding:

80 percent (10,071) favored the President's plan of gradual withdrawal of American troops from South Vietnam with the South Vietnamese assuming an increasingly greater share of combat responsibility while 13 percent (1,637) were opposed and 7 percent (881) expressed no opinion.

69 percent (8,686) were opposed to immediate withdrawal from Vietnam while 17 percent (2,140) were in favor and 14 percent (1,763) listed no opinion.

60 percent (7,554) were opposed to continuing the policy of high interest rates and sharp reductions in domestic programs such as aid to education, health and welfare, and rural water district programs, among others, as a means of controlling inflation while 24 percent (3,021) favored the present policy and 16 percent (2,014) gave no opinion.

66 percent (8,309) were in favor of price and wage controls in the battle against inflation with 23 percent (2,895) against and 11 percent (1,385) giving no opinion.

77 percent (9,694) favored a system of revenue sharing of Federal funds with the states with a certain percentage of each year's Federal income being returned to the states to be distributed by the state governments to municipalities and counties with 13 percent (1,637) opposed and 10 percent (1,258) with no opinion.

56 percent (7,050) favored setting requirements to assure that revenue sharing funds would be expended for worthwhile programs and projects while 36 percent (4,532) were in favor of turning over the Federal funds to the states with no Federal standards for their use.

47 percent (5,917) were in favor of a professional volunteer army and the complete elimination of the Selective Service System with 41 percent (5,161) opposed and 12 percent (1,511) with no opinion.

44 percent (5,539) were in favor of further reforms of the Selective Service System, eliminating deferments based on college enrollment and hardship situations while 43 percent (5,413) were against and 13 percent (1,637) gave no opinion.

56 percent (7,050) were opposed to changing the postal system with the operation of the Post Office taken out of the hands of the United States Post Office Department and the Congress and placed under the jurisdiction of a private corporation while 39 percent (4,910) were in favor and 5 percent (629) gave no opinion.

89 percent (11,204) were in favor of increased Federal expeditures to control steadily increasing pollution of our environment such as air and water pollution with 9 percent (1,133) opposed and 2 percent (252) giving no opinion.

66 percent (8,309) were in favor of legislation providing for tax credits to business and industry for locating or expanding plants in rural areas and small towns while 28 percent (3,525) were opposed and 6 percent (755) gave no opinion.

54 percent (6,798) were in favor of substantial reductions in the space program while 38 percent (4,783) favored the continuation of the space program at present levels.

85 percent (10,701) were in favor of increased Federal appropriations to strentghen state and local law enforcement agencies and reduce the crime rate in the country with 10 percent (1,259) against and 5 percent (629) giving no opinion.

72 percent (9,064) were opposed to changing the welfare system with a minimum income of $1,600 guaranteed to all families at an increased cost to the Federal Government of $5 billion per year while 21 percent (2,644) favored the plan and 7 percent (881) gave no opinion.

74 percent (9,316) were in favor of automatic increases in Social Security tied to the cost of living index with 21 percent (2,644) opposed and 5 percent (629) giving no opinion.

59 percent (7,428) were opposed to continuing the Foreign Aid program while 28 percent (3,525) were in favor and 13 percent (1,636) gave no opinion.

The poll indicated as the greatest areas of concern the matter of curbing pollution, the Vietnam conflict and increased Social Security benefits, Representative Evins said.

Counties comprising the Fourth Congressional District are:

Anderson, Campbell, Cannon, Clay, Coffee, Cumberland, DeKalb, Fentress, Grundy, Jackson, Morgan, Overton, Pickett, Putnam, Roane, Scott, Smith, Van Buren, Warren, White, Wilson.

SCRAP THE CONSTITUTION?

HON. H. R. GROSS

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, an editorial in the March 17 issue of the Waterloo, Iowa, Daily Courier sets forth clearly and without loss of words the case against the enactment of a Federal statute, rather than an amendment to the Constitution, to provide for the lowering of the voting age from 21 to 18 years.

I agree completely with the argument set forth in the editorial which follows:

The U.S. Constitution would at long last become a worthless piece of paper if Congress succeeds in reducing the voting age for federal officials from 21 to 18 by statute instead of by Constitutional amendment.

The Constitution says flatly that those who vote for U.S. representative and U.S. senator "shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislatures." The Constitution also gives to states the authority to determine how presidential electors are selected.

This State authority has been affirmed in several Supreme Court decisions, including Minor v. Happersett, 1874; Lassiter v. Northampton Election Board, 1959; Carrington v. Rash, 1965; and Karmer v. Union Free School District, 1969.

True, under the "equal protection" clause of the 14th Amendment the court has outlawed such things as property qualifications for voting and payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite.

But the Senate has passed a voting rights law which includes a provision for voting by 18-year-olds. Sen. Mike Mansfield, Democratic leader in the Senate, declares that he will insist on adoption of this provision in conference committee even if it is rejected in the House.

But, Rep. Emanuel Celler, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, says he will fight to the end to prevent the reduction in the voting age by statute.

We should think that other liberals, including the United World Federalists and others who promote world government, would also fight to preserve a written constitution. For what chance is there of enforcing world law under a limited world government if the great American experiment in limiting federal powers by a written constitution has proved a failure? Certainly Americans would be cynical about limiting the power of a world government to interfere in domestic affairs if the American Constitution so rapidly became worthless.

Those who vote for this provision are literally violating their oath of office.

UTAH'S TEACHER OF THE YEAR

HON. LAURENCE J. BURTON

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 23, 1970

Mr. BURTON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, on December 12, 1969, Mrs. Eleanor Roberts, a fourth-grade teacher at Delta Elementary School, Delta, Utah, was named Utah's Teacher of the Year. Her teaching philosophy is summed up in a story about her in the January 1970 issue of UEA Action, the official publication of the Utah Education Association. I believe Mrs. Roberts' comments will be of interest to other educators and to parents generally, and therefore take this means of bringing her ideas to their attention:

FOR AWHILE, THE LAW WOULDN'T LET HER TEACH

Back in 1935, a young lady from Sutherland, Utah, received an associate degree after studying to become a first-grade teacher.

She later taught in kindergarten, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth grades—but not the first. Nevertheless, the 25 years she has spent in classrooms since then produced what Mrs. Eleanor Roberts calls some "exciting, happy moments."

One of her latest "exicting, happy moments" came December 12, when she was named Utah's Teacher of the Year.

The two runners-up for Utah Teacher of the Year honors are Miss Loye Painter, Logan Junior High School physical education teacher; and Mrs. Leona White Bradford, kindergarten teacher at Peteetneet Elementary School in Nebo School District.

Mrs. Roberts, a fourth-grade teacher at Delta Elementary School, will compete for National Teacher of the Year in a program sponsored by Look Magazine.

Judges will find that she has a definite philosophy about teaching.

"I'm a pragmatist," she said. "I think every child should have the right to develop in his own unique way, but I don't think adults should sit by and let a child do anything he pleases if we can see he's headed toward disaster."

Her 25 years before the blackboard have not only given her a definite philosophy, they've convinced her that sometimes she should laugh at herself.

Mrs. Roberts confessed that sometimes she gets riled in the classroom. "Once, I slapped my knee with a ruler and it started a run in my stocking," she recalled.

Another time she had to smile at herself was when KUED was broadcasting a program that she showed her class. Mrs. Roberts herself was the star of that show, but she didn't tell her pupils.

When it ended, a little girl said:

"That looks just like your twin sister, only older."

When Mrs. Roberts, who doesn't have a twin sister, was younger, things were considerably different in the profession.

She began teaching at Cedar City in 1935, after receiving an associate degree from the Branch Agricultural College there. Her first principal was L. C. Miles, Sr.

"He never did come in my classroom to observe," she remembered. "But he kept his bulletin board eraser in my room, and he was always popping in to get the eraser."

Two years later, Mrs. Roberts had to leave the profession. She married Brose H. Roberts from Sutherland, a small community seven miles from Delta. Utah then had a law which said if a female teacher married, she couldn't teach.

That ended with the World War manpower shortage, though. Mrs. Roberts went back to the classroom in 1956, earned her bachelor's degree, then went on to win a master's degree. Over the years she's been teaching, Mrs. Roberts picked up a technique that works well for her on just about every occasion she uses it.

It's the way she greets parents when they come to school unexpectedly.

"Do we have a problem?" she asks.

"This question establishes, irrevocably, the fact that we are both on the same side—the child's side. I have found, too, that honesty about his child is what the parent wants to hear.

"He wants it 'laid on the line' in a conference, but he wants to be told with understanding, kindness and compassion."

Mrs. Roberts also gave her view of how the teacher's role has changed over the years.

"The traditional teacher was . . . the authoritative source of all information and he had to maintain his position if his personal security remained stable," she said.

"In today's classroom . . . the teacher is a counselor, a diagnostic, a prescriber, a friend and confidante, a director of learning."

The Teacher of the Year told of an incident which shows she fits her own description of today's teacher.

Years ago, she heard a classroom door slam, saw a boy hurrying down the hall, and intercepted him.

The boy was upset.

"He doubled up his fists," Mrs. Roberts recalled. "He was as big as I, and it frightened me. But I didn't dare flinch. A few long seconds passed. His hands went slowly down to his sides and the crisis was over."

It turned out that the boy had troubles the teacher hadn't suspected. Soon they were friends, and years later the boy returned to thank her for being kind to him.

Mrs. Roberts has long been a champion of individualization, and did research work in cooperation with the Rocky Mountain Educational Laboratory in developing a program of individualized science teaching.

She is also a keen observer of student behavior.

Once her school got new desks, and had to dispose of the old ones. So the faculty decided to let the pupils tear them up in the schoolyard.

"It was interesting that the youngsters who went at their work with the most enthusiasm were the one who caused the most disturbances," she said.

Mrs. Roberts has some definite ideas on the outlook of children, too. She said:

"Children's sophistication demands that we 'tell it like it is' and I am not borrowing the modern cliche to make a point. Children can tell fact from fancy and they'll reject both the fabrication and the person who tries to enforce it. They want reasons based on logic.

"Their actions also are indicative of their freedom to choose an alternate behavior. We are seeing this clearly in the adult youth, but in the elementary schools, too, the change in attitude is evident."

The Teacher of the Year comes from a family of teachers. Three of her sisters are teachers and so are four sisters-in-law.

Mrs. Roberts taught both her children at Sutherland Elementary School, and both—Barrett H. Roberts and Mrs. Calvin Kunz—became teachers.

Professional activity has also kept Mrs. Roberts busy. She once served on the UEA Salary Committee, as president of Millard County Teachers Association, a member of the Legislative Council of the DCT, and is currently president of her association's credit union.

When she was teaching principal of Sutherland Elementary School, she was president and secretary of Millard Principals Association.

The classroom, she said, has changed considerably since she started teaching in 1935.

"I just had a chalkboard then," she said. "Now in my classroom I have a piano, a TV, phonograph, tape recorder, overhead projector, film strips and slides, movie projector and a huge supply of films."

Salaries have increased somewhat, she said. A starting teacher received $660 a year then—ten checks for $66.

"And Iron County had one of the higher paying districts then," Mrs. Roberts recalled.

SENATE—Tuesday, March 24, 1970

The Senate, in executive session, met at 10 o'clock a.m. and was called to order by the Acting President pro tempore (Mr. METCALF).

The Reverend Dr. Berthold Jacksteit, minister, Central Schwenkfelder Church, Worcester, Pa., offered the following prayer:

Father of us all, we who have so much pray for a compassion which will reach out in helpfulness to all who have so little; we who are so strong pray for a generosity of spirit which will respect and value all who are so weak and seek to reassure and strengthen them; we who wield such power pray for a humility which will temper this power with mercy so that it may heal and bless and not destroy; we who have the responsibility of making such awesome decisions pray for a wisdom which will keep the weight of our influence at the forefront of everything that blesses mankind and furthers the cause of justice and righteousness, of peace and brotherhood throughout the earth. For Thy mercy's sake we pray. Amen.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HOLLINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield.

THE PRAYER

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I was very much pleased this morning to have the opportunity to hear the minister from my church of Worcester, Pa., give the opening invocation.

I want to say, since I come from a rather small denomination, that this is probably the first time a member of my faith has had the opportunity to present the opening prayer in either the House or Senate.

I deeply extend my appreciation to the Senate's Chaplain for his kind courtesy in bringing about this honor and thank the Senator from South Carolina for yielding to me.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Leonard, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. METCALF) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations received today, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, notwithstanding the previous order, that the Senate, as in legislative session, conduct routine morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LIMITATION ON STATEMENTS DURING TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to limit statements to 3 minutes in relation to routine morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, March 23, 1970, be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS DURING SENATE SESSION

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all committees be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate today.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CARSWELL AND MEDIOCRITY

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I will vote not to confirm the nomination of Judge Carswell to the Supreme Court of the United States.

My opposition to Judge Carswell is not derived from the fact that he is classified as a "judicial conservative." Chief Justice Burger was widely hailed as a "judicial conservative" and I voted in favor of his nomination.

I oppose Judge Carswell because a very careful examination of his record as a Federal trial and appellate judge indicates that he is a jurist of the most pedestrian and distressingly mediocre talents and with a remarkable proclivity for being reversed by higher courts.

About the best that could be furnished in affirmative support of Judge Carswell's judicial and intellectual capacity was the testimony of one law professor who thought Judge Carswell had "growth potential."

Numerous individuals and groups—including some of the most prestigious legal scholars of the country—have voiced opposition to Judge Carswell because of his obviously meager judicial record.

Here are some of their observations:

With all deference, I am impelled to conclude that the nominee presents more slender credentials than any nominee for the Supreme Court put forth this century.—Louis Pollak, dean, Yale Law School.

A level of competence well below the high standards that one would presumably consider appropriate and necessary for service on the court.—Derek Bok, dean, Harvard Law School.

That he is an undistinguished member of his profession, lacking claim to intellectual stature.—Twenty members of the University of Pennsylvania Law School faculty.

. . . has none of the legal or mental qualifications essential for service on the Supreme Court or on any high court in the land, including the one where he now sits. Presidents, past and present, Bar Association of the City of New York.

His record is totally devoid of any special attributes of learning, experience, or statesmanship, which should be the hallmarks of a Supreme Court Justice. Chicago Council of Lawyers.

Judge Carswell does not have the legal or mental qualifications essential for service on the Supreme Court. 350 lawyers and law professors in the United States.

Perhaps the most interesting statement in opposition to Judge Carswell came from Prof. William Van Alstyne of Duke University Law School, one of the most respected legal scholars in the South. Professor Van Alstyne, it will be remembered, testified in support of Judge Haynsworth's nomination. He strongly opposes the Carswell nomination and states as follows:

There is, in candor, nothing in the quality of the nominee's work to warrant any expectation whatever that he could serve with distinction on the Supreme Court of the United States. Judge Carswell's decisions reflect a lack of reasoning, care, or judicial sensitivity overall.

I must conclude that Judge Carswell, considered in the most favorable light, is a man of remarkably mediocre attainment for a position in which mediocrity can be ill afforded.

Senator ROMAN L. HRUSKA, of Nebraska, the principal advocate of Judge Carswell, had this to say on the subject of mediocrity as it relates to Judge Carswell:

Even if he were mediocre, there are a lot of mediocre judges and people and lawyers. They are entitled to a little representation, aren't they, and a little chance. We can't have all Brandeises and Frankfurters and Cardozos and stuff like that there.

I disagree.

The Supreme Court of the United States, consisting of only nine members who serve for life, is a vital institution.

I realize that men of limited capacity have served on the Court in the past. For every Louis Brandeis, one can cite a James C. McReynolds. For every Oliver Wendell Holmes, we can dredge up an Edward T. Sanford. For every Benjamin N. Cardozo, one can point to a Pierce Butler. Of course, we can never predict with absolute certainty the future performance of a judicial nominee.

However, the significant difference between Judge Carswell and other judicial also-rans is that Judge Carswell's woefully meager capacity is apparent now, while his nomination is under consideration by the Senate, whereas the shortcomings of these others became obvious only after they had served on the Court.

For this reason—Judge Carswell's obvious mediocrity—I oppose his nomination.

(At this point Mr. ALLEN took the chair as presiding officer.)

CORRECTION OF ANNOUNCEMENT ON VOTE

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, on Thursday, in the vote on March 5, on Senator HRUSKA's motion to table the modified amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Senator SCOTT to the voting rights bill, the proceedings in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page 6169 incorrectly state that if I were present and voting I would vote "Yea."

Had I been present and voting, I would have voted "Nay."

I ask unanimous consent that the permanent RECORD be corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I understand that, under the previous order, I am now allowed to proceed for 15 minutes; is that not correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

NOMINATION OF JUDGE G. HARROLD CARSWELL

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I regret very much to hear the statement just made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON). The Senator does not know Judge Carswell as I do, and have for some years. I hope that he will check the record of the expressions of the leading judges in the courts of Florida.

Mr. President, on March 16, I placed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Governor and cabinet of the State of Florida commending the appointment of Judge Carswell to the Supreme Court. I also placed in the RECORD a telegram from Mr. Pat Thomas, chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee of the State of Florida, and telegrams signed by 17 of the judges in Florida, all strongly supporting the nomination of Judge Carswell, namely, John T. Wigginton, Donald K. Carroll, Dewey M. Johnson, John S. Rawls, and Sam Spector, judges of the District Court of Appeals, First District; and Tom Barkdull of the District Court of Appeals, Third District; W. May Walker, Ben C. Willis, Guyte P. McCord, Jr., and Hugh M. Taylor, all circuit judges of the Second Judicial Circuit; John A. Murphree, George L. Patten, and John J. Crews, circuit judges of the Eighth Judicial Circuit; B. C. Muszynski of the Ninth Judicial Circuit; Roger F. Dykes of the 18th Judicial Circuit; and D. C. Smith and Wallace Sample of the 19th Judicial Circuit.

At this time, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram received from the Honorable Richard W. Ervin, chief justice, Florida Supreme Court, speaking for that entire court, as well as a telegram from the Honorable Fred O. Dickinson, Jr., comptroller of Florida, who was elected statewide in our State.

There being no objection the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., March 16, 1970.
HON. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

I am authorized by the members of the Florida supreme court to advise we strongly endorse the nomination of Judge G. Harrold Carswell as associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. We know him to be a good citizen, fairminded, and judicially and temperamentally suited to render great service as a Justice in the Nation's highest court.

We believe him to be eminently qualified as a learned jurist for service in the Supreme Court and that he will make an outstanding record in keeping with the highest traditions of the American judiciary.

We discount totally criticism that he will allow prejudice or racial bias to sully his service on the Court. On the contrary, we believe his record of service on the court in the area of human rights will prove noble and worthy of an enlightened civilization.

For the Court:

RICHARD W. ERVIN,
Chief Justice.

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., March 17, 1970.
HON. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

The cabinet of Florida, representing the executive branch of Florida government proudly reiterates its support of and recommends confirmation of the Honorable G. Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The cabinet officially endorsed Judge Carswell on January 27, 1970.

We hope you will bring this to the attention of your colleagues.

FRED O. DICKINSON, Jr.,
Comptroller of Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to insert communications from other circuit judges of the State; namely: Woodrow M. Melvin, presiding judge of the First Judicial Circuit; Martin Sack, Gerald B. Tjoflat, Lamar Wingeart, Jr., Charles A. Luckie, Albert W. Graessle, Jr., Henry F. Martin, Jr., Marion W. Gooding, and Thomas A. Larkin, circuit judges of the Fourth Judicial Circuit; W. Troy Hall, Jr. and John W. Booth, circuit judges of the Fifth Judicial Circuit; Ben F. Overton, Mark R. McGarry, Jr., Robert O. Beach, and Charles R. Holley, circuit judges of the Sixth Judicial Circuit; Parker Lee McDonald, and Claude R. Edwards, circuit judges of the Ninth Judicial Circuit; James Lawrence King, David Popper, and Thomas E. Lee, Jr., circuit judges of the 11th Judicial Circuit; John D. Justice, Lynn N. Silvertooth, Robert E. Willis, and Robert E. Hensley, circuit judges of the 12th Judicial Circuit; H. John Moore II, O. Edgar Williams, L. Clayton Nance, and Stewart F. LaMotte, Jr., circuit judges of the 17th Judicial Circuit; and Lynn Gerald and Archie M. Odom, circuit judges of the 20th Judicial Circuit.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MILTON, FLA.,
March 18, 1970.
Senator SPESSARD HOLLAND,
Senate Building,
Washington, D.C.:

We circuit judges of the First Judicial Circuit of Fla. have had the pleasure of knowing Judge G. Harrold Carswell as a lawyer and as a judge. It is a pleasure to vouch for him and urge his confirmation. Best wishes.

WOODROW M. MELVIN,
Presiding Judge.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.,
March 17, 1970.
Senator SPESSARD HOLLAND,
Washington, D.C.:

You have our unqualified endorsement in urging the confirmation of Judge Carswell.

Judges Martin Sack, Gerald Tjoflat, Lamar Wingeart, Charles Luckie, Albert Graessle, Henry Martin, Marion Gooding, Thomas Larkin, 4th Judicial Circuit of Florida.

TAVARES, FLA.,
March 17, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

I respectfully recommend Judge Carswell for your favorable consideration and urge you support his nomination by President Nixon as an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Sincerely submitted.

W. TROY HALL, JR.,
Circuit Judge, Leesburg, Fla.

STATE OF FLORIDA, JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT, FIFTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT,
March 17, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HOLLAND: The appointment of a conservative man such as Judge G. Harrold Carswell to the United States Supreme Court is long overdue, and now that we have the opportunity of securing such an appointment, I sincerely and earnestly urge that you, as our Senator, give your unqualified support to this appointment.

I am sure that the opposition will continue to raise smoke screens and attempt to defeat this selection by our President. The people of Citrus, Hernando and Sumter Counties, where I serve as presiding judge are, in my opinion, solidly behind Judge Carswell and your part in assisting in his confirmation by the Senate would be well received.

Yours very truly,

JOHN W. BOOTH,
Circuit Judge.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.,
March 18, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.:

I personally support the Senate's confirmation of Judge Harrold Carswell as a Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

BEN F. OVERTON,
Circut Judge, Sixth Judicial Circuit.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA,
March 20, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.:

I wish to record my wholehearted endorsement of Judge Carswell for elevation to the Supreme Court.

MARK R. MCGARRY, JR.,
Circuit Judge.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.,
March 23, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.:

I urge your vote for approval of Judge Carswell nomination to the United States Supreme Court.

ROBERT O. BEACH,
Circuit Judge, Sixth Judicial Circuit, State of Florida.

BELLEAIR, FLA.
March 18, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

I urge the confirmation of Judge Carswell.

CHARLES R. HOLLY,
Circuit Judge,
Clearwater Fla.

ORLANDO, FLA.,
March 18, 1970.

Honorable SPESSARD HOLLAND,
United State Senator,
Washington, D.C.:

The Judicial Administration Committee of the Florida Bar considers Judge Harrold Carswell to be eminently qualified, competent and learned to serve as Supreme Court Justice. We urge his confirmation without further delay. I also personally recommend this action.

PARKER LEE MCDONALD,
Circuit Judge and Chairman of Committee.

ORLANDO, FLA.,
March 23, 1970.

Honorable SPESSARD HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.:

Respectfully urge you to continue pressing for Judge Carswell's appointment.

Best regards,

CLAUDE R. EDWARDS,
Circuit Judge.

MIAMI, FLA.,
March 17, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senator,
Old Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HOLLAND: I respectfully urge that the Senate confirm the appointment of G. Harrold Carswell of Tallahassee to the United States Supreme Court. While I do not know Judge Carswell personally, I have, upon many occasions, reviewed opinions cited to me in which Judge Carswell has participated either as a district or appellate judge. These decisions reflect a sound and thorough grasp of the law. In addition, through conversation with my colleagues and general observations of Judge Carswell I believe that he is possessed of the proper judicial requirements and temperament to fill this vacancy.

The selection of any person to the United States Supreme Court is, as you might imagine, a subject of keen interest to lawyers and judges throughout the land. Although I do not proport to speak for the twenty-two Circuit Judges of the Eleventh Judicial Circuit, I can state with considerable accuracy that the judges of my Circuit unanimously believe that the appointment of Judge Carswell to this position is an excellent choice. We feel that the selection of a person to the Supreme Court should be based upon ability and judicial temperament rather than partisan political considerations. I respectfully invite your attention to the fact that twenty-one of our twenty-two judges are, like myself, registered democrats.

Cordially,

JAMES LAWRENCE KING.

MIAMI, FLA.,
March 20, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HOLLAND: We strongly support confirmation of Judge Carswell to U.S. Supreme Court.

DAVID POPPER,
Circuit Judge, Dade County Courthouse.

MIAMI, FLA.,
March 20, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

I urge your support for confirmation of Judge Carswell.

THOMAS E. LEE,
Circuit Judge.

SARASOTA, FLA.,
March 16, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD HOLLAND,
Washington, D.C.:

We the undersigned circuit judges of Twelfth Judicial Circuit, Florida join with many other good Floridians urging confirmation of Honorable Harrold Carswell to Supreme Court Bench.

JOHN D. JUSTICE,
LYNN N. SILVERTOOTH,
ROBERT E. WILLIS,
ROBERT E. HENSLEY,

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA.,
March 17, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

I urgently and respectfully request your favorable consideration and affirmation vote for confirmation of Judge Carswell's nomination.

H. JOHN MOORE,
Circuit Judge.

FT. LAUDERDALE, FLA.,
March 17, 1970.

Sen. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

Recommend nomination of Judge Harrold Carswell be approved.

O. EDGAR WILLIAMS,
Circuit Judge.

FT. LAUDERDALE, FLA.,
March 18, 1970.

Sen. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
New Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

I urge confirmation of Judge Carswell on nonpartisan basis.

L. CLAYTON NANCE,
Circuit Judge.

FT. LAUDERDALE, FLA.,
March 20, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
New Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

Petty politics should be set aside and Judge Carswell should be seated because of his qualifications.

STEWART F. LAMOTTE, JR.,
Circuit Judge.

FORT MYERS, FLA.,
March 16, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
Old Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

We sincerely endorse Judge G. Harrold Carswell for Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

LYNN GERALD,
Circuit Judge,
ARCHIE M. ODOM,
Circuit Judge.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I also ask, at this time, unanimous consent to place in the RECORD communications from the following county judges: Joe Dan Trotman, of Walton County; Kenneth E. Cooksey, of Jefferson County; Monroe E. Treiman, of Hernando County; R. R. Brown, of Jackson County; and James W. West, of Sumter County.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEFUNIAK SPRINGS, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

SIRS: I have been a county judge in Walton County Florida for 21 years. I wish to say that the Hon. Harrold Carswell is qualified in every respect. I give him my unqualified support. All my friends also feel this way.

JOE DAN TROTMAN.

MONTICELLO, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senator,
U.S. Congress, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HOLLAND: I have known Judge Harrold Carswell since he became U.S. District Attorney. I have practiced before his court when he was district judge. He is most eminently qualified to sit on the U.S. Supreme Court especially when viewed from the standpoint of the qualification of some present and former justice. I sincerely believe he will interpret the law rather than legislate. I urge that the verification and the defamation spawned by Senators Bayh et al. cease, and the Senate get on with immediate confirmation, respectfully.

KENNETH E. COOKSEY,
County Judge, Monticello, Fla.

BROOKSVILLE, FLA.,
March 17, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD HOLLAND,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: Your support for Judge Carswell as Justice of the Supreme Court sincerely appreciated by the Judiciary of Florida. Carswell is a qualified jurist.

MONROE W. TREIMAN,
County Judge, Hernando County.

MARIANNA, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

Sincerely believe circus has lasted long enough. For sake of a strong court system commanding respect of all, urge your efforts to enforce involving Judge Carswell and press for immediate confirmation.

R. ROBERT BROWN,
County Judge, Juvenile Court Judge.

BUSHNELL, FLA.,
March 18, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senator,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: Please continue to do everything in your power to get a good man on the Supreme Court. Please keep pushing for Judge Carswell.

Respectfully,

JAMES W. WEST,
County Judge, Sumter County.

Mr. HOLLAND. I ask unanimous consent, also, Mr. President, to insert in the RECORD at this point telegrams from Robert W. Rust, U.S. attorney for the southern district of Florida and from Robert Eagan, State attorney for the ninth judicial circuit.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MIAMI, FLA.,
March 21, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

I wish to thank you for your support for Judge Carswell. He is highly qualified to serve on the U.S. Supreme Court. I am proud that President Nixon has nominated him and that you will vote to confirm a southern jurist who is gifted with common sense and practical experience as well as intellectual capability.

ROBERT W. RUST,
U.S. Attorney.

ORLANDO, FLA.,
March 16, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

Urge your confirmation of Justice Carswell.

Very truly yours,

ROBERT EAGAN,
State Attorney
Ninth Circuit, Orlando, Fla.

Mr. HOLLAND. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to insert in the RECORD at this point telegrams which I have received from a number of professors at the State universities who have endorsed Judge Carswell; namely, J. M. Morse III, dean, College of Law, Florida State University; Dexter Delony, professor of law, University of Florida; and Norman A. Faulkner, associate professor of law and director of law placement, University of Florida.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TALLAHASSEE, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.:

I support the nomination of G. Harrold Carswell for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. In my opinion he is qualified by training, experience, and temperament for the position. Dean Mason Ladd joins me in support of Judge Carswell.

J. M. MORSE III,
Dean, College of Law,
Florida State University.

GAINESVILLE, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.:

I vigorously urge confirmation of Judge Harrold Carswell.

DEXTER DELONY,
Professor of Law, University of Florida.

GAINESVILLE, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.:

Please add my name to those that strongly support and urge the immediate confirmation of Judge G. Harrold Carswell to the United States Supreme Court.

NORMAN A. FAULKNER,
Associate Professor of Law and Director of Law Placement, Spessard L. Holland Law Center, University of Fla.

Mr. HOLLAND. I mention in closing, Mr. President, that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 17 shows the following communications in support of Judge Carswell's nomination: letters from Mason Ladd, visiting professor and former dean, Florida State University, dean emeritus of Iowa; William Vandercreek, law professor of Southern Methodist University; and Frank E. Maloney, dean of the University of Florida Law School.

Mr. President, I have previously inserted into the RECORD telegrams and letters from most reputable judiciary and legal professional personages, all of whom have knowledge of Judge Carswell's ability. I now ask unanimous consent to insert into the RECORD the following letters or portions thereof from men of the judiciary and of the legal profession whom I regard most highly and on whom I would prefer to rely as to the ability, integrity, and qualifications of Judge Carswell than would rely on persons of the profession, totally unfamiliar with Judge Carswell or who I believe have not taken the time to analyze the man and his character but yet are willing to demean him by signing petitions against his appointment. These letters are all relative to Judge Carswell's appointment to the circuit court of appeals but reflect the true expressions of persons well qualified to judge the ability of the man now nominated for the Supreme Court.

First, I ask unanimous consent to have a letter which I received from Campbell Thornal, chief justice, Supreme Court of Florida, printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TALLAHASSEE, FLA.,
April 14, 1966.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am told that there is a possibility that District Judge Harrold Carswell may be considered for one of the several vacancies to be filled on the Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit.

I am sure that you know Judge Carswell quite well. It is my impression that he has rendered an excellent service as a Federal District Judge. He enjoys the confidence of the Bar, is diligent in dispatching the business of the Court and has an excellent reputation among the judges who know him here in Florida. Additionally, we in the state judiciary have appreciated the very cordial and congenial relationship with Judge Carswell as one of our Federal Trial Judges. I certainly have no reluctance to commending him to your favorable consideration in the event that he is among those considered for the Court of Appeals appointment.

With warmest regards, I remain,

Sincerely,

CAMPBELL THORNAL.

Mr. HOLLAND. Second, I ask unanimous consent to have a letter which I received from Elwyn Thomas, justice of the Supreme Court of Florida, printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA,
Tallahassee, April 4, 1966.

Hon. SPESSARD HOLLAND,
U.S. Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SPESSARD: There has been some discussion hereabouts with reference to the appointment of Judge Harrold Carswell to the Circuit Court of Appeals in which case we would have two Federal District Judges in North Florida as well as a Tallahassee Judge on the Circuit Court. This seems to me a wise solution of the present situation and, certainly, Harrold is abundantly qualified by training, character and experience to perform the duties of the higher court.

I am not too familiar with the efforts that are being made to secure these places but it occurs to me that this would be a very sensible move.

Please forgive me for the liberty I take in addressing you on the subject but if there is any possibility that this arrangement could be made, I should like to be counted as favoring it enthusiastically.

With warm personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

ELWYN THOMAS.

Mr. HOLLAND. Third, I ask unanimous consent to have a letter which I received from Ben C. Willis, circuit judge, Second Judicial Circuit of Florida, printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECOND JUDICIAL CIRCUIT,
Tallahassee, Fla., April 4, 1966.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have heard rumors that United States District Judge Harrold Carswell is being considered for appointment to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to replace Judge Jones, who is retiring. If he should be nominated and confirmed, I feel that he would serve ably and creditably and would be governed by sound legal judgments in the decisions he would reach. Of course, I have had no opportunity to observe him, but from the reports I receive from members of the bar and from other sources, he has been an excellent District Judge. I feel the nation would be well served by him on the appellate court and that his type of man is very much needed in such positions.

With kindest personal regards and all good wishes, I am,

Sincerely,

BEN C. WILLIS.

Mr. HOLLAND. Fourth, I wish to read a portion of a letter which I received from Stephen C. O'Connell, then justice of the Supreme Court of Florida, now President of the University of Florida:

Yesterday I was told that Judge Harrold Carswell is being considered for appointment to the Court of Appeals and I was asked to express my views to you on this. I endorsed Harrold's appointment to his present office and his record has made me proud that I did so. I believe he would make an excellent appellate judge.

Fifth, I wish to read a portion of a letter which I received from Millard F. Caldwell, then chief justice of the Supreme Court of Florida and former Governor of the State I have the honor to represent in part. In writing about the vacancy on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, last year he said:

My best suggestion is the appointment of Harrold Carswell to one of the vacancies. His calm common sense approach to the tough problems of the day would be helpful, to say the least. I do not need to remind you that he has rendered splendid service to the Federal Bench, a service recognized by the Circuit and District Judges of the Fifth Circuit in electing him District Judge Representative to the United States Judicial Conference.

Sixth, I ask unanimous consent to have a letter and enclosed editorial which I received from Douglass B. Shivers, of the law firm of Cotton, Shivers, Gwynn & Daniel, Tallahassee, Fla., printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COTTEN, SHIVERS, GWYNN & DANIEL,
Tallahassee, Fla., January 24, 1969.

Hon. SPESSARD HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HOLLAND: Enclosed is an editorial which appeared in the Pensacola Journal on January 22, 1969, endorsing our mutual good friend and able United States District Judge Honorable Harrold Carswell for appointment to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

We enthusiastically endorse this editorial. Judge Carswell has done an outstanding job on the United States District Court bench and he would make an excellent Judge for the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Warm personal regards.

Respectfully yours,

DOUGLASS B. SHIVERS.

[From the Pensacola (Fla.) Journal, Jan. 22, 1969]

MAN FOR THE JOB

We hope reports of the proposed appointment of Federal Judge G. Harrold Carswell of Tallahassee to the position of judge of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals are correct, and the appointment is speedily confirmed.

We can think of no man better suited for the job.

When Judge Carswell, at age 38, was appointed to the judgeship of this federal court district, there were complaints as to his "limited" experience in the practice of law and his "total lack" of judicial experience.

There can be no such complaints now, however. Judge Carswell has served as district judge in this area for more than 10 years, and served for several years prior to that time as U.S. Attorney in the same district. He finished law school in 1948, giving him more than 20 years of law experience in all.

Furthermore, in his years of service on the district court bench, despite a tremendous work load, Judge Carswell has done what we believe has been an outstanding job.

Now, approaching 50, he has the maturity and experience needed and yet is still young enough and active enough to offer many years of service to this nation in this high level position on the appeals court, embracing Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas.

To be practical about it, Judge Carswell is a Republican, as is the new President of the United States and the new U.S. Senator for the State of Florida.

Two new judges are to be named for the Appeals Court, making a total of 13, and at present only one state, Texas, has sent three men to this bench. Florida should be in line now for one such appointment, as the fastest growing of the states involved, and—again being practical—as the adopted state of President Nixon.

We have long contended that judges should be appointed not from the standpoint of political cronyism, but from the standpoint of experience and demonstrated ability.

Judge Carswell, without question, has both, as well as the political credentials which have always been necessary in the past.

We hope the job will be his.

Mr. HOLLAND. Seventh, I ask unanimous consent to have a letter which I received from Joseph C. Jacobs of the law firm of Ervin, Pennington, Varn & Jacobs, Tallahassee, Fla., printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ERVIN, PENNINGTON, VARN & JACOBS,
Tallahassee, Fla., June 18, 1969.

Re Hon G. Harrold Carswell, U.S. district judge.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HOLLAND: I have noted newspaper accounts to the effect that Judge Carswell's record in the field of civil rights has been attacked by some individuals.

I believe that I am uniquely qualified to attest to Judge Carswell's judicial temperament and his performance in civil rights cases. For 10 years, I was Assistant Attorney General here in Tallahassee, and for two years was Chief Trial Counsel in the Attorney General's office; therefore, I either personally handled or had supervisory responsibility for all civil rights cases in which the state was a party. I certainly did not agree with all of Judge Carswell's decisions and, in fact, vehemently disagreed with many of them; but he was always fair, courteous, and exhibited the judicial temperament of a good judge—many times under trying circumstances.

In the past five years, I have been in the private practice of law, actively engaged in trial work with a very active firm requiring the handling of similar cases and cases generally before the Federal District Court here and throughout the State of Florida. Viewing Judge Carswell's activities from the vantage point of the other side of these cases. I can again report that he is fair and exhibited the same judicial temperament which I had observed in my representation of the state in his court and the other federal courts in the state.

I have properly avoided—and respectfully suggest that it is inappropriate in the evaluation of any judge—to summarize the decisions which Judge Carswell has rendered in any particular area. A judge, like a lawsuit, must be judged on the basis of each individual decision and each individual set of circumstances as it develops through our court system. Any attempt to form a composite view of a judge's performance based on cases handled in one particular area would give a distorted view of the qualifications of the individual judge involved.

I have discussed this with other members of my firm and lawyers generally throughout Florida, and can assure you that the above opinion is shared by the vast majority of lawyers who practice in the District Court of the Northern District of Florida.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH C. JACOBS.

Mr. HOLLAND. Eighth, I also ask unanimous consent to have a letter which I received from Carl R. Pennington, Jr., of the law firm of Ervin, Pennington, Varn & Jacobs, Tallahassee, Fla., printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ERVIN, PENNINGTON, VARN & JACOBS,
Tallahassee, Fla., November 26, 1968.

Senator SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HOLLAND: Although it may be somewhat presumptuous on my part, I would like to add my endorsement and support to Harrold Carswell in connection with his consideration for appointment to the Circuit Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit. I am certain that you are more aware of Harrold's political philosophies than I am. Suffice it to say that we all hold to the same basic beliefs. I believe that it is equally apparent that Harrold possesses all of the requisite qualifications, and that it will be difficult to find anyone as well qualified for this judgeship. As a practicing attorney I believe that his appointment would add both to the stature and quality of the Court.

Very truly yours,

CARL R. PENNINGTON, Jr.

Mr. HOLLAND. Ninth, I ask unanimous consent to have a letter which I received from Marion B. Knight of the law firm of Marion B. Knight and/or Philip J. Knight Blountstown, Fla., to be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARION B. KNIGHT AND/OR PHILIP J. KNIGHT,
Blountstown, Fla., December 9, 1969.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate
Attention Mr. Merrill Winslett,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MERRILL: At the meeting of our Fourteenth Judicial Circuit Bar Association in Marianna, Saturday afternoon, I discussed the appointment of one of the Judges of the Circuit Court of Appeal for the Fifth Circuit, with some of our lawyers who are familiar with both Judges, and since I represented the Marianna Division of the U.S. District Court, Northern District of Florida in Gainesville, at the Enrobing of Judge Bud Arnow, and since I am the oldest acting practitioner in our circuit, I agreed to write this letter to you directly and request that you take the matter up on your confidential meeting with Senator Holland to be sure that it gets to his attention.

I have only been intimately acquainted with Judge Harrold Carswell, our Senior Judge since a short time before his appointment.

I have also known Judge McRae since Law School days in the early twenties, which of course is not quite as long as I have known you, but still longer than I have personally known Senator Holland.

It is my opinion, which is concurred in by the active lawyers in this Division, that we recommend Judge Carswell to be elevated to the Circuit Court of Appeals.

He is not only judicially qualified, but has not lost the practical ability to observe matters and persons in a qualified manner, and I sincerely recommend that he be appointed with the utmost confidence that he will lend dignity to the profession, reflect honor to Senator Holland and merit the confidence of the other members of the Court and reflect honor to himself.

With kindest personal regards to you and Senator Holland.

Yours sincerely,

MARION B. KNIGHT.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I have received numerous letters attesting to the ability of Judge Carswell and strongly endorsing his nomination to the Supreme Court. These letters are from persons in all walks of life. In order not to enlarge the RECORD too greatly, I will not ask that all of them be placed in the RECORD. I do feel, however, that certain letters from members of the bar are most appropriate, and I ask unanimous consent to have these letters printed in the RECORD.

The first is a letter addressed to Senator EASTLAND, a copy of which was sent to me, from the Honorable Bryan Simpson, circuit judge, U.S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Judicial Circuit.

The second letter is one from the Honorable Ben F. Barnes of the firm of Barnes & Grant, Marianna, Fla.

The third is a letter from the Honorable Bryon B. Block of the firm of Glickstein, Crenshaw, Glickstein, Fay & Allen, Jacksonville, Fla.

The fourth is a letter addressed to Mr. Melvin L. Kodas, chairman, section on judicial administration law, American Trial Lawyers Association, Kansas City, Mo., from the Honorable Perry Nichols, a copy of which was forwarded to me.

The fifth is a letter from the Honorable Phillip W. Knight of the firm of Fowler, White, Humkey, Burnett, Hurley & Banick of Miami, Fla. The last paragraph of this letter is more of a personal nature regarding my pending retirement deleted this from the letter.

The sixth letter and enclosure which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD is one I received from the Honorable Edward E. Hedstrom, president of the Putnam County Bar Association, Palatka, Fla., enclosing a resolution adopted by the Putnam County Bar Association endorsing the nomination and confirmation of Judge Carswell.

I ask unanimous consent that the letters and the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. COURT OF APPEALS,
FIFTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT,
Jacksonville, Fla., January 22, 1970.

Hon. JAMES O. EASTLAND,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR EASTLAND: The purpose of this letter is to attest to you and the members of your committee, for whatever value it may have, my personal judgment of the qualifications of U.S. Circuit Judge G. Harrold Carswell to become an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

I have been closely associated with Judge Carswell as a brother Florida federal judge since he became a District Judge in the spring of 1958. We worked closely together over the years. In recent months that association has continued on the Court of Appeals. I knew him slightly, but mainly by reputation, in the early Fifties when he was U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of Florida.

He possesses and uses well the requisite working tools of the judge's trade: industry, promptness, learning, attentiveness and writing skills. He is a competent and capable judicial craftsman, experienced in the diverse and complex areas of federal law as well as the almost limitless variety of cases coming to us under the diversity jurisdiction. In the six or seven months he has been a member of our Court and in extensive service thereon as a visiting judge over the prior years, he has shown a steady capacity for high productivity without the sacrifice of top quality in his work.

More important even than the fine skill as a judicial craftsman possessed by Judge Carswell are his qualities as a man: superior intelligence, patience, a warm and generous interest in his fellow man of all races and creeds, judgment and an open-minded disposition to hear, consider and decide important matters without preconceptions, predilections or prejudices. I have always found him to be completely objective and detached in his approach to his judicial duties.

In every sense, Judge Carswell measures up to the rigorous demands of the high position for which he has been nominated. I hope that the Judiciary Committee will act promptly and favorably upon his nomination. It is a privilege to recommend him to you without reservation.

With kind personal regards, I am.

Sincerely,

BRYAN SIMPSON.

BARNES & GRANT,
Marianna, Fla., January 19, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am advised that Judge Carswell was nominated by the President for appointment to the United States Supreme Court this afternoon.

Since Judge Carswell's appointment to the District Court, I have been before him on numerous occasions each year, in criminal matters, by virtue of appointment generally, and from time to time in civil matters. I have appreciated the manner and form in which he operated his Court; his ability to comprehend the issues immediately, even in complicated civil matters; and to make decisions, without hesitation, regardless of the parties.

I sincerely hope that you will do everything within your power to assure Judge Carswell's confirmation by the Senate.

With best personal regards, I am

Sincerely,

BEN F. BARNES.

GLICKSTEIN, CRENSHAW,
GLICKSTEIN, FAY & ALLEN,
Jacksonville, Fla., January 23, 1970.

Hon. HARROLD CARSWELL,
Federal Building,
Tallahassee, Fla.

DEAR JUDGE CARSWELL: It was with a great deal of pleasure that I read of your nomination to the Supreme Court of the United States. I am confident that the Senate of the United States will recognize your ability and integrity in promptly confirming President Nixon's most recent nomination to the highest Court in the land.

As a native Tallahasseean and Floridian I recognize the deep significance your appointment has for the Florida Bar and am confident that your tenure on the Supreme Court will be a continuation of your distinguished service in the District Court and Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Again, let me extend my heartiest congratulations.

Respectfully,

BYRON BLOCK.

NICHOLS & NICHOLS,
Miami, Fla., January 27, 1970.

Re Judge G. Harrold Carswell, Nixon appointee to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Mr. MELVIN L. KODAS,
Chairman, Section on Judicial Administration Law, American Trial Lawyers Association, Kansas City, Mo.

DEAR SIR: I highly recommend the confirmation of Judge G. Harrold Carswell, recent appointee to the Supreme Court of the United States, and I am sending to each member of President Wolfstone's Judicial Committee a copy of this letter.

I have personally known Judge Carswell for about twenty years. He has an outstanding record as a fine trial lawyer, as an excellent prosecuting attorney, as a Federal District Trial Judge and on the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals. This is well recognized by all lawyers who have been before him and who know him in this territory.

In addition to the above, I have had the privilege of being on a number of annual deer hunting trips, on which there were about fifteen prominent lawyers, doctors, insurance men and other friends, where we spent several days on a deer hunt at Cumberland Island, off the lower coast of Georgia. On several occasions, Judge Carswell has been a guest in this group, and I have had the privilege and opportunity to visit with him man to man and under circumstances which were informal and you could talk "off the record," without embarrassment, and I can tell you that Judge Carswell is a moderate conservative. He likewise, however, is a fine judge and follows the law of the land and the Constitution and decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. He has applied these without favoritism and without regard to race, color or creed.

Concerning Judge Carswell's remark about integration immediately after graduating from Mercer College, when he was running for the legislature, I call it to your attention that the Constitution of the State of Georgia required segregation at that time, and the United States Supreme Court decisions had approved segregation. At that time he was following the Constitution of his state and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. His views today are as liberal and as modern as the decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

Judge Carswell is a hard worker. He keeps his calendar in good up-to-date shape and tends to the Court's business with dispatch.

He has a fine family and a good, high moral personal reputation in this state and in his own community where they know him best.

Having been president of the American Trial Lawyers Association and the International Academy of Trial Lawyers, as well as serving on the Judicial Council of Florida for six years dealing with the judicial system, qualifications and appointments of judges in this area, I unhesitatingly recommend Judge G. Harrold Carswell for confirmation to this high office. I feel he will grace the Bench and serve with honor and distinction and, at the same time, reflect credit upon the office itself.

Yours very truly,

PERRY NICHOLS.

FOWLER, WHITE, HUMKEY, BURNETT, HURLEY & BANICK,
February 2, 1970.

Senator SPESSARD HOLLAND,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: Please excuse this belated opportunity to extend my congratulations to you for your excellent bipartisan efforts in assisting the President in his selecting Judge Carswell as nominee to the Supreme Court. Judge Carswell's appointment will strengthen the Supreme Court immeasurably.

Being a "strict constructionist" myself, I sincerely urge your continued efforts to secure the Senators' consent of his nomination. Such action will improve the stature of the Bar, the Judiciary, the State of Florida, and the nation as a whole.

Respectfully yours,

PHILLIP W. KNIGHT.

DOWDA, MILLER & HEDSTROM,
Palatka, Fla., January 29, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed is the Resolution adopted by the Putnam County Bar Association endorsing the nomination and confirmation of Judge G. Harrold Carswell as an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

We respectfully submit this Resolution as an expression of our confidence in Judge Carswell.

Very truly yours,

EDWARD E. HEDSTROM,
President, Putnam County Bar Association.

Enclosure.

RESOLUTION

Whereas, the Putnam County Bar Association, a corporation not for profit, of the State of Florida, desires to express its views concerning the nomination of the Honorable G. Harrold Carswell for the position of Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court; and

Whereas, this Association is convinced that Judge Carswell is fully worthy of appointment to the United States Supreme Court, is a man with a distinguished record as a jurist, and should be confirmed as soon as possible;

Now, therefore, be it resolved by the Putnam County Bar Association of Putnam County, Florida, in special meeting assembled this 26th day of January, A.D. 1970, that this Association does hereby endorse and support the nomination of the Honorable G. Harrold Carswell for appointment as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States of America, and does urge the United States Senate to confirm his appointment at the earliest possible date; and,

Be it further resolved that copies of this Resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the president of the United States Senate, to the United States Senators from the State of Florida, and to the Honorable G. Harrold Carswell.

Passed and adopted this 26th day of January, A.D. 1970.

PUTNAM COUNTY BAR ASSOCIATION,
EDWARD E. HEDSTROM, President.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, in addition, I have received 232 telegrams, which I shall not ask to have printed in the RECORD because that would unduly encumber the RECORD. All of these telegrams are from reputable members of the bar in my State. I think I know pretty well the members of the bar of my State, having practiced there since 1916 and being a native of my State. I do not know every one of them but I know by far the greater majority of them.

It would be inconceivable to me that all these judges of our State, Governors, and cabinet members of our State, regardless of party, and all these fine practicing attorneys would recommend Judge Carswell so strongly for confirmation unless he is vastly more than a mediocre judge.

As I have said, I had the pleasure to sit as a witness in the largest case ever tried during my lifetime in my State, when Judge Carswell was presiding. I have stated how thoroughly I was impressed with his character in presiding and his rulings. There were some 20 to 30 lawyers on the two sides. When the case was decided by the jury there was no appeal. There can be no stronger endorsement of a trial judge than that.

Mr. President, I close by asking that there be printed in the RECORD a telegram from the president, vice president, and treasurer of the Student Bar Association; the president of Phi Delta Phi legal fraternity; editor in chief, Law Review and others, of the Florida State University College of Law strongly endorsing Judge Carswell for this appointment.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TALLAHASSEE, FLA.,
March 19, 1970.

Hon. SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
U.S. Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

As students of Florida State University College of Law we urge the confirmation of Judge Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court of the United States. We are in complete agreement with the mature judgment of Dean Joshua Morse, Dean Mason Ladd and Professor William Von der Creek in our complete support of Judge Carswell. We feel that his judicial record is outstanding, his character is impeccable and his judicial philosophy is sound.

Robert B. Cyrus, President, Student Bar Association; J. Michael Huey, Executive Vice President, Student Bar Association; Edwin A. Green, Vice President, Student Bar Association; Michael P. Casterton, Treasurer, Student Bar Association; William C. Martin III, President, Phi Delta Phi Legal Fraternity; Wendell J. Kiser, Editor in Chief, Law Review; Lee L. Willis, Paul M. Ruff, Zollie Maynard.

PERIOD FOR THE TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate, as in legislative session, will proceed to the consideration of routine morning business, with a 3-minute limitation for the remainder of the 15 minutes previously allotted for that purpose.

Is there further morning business?

ABORTION REFORM

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, several weeks ago I introduced a bill to eliminate restrictions on abortion in the District of Columbia. It is my feeling that a woman, as a matter of voluntary decision and private right, should have the decision left to her as to whether or not she wants to terminate the pregnancy.

Since that time the State of Hawaii has passed a law making it a private decision between the woman and her physician whether she wants to terminate a pregnancy. The State of Washington has referred a similar law to the electorate, to be decided by them at the general election this fall. One house of the New York Legislature and one house of the Maryland Legislature have passed laws which would, in essence, do the same thing; that is, give the woman the private right to determine whether she wants to abort a pregnancy.

Courts in several States, including the California Supreme Court, and the Federal districts courts in Wisconsin and the District of Columbia have held abortion laws of those States to be unconstitutional.

Recently both the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal editorialized in favor of these changes. I will now read from the editorial published in the New York Times:

While fully recognizing the depth and sincerity of feeling of those who believe that abortion is an immoral act, we have come to the conclusion that it is not a matter for the state to decide but that each woman, in consultation with her physician, should have the right to determine whether to continue a pregnancy or not, just as she should have the right to decide whether to begin one or not.

The editorial in the Wall Street Journal states:

In addition, the question of how many children should be up to the discretion of the woman or the husband and wife as the case may be. Generally speaking they have that right now—they do not have to have any children if they do not want to—and the right, it seems to us, should include the possibility of terminating an unwanted pregnancy.

To put it another way, this is an area where government has no necessary or appropriate function.

Mr. President, considering the stature of the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of these two editorials be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Mar. 20, 1970]

AT LAST, ABORTION REFORM

After years of delay in Albany, when an abortion reform measure could not even get out of committee for floor debate and a vote, the Senate has now approved the most sweeping reform yet enacted in any state. Its prospects for approval in the assembly are encouragingly good.

Abortion reform is long overdue. The state's present law, enacted in the 19th century, permits abortions only when a licensed physician has "a reasonable belief that such is necessary to preserve the life" of the prospective mother. It is a cruelly restrictive law that has doomed countless thousands of women to continued unwanted pregnancies, even those that might have resulted from incest or rape or those that might pose a threat to physical or emotional health.

The reform approved by the State Senate repeals the language restricting abortions to cases in which the life of the prospective mother can be said to be endangered if the pregnancy is allowed to continue. It would permit abortions when a woman and her physician agree that one is desirable.

This may seem like too sweeping a reform of too restrictive a statute. It is, however, probably the only kind of change that will ultimately withstand court challenges that have already been mounted in various states against existing abortion laws.

While fully recognizing the depth and sincerity of feeling of those who believe that abortion is an immoral act, we have come to the conclusion that it is not a matter for the state to decide but that each woman, in consultation with her physician, should have the right to determine whether to continue a pregnancy or not, just as she should have the right to decide whether to begin one or not. We therefore urge the Assembly and Governor Rockefeller to join the Senate in establishing this as the public policy of the State of New York.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Mar. 20, 1970]

REPEALING ABORTION LAWS

A growing number of Americans are coming to the conclusion that the best reform of abortion laws is outright repeal, and the state of Hawaii has already acted on that premise.

It is a rather remarkable turnaround. Only a couple years ago no one would think that anything so "radical" as a repeal proposal would have any chance at all. Yet today several states have liberalized their laws and one house of the New York State legislature this week approved what would amount to Hawaii-like repeal.

The changing attitude is not, in our opinion, just one more manifestation of the new permissiveness of the times. On the contrary, it attests to a greater awareness of the anguish suffered by the victims of the harsh laws that remain on the books.

The objections to repealing abortion laws have by no means, of course, been completely stilled.

Abortion is anathema to certain religions, and while they have every right to their views, they have no right to impose their views on the society at large. Legalizing abortion obviously does not require Roman Catholics or anyone else to practice it; they are as free as ever to shun it and indeed to denounce it.

Some contend that legal abortion would aggravate the sexual latitude of the age. We doubt it. Presumably no one wants an abortion if there is a better choice; and as it is the number of illegal abortions is appallingly high. Taking abortion out of the legal realm altogether might therefore not mean any significant increase in the total number of the operations.

Then there is the objection on the ground of moral philosophy: That abortion is the taking of human life. One answer to it is that no consensus, let alone proof, exists among medical practitioners or moralists. The fact is that many doctors would long since have been performing abortions had it been legal to do so.

For our layman's part, we find it particularly hard to accept that the embryo (first three months of pregnancy) is a human being in any real sense; we incline to the thesis that it is still part of the mother, manifestly incapable of independent existence.

Against these objections, the arguments for repeal seem far more persuasive.

First is that it is simply humanitarian. We have mentioned the suffering of the victims. It involves the degradation, humiliation and mental strain imposed by unwanted pregnancy and the effort to remedy it. A civilized society should not have such draconian laws, although it certainly can and should require that abortions be performed by licensed physicians under sanitary conditions.

Probably legalizing abortion would not be a significant population-control measure in this country (it has been highly effective in Japan). However, it fits in with the new concern—even apprehension—that unless population is controlled, the nation will in the not too distant future be so inundated that decent living conditions will be impossible.

In addition, the question of how many children should be up to the discretion of the woman or the husband and wife as the case may be. Generally speaking they have that right now—they do not have to have any children if they do not want to—and the right, it seems to us, should include the possibility of terminating an unwanted pregnancy.

To put it another way, this is an area where government has no necessary or appropriate function. These severe laws go back to a time and a mentality in which the State assumed it should closely regulate people's private lives; the statutes are, or are analogous to, sumptuary laws. We do not think they accord well with the concept of individual liberty.

Needless to say, there are still other areas where the State's intrusion is questionable. As a broad criterion in such matters, we believe that where the situation is truly private—that is, where the conduct of the individual or couple or family does not impinge on society or hurt anyone—government should refrain from intervention.

For whatever it is worth, it seems to us that abortion, unhappy though it be at best, belongs in that category.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS, ETC.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. METCALF) laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

REPORT OF RECEIPTS AND DISBURSEMENTS TO APPROPRIATIONS FROM DISPOSAL OF MILITARY SUPPLIES, EQUIPMENT, AND MATERIEL AND LUMBER OR TIMBER PRODUCTS

A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Defense, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of receipts and disbursements to appropriations from disposal of military supplies, equipment, and materiel and lumber or timber products, as of December 31, 1969 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Armed Services.

REPORT ON CERTAIN PROJECTS UNDERTAKEN FOR THE ARMY NATIONAL GUARD

A letter from the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense (Installations and Housing), reporting, pursuant to law, on certain projects undertaken for the Army National Guard; to the Committee on Armed Services.

PROPOSED SMALL BUSINESS AMENDMENTS OF 1970

A letter from the Administrator, Small Business Administration, Washington, D.C., transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to clarify and extend the authority of the Small Business Administration, and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PROPOSED ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize an additional Assistant Secretary of Commerce (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Commerce.

PROPOSED EXTENSION FOR ONE YEAR OF ACT RELATING TO HIGH-SPEED GROUND TRANSPORTATION

A letter from the Acting Secretary of Transportation, Washington, D.C., transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to extend for 1 year the act of September 30, 1965, as amended by the act of July 24, 1968, relating to high-speed ground transportation, and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Commerce.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF SECTION 1114 OF TITLE 18, U.S. CODE

A letter from the Chairman, Federal Communications Commission, Washington, D.C., transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 1114 of title 18 of the United States Code to make the killing, assaulting, or intimidating of any officer or employee of the Federal Communications Commission performing investigative, inspection, or law-enforcement functions a Federal criminal offense (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT OF ACTIVITIES UNDER THE FLAMMABLE FABRICS ACT

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of activities under the Flammable Fabrics Act, for the calendar year 1969, plus 3 months of calendar year 1968 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT OF THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL

A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the need to strengthen concrete inspections and testing requirements in the construction of low-rent public housing projects, Department of Housing and Urban Development, dated March 24, 1970 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Government Operations.

REPORT ON GUAM ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND ACT OF 1968

A letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the Governor of Guam on the Guam Economic Development Fund Act of 1968 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

PROPOSED IMPROVEMENT OF LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT

A letter from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act to improve its benefits, and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Labor and Public Affairs.

PROPOSED HIGHER EDUCATION OPPORTUNITY ACT OF 1970

A letter from the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to extend and amend the Higher Education Act of 1965, and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION

A letter from the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the Commissioner of Education, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1969 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

PETITIONS

Petitions were laid before the Senate and referred as indicated:

By the ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. METCALF):

Resolutions of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Finance:

"RESOLUTION OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

"Resolutions memorializing the Congress of the United States to help preserve the shoe and allied industries in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts

"Whereas, Shoe manufacturing is, and has been for more than a century, a major industry in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts currently employing almost thirty thousand persons, plus an additional ten thousand persons who are employed in allied industries; and

"Whereas, Many of the four hundred companies employing these persons have plants located in cities and in small towns where they supply the major source of income and employment; and

"Whereas, The Massachusetts footwear and allied manufacturing industries face continuing and expanding competition from imports of foreign footwear, which have expanded dramatically from seventy-eight million pairs in nineteen hundred and fifty-five to one hundred and seventy-five million pairs in nineteen hundred and sixty-eight and an estimated two hundred and ten million pairs in nineteen hundred and sixty-nine; and

"Whereas, Such imports have curtailed the growth and eliminated many job opportunities and resulted in the liquidation of some thirty companies employing over four thousand persons in the years nineteen hundred and eighty-eight and nineteen hundred and sixty-nine and in the loss of eighteen thousand jobs since nineteen hundred and sixty; and

"Whereas, The footwear and allied manufacturing industries in the commonwealth are labor intensive industries and cannot compete with foreign footwear imports produced by low-wage workers; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts respectfully requests the Congress of the United States to enact legislation that will provide for quotas limiting future importation of foreign footwear for a period sufficient to enable the federal government to develop effective alternative methods of aiding the shoe industry and the workers employed therein; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted forthwith by the Secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of Commerce, to the presiding officer of each branch of Congress and to the members thereof from this Commonwealth."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York; to the Committee on Finance:

"RESOLUTION OF STATE OF NEW YORK

"Whereas, The State of New York has undertaken a comprehensive program for the development of mass transportation facilities and has provided two and one-half billion dollars to assist in the development of said program; and

"Whereas, Comprehensive studies of the problems of mass transportation have been commenced leading to the development of a comprehensive state-wide master plan for mass transportation needs and techniques in the course of which certain problems arising from the existing relationship of state and federal funding have become apparent; and

"Whereas, The federal funding programs have in the past generally been orientated in favor of the private automobile, a policy which has contributed significantly to metropolitan sprawl with its injudicious planning and uses of land and a general weakening of public transportation systems in the central cities, and has created serious relocation problems in urban areas for citizens and businesses displaced by new highway construction; and

"Whereas, The Federal Highway Trust Fund annually receives approximately four and one-half billion dollars for highway construction, which funds, under the Highway Act of 1956, are used to pay ninety per cent of the cost of approved highway construction by all of the states, with the result that highway construction has received preferential treatment in transportation development; and

"Whereas, The studies of the Joint Legislative Committee on Mass Transportation of this Legislature has revealed the desirability of encouraging a comprehensive development of mass transit systems so that federal funding for such programs can be established on an equal basis with that of the highway program on a 90–10 basis between federal and state funds, now, therefore, be it

"Resolved (if the Assembly concur), That the Congress of the United States be and it hereby is memorialized to enact legislation amending the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 by providing for the establishment of a Mass Transportation Trust Fund financed by an extension of the federal automobile excise tax with an increasing proportion earmarked for mass transportation projects each year and to provide for the continuance of the Federal Airport Aid program with an amendment to provide for its funding by means of an increased federal excise tax on airline passenger tickets and aviation fuels, it being the intention of such amendments to create trust funds which will participate in the development of mass transportation and aviation projects on the basis of payment by the federal government of ninety percent of the cost of such approved projects by all of the states similar to the payments as presently provided for the construction and development of highways under the Highway Act of 1956; and be it further

"Resolved (if the Assembly concur), That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Congress of the United States by forwarding one copy thereof to the Secretary of the Senate, one copy to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and one copy to each member of the Congress from the State of New York."

A resolution adopted by the United Nations Association of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn., praying for ratification of the Genocide Convention; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A resolution adopted by the City Council of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for an immediate end to the loss of lives and resources in Vietnam; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A resolution adopted by the Village of Hazel Crest, Ill., praying for obedience to the law and courtesy to others; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A resolution adopted by the City Council of San Diego, Calif., praying for the enactment of legislation to repeal the provisions of the Emergency Detention Act of 1950; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The petition of Ohio Bell, of Chicago, Ill., praying for a redress of grievances; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. METCALF) announced that on today, March 24, 1970, he signed the enrolled bill (H.R. 3786) to authorize the appropriation of additional funds necessary for acquisition of land at the Point Reyes National Seashore in California, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. MAGNUSON, from the Committee on Commerce, without amendment:

H.R. 14289. An act to permit El Paso and Hudspeth Counties, Tex., to be placed in the mountain standard time zone (Rept. No. 91–748).

By Mr. FULBRIGHT, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with amendments:

S. Res. 211. Resolution seeking agreement with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on limiting offensive and defensive strategic weapons and the suspension of test flights of reentry vehicles (Rept. No. 91–749).

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable report of a nomination was submitted:

By Mr. SPARKMAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Allan Oakley Hunter, of California, to be President of the Federal National Mortgage Association.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. METCALF:

S. 3625. A bill to amend section 614 of the Bankruptcy Act to extend the scope of relief available during the pendency of proceedings for wage earners' plans; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(The remarks of Mr. METCALF when he introduced the bill appear later in the RECORD under the appropriate heading.)

By Mr. MOSS:

S. 3626. A bill to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission, after investigation and hearing, to require the establishment of through routes and joint rates between the motor common carriers of property, and between such carriers and common carriers by rail, express, and water, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

(The remarks of Mr. Moss when he introduced the bill appear later in the RECORD under the appropriate heading.)

By Mr. INOUYE (for himself and Mr. FONG):

S. 3627. A bill to provide for the establishment of the Puukohola Heiau National Historic Site, in the State of Hawaii, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. FULBRIGHT (by request):

S. 3628. A bill to authorize an increase in the resources of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(The remarks of Mr. FULBRIGHT when he introduced the bill appear later in the RECORD under the appropriate heading.)

By Mr. PROUTY:

S. 3629. A bill to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act to improve its benefits, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

(The remarks of Mr. PROUTY when he introduced the bill appear later in the RECORD under the appropriate heading.)

By Mr. PASTORE (for himself and Mr. COTTON):

S. 3630. A bill to amend the joint resolution establishing the American Revolution Bicentennial Commission; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NELSON:

S. 3631. A bill to amend the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, to establish a National Marine Mineral Resources Trust, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

(The remarks of Mr. NELSON when he introduced the bill appear later in the RECORD under the appropriate heading.)

By Mr. TOWER:

S.J. Res. 184. A joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a study of the solar rays with a view to determining the potential of such rays as an alternative source of electrical energy; and

S.J. Res. 185. A joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a study of the tides of oceans and other bodies of water with a view to determining the potential of such tides as an alternative source of electrical energy; to the Committee on Commerce.

(The remarks of Mr. TOWER when he introduced the joint resolutions appear later in the RECORD under the appropriate heading.)

S. 3625—INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO AMEND SECTION 614 OF THE BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to amend section 614 of the Bankruptcy Act to extend the scope of relief available during the pendency of proceedings for wage earners' plans.

Under the Bankruptcy Act a wage earner may file under chapter XIII and pay off his debts over a 36-month period, free from garnishment and harassment by creditors. One practical interference with the success of the wage-earner plan is that in order to avoid garnishments by creditors it is often necessary to file for both the husband and the wife and incur double legal fees and double filing costs. One attorney who tried to get the court to issue an injunction to protect the wife's wages after the husband had filed for a wage-earner plan, found the court rejecting his plea. Reed v. General Finance Loan Co. of Norfolk, 394 F. 2d 509 (1968).

The use of the wage-earner plan has been encouraged by the Judicial Conference of the United States and by many referees in bankruptcy and lawyers involved in bankruptcy court practice. It is one way that a man who has made financial errors can pay off his creditors and still retain his self-esteem and dignity without the stigma of bankruptcy. The remedy ought to be further encouraged by amending the Bankruptcy Act to permit the referee in bankruptcy to enjoin the garnishment of the wife's salary or property during the period of the plan.

The bill I introduce today would provide this remedy.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a copy of the bill, the court decision to which I made reference and the foreword from "Wage Earner Plans Under Chapter XIII of the Bankruptcy Act," Hilliard and Hurt, published by the Section of Corporation, Banking and Business Law of the American Bar Association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill and material will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3625) to amend section 614 of the Bankruptcy Act to extend the scope of relief available during the pendency of proceedings for wage earners' plans, introduced by Mr. METCALF, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3625

That section 614 of the Bankruptcy Act (11 U.S.C. 1014) is amended by inserting therein, immediately after the word "debtor", wherever it appears therein, the words "or a debtor's spouse".

The material furnished by Mr. METCALF is as follows:

JAMES DELANO REED, APPELLANT, v. GENERAL FINANCE LOAN COMPANY OF NORFOLK, APPELLEE, NO. 11951, UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS, FOURTH CIRCUIT, ARGUED MARCH 8, 1968. DECIDED MAY 3, 1968

Bankruptcy proceeding under Chapter XIII. The debtor applied for restraining order against garnishment proceedings begun against wages of his wife. The referee in bankruptcy denied the application and the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, Newport News, Walter E. Hoffman, Chief Judge, affirmed the denial. The debtor appealed. The Court of Appeals held that where husband had filed petition for Chapter XII arrangement with creditors but wife had not so petitioned, referee in bankruptcy and district court properly denied restraining order against garnishment proceedings begun against wife's wages on account of joint debt.

Affirmed.

Bankruptcy—1101

Where husband had filed petition for Chapter XIII arrangement with Richard W. Hudgins, Warwick, Va., and William C. Worthington, Norfolk, Va., Worthington, White & Harper, Norfolk, Va., on the brief, for appellant.

No appearance for appellee.

Before Boreman and Butzner, Circuit Judges, and Russell, District Judge.

Per curiam:

Appellant-Debtor, proposing an Arrangement with his creditors under a Chapter XIII proceedings,[1] appeals from a denial of a restraining order against garnishment proceedings begun against the wages of his wife on account of a joint debt of the Debtor and his wife. He contends that "the wages of the wife of the debtor are (were) essential and necessary for the family and for the stability of the proposed Plan," and that the garnishment proceedings, if maintained, will make his Plan ineffective. The Referee in Bankruptcy denied the application for a restraining order, "the wife not having filed a Chapter XIII, and she not being a party to the proceedings." Although finding that the garnishment would "seriously affect the operation of the debtor's extension plan", the District Court sustained the ruling of the Referee. In so doing, it expressed sympathy "with the position of the debtor" and suggested that injunctive relief could be secured if the wife would "file a debtor proceeding in her own behalf." We agree.

Affirmed.

AN APPEAL FOR THE USE OF CHAPTER XIII

In the past forty years consumer credit in the United States has risen from an aggregate of one billion dollars in outstanding debts to more than sixty-three billion in 1963. It would appear we have geared ourselves—perhaps inextricably—to a consumer-credit economy. A new and extremely numerous class of debtors has been created, and continues to increase, made up of those whose incomes are derived from wages, salaries, or commissions.

The Bankruptcy Act of 1898, intended to cope with business failures, did not envision the problems of wage-earner debtors or afford realistic procedures with respect to them.

As we have been instructed through a long series of federal decisions, the purpose of that Bankruptcy Act was: (1) to apply the property of the insolvent person or corporation to the payment of the debts with as little expense and delay as would be consistent with the interests of the creditors, and (2) to relieve the honest and unfortunate debtor from his debts and give him another opportunity in the industrial life of the community.[2] With the advent of consumer credit one of the primary purposes of the Act was not being met for in the great majority of bankruptcy cases (today almost 90%) there are virtually no assets for distribution to creditors.

The great depression of the 1930's found many non-business debtors in deep distress. Mostly they were insolvent in the bankruptcy sense and uniformly they were unable to pay their debts as they matured. Congress, recognizing the necessity of measures for their relief, in keeping with the changing order of things, took action through enactment of Chapter XIII, one of the many 1938 amendments of the Bankruptcy Act. Chapter XIII created a method by which a wage earner debtor may, under the protection and guidance of the Bankruptcy Court, pay his creditors in full in installments or effect a composition entailing payment of a percentage of his debts over a time, in each instance without becoming a bankrupt.

[1] Section 1001 et seq., Title 11, U.S.C.A.

[2] In re Munford, 255 Fed. 108 (1919); Kothe v. R. C. Taylor Trust, 280 U. S. 224 (1930); Local Loan Co. v. Hunt, 292 U.S. 234 (1934).

When Chapter XIII was first passed, it was limited to those whose income did not exceed $3,600. In 1950 the limit was rasied to $5,000. In 1959 all monetary restrictions were eliminated. Under the Chapter both secured and unsecured debts may be adjusted, excepting debts secured by liens on real property which are excluded by the terms of Section 606(1). Unsecured debts must be dealt with on equal terms. Secured debts may be dealt with severally. By virtue of Sections 621 and 622 a Chapter XIII petition may be filed in a pending bankruptcy proceeding, either before or after adjudication, or if no bankruptcy proceeding is pending, as an original petition.

Chapter XIII has worked, where it has been used. But its use has not been uniform or distributed in any discernibly logical pattern. Its greatest employment has been in the following 8 states in which the ratio of Chapter XIII cases to total bankruptcy filings over the perod 1957–1962 has been as follows: Missouri (12.4%), Iowa (24.3%), Georgia (29.2%), Maine (36.3%), Tennessee (43.1%), Kansas (53.9%), Arkansas (61%), and Alabama (86%). The remaining 42 states, in the ratio of Chapter XIII cases to straight bankruptcies, descend from 15% in Idaho to less than 1%. Although there were only 6 federal districts in the United States in which no Chapter XIII cases were filed in 1962, there were six districts wherein more than 1,000 such cases were filed, six additional districts with more than 500, and 18 districts with more than 100 Chapter XIII filings.

Although the use of Chapter XIII has varied widely it has been gradually increasing in popularity and to an accelerated degree in the last few years, as the following progression of figures shows for the filings in the years 1957 through 1962:

1957	11,549
1958	13,391
1959	12,993
1960	13,599
1961	19,723
1962	22,880
1963	24,329

This has been due in part to the endorsement of its use by the Judicial Conference of the United States and the promotional efforts of the Bankruptcy Division of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. A total of $6,344,660 was paid to creditors in Chapter XIII proceedings successfully completed in fiscal year 1962. During the last ten years (1953 thru 1962) a total of $37,824,436 has been paid to creditors in cases successfully concluded under Chapter XIII, of which amount $25,805,371 was paid during the years 1958 through 1962.

The use of Chapter XIII also has depended and will depend on personal factors, the disparate attitudes of those who actively favor the device; who dislike it; who have not familiarized themselves with it; and who choose to ignore it. Some of these are to be found in each of these groups: Creditors, especially of the merchant, finance-company and collection-agency classes to whom innumerable relatively small debts are due; employers, especially those who are affected and usually annoyed or enraged by garnishments and collection methods used to obtain payments from their employees; the referees in bankruptcy, upon whom fall the burden of supervising the use of Chapter XIII; debtors' attorneys, who must advise debtors as to the relief they should seek; and, of course, the debtors, the persons whose inability to pay lies at the root of the problem.

There is no reason whatever why Chapter XIII should not be widely used and its use welcomed by all in the groups mentioned and the economy as a whole be thereby benefited. In the areas in which the use of Chapter XIII is widespread, the creditors are getting nearly 100% of their accounts; whereas in straight bankruptcy proceedings throughout the whole country less than 10% of the cases produce anything at all for the creditors, and even in those cases only small dividends are paid. Certainly the creditor class ought to want to promote the use of Chapter XIII. Employers ought to be for it, for its use definitely stimulates the morale of their employees and their ability to concentrate on their employment; it protects employers from the burdens of garnishments and collection calls without the necessity of their employees resorting to the extreme and desperate straight bankruptcy proceedings, and thus is beneficial to the whole community; and indirectly in the overall cases in the community it also results in employers being able to collect from their debtors. The referees ought to be for it for it is their duty to carry out the spirit and purpose of the Act and to promote the public good; and they are or should be keenly aware of the tremendous financial losses straight bankruptcy is causing and of the lowering of the moral tone which wholesale bankruptcy is producing; and they ought to remember that the Judicial Conference of the United States has called upon them to urge the use of Chapter XIII in all feasible cases. And the debtors ought to be for it because it enables them to pay their debts, relieve themselves from collection procedures and pressures, discharge both their legal and moral obligations and hold their heads high, and avoid the stigma of bankruptcy.

On initial consideration some attorneys have wondered why they should recommend Chapter XIII to a debtor when he may be relieved of all his debts without payment by petitioning for straight bankruptcy. Fundamentally the question is, what is in the best interest of the debtor-client. If, with a reasonable effort, the debtor is able to pay his debts out of future earnings, he should be advised that in the event of straight bankruptcy he may be faced with the following problems: (1) Some obligations may not be dischargeable in straight bankruptcy and so despite the proceedings the bankrupt may be surprised by being faced with future legal action on debts that he thought would be wiped out by bankruptcy. (2) He will no longer be able to obtain credit from some banks, merchants, finance companies and other credit grantors. His credit on major obligations is likely to be determined by the amount of real security that he can thereafter offer. Many applications for credit ask "have you ever been a bankrupt". A debtor under Chapter XIII is not a bankrupt and can answer "no". (3) Some types of future employment may not be open to him, or he may be prejudiced in obtaining certain jobs or positions. Many employers are concerned with an employee's ability to handle his personal affairs, including family finances. This is why employment applications often require statements as to indebtedness and whether the applicant has been a bankrupt. (4) The bankruptcy may be a continuing matter of embarrassment to the family and relatives for many look upon it as a failure to live up to moral obligations. (5) At least some neighbors, friends and fellow employees are likely to look upon the action as a blot on the character of the debtor. (6) There is likely to be a loss of some self-respect, for only a very callous person can approach straight bankruptcy without feeling that he has let someone down—and in some it creates the feeling of hiding in the closet.

It is conceded, of course, that some straight bankruptcies are inevitably necessary. Many wage earners are confronted with factual situations which preclude the use of Chapter XIII. But the experience of the districts in which Chapter XIII has been accepted proves that nearly all wage earners can and should file under that Chapter. If they had, the bankruptcy statistics for a recent year show, the creditors would have received payments aggregating $177,515,000.00, whereas in 1961 they actually received $5,150,000.00, a startling difference of $112,365,000.00. It is clear we are not dealing with trifling sums or trifling problems when we compare Chapter XIII and straight-bankruptcy results.

This appeal, therefore, is addressed to all creditors, employers, debtors, and debtors' attorneys. The people of the United States have nothing to lose and much to gain if there is more and more use of Chapter XIII in appropriate cases. And Chapter XIII will work if all understand the problems of the harassed debtor as he seeks to pursue the Chapter XIII route. The cooperation of every one involved will result, we are convinced, in making the use of Chapter XIII the rule and bankruptcy the exception.

Denver, April 10, 1963.

BENJAMIN C. HILLIARD, Jr.
WILLSON HURT

S. 3626—INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO AUTHORIZE THE ICC TO ESTABLISH THROUGH ROUTES AND JOINT RATES

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission, after investigation and hearing, to require the establishment of through routes and joint rates between motor common carriers of property, and between such carriers and common carriers by rail, express, and water, and for other purposes.

There is presently pending before the Commerce Committee, S. 2245, a bill introduced at the request of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has the same objective as my bill. However, my bill differs in that it contains certain standards or safeguards to prevent undue burdens upon the carriers who may be required by the ICC to establish through routes and joint rates. These standards are that the duty of the carriers to establish such routes and rates is limited to instances where there has been a reasonable request therefore; that the carrier with whom another carrier is required to interchange traffic is and remains financially responsible; and that the rate or charge fixed by the Commission is just and reasonable with reference to the facts and circumstances attending the service to which the rate or charge is applicable.

This bill gives the Commission the power it seeks in appropriate cases while at the same time it protects the rights of persons affected thereby.

This bill may not be the only or even the best solution, but it should be considered at the same time as hearings are held on S. 2245.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRANSTON). The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3626) to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission, after investigation and hearing, to require the establishment of through routes and joint rates between the motor common carriers of property, and between such carriers and common carriers by rail, express, and water, and for other purposes introduced by Mr. Moss, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 3628—INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO AUTHORIZE AN INCREASE IN THE RESOURCES OF THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND AND THE INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, by request, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to authorize an increase in the resources of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and for other purposes.

The bill has been requested by the Secretary of the Treasury and I am introducing it in order that there may be a specific bill to which Members of the Senate and the public may direct their attention and comments.

I reserve my right to support or oppose this bill, as well as any suggested amendments to it, when the matter is considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point, together with the letter from the Secretary dated March 17, 1970, to the Vice President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAVEL). The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill and letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3628) to authorize an increase in the resources of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. FULBRIGHT, by request, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3628

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Bretton Woods Agreements Act (22 U.S.C. 286–286k–2) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SEC. 22. (a) The United States Governor of the Fund is authorized to consent to an increase of $1,540,000,000 in the quota of the United States in the Fund.

"(b) In order to pay the increase in the United States quota in the Fund provided for in this section, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated $1,540,000,000 to remain available until expended.

"SEC. 23. (a) The United States Governor of the Bank is authorized—

"(1) to vote for an increase of $3,000,000,000 in the authorized capital stock of the Bank, and

"(2) if such increases become effective, to subscribe on behalf of the United States to 2,461 additional shares of the capital stock of the Bank.

"(b) In order to pay for the increase in the United States subscription to the Bank provided for in this section, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated $246,100,000 to remain available until expended."

SEC. 2. Section 6 of the Special Drawing Rights Act (22 U.S.C. 286q) is amended to read as follows:

"Unless Congress by law authorizes such action, neither the President nor any person or agency shall on behalf of the United States vote to allocate in each basic period Special Drawing Rights under article XXIV, sections 2 and 3, of the Articles of Agreement of the Fund so that allocations to the United States in that period exceed an amount equal to the United States quota in the Fund as authorized under the Bretton Woods Agreements Act of 1945, as amended."

The letter, presented by Mr. FULBRIGHT, is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, March 17, 1970.

Hon. SPIRO T. AGNEW,
President of the Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: There is transmitted herewith a draft of a proposed bill, "To authorize an increase in the resources of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and for other purposes," in order to allow the United States to participate with other members of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank in an increase in the resources of these two institutions.

The International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (the World Bank) are outstandingly successful international organizations. The Fund is the principal instrument of international monetary cooperation and has contributed immeasurably to the maintenance of a strong international monetary system that is so essential to a prosperous world economy. The World Bank conducts the joint efforts of over a hundred nations in the task of promoting economic development. As of December 31, 1969, the Bank had made 651 loans in 88 countries totaling over $13.4 billion. The Bank has achieved a high reputation for its expertise, for the quality of its judgment and for its concrete contribution to the economic growth of its less-developed members.

Proposals have now been made to increase their resources so that these institutions may continue to play an effective role in carrying out their objectives. The Fund has recently completed its five year review of the size of its members' quotas to determine whether it is able to provide adequate resources of conditional liquidity on the scale required by the growth of the world economy. In the light of this review and on the recommendation of the Executive Directors of the Fund, the Board of Governors on February 9, 1970, adopted a proposal for increases in total quotas from the current level of $21.3 billion. This $7.6 billion increase, shared in by members in varying degrees taking into account changes in their relative economic positions, will provide a sufficient growth in conditional liquidity to accommodate rapidly expanding world trade and payments.

An increase of 29.8 percent is proposed in the United States quota, raising it from $5,160 million to $6,700 million. Of this amount, 25 percent is equivalent to a general increase and 4.8 percent is equivalent to a selective increase for the United States, taking account of our economic growth during the past five years relative to that of other countires. A large number of other Fund members will also be receiving special increases. The relatively large special increases for Canada, France, Germany, Italy and Japan are particularly welcome since these countries have experienced rapid economic growth and are now in a better position to contribute proportionately more to the resources of the Fund.

Since the establishment of the Bank and the Fund, it has been a general principle that countries receiving special increases in their Fund quotas increase their subscription to the capital of the Bank by a corresponding amount. The basic reason for following the principle of parallel contributions is that a selective increase in a Fund member's quota is generally considered to be a reflection of an increase in that member's overall economic strength. It has been the judgment of both institutions that this overall increase in economic strength should permit a country to add to the resources of the Bank. While the United States has not previously had a selective increase in its Fund quota, and thus has not had an opportunity to accept a special increase in the Bank, the United States has strongly supported the policy of parallel contributions and this policy has resulted in a fairer sharing of contributions to the capital of the Bank.

It is anticipated that the countries which are eligible for Fund quota increases in excess of 25 percent will subscribe to additional Bank shares corresponding to the special increase they consent to in the Fund. If all member countries participate fully, the Bank, in accordance with the terms of the proposed resolution, will be authorized to accept special subscriptions from 75 members totaling $2,222.0 million. As a result of the increase in the United States Fund quota, an increased subscription of Bank capital is proposed for the United States in the amount of $246,100,000. If this increase is accepted it would bring the present United States Bank subscription of $6,350 million to a total of $6,596.1 million.

The Bank does not presently have sufficient authorized capital for the proposed special increases in subscriptions. In order to accommodate the increases in subscriptions which have been recommended by the Executive Directors of the Bank, and to have available sufficient unsubscribed capital (approximately $1.6 billion) for future individual increases and for subscriptions for new members, the Executive Directors have also submitted a resolution to the Board of Governors of the Bank which would increase the authorized capital stock of the Bank by $3 billion.

The enclosed draft bill would authorize the United States Governor of the Fund to consent to a $1,540 million increase in our Fund quota, and authorize the United States Governor of the Bank (1) to vote for the $3 billion increase in the capital stock of the Bank, and (2) subscribe to 2,461 additional shares of the Bank's capital. The proposed legislation would also authorize the appropriation of $1,540 million for payment of the United States increase in Fund quota and $246.1 million for payment of the Bank subscription. The Fund subscription is payable 25 percent in gold and the remainder in the form of a dollar letter of credit. Only 10 percent of the Bank subscription must be paid in, with the remaining 90 percent callable to meet obligations of the Bank.

The draft bill also provides authority for the United States to vote for allocations of Special Drawing Rights (SDRs) to the United States in any future basic period in an amount equal to the proposed new United States quota—$6,700 million. This follows the precedent of existing legislation which bases the limit on United States authority to vote for SDR allocations to the United States upon the size of the U.S. quota in the Fund. It was expected that this limit would have to be increased from time to time. The proposed new limit would set the new U.S. quota or any increased U.S. quota subsequently approved by Congress as the amount of SDR allocations to the United States which the United States Governor of the Fund could vote to create in any basic allocation period. A vote for any additional amount would require Congressional authorization.

The Bank and the Fund were created in 1945 at the initiative of the United States and since that time the United States has strongly supported their activities. Congress has indicated its continued support by authorizing increases in the United States subscriptions in the Fund and Bank in 1959 and an increase in the United States quota in the Fund in 1965. Two years ago Congress approved United States participation in the IMF's Special Drawing Rights facility.

The Fund and Bank have been of great benefit to the world economy and to the United States. The increase in resources proposed in the legislation transmitted herewith will make a significant contribution to their continued ability to carry out their assigned tasks.

Action by Congress is needed in particular so that the United States may increase its quota before the next allocation of Special Drawing Rights in January 1971. Otherwise, the United States will be allocated $130 million less SDRs than it would receive if its new quota were in effect. Moreover, as a practical matter, the increase in Bank subscriptions cannot go into effect until the United States votes on the proposed $3 billion increase in capital stock because a 75 percent weighted majority is required and the United States has almost 25 percent of the vote. Therefore, Congressional action is needed in order to allow other countries to subscribe and provide the Bank with needed resources.

For these reasons, I urge that the legislation to increase United States participation in the Fund and Bank receive prompt and favorable consideration from the Congress.

Enclosed is a report of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Policies which strongly endorses the proposed increases in quotas and subscriptions, including those for the United States, and sets forth the details of both the Fund and Bank subscription increases.

It will be appreciated if you would lay the proposed bill before the Senate. A similar proposed bill has been transmitted to the House of Representatives.

The Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that the proposed legislation is in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID M. KENNEDY.

S. 3629—INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO AMEND THE LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to amend the Longshoremen and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act and ask that it be appropriately referred. This bill implements the proposals made in this area by the administration which are encompassed in a message transmitted to the President of the Senate by the Secretary of Labor.

My remarks will be brief, as I intend to place a full explanation of this proposed legislation in the RECORD.

Most longshoremen today, Mr. President, average around $200 a week in wages, and an increase in the compensation payable to them for work-connected disabilities is long overdue.

Our Labor Committee has had this matter under consideration since 1967 but no legislation has been enacted. We all are aware of the inflationary aspects of our economy and the increases in the cost of living which have occurred since 1967.

These amendments do many things. Most importantly perhaps is the fact that they raise minimum compensation payments from $18 to $35 per week and maximum payments from $70 to $119 per week, while also raising the limit on total payments for total or partial disability from $24,000 to $40,800.

Other important changes which would result from these amendments, Mr. President, include increasing the death benefits payable, liberalizing the statute of limitations, eliminating the waiting period for payment of compensation, and expanding the definition of disfigurement. Another important amendment, particularly to me, as ranking minority member of our Education Subcommittee is the change in the definition of "eligible child" to include "student" in order to permit children who are surviving dependents to continue to receive benefits after reaching 18 years of age as long as they are in a student status.

I also point out that another change made by these amendments should encourage the employment of handicapped individuals as a result of clarifying in the law conditions under which an employer provides compensation for disability caused by subsequent injuries.

In my opinion, Mr. President, this is basically excellent legislation and legislation which the longshoremen of this Nation deserve to have enacted during this session of Congress.

However, I do reserve the right to offer any amendments to this bill which I feel can improve it even further. In this connection, I note that the bill provides that the costs of administration, including administration of the safety program, are to be financed by assessments upon carriers and self-insurers. The International Longshoremen's Association and the International Longshoremen and Warehousemen's Union and the industry all opposed a similar provision during the last Congress, and I can see no valid reason at the present time for changing the historical practice of having these expenses paid by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill, together with an explanatory statement and a section-by-section analysis be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAVEL). The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill, statement, and analysis will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3629) to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act to improve its benefits, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. PROUTY, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3629

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 1. (a) Section 2(4) of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act (44 Stat. 1424, as amended), is amended to read as follows:

"(4) The term 'employer' means an employer any of whose employees are employed in maritime employment, in whole or in part, upon the navigable waters of the United States (including any drydock), and includes any vessel as defined herein."

(b) Section 2 of such Act is amended by renumbering paragraph (19) as (20), and adding a new paragraph (19) to read as follows:

"(19) The term 'vessel' means any vessel upon which or in connection with which any person entitled to benefits under this Act suffers injury or death arising out of or in the course of his employment, and said vessel's owner, owner pro hac vice, agent, operator, charterer or bare boat charterer, master, officer or crew member."

LIABILITY FOR COMPENSATION

SEC. 2. Section 4(a) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"Every employer shall be liable for and shall secure the payment to his employees of the compensation payable under sections 7, 8, and 9 of this Act: Except, That a vessel shall be liable for and shall secure the payment of compensation only if another employer of the employee entitled to benefits hereunder does not secure the payment of such compensation. Where one or another employer, as defined herein, has secured compensation, such compensation shall be the exclusive remedy against any employer. In the case of an employer who is a subcontractor, the contractor shall be liable for and shall secure the payment of such compensation to employees of the subcontractor unless the subcontractor has secured such payment."

TIME FOR COMMENCEMENT OF COMPENSATION

SEC. 3. Section 6(a) of such Act is amended by striking "more than twenty-eight days" and substituting "more than twenty-one days."

INCREASES IN MAXIMUM AND MINIMUM LIMITS OF DISABILITY COMPENSATION AND ALLOWANCE

SEC. 4. (a) Section 6(b) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"Compensation for disability, except as provided in section 14 hereof, shall not exceed $119 a week and compensation for total disability shall not be less than $35 per week: Provided, however, That if the employee's average weekly wages, as computed under section 10, are less than $35 per week, he shall receive as compensation for total disability his average weekly wages."

(b) Section 14(m) of such Act, except as provided in section 14 hereof, is amended by striking "$24,000" and substituting "$40,800."

DISFIGUREMENTS

SEC. 5. Section 8(c) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(20) Disfigurement: Proper and equitable compensation not to exceed $3,500, shall be awarded for serious disfigurement: (1) of the face, head, or neck; or (2) of other areas normally exposed while employed and which do handicap the employee in securing or maintaining employment."

INJURY FOLLOWING PREVIOUS IMPAIRMENT

SEC. 6 (a) Section 8(f)(1) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(f) Injury increasing disability: If an employee receives an injury which of itself would cause only permanent partial disability, but which combined with a previous disability does in fact cause permanent total disability or death, in addition to compensation for temporary total or temporary partial disability or both, the employer shall:

"(A) if the injury results in a disability which would entitle the employee to compensation for scheduled injuries under subdivision (c)(1) through (20) of this section, provide compensation as prescribed therein or for 104 weeks whichever is greater, or

"(B) if the injury results in a disability which would entitle the employee to compensation under subdivision (c)(21) of this section or death, provide compensation for 104 weeks only. After cessation of the payments for the period of weeks provided for herein, the employee or his survivor entitled to benefits shall be paid the remainder of the compensation that would be due for permanent total disability or for death out of the special fund established in Section 44."

(b) Section 8(f) of such Act is further amended by striking paragraph (2).

STUDENT BENEFITS

SEC. 7. (a) Section 2 of such Act is further amended as follows:

(1) In paragraph (14) insert "(1)" in the fourth sentence between "are" and "under"; delete the period after "disability" at the end of the sentence; and add ", or (2) are students as defined in paragraph (21) of this section."

(2) Add a new paragraph (21) to read as follows:

"(21) The term 'student' means a person regularly pursuing a full-time course of study or training at an institution which is—

"(A) a school or college or university operated or directly supported by the United States, or by any State or local government or political subdivision thereof, or

"(B) a school or college or university which has been accredited by a State or by a State-recognized or nationally recognized accrediting agency or body, or

"(C) a school or college or university not so accredited but whose credits are accepted, or transfer, by not less than three institutions which are so accredited, for credit on the same basis as if transferred from an institution so accredited, or

"(D) an additional type of educational or training institution as defined by the Secretary, but not after he reaches the age of twenty-three or has completed four years of education beyond the high school level, except that, where his twenty-third birthday occurs during a semester or other enrollment period, he shall continue to be considered a student until the end of such semester or other enrollment period. A child shall not be deemed to have ceased to be a student during any interim between school years if the interim does not exceed five months and if he shows to the satisfaction of the deputy commissioner that he has a bona fide intention of continuing to pursue a full-time course of education or training during the semester or other enrollment period immediately following the interim or during peiods of reasonable duration which, in the judgment of the deputy commissioner, he is prevented by factors beyond his control from pursuing his education. A child shall not be deemed to be a student under this Act during a period of service in the Armed Forces of the United States or while receiving educational or training benefits under any other program authorized by the Congress of the United States."

(b) Section 8(d) of such Act is amended by striking the words "under the age of eighteen years" in paragraphs (1) and (4) thereof.

INCREASE IN DEATH BENEFITS

SEC. 8. (a) Sections 9 (b) and (c) of such Act are amended by striking "35" wherever it appears, and substituting "45".

(b) Section 9(d) of such Act is amended by striking out "15" and substituting "20".

(c) Section 9(e) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"In computing death benefits, except as provided in section 14 hereof, the average weekly wages of the deceased shall be considered to have been not more than $178.50, nor less than $52.50, but the total weekly compensation shall not exceed the weekly wages of the deceased."

(d) Section 9(g) of such Act is amended by striking the comma after "may" and the words "at his option or upon the application of the insurance carrier shall" and "one-half of".

DEFENSE BASE ACT DEATH BENEFITS TO ALIEN AND NONNATIONAL SURVIVORS

SEC. 9. Section 2(b) of the Defense Base Act (55 Stat. 622), as amended, is amended by striking the comma after "may" and the words "at his option or upon the application of the insurance carrier shall" and "one-half of".

TIME FOR NOTICE AND CLAIMS

SEC. 10. (a) Section 12(a) of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Notice of an injury or death in respect of which compensation is payable under this Act shall be given within sixty days after the date fo such injury or death, or sixty days after the employee or beneficiary is aware or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should have been aware of a relationship between the injury or death and the employment. Such notice shall be given (1) to the deputy commissioner in the compensation district in which the injury occurred and (2) to the employer."

(b) Section 13(a) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the right to compensation for disability or death under this Act shall be barred unless a claim therefor is filed within one year after the injury or death. If payment of compensation has been made without an award on account of such injury or death a claim may be filed within one year after the date of the last payment. Such claim shall be filed with the deputy commissioner in the compensation district in which such injury or such death occurred. The time for filing a claim shall not begin to run until the employee or beneficiary is aware, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence should have been aware, of the relationship between the injury or death and the employment."

SPECIAL FUND

SEC. 11. (a) Section 8(d) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"Any compensation to which any claimant would be entitled under subdivision (c) excepting subdivision (c–21) upon his death if there is no surviving wife, dependent husband, or child, shall be payable into the special fund established under Section 44(a) of this Act. Where there are survivors if death arises from causes other than the injury such compensation shall be payable to or for the benefit of the persons following:"

(b) Section 44(c)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "$1,000" and substtiuting "$20,000".

ADMINISTRATION EXPENSES

SEC. 12. Section 45 of such Act is amended by adding the following new subsections:

"(c) At the end of each fiscal year the Secretary shall determine the cost of the administration of this Act, including the cost of administering section 41. The cost of administration shall include any expenses to be insured or which will accrue during such fiscal year.

"(d) The total cost so determined shall be prorated among the carriers and self-insurers authorized to insure under section 32 of this Act. The assessment basis in respect to an insurance carrier shall be the gross premiums collected by the carrier for risks covered by this Act during the preceding fiscal year. The assessment basis in respect to a self-insurer shall be the amount of premium, as determined by the Secretary, which such self-insurer would have had to pay during the fiscal year if he had accrued his compensation liability under this Act by insurance, such premium to be determined without regard to merit or experience rating.

"(e) The Secretary shall assess each carrier and self-insurer for its pro rata share of the total amount of the administration costs of this Act in the fiscal year as determined under this section, and shall give written notice by certified or registered mail to each carrier or self-insurer of the assessment against it.

(f) Each assessment shall be paid upon receipt of notice provided for in subsection (e) within such time as the Secretary shall prescribe in regulations made under this section.

"(g) All assessments under this section, when collected, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as a separate fund. There is hereby authorized to be made available for expenditure from the fund such amounts as the Congress may deem appropriate for the necessary expenses of the Secretary of Labor for the performance of his functions under the Act.

"(h) The Secretary shall have authority to make such regulations as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section, including, but not limited to, provisions for the making and preservation of appropriate records, the inspection of such records, and the submission by carriers and self-insurers of reports prescribed by the Secretary.

"(i) In the event of failure by any carrier or self-insurer to pay the assessments referred to in subsection (g) of this section, to make and preserve records in the form and manner required by the Secretary, or to file a report in the form and manner required by him, or a denial of the right of the Secretary to inspect records required by regulations issued under this section, the Secretary may suspend or revoke the authorization of a carrier to insure compensation or a self-insurer to act as a self-insurer under this Act.

"(j) The provisions of this section shall apply to extensions of this Act in—

"(1) the Defense Base Act, as amended, approved August 16, 1941 (55 Stat. 622);

"(2) section 4(c) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, approved August 7, 1953 (67 Stat. 463);

"(3) section 2 of the Act of June 19, 1952, as amended, entitled 'An Act to confirm the status of certain civilian employees of nonappropriated fund instrumentalities under the Armed Forces with respect to laws administered by the Civil Service Commission, and for other purposes' (66 Stat. 139); and such extensions as may be made from time to time to provide compensation for disability or death resulting from injury occurring to persons engaged in private employment, other than extensions in which it is provided that liability for such compensation will be assumed by the United States Government or its instrumentalities. The Secretary shall treat the administration of extensions to which this section applies as a part of the administration of this Act in computing assessments due."

APPROPRIATION

SEC. 13. Section 46 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(a) There is authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1970, sums necessary for administration of the Act pending receipt of assessments as authorized under section 45 hereof.

"(b) There are authorized to be appropriated in succeeding years sums which may be necessary to administer this Act including sums required whenever sufficient assessments are not collected and made available to the Secretary of Labor as provided by this Act.

"(c) There are also authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the current fiscal year and for succeeding fiscal years to be deposited in the special fund established under section 44 of this Act, supplementary funds as may be necessary to meet the obligations incurred under the authority of that section."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT

SEC. 14. Section 1 of the Act of May 17, 1928, as amended (45 Stat. 600), extending the Longshoremen's and Harbor Worker's Compensation Act to the District of Columbia, amended to read as follows:

"(a) The provisions of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Worker's Compensation Act and all amendments thereto, except as indicated in subsections (b), (c) and (d) hereof, shall apply in respect to the injury or death of an employee of an employer carrying on any employment in the District of Columbia, irrespective of the place where the injury or death occurs, except that in applying such provisions the term 'employer' shall be held to mean every person carrying out any employment in the District of Columbia, and the term 'employee' shall be held to mean every employee of any such person.

"(b) Compensation for disability and for death benefits in the District of Columbia shall not exceed $85 a week.

"(c) The total money allowance payable to an employee in the District of Columbia under section 14(m) of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act shall in no event exceed the aggregate of $29,160.

"(d) In computing death benefits in the District of Columbia the average weekly wages of the deceased shall be considered to have been no more than $127.50."

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

SEC. 15. Section 3(a)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out the word "nor" and substituting the word "or".

SEC. 16. Section 47 of such Act is repealed and sections 48, 49, and 50 are renumbered, 47, 48, and 49 respectively.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 17. (a) The amendments made by sections 1 and 2 shall become effective thirty days after enactment.

(b) The amendments made by sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 14 shall become effective six (6) months after the date of enactment and said amendments shall relate only to injuries and deaths occurring after the effective date.

(c) The amendments made by section 12 shall become effective July 1, 1970.

(d) The amendments made by section 13 shall become effective on the date of enactment.

The statement and analysis, presented by Mr. PROUTY, are as follows:

STATEMENT IN EXPLANATION OF A BILL TO AMEND THE LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT

INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this bill is to improve the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act by increasing benefits, liberalizing certain provisions of the Act, and removing the dual liability of stevedore and ship repair contractors for employment injuries to employees covered by the Act. At the present time, these employers are liable for compensation required by the Act and may also be liable for reimbursement to shipowners of amounts paid in damages by the shipowners to the same employees for the same injuries.

A comparatively small number of employees now recover substantial damages for their employment injuries from shipowners which must be ultimately paid by the Longshore Act employer, while the benefits under the Act, which the great majority of employees depend on for income when disabled are inadequate and out of date. The proposal combines provisions to break the circular liability chain and significantly improve benefits.

CIRCULAR LIABILITY CHAIN—LONGSHOREMEN VERSUS SHIPOWNERS VERSUS STEVEDORES

The initial point for consideration in the present circular liability chain which exists with respect to the Longshore Act is that the Act explicitly states that the liability of the employer for damages for injury or death resulting from employment of employees covered by it shall be exclusive.

The Longshore Act covers approximately 266,000 longshoremen and harbor workers. Of this number, 14,464 received workmen's compensation at some time during fiscal year 1968. In that same fiscal year, 1,320 cases were filed by Longshore Act employees in the U.S. district courts against third-party shipowners for damages for employment injuries.

Beginning in 1946 the courts established the principle that a shipowner owes an absolute warranty for seaworthiness to Longshore Act employees. This warranty has no relation to negligence and, under the decisions, makes a shipowner a virtual insurer for any employment injury which befalls a longshoreman, ship repairman or harbor worker aboard ship.

Under existing principles also formulated by the courts and first stated in 1955, the Longshore Act employer is liable to reimburse the shipowner for recoveries by Longshore Act employees for injuries for which the employer stands primarily liable under the Act. Since election between receiving compensation from an employer and bringing suits against a shipowner for the same injury is not required, the same employees are involved in an unknown number of both claim and litigation cases. Recoveries made by employees against shipowners, however, are offset against compensation payments under the Act. The courts in 1963 began applying the new principle that a shipowner employing longshoremen directly to unload his ship (acting as his own stevedore), is subject to damage suits by the longshoremen for employment injury, despite the fact that the shipowner is an employer under the Longshore Act.

The provisions of this bill relating to the circular and enhanced liability of Longshore Act employers are intended to reinstate the exclusive liability principle of the Act.

INCREASE OF PRESENT MAXIMUM AND MINIMUM COMPENSATION

The existing minimum disability compensation payment of $18 weekly was established in 1956 and the existing maximum payment of $70 weekly was established in 1961. In the interim since 1961 to June 1969, the average weekly wage in ship and boat building and repair has increased by 35%.

We estimate that in 1970 most longshoremen will be earning nearly $200 a week. The base rate under union contracts will be $4.60 an hour in all ports except San Francisco and the Great Lakes. The base rate in San Francisco will average $4.81 an hour for a standard 8 hour day (including a guarantee of 2 hours overtime daily). In the Great Lakes the basic rate will be $4.02 an hour, increasing to $4.71 an hour in 1971. The 1970 rates for the West Coast become effective in June 1970, for the East and Gulf Coasts in October 1970, and April for the Great Lakes.

In 1961, when the present $70 weekly maximum was put into effect, the average earnings of a longshoreman working a 40 hour week, handling general cargo, were $129.60. In 1970, the comparable figure will be $192.60 an increase of 49%. The weekly earnings in 1970, again assuming a 40-hour week and using the general cargo rate, will be $184.00 in most East and Gulf Coast ports and $160.80 on the Great Lakes. These earnings represent increases over 1961 of more than 50%. It should be noted, however, that these calculations are made on basic general cargo rates. Most workers will earn considerably more because of penalty cargo rate paid for handling certain types of cargo and for different working conditions.

In view of the above facts, an increase in the maximum compensation under the Longshore Act of $119 a week is recommended.

Since wages in the District of Columbia, to which the Longshore Act applies, average approximately $132 a week, a lower maximum of $85 is set for employment injuries in that jurisdiction and a proportionate overall maximum increase for temporary total disability to $29,160.

The minimum compensation would also be increased from $18 to $35 weekly to provide a totally disabled employee with sufficient funds to meet the cost of minimum subsistence. Employees whose wages do not exceed the new minimum are entitled to their entire wages free of the Act's percentage limitation otherwise applicable. With today's living costs it is evident that employees making less than $35 weekly would not be able to subsist on 66⅔ percent of their earnings.

The Act presently provides that temporary total disability benefits may not exceed $24,000. An increase in this overall maximum proportionate to the increase in the weekly maximum is provided. The increase would be to $40,800 except in the District of Columbia.

INCREASE IN DEATH BENEFIT PERCENTAGES AND AUTHORIZATION OF STUDENT BENEFITS

The percentage of an employee's wage which may be drawn by a widow is increased from 35% to 45%, and of surviving grandchildren and sisters and brothers eligible for benefits, from 15% to 20%.

Further, surviving children in a student status, as defined by the bill, would be authorized to continue to receive benefits after reaching 18 years of age.

DISFIGUREMENT

The lump sum payment of $3,500 is extended to be paid for disfigurement of the neck, as well as of the face and head, and also of other normally exposed areas which would affect employability.

REDUCTION IN LENGTH OF DISABILITY BEFORE ELIMINATION OF WAITING PERIOD AND EXTENSION NOTICE AND CLAIM TIME

Since 1956 the Act has provided that there must be a three-day waiting period unless the disability continues for at least 28 days. The bill reduces the period to 21 days, after which compensation is payable for the waiting period. This improvement is in line with modern workmen's compensation law trends.

The Act now provides that notice of injury or death shall be given within 30 days and claim for compensation or death shall be filed within one year after the injury or death. These time limits do not take into consideration the later development of latent disability from a relatively minor accident, or disease causally related to the employment. The time for giving notice of injury and filing claim for compensation or death is, therefore, extended to 60 days after the employee or the beneficiary is aware, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should have been aware, of a relationship between the disabling conditions or the death and the employment.

SPECIAL FUNDS

Two special funds are established under the Act. One, is for employees covered by the Longshore Act and its extensions; and the other, for workers in the District of Columbia. The funds provide continuing compensation for permanently disabled workers, or their survivors, when so-called second injuries are suffered by employees with existing physical impairments. The special fund payments begin when payments attributable to the second injury have been completed by the employer or insurance carrier who is liable.

The funds also provide compensation payments when an employer becomes insolvent, and for expenses of vocational rehabilitation when necessary in certain cases, including a living allowance not to exceed $25 a week.

Financing of the funds is provided by fines and penalties collected under the Act, interest, and sums of $1,000 paid into the fund in nonsurvivor death cases. The Longshore Act fund is now in a precarious state. Annual disbursements are in excess of annual income and the outstanding liabilities against the fund exceed the amounts it contains.

In order to finance the Longshore special funds adequately, the bill requires that employers or insurance carriers in cases where an employee suffering employment injury dies and there is no eligible beneficiary pay into the funds any amounts remaining unpaid under a schedule award. It also increases from $1,000 to $20,000 the amount which must be contributed by employers or carriers into the funds in all cases where an employee dies from an employment injury and there is no eligible beneficiary. At present compensation levels, the average compensation paid in fatal cases under the Longshore Act is $35,000. The contribution of $20,000, therefore, where the potential liability is so much greater appears reasonable.

Provision is made also for an appropriation when necessary to supplement the special fund.

ADMINISTRATION EXPENSES

In line with the policy of defraying the cost of Government programs related to particular industries by charges on the industries, the bill also authorizes financing of the cost of the Act's administration, including the safety program conducted pursuant to section 41, by a pro rata assessment made by the Secretary upon carriers and self-insurers upon the basis of gross premiums paid to the carriers or the amounts self-insurers would have paid if they purchased insurance. Procedures for making the assessment are provided. Authorization is made for appropriation from Congress until the assessments are collected and when funds are not otherwise available.

In view of the length of time since improvements have been made in the compensation program under the Longshore Act early action is sought to provide income maintenance for injured employees within its terms in keeping with wages and other current economic factors.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF BILL TO AMEND THE LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT

Section 1—Definitions—(a) Amends section 2(4) of the Act to extend the definition of "employer" to include "vessel."

(b) Amends section 2 of the Act by renumbering paragraph (20) and adding a new paragraph (19) to define "vessel."

Section 2—Liability for Compensation—Amends section 4 of the Act, requiring employers to secure compensation, to except vessels unless another employer of an employee entitled to benefits under the Longshore Act does not secure compensation. Provides further that when an employer, as defined under the Act, secures compensation, such compensation shall be the exclusive remedy against any employer.

Section 3—Waiting Period—Amends section 6(a) of the Act to permit payment of compensation without a waiting period when the disability exceeds 21 days. A three-day waiting period is now specified unless the disability exceeds 28 days.

Section 4 (a) and (b)—Maximum and Minimum—Amends section 6(b) of the Act to increase the maximum of $70 a week to $119 a week; the minimum from $18 to $35; and amends section 14(m) to increase the overall money limit for temporary and partial disability from $24,000 to $40,800.

Section 5—Disfigurement—Amends section 8(c)(20) of the Act to expand the meaning of compensable disfigurement to include, in addition to the face and head, disfigurement of neck, or of any other area normally exposed while employed which would handicap an employee in obtaining or holding employment.

Section 6—Injury following previous impairment—Amends section 8(f)(1) to clarify and make definite the conditions under which an employer provides compensation for disability caused by subsequent injuries and thus to encourage employment of handicapped persons.

Section 7—Student benefits—(a) Amends section 2(14) of the Act to add "student" to definition of eligible "child" and adds a new paragraph (21) to define "student" for the purpose of continuing benefits to certain surviving dependents while they are in school.

(b) Amends section 8(d) to allow surviving dependents to receive benefits beyond 18 years of age if in a student status.

Section 8—Death benefits—(a) Amends section 9 (b) and (c) of the Act to increase the death benefits to the surviving wife or dependent husband from 35 to 45 percent of the deceased employee's average wages.

(b) Amends section 9(d) to increase the death benefit for dependent grandchildren, brothers or sisters from 15 to 20 percent of such average wages.

(d) Amends section 9(e) to increase the maximum weekly wages for computation of death benefits from $105 to $178.50 and increases the minimum from $27 to $52.50.

(d) Amends section 9(g), which provides for the commutation of compensation benefits to certain aliens who are not residents of the United States or Canada. The section now requires the Secretary, upon application of an insurance company, to commute future installments of compensation to such aliens by paying one-half the commuted amount of future compensation. The amendment removes the requirement for commutation payments and permits the Secretary to commute in his discretion.

Section 9—Defense Base Act—Benefits to Alien Survivors—The Defense Base Act extends the benefits of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act to employees of contractors at United States bases or on public works where such contracts are performed outside the continental United States. Section 2(b) of that Act respecting compensation payments for non-resident aliens is similar to section 9(g) of the Longshoremen's Act. This bill, therefore, amends section 2(b) of the Defense Base Act to conform to amendment to Longshore Act described in preceding section.

Section 10—Time for Notice and Claim—Amends section 12(a) to extend the time for giving notice of injury or death to the deputy commissioner and to the employer, from 30 days after the injury or death to 60 days after the employee or the beneficiary is aware or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should have been aware of a relationship between the injury or death and the employment.

(b) Amends section 13(a) to defer the time for filing a claim for compensation for injury or death in latent disability cases. The Act now provides that a claim must be filed within one year after the injury or death, or if payment of compensation has been made without an award a claim may be filed within one year after the date of the last payment. The amendment provides that the time for filing claim shall not begin to run until the employee or beneficiary is aware, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence should have been aware of the relationship between the injury or death and the employment.

Section 11—Special Fund—(a) Amends section 8(d) by providing for payment into the special fund, described in section 44(a) of the Act, of any disability compensation due to an employee under a scheduled award when he has no survivors.

(b) Amends section 44(c)(1) by substituting $20,000 for the $1,000 now required to be paid into the special fund by the employer or insurance carrier upon the death of an employee resulting from employment injury when there are no survivors.

Section 12—Administration Expenses—Amends section 45(a) to add new subsections (c) through (1) providing for the Secretary at the end of each fiscal year to assess carriers and self-insurers for cost of administration for next fiscal year.

Section 13—Appropriation—Amends section 46, (a) to authorize appropriation of amounts necessary for administration of Act in fiscal year beginning July 1, 1970, pending receipt of assessments authorized by section 45, (b) authorizes appropriations for administration when sufficient assessments are not collected, and (c) authorizes supplementary funds as necessary to meet obligations of special fund under section 44 of the Act.

Section 14—D.C. Workmen's Compensation Act—(a), (b) and (c)—Provides that the maximum compensation rate in the District of Columbia under extension of the Longshore Act in 45 Stat. 600, will be $85 a week and the overall maximum in temporary total disability cases will be $29,160.

(d) Provides the basis for computing death benefits shall be considered to be no more than $127.50.

Section 15—Technical Amendment—Makes grammatical change of substituting "or" for "nor" in Section 3(a)(1) of the Act.

Section 16—Repeals sections 47 "Availability of Appropriations." No longer needed.

Section 17—Effective Date—Provides for effective dates for different sections and that higher benefits and other related provisions shall apply only to injuries and deaths therefrom sustained after the effective date indicated.

S. 3631—INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO ESTABLISH A NATIONAL MARINE MINERAL RESOURCES TRUST

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to establish a national marine resources trust to halt further oil drilling that is destroying the ocean environment by massive oil spills.

All remaining ocean oil and other mineral deposits under Federal jurisdiction would be held in the national trust until needed and until we can avoid environmental damage from their extraction.

The present lack of knowledge about oil in the sea makes it an environmental folly to go on drilling new ocean wells until we are better prepared to cope with the dangers.

Already, untold thousands of birds have been killed, beaches blackened, and permanent threats posed to marine life because of oil disasters from Santa Barbara to the recent spills off Florida, Massachusetts, and Nova Scotia.

Now, massive oil spills, larger even than the Santa Barbara catastrophe, has been spreading from unplugged offshore wells in the Gulf of Mexico.

Because of oil and other ocean pollution, scientists are now predicting the end of all productive life in the sea in 50 years or much less. In effect, we are slamming the door on the last chance for a livable world.

Last year, the President's Panel on Oil Spills confirmed that we do not have the technology to contain the oil from a major ocean accident. Yet by 1980, in a shocking invitation for trouble, we will be drilling 3,000 to 5,000 ocean oil wells worldwide each year.

Under the bill I am introducing today, untapped ocean oil and other minerals in the Federal domain would be held in the national trust until the Secretary of the Interior, with the concurrence of the President's Council on Environmental Quality, determines that—

First, there are technological and other means adequate to prevent damage to the marine environment resulting from exploration, extraction and transportation of marine mineral resources;

Second, ecologically sensitive areas of the marine environment, such as the Santa Barbara Channel, will be identified and permanently preserved;

Third, there is a national requirement for these resources which cannot be satisfied, consistent with the requirements of national security, by any other practicable means.

Further, the legislation would provide for any areas eventually released from the national trust after meeting the above conditions that tough environmental management plans would have to be set before the areas could be leased for oil or any other purpose.

Under this section of the bill, the Secretary of the Interior, with the aid of a scientific commission, would take an inventory of the marine environment and project all our ocean needs, including recreation and fishing, 50 years into the future.

Before oil leases could be granted, public hearings would be held, and the management plans would have to be concurred in by the President's Council on Environmental Quality. Further, and importantly, leases could not be granted unless there was convincing evidence that the mineral extraction would not harm the environment.

These broad-gaged provisions would give a major new thrust environmental protection thrust to the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, which they would amend. For the first time, we would have an environmental management policy for our fragile ocean resources that would protect the sea from the consequences of our escalating marine activities. The sea is a vital last frontier which we can no longer afford to treat as if it were created for our limitless plunder.

Numerous Federal and scientific reports which I and my staff have consulted in preparing this legislation including reports by the President's Panel on Oil Spills; the Commission on Marine Science, Engineering and Resources; the National Council on Marine Resources and Engineering Development and the National Academy of Sciences, all give ample evidence of the inadequacies of our present ocean policies and the need to act now to establish effective new approaches.

I ask unanimous consent, that the bill I have introduced today be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BELLMON). The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3631) to amend the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, to establish a national marine mineral resources trust, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. NELSON, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3631

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (67 Stat. 462; 43 U.S.C. 1331–1343) is amended by the addition of the following new sections to title 43 of the United States Code:

"SEC. 1344. (a) There is established in the Department of the Interior an Advisory Committee on the Marine Environment, appointed by the Secretary of the Interior with the concurrence of the Council on Environmental Quality, comprised of eleven members who shall be qualified by training and experience to advise the Secretary of the Interior in the management and protection of the marine environment of the United States. The disciplines represented by the members of the Committee shall include, among others, marine biology and ecology, physical or chemical oceanography, marine geology, resource economics, and marine resources law. The Committee shall consult with and advise the Secretary in the discharge of his responsibilities under section 1345 and in the development of the inventories and analyses required by subsections (c) and (d) of section 1347, and shall analyze and review management plans under subsection (e) of section 1347 and the implementation and enforcement of such plans. The Committee shall conduct annual or more frequent studies of the status and quality of the Secretary's efforts undertaken to implement section 1345, investigations of the quality and the effectiveness of management plans developed under section 1348, including investigations of the effectiveness of public participation in the development of such plans, reviews of the Secretary's actions in the implementation and enforcement of management plans, and generally shall make such investigations, studies, and recommendations at such times as are required for the successful implementation and administration of the program under sections 1344–1349. The Committee shall transmit the reports of its investigations, studies, and recommendations to the Secretary and the Council on Environmental Quality, and shall make such reports available to the public. The Committee also shall transmit to the Secretary and the Chairman of the Council and make publicly available a report annually on the progress achieved during the preceding year in protecting and enhancing the marine environment together with its recommedations.

"(b) No officer or employee of the United States or of any State shall be appointed to membership on the Committee. The Committee shall be served by a permanent professional staff comprised of persons who are qualified by training and experience in the disciplines relevant to the management and protection of marine environment.

"(c) Members of the Committee shall each receive $100 per diem when engaged in the actual performance of duties of the Committee and reimbursement of travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized in section 5 of the Administrative Expenses Act of 1946, as amended (5 U.S.C. 73b–2), for persons employed intermittently.

"(d) The Committee shall appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as it deems advisable in accordance with the civil service laws and the Classification Act of 1949, as amended. In addition, the Committee may secure temporary and intermittent services to the same extent as it authorized for the departments by section 15 of the Administrative Expenses Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 810) but at rates not to exceed $100 per diem for individuals.

"(e) As used in sections 1344–1348, the term—

"(1) 'marine environment' means the air, the waters, and the submerged lands of the Outer Continental Shelf lying seaward of the boundaries of the coastal States of the United States, and all the resources and values of such air, water, and submerged lands, and

"(2) 'Secretary' means the Secretary of the Interior.

"SEC. 1345. (a) The Secretary, in regular consultation with the Advisory Committee on the Marine Environment and in cooperation with other Federal and State agencies shall conduct—

"(1) comprehensive programs for the continuing collection and analysis of data concerning the physical systems existing in the marine environment including, but not limited to, data on tides and wind and ocean currents and geological and topographical data, and develop and refine models of such physical systems which will adequately describe the operation of such systems and also provide reliable predictions of the effects of various activities conducted in the marine environment upon such systems;

"(2) comprehensive programs for the continuing collection and analysis of data concerning the plant and animal life found in the marine environment and data concerning the sensitivity of unique as well as representative species of such life to changes in the marine environment resulting from development or use of the marine environment;

"(3) comprehensive investigations of the ecological systems of the marine environment, and develop and refine models of both unique and representative ecological systems which will adequately describe such systems and also provide reliable predictions of the effects of various activities conducted in the marine environment upon such systems;

"(4) a continuing comprehensive analysis of the several activities presently being conducted in the marine environment or likely to be conducted there in the reasonably immediate future, and present any likely future conflicts among such uses with a view to developing an understanding of the basic purposes which those activities serve and to minimizing such conflicts through development of novel and alternative means of serving those purposes;

"(5) a program for the development of baseline data concerning the marine environment, and a comprehensive monitoring program for the marine environment designed to provide immediate notice of changes in such environment;

"(6) far-reaching, long-range studies which will yield forecasts and predictions concerning the activities which may be carried out in, and the uses which may be made of, the marine environment and its resources during the period ending fifty years from the date of each such study, including analyses of the characteristics of and means by which such activities and uses may be conducted, analyses of the likely impact of and constraints imposed by such activities and uses upon other uses of the marine environment, and the likely effects of such activities and uses upon the marine environment itself, predictions of the frequency and significance of future conflicts among uses of the marine environment and of the frequency and the magnitude of any damages to the marine environment which may result from such activities and uses, and recommendations concerning development of technology, management concepts, or other means of preventing or minimizing conflicts among uses of the marine environment and of preventing or minimizing adverse effects upon the marine environment;

"(7) studies necessary to the development of criteria and standards for the protective management of unique or unusually valuable types or species of plant and animal life, of types or species of plant and animal life which are particularly susceptible to damage or destruction from alteration of the marine environment, of areas of the marine environment which present special hazards of environmental damage or conflicts among uses, and of areas which exhibit unique or unusually valuable characteristics or values; and

"(8) continuing studies of the susceptibility of the marine environment and its resources to present any future beneficial uses for commercial and sport fisheries, production of fuel and other mineral resources, marine transportation, enjoyment of natural beauty and other nonexploitative recreational uses, scientific research, national defense, and other purposes.

"(b) The Secretary shall publish on a regular basis the reports and results of the studies and investigations and programs authorized by subsection (a) of this section.

"SEC. 1346. (a) The Secretary shall establish by regulation in the Department of the Interior an Inter-Agency Committee on Marine Resources Management to be comprised of one representative each of the Departments of Defense, State, Transportation, Health, Education, and Welfare, Housing and Urban Development, and Commerce, and the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, the Director of the National Science Foundation, and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. The Committee shall assist the Secretary in the development of management plans for the management and protection of the marine environment.

"(b) (i) Whenever the Secretary is advised by the Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality, the head of any department or agency of the United States or other organization named in subsection (a) of this section, or the Governor of any coastal State of the United States, that any present or proposed use or uses of the marine environment involves a potential risk of serious environmental damage or potential risk of serious conflict with present or likely future uses of the marine environment, and (ii) whenever any submerged lands of the outer continental shelf are proposed to be offered for leasing for oil and gas or sulfur or other minerals, or (iii) whenever it appears to the Secretary that such action is desirable, he shall immediately publish notice pursuant to subsection (e) of section 1347 of his intention to develop a management plan, and shall thereafter proceed with the development of a management plan, for the area identified as being susceptible of potential environmental damage, or within which risks of conflicts among uses may occur, or the area proposed to be offered for leasing, or the area which he judges should be the subject of a management plan. The oil, gas, sulfur, and all other mineral resources of the Outer Continental Shelf which are unleased on the date of enactment of these amendments are hereby designated as the National Marine Mineral Resources Trust and shall be held in an unleased status until the Secretary, with the concurrence of the Council on Environmental Quality, determines (i) that there are technological, managerial, and other means adequate to prevent damage to the marine environment resulting from exploration, extraction and transportation of marine mineral resources in accordance with these amendments, and (ii) that ecologically sensitive areas of the marine environment will be identified and permanently preserved in accordance with these amendments, and (iii) that there is a national requirement for these resources which cannot be satisfied, consistent with the requirements of national security, by any other practicable means. In no event shall any submerged lands of the Outer Continental Shelf be leased except in strict compliance with a management plan developed, approved, and implemented in accordance with the provisions of sections 1344–1349.

"SEC. 1347. (a) The development of management plans shall be preceded by public notice given in the manner prescribed by subsection (b) of this section and shall reflect the results of the inventories and studies required by subsection (c) of this section, the analyses specified in subsection (d) of this section, and information developed in the course of consultations and public hearings pursuant to subsection (e) of this section in the manner specified in section 1348.

"(b) The notice required by subsection (b) of section 1346 of the Secretary's intention to develop a management plan for an area shall be published in the Federal Register and in a newspaper of general circulation in the general vicinity of the area for which the management plan will be developed. The notice shall indicate that a management plan will be developed for the marine environment in the area described in the notice, indicate that uses of the area involved will be affected by adoption of the management plan, describe the area for which the management plan will be developed, describe the procedural steps by which the management plan will be developed, and state that an opportunity will be extended to all interested persons to express their views and recommendations with respect to development of the management plan.

"(c) As soon as practicable after publication of the notice of intention to develop a management plan for an area of the marine environment pursuant to subsection (b) of section 1346 the Secretary shall develop an inventory of the plant and animal life and non-living resources and intangible values of the area, studies of the physical and ecological factors and systems present in the area, and an inventory of present uses and forecasts of future uses of the area.

"(d) Concurrently with development of the inventories and studies conducted under subsection (c) of this section, the Secretary shall analyze the characteristics of the plant and animal life and nonliving resources and intangible values of the area, the physical and ecological factors and systems present in the area, and the characteristics and purposes of the present and future uses of the area with a view to developing a comprehensive, detailed model or models of the area which will adequately describe the systems existing in the area and their responses to the activities presently being conducted in the area and also provide reliable predictions of the longer range effects of present uses of the area and reliable predictions of the effects of future activities upon the systems and resources existing in the area. In analyzing the present and future uses of the area, the Secretary shall develop information on the frequency and seriousness of present conflicts among uses of the area and the effects of such conflicts on the marine environment, and projections of the frequency and seriousness of future conflicts among such uses, including estimates of the probable frequency of such conflicts, and the types and degrees of seriousness of potential damage to the marine environment resulting from such conflicts. The Secretary also shall include in his analysis under this subsection an investigation of available technological, managerial, or other means of preventing or reducing the adverse impact of activities conducted in the marine environment on the marine environment and on other uses of it and shall identify present and future needs for new or improved technological or other means for preventing or reducing the adverse effects of particular types of activities on the marine environment or on other uses of the marine environment.

"(e) In conducting the inventory under subsection (c) of this section and the analyses required by subsection (d) of this section, the Secretary shall consult with the Advisory Committee on the Marine Environment established by section 1344 and shall request all interested departments and agencies of the Federal Government to prepare and submit to him written reports concerning their interests in the present and future uses of the area for which a management plan is being developed for commercial and sport fisheries, production of fuel and other mineral resources, marine transportation, enjoyment of scenic beauty and other nonexploitative recreational purposes, scientific research, national defense, and other uses, together with their recommendations with respect to the final form, content, and operation of the management plan. In developing the inventory and analyses, the Secretary shall solicit the views and recommendations of the Governor of the coastal State or States in the vicinity of the area for which a management plan is to be developed and invite the views and recommendations of industry and other interested groups and may hold public hearings in the vicinity of such area for the purpose of obtaining the views and recommendations of other interested persons.

"(f) The reports of inventory and analyses conducted pursuant to subsections (c) and (d) of this section, the reports submitted by the interested departments and agencies of the Federal Government, the submissions by the Governors of coastal States and by industry and other interested groups, and the records of any public hearings held by the Secretary shall be included in the administrative record of the proceedings for the development of the management plan and shall be public documents which shall be made available upon request and payment therefor to any interested person.

"SEC. 1348. (a) After completion of the inventory and analyses under subsections (c) and (d) of section 1347 and receipt of the views and recommendations of the Governors of coastal States, interested industry and other groups, and other interested persons under subsection (e) of section 1347, the Secretary shall make comprehensive written findings of fact and written conclusions concerning the area of the marine environment which will be subject to the management plan and shall develop a comprehensive management plan for the area of the marine environment described in the notice issued pursuant to subsection (b) of section 1346 which shall preserve the quality of the marine environment at the highest practicable level and enhance the quality of the marine environment to the highest practicable level where damage to the marine environment already has taken place, prevent or minimize the adverse effects of present and future activities in the marine environment on such environment and its resources and values, and prevent or minimize conflicts among competing uses of the marine environment.

"(b) The management plan shall identify, describe the locations of, and afford appropriate protection for plant and animal life, ecological systems, and recreational and other values which are so unique or valuable or important that they should not be exposed to the risks associated with particular uses of the marine environment and describe any areas of the marine environment which present special hazards of environmental damage or conflicts among uses or which exhibit unique or unusually valuable characteristics or values.

"(c) The management plan shall be expressed in the form of public regulations which shall be consistent with international law and agreements and which will provide a mandatory guide for the use of the land and water areas covered by it. To the maximum degree permitted by international law and agreements, it shall include such prohibitions, constraints, and conditions upon the conduct by citizens of the United States and of foreign nations of specified activities within specific areas covered by it as are appropriate to the protection of the environmental features within such areas or any other areas in which the effects of such activities within the specified areas might be manifested or are necessary to prevent or minimize conflicts among uses of such areas.

"(d) Upon completion of the management plan for an area of the marine environment, the Secretary shall submit such plan to the Advisory Committee on the Marine Environment and to the Council on Environmental Quality. Upon request of any interested party and after not less than thirty days' notice, he shall hold one or more public hearings in the general vicinity of the area covered by the management plan at which all interested parties shall be given an opportunity to express their views with respect to any matter pertaining to the management plan.

"(e) After considering the views of the Advisory Committee and the Council on Environmental Quality, and after reviewing the record of any public hearing held pursuant to subsection (d) of this secton, the Secretary shall affirm or modify, as appropriate the written findings and conclusions made pursuant to subsection (a) of section 1348, and the management plan, if necessary, and submit it together with his written findings and conclusions to the Council on Environmental Quality for its concurrence.

"(f) Upon the concurrence of the Council on Environmental Quality, the Secretary shall adopt and order the implementation of the management plan and shall publish comprehensive regulations embodying the management plan in the manner specified in section 553 of title 5 of the United States Code. No management plan shall be adopted by the Secretary unless it has been concurred in by the Council on Environmental Quality.

"(g) In making his written findings of fact and conclusions pursuant to subsection (a) of section 1348 and in the development and adoption of management plans pursuant to this section, particular activities and uses shall not be permitted in specific areas covered by the management plan except upon the Secretary's findings, supported by clear and convincing evidence, that such activities and uses can be conducted in such areas without significant risks of environmental damage or conflicts among uses. In no event shall any management plan afford a lesser degree of protection to the marine environment than that degree of protection afforded by the laws and regulations of the coastal State or States to marine areas under State jurisdiction which are situated adjacent to or in the vicinity of the area covered by such management plan.

"SEC. 1349. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 1344–1348."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 184 AND SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 185—INTRODUCTION OF JOINT RESOLUTIONS TO BEGIN COMPREHENSIVE RESEARCH INTO TWO CURRENTLY UNECONOMICAL SOURCES OF ENERGY—DIRECT SOLAR RAYS AND TIDAL MOVEMENTS

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I am introducing today two joint resolutions related to our Nation's current battle against the degradation of our environment. One of the aspects of environmental pollution which is not visible, and yet which is equally as dangerous as the air and water pollution which we can see and smell, is the generation of heat by fuel-burning power sources. Thermal pollution is justifiably causing concern in many areas, particularly where nuclear powerplants are increasing the temperature of bays and rivers and thus endangering the microscopic marine life upon which we ultimately depend for oxygen and part of our food supply.

It is time now to begin comprehensive research into two currently uneconomical sources of energy—direct solar rays and tidal movements. Such research can put us in a position technologically to utilize these sources to supplement fuel-burning powerplants at a future date when increasing power consumption makes the construction of solar and tidal powerplants feasible.

My joint resolutions would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to conduct initial surveys of the existing information in the fields of solar power and tidal power and to report to Congress within 2 years on the potential for their ultimate use as supplemental power sources. The March issue of Ocean Industry magazine, in which there appears a discussion of an ocean-power concept based on hydraulic transmission of wave motion from the coastal floor to fluid motors on shore, demonstrates that there is existing knowledge and experience in these fields which should be centralized and evaluated. Our Government should avail itself of existing knowledge on tidal and solar energy as part of its function as overseer of environmental quality. These two joint resolutions would provide this information for review by Congress within a relatively short time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). The joint resolutions will be received and appropriately referred.

The joint resolutions, introduced by Mr. TOWER, were received, read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

S.J. Res. 184. A joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a study of the solar rays within a view to determining the potential of such rays as an alternative source of electrical energy; and

S.J. Res. 185. A joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a study of the tides of oceans and other bodies of water with a view to determining the potential of such tides as an alternative source of electrical energy.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILLS

S. 2561

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT), I ask unanimous consent that, at the next printing, the name of the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) be added as a cosponsor of S. 2561, to incorporate Pop Warner Little Scholars, Inc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES). Without objection, it is so ordered.

S. 3072

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), I am pleased to ask unanimous consent that an additional five cosponsors be added to a bill he introduced in October of last year. The bill is the Federal Low-Emission Vehicle Procurement Act of 1969 (S. 3072) which requires the Federal Government to direct its purchasing power toward cars, trucks, and buses which produce little or no pollution. The additional cosponsors are the junior Senator from New York (Mr. GOODELL), the senior Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the junior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), the junior Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS), and the Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BELLMON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

S. 3466 THROUGH S. 3472

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT), I ask unanimous consent that at the next printing, the name of the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) be added as a cosponsor of S. 3466 through S. 3472, inclusive, the environmental control legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES). Without objection, it is so ordered.

S. 3598

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, at the next printing, the names of the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from Alabama (Mr. SPARKMAN), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. SMITH), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), and the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE) be added as cosponsors of the bill (S. 3598) to amend section 32(c) of title III of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to furnish financial assistance in carrying out plans for works of improvement for land conservation and utilization, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BELLMON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE RESOLUTION 375—RESOLUTION SUBMITTED AND AGREED TO, TO HONOR AND COMMEND CAPT. ROBERT M. WILBUR AND COPILOT JAMES E. HARTLEY FOR THEIR HEROISM

Mr. GURNEY (for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. GRIFFIN, Mr. BROOKE, Mr. SCHWEIKER, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. MCGEE, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. ERVIN, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. FONG, Mr. CANNON, Mr. HANSEN, Mr. SMITH of Illinois, Mr. CASE, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. NELSON, Mr. BELLMON, Mr. DOMINICK, Mr. COOPER, Mr. SPONG, Mr. SAXBE, Mr. PROUTY, Mr. PEARSON, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. BIBLE, Mr. COTTON, Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. JORDAN of Idaho, Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. HRUSKA, Mr. FANNIN, Mr. BYRD of West Virginia, Mr. ALLOTT, Mr. DODD, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. MURPHY, Mr. MUNDT, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. RIBICOFF, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mr. PELL) submitted a resolution (S. Res. 375) to honor and commend Capt. Robert M. Wilbur and Copilot James E. Hartley for their heroism, which was considered and agreed to.

(The remarks of Mr. GURNEY when he submitted the resolution appear later in the RECORD under the appropriate heading.)

DISPOSAL OF CORUNDUM FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 558

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (S. 3083) to authorize the disposal of corundum from the national stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF CHRYSOTILE ASBESTOS FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 559

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (S. 3087) to authorize the disposal of chrysotile asbestos from the national stockpile and the supplemental stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF REFRACTORY GRADE CHROMITE FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 560

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (S. 3446) to authorize the disposal of refractory grade chromite from the national stockpile and the supplemental stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF NATURAL CEYLON AMORPHOUS LUMP GRAPHITE FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 561

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (S. 3451) to authorize the disposal of natural Ceylon amorphous lump graphite from the national stockpile and the supplemental stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF MOLYBDENUM FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 562

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (S. 3452) to authorize the disposal of molybdenum from the national stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF NATURAL BATTERY GRADE MANGANESE ORE FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 563

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (S. 3456) to authorize the disposal of natural battery grade manganese ore from the national stockpile and the supplemental stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF SURINAM TYPE METALLURGICAL GRADE BAUXITE FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 564

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (S. 3457) to authorize the disposal of Surinam type metallurgical grade bauxite from the national stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF CADMIUM FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 565

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 12941) to authorize the release of 4,180,000 pounds of cadmium from the national stockpile and the supplemental stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF CERTAIN COBALT FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 566

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 15021) to authorize the release of 40,200,000 pounds of cobalt from the national stockpile and the supplemental stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF BISMUTH FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 567

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 15831) to authorize the disposal of bismuth from the national stockpile and the supplemental stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF CASTOR OIL FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 568

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 15832) to authorize the disposal of castor oil from the national stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF ACID GRADE FLUORSPAR FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 569

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 15833) to authorize the disposal of acid grade fluorspar from the national stockpile and the supplemental stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF MAGNESIUM FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 570

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 15835) to authorize the disposal of magnesium from the national stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF TYPE A, CHEMICAL GRADE MANGANESE ORE FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 571

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 15836) to authorize the disposal of type A, chemical grade manganese ore from the national stockpile and the supplemental stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF TYPE B, CHEMICAL GRADE MANGANESE ORE FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 572

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 15837) to authorize the disposal of type B, chemical grade manganese ore from the national stockpile and the supplemental stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF SHELLAC FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 573

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 15838) to authorize the disposal of shellac from the national stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISPOSAL OF TUNGSTEN FROM NATIONAL STOCKPILE—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 574

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H.R. 15839) to authorize the disposal of tungsten from the national stockpile and the supplemental stockpile, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

NOTICE OF HEARINGS ON OMNIBUS RIVERS AND HARBORS LEGISLATION

Mr. YOUNG of Ohio. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Subcommittee on Flood Control, Rivers, and Harbors of the Committee on Public Works will initiate hearings on an omnibus rivers and harbors bill for 1970. The subcommittee will receive testimony on river and harbor, flood control, and other resource projects that have been investigated and recommended for construction by the Chief of Engineers, U.S. Army. The subcommittee will also consider other related river and harbor and flood control matters.

The hearings will be held on Wednesday and Thursday, April 15 and 16, 1970, and will begin at 10 a.m. in room 4200, New Senate Office Building. Additional hearings as required will be announced at a later date.

Persons desiring to testify or to submit written statements in connection with these hearings should notify Mr. Joseph F. Van Vladricken, professional staff member, Committee on Public Works, room 4204, New Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C., 225–6176.

NOTICE OF HEARINGS ON HIGH COST OF NO. 2 HOME HEATING OIL

Mr. McINTYRE. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Subcommittee on Small Business of the Committee on Banking and Currency will hold hearings on the high cost of No. 2 home heating oil.

The hearings will be held on Monday and Tuesday, April 6 and 7, 1970, in room 5302, New Senate Office Building, and will commence at 10 a.m.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS OF SENATORS AS IN LEGISLATIVE SESSION

NO JETS FOR ISRAEL

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial appearing this morning in the Philadelphia Inquirer titled "No Jets for Israel" be included in this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NO JETS FOR ISRAEL

Air power in the Middle East is unbalanced in favor of the Arabs against Israel, and is becoming more unbalanced every day.

While Israel is continuously losing planes by enemy attack and attrition, Egypt and Syria are receiving more and more aircraft from Soviet Russia.

A new dimension to military threat to Israel has been added by the reported deliveries by Russia of SAM–3 missiles to Egypt, complete, it is assumed, with Soviet technicians prepared to operate them.

Yet in face of this increasingly dangerous disparity, the U.S. has rejected Israel's request—"for now"—for purchase of 25 Phantom jets and 100 Skyhawks.

Almost incredibly, Secretary of State Rogers has explained this decision on the grounds that "In our judgment, Israel's air capacity is sufficient to meet its needs for the time being."

What does he mean "time being?" Is he to wait until the opening by the Arabs of a fourth-round war before the U.S. agrees to sell some planes—possibly too late to be of any help?

Hasn't the presence of the Russian missiles put an entirely new complexion on the situation and proved Israel's need now, of military planes from the only source it can possibly obtain military assistance from, the United States?

The State Department stand will not only disappoint Israel and all those who seek peace in the Middle East. It will have political and psychological effects in encouraging Arab belligerence and in giving Russia the impression that we are deserting the Israelis at a critical time.

Secretary Rogers' assurance of about $100 million in economic aid to Israel does not make up for the loss of the jets. The Nixon Administration could have agreed to economic assistance when Prime Minister Golda Meir requested it during her visit to Washington many weeks ago.

Instead the agreement has been held back until it could be used to sugar-coat the rejection of the aircraft sale. It is nothing but sugar-coating and it will leave a bitter taste in many mouths here and in Israel.

Mr. Nixon in his news conference Saturday said our goals in the Mideast are a cease-fire; reduction of the flow of arms; a political settlement; and a balance between the forces in that area.

There is nothing in Secretary Rogers' policy statement that promises the attainment of any of these goals. In fact, it makes their accomplishment more remote, and the prospects of all-out war more ominous.

CHAIRMAN BURNS SPECIFIES 3 TO 4 PERCENT MONEY SUPPLY GROWTH

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, last week the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Arthur Burns, wrote me that he expects the money supply to return to a monetary growth rate of 3 to 4 percent this year. I released the letter to the press Saturday night and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed at the end of my remarks.

The letter from Chairman Burns was in response to the request of the Joint Economic Committee that the Federal Reserve Board spell out the monetary flows the country might expect in view of the President's economic report and prevailing economic conditions.

This letter is one of the frankest and most useful economic documents that has come from a Reserve Board Chairman in many years. This is by far the most specific estimate of anticipated monetary policy any Federal Reserve Chairman has ever made.

Chairman Burns qualified his 3 to 4 percent projection on the narrowly defined money supply by adding that he expects a 6 to 8 percent growth in bank credit, and he also said that such a projection is by no means the only one consistent with the GNP projection.

Chairman Burns added:

Much will depend on the public's preferences as to holdings of financial assets, on the strength of desire by banks and others to rebuild liquidity and on how aggressive banks prove to be in attempting to regain their earlier market positions.

Chairman Burns also said:

One might anticipate that interest rates would move generally downward in the year, reflecting not only relaxation of some of the pressures in the financial markets but also investor responses to reduced rates of inflation as they in fact begin to materialize.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS,
FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM,
Washington, D.C., March 17, 1970.

HON. WILLIAM PROXMIRE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR PROXMIRE: I have been giving very careful thought to your request for a specification of a series of possible alternative paths that monetary policy and financial developments might follow in 1970, contained in your letter of February 26. We certainly want to be responsive to the Congress in providing the information it needs in order to plan its domestic economic legislative program and to help it evaluate the performance of monetary policy. And yet I cannot help but be impressed by the many difficulties that surround such an exercise.

A problem in laying out alternative possible courses for monetary and financial developments in 1970 is that much will depend on the specific pattern and character of changes in the performance of the economy as it evolves. A particular dollar estimate for the total value of the national output of goods and services over an arbitrary time period such as a year does not tell us much about the expected state of the economy. How will that output be distributed over the course of the year? What will its composition be, and how will it accord with our notions of economic balance? To what extent will the estimated GNP reflect changes in the real volume of output as against markups in prices of goods and services? What new forces may emerge that will alter expectations for the economy into 1971 and beyond?

These are always important issues, and they are crucially so in the present environment, when all of us are working to reestablish the conditions necessary to a resumption of sustainable, noninflationary economic growth. Monetary policy—and public economic stabilization policy generally—will have to tread a narrow path in the months immediately ahead. We have made real progress over the last year or so in laying the base for an abatement of inflationary pressures. Excess demand has now been generally eliminated from the economy, and I am confident that inflation will gradually subside.

We must now be especially alert to signs that the process that was necessary to the elimination of excess demand pressures in the economy does not spiral on downward into significant recession tendencies, with consequent social and economic costs. Prompt remedial action would be required should it appear that a recession is developing, with the intensity of the action scaled to the indicated magnitude of the problem. But we must also guard against actions that would contribute to an overly sharp rebound in output and spending later on. Expectations of inflation over the longer run are still widely held and business confidence appears to remain strong. If incautious public policies should precipitate a strong resurgence in demand, therefore, there could be real danger that inflationary patterns would again be set in motion.

The economic projection for 1970 prepared by the Council of Economic Advisers early this year as a basis for its annual report, as I understand it, traced a path that promised to minimize these possible difficulties. The GNP for the year was estimated in a range of $980–$990 billion, with a period of little or no real growth to be followed by resumption of a relatively moderate rate of expansion beginning in the spring. The price component of the GNP expansion was viewed as declining gradually as the year progresses, and the acceleration in demand growth in the latter part of the year was not seen as large enough to restimulate inflationary expectations. The increase in unemployment accompanying the flatter performance of the economy was expected to be moderate, on average, and recovery in the depressed housing industry was projected to be underway again before too long.

Now if it turns out that this projection is an accurate description of the course of the economy's development in 1970—and I have no basis for disputing its general outlines—then it is not too difficult to visualize how financial conditions might evolve. First, with progress occurring on the inflation front and aggregate demand well within the economy's capabilities, it would seem reasonable to assume that the monetary variables could gradually return to a more normal growth rate—say, 3–4 percent for the narrowly defined money supply and perhaps 6–8 percent for total bank credit. But while one can put such numbers on paper as reasonable expectations, these are by no means the only ones consistent with the GNP projection. Much will depend on the public's preferences as to holdings of financial assets, on the strength of desire by banks and others to rebuild liquidity, and on how aggressive banks prove to be in attempting to regain their earlier market positions.

Next, one might anticipate that interest rates would move generally downward in the year, reflecting not only relaxation of some of the pressures in the financial markets but also investor response to reduced rates of inflation as they in fact began to materialize. Rates could be expected to decline more in short-term than in long-term markets, partly because of the apparent continuing strength in demands for long-term funds. Net savings inflows to the banks and other depositary institutions should also recover as the relative attraction of high market rates to savers tended to diminish. Once again, however, these are speculations based on specific assumptions concerning the development of the economy in 1970.

Finally, it would be logical to expect on the basis of these assumptions that the total flow of credit—through institutions and markets combined—would expand somewhat from the relatively low levels reached in the second half of 1969. This would reflect mainly an increase in the availability of funds to those who were rationed out of the market in the restrictive credit environment of 1969, and also the gradual increase in savings flows consistent with expansion in current dollar GNP and aggregate incomes. A large increase in credit flows would not be expected in the short-run, however, since it takes time to get the process of credit generation going again in some sectors, such as mortgage finance.

I want to emphasize, however, that one can readily imagine important variations in this path of money and credit market developments, if the course of the economy does not evolve as specified above. The resurgence in economic activity, when it comes, could prove substantially stronger than anticipated, in which case rates of money and credit expansion would need to be restrained. Or the upturn could come more slowly and without the force anticipated, suggesting the need for additional encouragement to private spending through higher rates of expansion in the monetary factors and associated sharper short-run declines in interest rates. Total bank credit expansion could well run higher relative to growth in the money supply in these circumstances.

Economic developments in the weeks and months immediately ahead, of course, will be fundamental in shaping the course of monetary policy, including changes in interest rates and credit availability that actually emerge. Some major business indicators recently have shown recessive tendencies. If these deepen and intensify, the arguments for corrective action will become more forceful, and I would expect monetary policy to be modified accordingly. If, on the other hand, more positive signs appear on the economic scene, this will have to be taken into account in policy formulation. As I stated at the outset, the problem of economic stabilization policy for the time being is to walk the narrow path between the threats of recession, on the one hand, and restimulation of inflationary expectations, on the other.

As we move toward a more suitable economic environment once again, I would expect the monetary aggregates to resume a more normal rate of growth and interest rates to decline to more viable levels. But I cannot assure you that this will in fact develop. Patterns of economic change can readily be imagined that would call for either unusual monetary stimulus or continued monetary restraint, the results of which would be reflected not only in the rates of change in monetary aggregates but also in the level and pattern of interest rates and overall credit flows. Monetary policy is by nature one of the most adaptable instruments of economic stabilization, and it is my intention to do everything within my power to keep it flexible and responsively attuned to unexpected variations in the performance of the economy as they occur or come into prospect.

Sincerely,

ARTHUR F. BURNS.

PRAYER IN OUTER SPACE

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, on November 4, 1969, I submitted a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Senate, with the House concurring, that there was no conflict between the expression of religious faith practiced by the astronauts during space explorations and freedom of speech and religion guaranteed by the first amendment to the Constitution. More than 400 citizens of the San Antonio, Tex., area have signed a petition expressing their support of the substance of this concurrent resolution. I ask unanimous consent that the petition, initiated by Mr. Charles Cude of San Antonio, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator JOHN G. TOWER:

We the undersigned, demand our right, which is guaranteed in our Constitution, to our freedom of religious belief and our freedom to pray, when and where we wish, on earth or any other planet.

Our Country, the only true free country was founded on prayer, take this freedom away and we will have lost everything.

We are opposed to any person or persons who would take away these freedoms.

BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, Brigham Young University is a great educational institution in my State of Utah. It has been in the news somewhat regularly for the past decade for several reasons—its tremendous student growth and superb campus in a wonderful small city of Provo nestled at the very base of the towering Wasatch Mountains, the growing distinction of its faculty and the high caliber of its student body, the continued excellence of its athletic teams—although this has some senseless and unwarranted interruption with its relationship with some of its competitors—but most of all it has been in the press because of a religious doctrine espoused by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints which owns and operates the University.

This situation is often distorted and certainly is not widely understood. In an endeavor to clarify this matter and to present what I consider a rational presentation of the problems encountered at BYU, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an interesting and what I believe is a factually accurate article written by Mr. John Dart and published in the Los Angeles Times of March 23, 1970. I commend its reading to the Senate.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BYU—A CAMPUS OF PEACE AND PATRIOTISM

(By John Dart)

PROVO, UTAH.—Brigham Young University, in the eyes of its energetic and outspoken president, is destined to excel the likes of Harvard, Yale and Stanford.

BYU, operated by the Mormon Church, is already the nation's largest private university in fulltime day enrollment with more than 22,000 students.

When Ernest L. Wilkinson, now 70, took over as president of the 5,000-student school in 1951 the buildings and facilities on the mountain-backdrop campus were only 20% of what they are today.

BYU has yet to acquire an academic reputation comparable to the nation's major universities. Reputations of this kind are made in a university's graduate schools, and BYU began the first of its doctoral programs only in 1959.

CHURCH INFLUENCE STILL FELT

However, unlike other universities founded by churches and religious-minded persons such as John Harvard and Elihu Yale, noted Wilkinson in a speech to students recently, BYU has not thrown off the yoke of church influence in its 95-year existence.

"In altogether too many instances Harvard has become a mecca for those who are crassly materialistic—or rootlessly idealistic," said Wilkinson, who also pointed to Yale's and Stanford's secularization.

Himself a 1927 Harvard law school graduate, Wilkinson predicted:

"BYU is destined to be as peculiarly different from and to excel other universities to the same degree that the church differs from other churches and is destined to excel them.

"This premise is not a mere hypothesis; it is a fact. The Lord said that this church is 'the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth with which I, the Lord, am well pleased' and this university is a part of the church."

Such doctrinal-based convictions are rarely presented to non-Mormon audiences, and not every Mormon would necessarily agree with that logic of inevitability.

LIKED BY CONSERVATIVES

But many non-Mormon conservatives in the country feel BYU already has a fine reputation in areas they feel really matter, and President Wilkinson could not be more pleased.

A recognition from the political right of BYU's adherence to "enduring values," said Wilkinson in an interview, "is a great opportunity for us and enhances our responsibility."

The campus' lack of protest demonstrations, beards, miniskirts, cigarets or stimulants of any kind plus evidence of patriotism and reverence have brought glowing praise from persons who view most other large campuses as havens for the immoral and politically radical.

Conservative columnists James J. Kilpatrick and Max Rafferty, California's superintendent of public instruction, in similar style came to BYU's defense in December, 1969, after Stanford University said it would schedule no further intercollegiate competition with Mormon-sponsored schools.

Stanford said it took the action because many of its black and white students found it offensive to have institutional links with a university whose sponsoring church denies the priesthood and some other church privileges to Negroes.

Wilkinson fired off a blistering reply to Stanford President Kennet Pitzer and Mormons in general cried religious discrimination, explaining as they have on numerous occasions in recent years that the church doctrine is God-given and can be changed only by God through revelation.

BYU athletic teams traveling to other Western campuses frequently encounter demonstrations against discrimination by the church. Mormons and BYU protest that they are open to Negroes and are believers in the brotherhood of man.

Although Stanford's actions and much of the protest elsewhere referred to church doctrine, BYU students, faculty and administrators have debated whether there is discrimination on campus.

Opinions were about evenly divided among 12 students in a recent random poll taken by the student newspaper.

TWO STUDENT OPINIONS

Karen McDonnel of Long Beach said she thinks BYU students "tend to be a little racially prejudiced because of the Mormon doctrine," but Vandra Paullin of Palos Verdes said, "The prejudice here at BYU is built in because we're white, not because we're Mormon."

Twenty per cent of the students are from California and 33% from Utah. More than 95% are members of the Mormon Church, or more formally the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The Mormon students apply to the university through their local church officials.

Since relatively few Negroes belong to the Mormon Church there are only a handful of blacks at BYU. Thus, when students talk about discrimination they refer more to attitudes than actions.

Brigham Young University has attempted to change its image a bit lately. Last fall, BYU announced it would actively recruit Negro players for its football team and last month, defensive back Ron Knight, a transfer from Northeastern Oklahoma A&M, enrolled at the university. Knight would be the first Negro varsity football player at BYU.

Wilkinson, in an interview, said BYU will have a black faculty member this semester, Oscar Udo, a Nigerian graduate student in sociology who will be a teaching assistant.

"We have a course at this college which is not new," Wilkinson said. "We teach African history and the contributions to American history of blacks such as Booker T. Washington and those people."

Asked about black studies programs begun at other colleges, Wilkinson replied, "I feel it's probably a violation of the Civil Rights Act to have black teachers teaching black history to black students."

The university president, unsuccessful Republican candidate for U.S. senator from Utah in 1964, said that geography has shaped BYU's relationship to minority groups. "I don't think you'd find a lot of American Indians at a college in Brooklyn," he said.

300 INDIANS AT BYU

There are about 300 Indians at BYU, most of them students who have lived with white Mormon families for a while and gone to white schools in the church's expanding Indian placement program. Although church officials now want to put a ceiling on BYU enrollment at about the present level, Wilkinson said he hopes the Indian enrollment can be brought up to 1,000 students.

Wilkinson's law firm, based in Washington, D.C., handles many Indian claims against the government. One case in which he was involved for the Ute Indians resulted in four judgments totaling $31.5 million.

BYU officials point out that about 1,000 students are from foreign lands—as an indication that the university is open to students of all races and religions.

The Mormon Church has special religious interest in converting and educating American Indians, Latin Americans and Polynesians, They, according to the Book of Mormon, are "the blood of Israel," descendants of Jacob, the father of the 12 tribes of Israel. The Book of Mormon says that Lehi, a grandson of Jacob, and his party came to South America from Palestine about 600 B.C. The church believes that natives of North and South America and—for additional reasons—inhabitants of Polynesia are all related to Lehi.

HEREDITARY MEMBERS

"We have a special concern for the Israelites for in the 'last days' there will be a gathering of all tribes of Israel, including Jews," said Dr. Roy W. Doxey, assistant dean of religion at BYU. The predominant European-heritage membership of the Mormon Church can gain Israelite status after joining the church, but the native Indian, Polynesian and Latin American already has this distinction by heredity, according to church doctrine.

A topic of debate more widely discussed than race is the dress code at BYU.

Although the namesake of BYU—Mormon pioneer Brigham Young—and many succeeding Mormon Church presidents wore beards, chin whiskers are grounds for suspension or expulsion if a student refuses to shave them off.

So is the wearing of miniskirts, or tight clothing, or slacks (except on a few occasions) by girls. Young men are warned not to wear tight-fitting pants or let their hair grow down to the collar.

"One reason for this policy, apart from the virtue of modesty itself," said Wilkinson in a letter to parents, "is that our students have gained a great reputation for being clean, modestly dressed, good-looking young men and women."

He added: "Almost every week we get favorable newspaper and radio comments about our students . . . As a consequence, the appearance of even one person on our campus who deviates from our standards in dress or appearance impairs our reputation."

In registration for the spring semester "spotters" from the dean of students office talked with 80 to 90 students about their dress length or hair length. About 50 girls were stopped, compared with 250 last fall.

"I noticed a lot of girls that wore longer dresses on registration day, then were back to shorter ones the next day," say Ken Kartchner, the student body president.

Kartchner, an engineering student, has urged students to stop fighting the code and get their minds on more important things. At the same time, he has told Wilkinson privately that he opposes enforcement of dress standards—which drew a desk-pounding response from the university president, he said.

"For the minority of students who are fashion-conscious it's a problem," said Kartchner, "but for the majority of administrators it's a preoccupation." One administrator said beards were opposed because they are considered a symbol of the radical movement.

Cases of thievery and drug-taking do occur, administrators readily admit.

The social-political tensions that exist find their vent in groups like Young Democrats and Young Americans for Freedom (permission for Students for a Democratic Society chapter was refused), a weekly open forum at the student center and the 92 church wards (200–250 students each) on campus where Sunday discussions often range widely.

Another outlet are boy-girl relationships. "Each year thousands of our students find marriage partners on the campus," Wilkinson said. Early marriages are officially discouraged, but church officials obviously view BYU as one of the best places for young Mormons to meet one another.

However, many BYU men wear sideburns and hair as long as the rules will allow and many young women wear boots and skirts at various lengths above the knee.

BYU administrators are unhesitant about confirming the concept that the university is supposed to be a reflection of the Mormon Church. The church provides about 70% of its funds and tuition is $500 a year for church members and $750 a year for nonmembers.

However, Wilkinson said the various departments are not supposed to function merely as corroborators of Mormon doctrine. "We tell them they ought to teach any concept," said the president. "Undoubtedly, the anthropology department teaches the concepts of the Book of Mormon, but that's not the only one. You can't arrive at the truth by teaching only one phase of it."

Two of the touchiest subjects at BYU are evolution and birth control, said Dr. Joseph R. Murphy, zoology department chairman.

To church members who complain from time to time that the theory of organic evolution is given credibility in BYU classrooms, Dr. Murphy said he replies with letters from church authorities stating that the Mormon Church has never officially said that evolution contradicts the Bible.

The church has gone on record opposing contraceptives while leaving the ultimate responsibility for the decision up to the individual members, said Dr. Murphy.

A book used as supplementary reading in some courses is "Population, Evolution and Birth Control: A Collage of Controversial Ideas."

"Makes you feel you ought to have a plain brown wrapper on it here at BYU," quipped Dr. Murphy.

The zoologist said most faculty members feel the responsibility to give a synthesis of modern science to students.

"We give many of them an entirely different perspective on genetics," said Dr. Murphy. "If we tell them there is no such thing as 'Negro blood' that surprises some—forcing them to think to what extent differences are cultural rather than biological."

More than 56% of the faculty hold Ph.D.s, most of the degrees obtained from other universities because of the recent beginnings of doctoral programs at BYU.

The chemistry and chemical engineering departments are considered most likely to be rated among the nation's top dozen graduate schools in those fields in the next five to 10 years, said Dr. Chauncey Riddle, dean of the graduate school.

Outstanding faculty members include Dr. Harvey Fletcher, "father of stereophonic sound," Dr. H. Tracy Hall, the first man to produce artificial diamonds in high-pressure, high-temperature experiments, and Dr. Armin Hill, who helped the motion picture industry develop new types of light sources, including the radio frequency lamp.

Federal funds are not accepted by BYU for buildings or equipment, but grants are sought from federal agencies for research.

Even the Reserve Officer Training Corps buildings on campus were built by the university from nongovernment funds.

About 850 students are enrolled in BYU's Air Force and Army ROTC programs, making it second only to Notre Dame's 950 enrollees among private universities where the ROTC program is voluntary. The Army ROTC unit is only two years old at BYU and is expected to increase in numbers.

Neither the ROTC programs nor job recruiters from companies such as Dow Chemical Corp. have encountered any demonstrable opposition from BYU students, school officials have noted.

Wilkinson notes: "Our attitude of insisting on moral and spiritual as well as intellectual standards is admittedly contrary to the prevailing trend in a great many universities and colleges which have abandoned any attempt to supervise the moral life of their students. We feel, however, that to indulge irresponsible student conduct is to abdicate our role as educators."

CONSUMER BENEFIT

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, for many months we have been reading and hearing allegation after allegation that our Federal departments and agencies have but little regard for the consumer—that, at best, they only pay lipservice to the public interest.

While it may be true that you cannot please all of the people all of the time, there are, however, many governmental programs and decisions implemented with the consuming public in mind, decisions that often affect virtually everyone.

Unfortunately, however, not all of these decisions are as well publicized as they should be. For if they were, it is my opinion that we would not see nearly so much criticism from some of the so-called consumer advocate groups as we have seen in the past.

One such instance involves the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is charged with protecting the public interest as it pertains to surface transportation within the United States. Just last week the Supreme Court upheld the Commission on a very important case involving the shipment of furniture, a commodity which is certainly near and dear to us all.

The Commission's decision effectively blocked a carrier's attempt to cancel through-route, joint-rate tariff provisions applicable to shipments of furniture moving from central to southern States.

The decision by the Commission and by the Court was a landmark one. Yet only the authoritative Traffic World and Transportation Topics apparently saw the significance of it and reported it in depth to their readers. For information, and to assist Senators in realizing the importance of the decision in this proceeding, I commend the Traffic World article to their attention. I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS ICC IN BLOCKING CANCELLATION OF JOINT ROUTE-RATE SERVICES

With a one-sentence ruling, the Supreme Court of the United States has upheld the Interstate Commerce Commission's right—in certain circumstances, at least—to force motor carriers to maintain through-route-joint-rate arrangements.

The court acted February 24 by affirming a lower court decision which, in turn, sustained an ICC decision issued in No. 34815, National Furniture Traffic Conference v. Associated Truck Lines (T.W., Jan. 11, 1969, p 30).

In that decision, the ICC found a fundamental inequity in Associated's attempt to cancel through-route-joint-rate tariff provisions applicable to shipments of furniture moving from central to southern states. It ordered Associated to maintain the joint-rate provisions the carriers sought to cancel. It also warned all carriers that the ICC would automatically block any future filings similar to that made by Associated and it urged carriers who previously promulgated joint-rate restrictions to remove the restrictions promptly "without the need for further formal action" although the Commission indicated that formal action would be undertaken if necessary.

The restrictions proposed by Associated were similar or identical to restrictions successfully placed in tariffs by numerous other motor carriers. Although Associated continued to offer through-route-joint-rate service on various other commodities it proposed a tariff provision to the effect that Associated "maintains no through routes, joint rates on interchange arrangements on shipments of furniture" moving between points in Central States Territory and points in Southern territories.

The furniture traffic conference protested and, in ruling, 10 commissioners touched virtually all bases.

The majority held that Associated's rule unfairly discriminated against one type of traffic. Commissioner Tuggle agreed that unlawful discrimination was present but argued that this discrimination existed between territories and between shippers capable of using single-line service and those requiring multi-line service. Commissioner Walrath argued that the interstate commerce act does not allow the ICC to require motor carriers to maintain joint rates and through routes and contended that the majority was attempting illegally to circumvent this statutory limitation.

Associated, the American Trucking Associations and the ATA's Regular Common Carrier Conference challenged the ICC's decision in the U.S. district court for the western district of Michigan but that court upheld the ICC.

Before the Supreme Court, the motor carrier interests argued that the ICC decision "rests upon the proposition that for a motor carrier to hold out through-route-joint-rate arrangements on some authorized commodities and not on others is unlawful." This viewpoint, the carrier interests said, overlooks numerous Commission decisions authorizing railroads to establish joint rates on selected commodities and amounts to a new regulatory policy requiring motor carriers either to offer joint-rate-through-route service for all traffic or abandon completely all joint-rate-through-route service.

"This decision," said the motor carrier interests, "substantially nullifies that freedom to establish through-route-joint-rate arrangements which Congress entrusted to the managerial discretion of the carriers."

The Supreme Court, however, rejected the carrier argument and granted a motion by ICC lawyers to affirm the Michigan court's decision. The action was in No. 997, Associated Truck Lines et al. v. United States and Interstate Commerce Commission.

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS

Mr. HART. Mr. President, 1970 marks among other events the 50th anniversary of the League of Women Voters.

Channel WXYZ–TV in Detroit recently had an editorial commenting on this anniversary and deservedly applauding the League for its half-century of service to citizens everywhere.

The editorial particularly marks the work of League members in the State of Michigan who have contributed so significantly to our State.

I ask unanimous consent that the telecast broadcast by WXYZ–TV on February 11 and 12 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A 50TH ANNIVERSARY

The League of Women Voters celebrate their 50th anniversary this Friday, February 13th. At present, there are approximately 160-thousand League members in 13-hundred local organizations. Almost 500 women belong to the Detroit League . . . some 46-hundred are members across the state. Most of the women are college-educated, middle-class wives and mothers. The League is attempting to attract more urban black and low-income women.

The League was started in 1920 to get all Americans involved in non-partisan participation in the political process. That goal has not changed in 50 years. In the Detroit area, the League of Women Voters has successfully fought for tenants rights, better police-community relations and effective open housing laws. Its services include impartial, well-researched information on almost all candidates for office. It tells what the issues are and what the issues mean . . . and it provides courses in practical politics.

The League of Women Voters has been good for Detroit and for Michigan. It has shown time and again how citizen involvement can have a direct, beneficial influence in politics.

Channel 7 congratulates the League of Women Voters on their 50th year of exceptional service.

CRITICISM OF THE VA HOSPITAL SYSTEM

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, there has been much criticism directed at the VA hospital system of late, some of which has been directed at our VA hospital system in the State of Texas. While I believe that constructive criticism, in the long run can benefit the VA hospital system, and ultimately the veterans for whom the system was established, I am not convinced that placing the blame for VA problems solely on the present VA administration is fair. One must ask: "If our VA hospital system is in trouble at this time, is it possible that the deterioration of the entire system could have occurred in the relatively short span of 14 months—that period during which President Nixon has been in office?" The facts indicate otherwise.

The total Veterans' Administration medical care appropriation of fiscal year 1969 was $1,474,064,000. The expected fiscal year 1970 medical care appropriation, with supplemental increases, is $1,648,099,000 or an increase of $174,035,000.

The fiscal year 1971 budget submitted to Congress by the President included the highest appropriation request in history for VA medical care. This morning the Veterans' Administration informed me that the President and the Budget Bureau have approved a VA request for $15 million in additional funds in the fiscal 1971 budget for medical programs. This is in addition to the $1.7 billion contained in the administration's original fiscal 1971 budget request. This means that the administration is asking $228 million more for fiscal 1971 than the VA appropriation for fiscal 1969 and $69 million more than for fiscal 1970. Within these resources, the VA hopes to improve hospital staffing ratio of employees to patients and increase the number of veteran beneficiaries treated in VA hospitals and clinics over previous year levels. At this point, one very important fact should be noted: Vietnam era veterans comprise less than 10 percent of the VA's total hospital patients. Furthermore, only the sickness and disabilities of approximately one-half of the younger veterans are related to military service. The fact is that the VA, through the increased use of extended care programs which have had a significant impact in reducing VA hospital beds and average census, is currently treating more eligible veterans on both an inpatient and outpatient basis than ever.

As we are aware, President Nixon continues to do all that he can to curb an extremely serious inflation problem which he inherited from the previous administration by exercising judicious fiscal restraint and wise budgetary control. At the same time, however, the President has demonstrated his continued interest in the VA's medical care program by granting an increase of 1,500 full-time employees to the VA at a time when he was reducing employment in Government by several thousand jobs. Of those 1,500 full-time employees, 83 percent of the added positions were designated specifically for the medical program. Moreover, with the fiscal year 1971 requests, the VA medical care staff will be increased by an additional 2,150 employees hereby bringing employment in the department of medicine and surgery up to 142,152 or simply the largest work force in the department's history.

On the question of physicians, comments have been made that the VA has experienced losses among its physicians as a result of deteriorating medical care and noncompetitive salaries. Again, the latest VA reports reflect a gain of 373 more doctors—including 26 more psychiatrists—over the previous number recorded some 9 months earlier.

Mr. President, the VA, under the able guidance of Mr. Donald E. Johnson, has done an outstanding job. But we all know that anyone who choses to do so can find fault with this or any other budget which is intended to provide medical care. Every hospital director and every Government administrator is reluctant to say he has enough money. After all, what hospital in the United States, be it a VA hospital, private hospital, a community, or a State hospital, could not use additional funds or additional staff? The main point is that VA hospitals are providing quality medical care on a greater scale than ever before. This is so in spite of the severe handicap of a severe cost squeeze brought on by inflation.

Mr. President, it is my opinion that we are providing no service to our gallant veterans or to the public if we permit an erroneous conclusion to be drawn regarding the quality of care a veteran may now expect from his VA hospital. Our veterans and the thousands of dedicated physicians, nurses, and other outstanding employees who stafi VA hospitals merit our further assistance and our confidence.

VETO POWER OF U.S. ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the idea that the U.S. Attorney General should have the power to veto laws duly enacted by State legislatures is one of the revolutionary principles established by a liberal majority of Congress in the Johnson administration.

The principle has been endorsed and implemented with a vengeance by the Nixon administration as an aspect of the "New Federalism" we hear so much about.

Recently, the U.S. Attorney General's veto was applied to an act of the Alabama Legislature. The legislation granted thousands of servicemen the right and opportunity to become registered voters in Alabama. The veto denies them this right.

On March 18, 1970, the distinguished attorney general of Alabama, the Honorable Macdonald Gallion, expressed himself forcefully on this development in a letter to the Honorable Jerris Leonard of the Department of Justice in a news release on the subject.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter and news release be printed in the RECORD as an illustration of "New Federalism" under the practices of this administration.

There being no objection the items were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GALLION BLASTS U.S. CIVIL RIGHTS CHIEF OVER ABSENTEE REGISTRATION RULING

Alabama Attorney General MacDonald Gallion accused the U.S. Justice Departments Civil Rights Chief of "having the worst case of prejudice I have ever witnessed." Gallion said Jerris Leonard showed he had no understanding of the Civil Rights Law by objecting to Alabama's new law which allows servicemen to register to vote by mail.

Under the Voting Rights Act of 1965, Gallion was required to submit any new voting legislation to the U.S. Attorney General for approval before Alabama can put such laws into effect. He certified the new Absentee Registration Law (Act 604, 1969 Session) on January 13, 1970 but the Justice Departments Civil Rights Chief struck the law down on March 13th. The basis for such decision was that Act 604 requires the applicant for registration to complete a written questionnaire which is mailed to Alabama. The Civil Rights Chief felt this would "in effect impose a literacy requirement for registration," which violates the Federal Voting Rights Act. This brought on Gallion's blast at the Justice Department.

In a reply letter, Gallion said the new law was passed to allow servicemen to register to vote by mail who would otherwise have to appear personally before the Board of Registrars.

Gallion said in his letter:

"It is passing strange that the present administration which has been trying to curry favor among the electorate in the South would interpose an objection to an Act which would have the effect of broadening the electorate and giving servicemen and others a chance to vote.

"Does the present administration wish to go on record as preventing the thousands of servicemen from Alabama from becoming registered voters? Perhaps you would prefer to send Federal Registrars to Viet Nam, Laos, Cambodia, and other places throughout the world to register all servicemen, white or black, whose homes are in Alabama.

"I suggest that common sense dictates that you should reconsider your objection to said Act No. 604."

STATE OF ALABAMA,
OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Montgomery, Ala., March 18, 1970.

Hon. JERRIS LEONARD,
Assistant Attorney General, Civil Rights Division, Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. LEONARD: Reference is made to your letter of March 13, 1970, which was in pertinent part as follows:

"This is in reference to Act Number 604 of the Legislature of the State of Alabama authorizing and providing for registration by mail of qualified electors who are members of the Armed Forces of the United States or who are employed outside the United States which was submitted to the Attorney General pursuant to Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

"Act Number 604, inter alia, requires the applicant for absentee registration to complete a written questionnaire without assistance. It is our view that this provision in effect imposes a literacy requirement for registration and that such a requirement, if enforced, would violate the provisions of Section 4 of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Therefore, I must on behalf of the Attorney General interpose an objection to Act Number 604."

As you are probably aware, prior to the passage of this Act, a person could only register as an elector by appearing in person before the appropriate Board of Registrars.

It is my understanding that when the Legislature of Alabama passed and the Governor of Alabama approved Act No. 604, it was with the intention of providing a means for those in the Armed Forces of the United States and others who were absent from the State to be able to register as electors without having to appear personally before the Board.

That was the sole purpose of the Act, and there was no intention to impose a literacy requirement on anyone.

It is passing strange that the present administration, which has been trying to curry favor among the electorate in the South would interpose an objection to an Act which would have the effect of broadening the electorate and giving servicemen and others a chance to vote.

Does the present administration wish to go record as preventing the thousands of servicemen from Alabama from becoming registered voters? Perhaps you would prefer to send Federal Registrars to Viet Nam, Laos, Cambodia, and other places throughout the world to register all servicemen, white or black, whose homes are in Alabama.

I suggest that common sense dictates that you should reconsider your objection to said Act No. 604.

Very truly yours,

MACDONALD GALLION,
Attorney General.

ARMS SHIPMENTS TO THE MIDEAST

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I have grave doubts about the wisdom of the administration's recent decision not to sell Phantom and Skyhawk jets to Israel.

I appreciate the great dangers of an arms race in this area. The big powers must resist the temptation to exploit tensions or to seek their own spheres of influence at the expense of the stability of the Middle East.

At the same time, I do not think that stability in this case is enhanced by unilateral action by the United States with absolutely no promise of a reciprocal restraint on the part of the Soviet Union.

The Secretary of State admitted yesterday that there was no sign of willingness on the part of the Soviet Union to discuss joint limits on arms shipments to the Mideast. On the contrary, Russia has recently destabilized the situation by introducing in Egypt the advanced SA–3 missile with Soviet personnel to deploy the weapon.

Libya, as we all know, has recently contracted to buy 108 Mirage jets from France—a massive striking force which can only have Israel as the target.

Furthermore, there appears to be no breakthrough in the refusal of the Arab States to allow Israel the right of peace and nationhood. Their demand continues to be for nothing short of the extinction of Israel.

What little peace or "balance" is now being preserved in the Middle East is due to the superiority of Israeli air power. Given her absolute inferiority in terms of population and strategic position, her continued superiority in the air is essential to any reasonable concept of "balanced power."

I am glad that the administration is continuing to seek the cooperation of the Soviet Union in finding a way toward permanent peace in the Mideast. I am pleased that the administration is prepared to commit economic aid to relieve Israel of the crushing burden of her war debt. And I am at least relieved that we have promised to replace downed planes and retain the option of arms sales at a future date.

But I would urge the administration to carefully review their current assessment of the Mideast situation and, hopefully, to give Israel further support in her continuing fight for survival.

SMUT PEDDLERS: THEY PREY ON THE YOUTH OF AMERICA

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the U.S. mails are the hub of the distribution system for the multimillion dollar pornography business in this country.

Much of the objectionable and obscene material that is mailed is unsolicited, and much of it is directed to children.

The Subcommittee on Juvenile Delinquency has been fighting the traffic in pornography for years, but it is a matter that requires constant watchfulness at all levels.

In an article on the wave of pornography flooding the mails, in the March 1970 issue of VFW, the magazine of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Jean E. Laird says that everyone in America with a mailing address is on the pornographers' list. She states further that 80 percent of the more than 100 million items of objectionable material mailed each year ends up in the hands of children.

Mr. President, because of the concern we all feel over this continuing problem, I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SMUT PEDDLERS: THEY PREY ON THE YOUTH OF AMERICA

(By Jean E. Laird)

Pornography is flooding the mails. Much of it is reaching our nation's youth. No reliable statistics on the amount of mailed obscenity exist, but postal authorities estimate over 100 million items of objectionable material are sent out each year.

The circulars, brochures, catalogues, pictures, books and records find their way to at least a million school children. And each of these youngsters may be passing the filth along to a half dozen others.

It is believed that 80% of all pornographic literature in the United States falls into the hands of children. William Foley, Vice-Chairman of the Citizens for Decent Literature, reports, "Children get this stuff accidentally or otherwise, then pass it among themselves at school and hide it in their lockers."

What can be done about the rising flood of pornography? Foley says citizens must pressure local law enforcement agencies, including prosecutors, to enforce existing obscenity laws.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States at its 70th National Convention in Philadelphia passed a resolution denouncing the sending of unsolicited obscene material through the mail and called for legislation to prevent it. This is a step towards shutting down the dealers in smut.

As a major target of mail order pornography, youngsters have sometimes found themselves deluged with offers of filth after innocently answering an ad for camera equipment, rare coins and stamps, or acne remedies.

This is how most people get on mailing lists of obscenity dealers. Within weeks after buying a European-made car, a Missouri housewife received an offer from Europe "of modern pornographic pictures—10 for $11." Postal inspectors caught one Louisville dealer who used the published names of blood donors as prospects for his material. And some producers of indecent publications reportedly go to the extent of purchasing grade and high school graduation lists in soliciting prospective customers.

Obscenity is a lucrative business. A Knoxville dealer had been in business only eight months, yet had already cleared $20,000 and had 100,000 new circulars ready for mailing before his arrest.

Still photos are the most common obscene item sent through the mails. These are not September Morn nudes or provocative pinups, but males and females in perverted poses. They frequently sell at $3 to $5 apiece, or six-for-$10.

Pornographic records, costing up to $6.95 apiece, rank second in volume. A firm that has mailed out tens of thousands of copies of a pornographic record catalogue was indicted as part of a crackdown by the Post Office. Still the help of parents to stop this deluge of obscenity is sorely needed.

A Detroit father of a teenage boy tells us he had caught his son reading obscene literature. Ads for it had been sent through the mail, and the boy ordered the material. He impressed upon his son the fact that peddlers of such filth use young persons as "suckers" for their racket, and are interested only in making a profit at the expense of the teenager's well-being. Instead of punishing the boy, he appealed to the boy's intelligence and sense of decency to rebuff the smut merchant and his wares.

When that teenager gets to the mail box before his parents do, and finds pornographic reading material what effect does this have on him? The experts say teenagers are deeply affected for either good or bad by what they read. Often reading pornography, they see something they had not known before, and try it out. This statement is backed by FBI records all over the country.

Dr. William E. Abramson, of Baltimore, Md., said the problem with such smut is that it "arouses and then miseducates." He explained that arousing curiosity is basically good: "That is what a professor does, he arouses curiosity and then he educates."

But, obscene literature warps the viewpoint of the child whose curiosity it arouses, Abramson pointed out. Overexposure to pornography without compensating education "is to leave the child hung up, and from hung-up kids come hung-up young people and hung-up married couples, and the continuation of the 30 or 40% divorce rate we have today," Abramson added.

President Nixon recently announced his intention to wage a "war on smut." He recognized the grave danger in the blatantly sexual materials, the sort of books typically delivered unsolicited in plain brown wrappers. This is the material against which the "war" is to be directed. A report in October states: "Uncle Sam's war on hard-core pornography will be stepped up this month. Of the 20 recognized hard-core pornographers in the nation, 12 have already been put under indictment. Four more will get the same treatment shortly."

As effective as the government's crackdown is trying to be, it is still being impeded by the soft penalties handed out by many judges.

Consider the case of two large-scale operators convicted in Ohio. At their arrest, a ton of obscene material was confiscated, along with numerous mailing lists. One of their mailings consisted of some 8,000 catalogues so vile that the Post Office was flooded with complaints from irate parents and even from businessmen whose secretaries open the mail.

Neither dealer had to serve a day in jail. Instead, the two were fined and placed on probation, even though an Act of Congress provides that sending obscene material through the mails may be punished by a prison term up to five years and a fine up to $5,000.

Recently, a Chicago man found his 12-year old son reading a "sex book" under the bedcovers with a flashlight. This book was savage, perverted sex, hideously brutal and sadistically violent. In disgust, he began to ask why the sale of such books was permitted in his city. To his astonishment he found that recent Supreme Court decisons have made it difficult, if not impossible, for local communities or states to know what standards to apply to obscenity cases.

There is an apparent confusion among prosecutors and judges over the definition of pornography, to which U.S. Supreme Court decisions have certainly contributed. It seems that to halt by law materials which some consider immoral, or pornographic is to deprive those who do not consider them so of their constitutional rights.

The noted writer, James A. Michener, says: "Children under certain ages cannot buy cigarettes or whiskey. They are forbidden to drive cars, can't have guns, contract bills or get married. Yet in the most difficult areas, our nation has failed to set clear any enforceable standards to prevent the sale of sexually destructive materials to minors."

Federal, state and local laws deal with transmittal of obscene materials. But, law enforcement alone cannot effectively combat the obscene literature traffic. The full cooperation of the community is essential. Parents bear a heavy responsibility in seeing that their children are not harmed by exposure to filthy literature.

It is up to the ordinary citizen to keep his postal officials alerted. Turn over any obscene mailed material—including the envelope or wrapper—to your local postmaster or postal inspector, or send it to: Chief Postal Inspector, Washington, D.C. 20260.

You can also support stronger local and state legislation against pornography. And, don't be afraid to speak out against obscenity. According to the U.S. Supreme Court "contemporary community standards" is the all-important key to what is considered obscene.

By speaking out you will be helping to protect this nation's most precious resource—our youth.

THE SAFEGUARD ABM SYSTEM

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, in the not too distant future, we shall be debating the necessity of proceeding with phase II of the Safeguard ABM system.

One of the very important reasons why we must approve phase II is the increasing Soviet strategic military threat. So that Senators can become familiar with the truly disturbing dimensions of this threat, I ask unanimous consent that an article in the March issue of Aviation Week, entitled "Soviets Press Strategic Military Expansion," be printed in the RECORD. I urge every Senator to consider this article carefully as he prepares for the upcoming debate.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOVIETS PRESS STRATEGIC MILITARY EXPANSION

(By Donald C. Winston)

Soviet military strength has continued to expand dramatically, despite Russia's apparently earnest participation in Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT) and professed interest in easing East-West tensions.

Biggest growth by far has been in strategic nuclear forces, where the Russians have exceeded all earlier U.S. intelligence estimates and swept to a clear lead in the number of deployed, combat-ready intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBM) with high-yield warheads.

At the same time, the Soviets have:

Continued intensive testing of new tactical fighter aircraft.

Flown a prototype Mach 2 variable-geometry medium bomber.

Sharply increased their missile submarine production to take advantage of a new, advanced underwater-launched strategic missile.

Improved their anti-ballistic missile (ABM) defense.

Tested new types of ICBM's.

According to Defense Dept. estimates, Soviet military, space and atomic energy research and development funding will reach the approximate equivalent of $14–17 billion for 1970. This compares with an expected U.S. expenditure of less than $14 billion during Fiscal 1971. Soviet research and development spending in these areas has shown a 10–13% annual growth rate in recent years, while the U.S. has remained on a relatively level plane.

Heavy Soviet research spending is seen as indicative of a desire to continue to improve military capabilities in the long run.

Only in the areas of medium-range nuclear missiles and strategic bombers have the Russians failed to make major advances.

A significant recent development is a super-heavy-lift logistic helicopter, the Mil Mi-12 Homer. The latter, informally nicknamed the "Butterfly" by its designers, has a running-takeoff payload capacity of nearly 40 tons and will serve as a logistic link between the Antonov An-22 heavy logistic transport and forward battle areas in a conventional land war.

Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird, in his recent posture statement, declared that the Soviet Union is moving forward so rapidly in development and deployment of advanced weapon systems that by the mid-1970s they could "place us in a second-rate strategic position with regard to the future security of the Free World."

Laird asserted there was no Soviet budgetary response to last year's U.S. defense spending reductions, nor have there been any signs of Soviet military cutbacks to match announced lower U.S. spending for Fiscal 1971.

Specific Soviet weapon developments which most concern U.S. officials at this time include:

Mig–23 Foxbat Mach 3 fighter, whose formal introduction into the Soviet air force inventory is expected during 1970. The Mig–23 appears to have a dual role: pure interceptor and high-altitude missile-launching strategic strike aircraft. It has been tested with the 20-ft. Ash air-to-air missile, developed originally for use on the Tupolev Tu-28 Fiddler fighter. The Ash appears to be an interim weapon for the Foxbat, which will probably be fitted with an advanced missile. Up to four such missiles can be carried on the aircraft.

Mig–23 range is far longer than that of the Mig–21, currently the top-rated fighter in the Soviet inventory. Foxbat is believed capable of delivering a heavy nuclear payload from an altitude in excess of 60,000 ft. It is not designed for ground-attack missions, though it could be used for such a role in extreme circumstances or in a surprise attack.

Airborne warning and command system (AWACS). Soviets are now using a Tupolev Tu-114 transport in passenger configuration as the platform for AWACS testing, with a Tu-28 as the controlled fighter. Soviet AWACS capability is considered about on a par with that of the U.S.: not good enough for operations. The Russians appear to be three to five years away from perfecting an advanced system and may employ the Mig–23 as the controlled fighter, either as a substitute for or in conjunction with the Tu-28. Foxbat's range approaches that of the Fiddler.

Soviet inventory does not include downward-looking radar, and current tests show no apparent capability over land areas. However, components now under test are considered predecessors of an advanced AWACS.

Variable-geometry medium bomber based on the Tupolev Tu-22 Blinder design. Variable geometry is expected to provide the new bomber with a range up to 4,000 mi. and a dash capability in excess of Mach 2. Like the Blinder, the new aircraft, now flying in prototype form, has two rear-mounted engines and will probably carry a long-range air-to-surface missile.

MiG-21H fighter, which appears to be a Soviet answer to the lessons of the Arab-Israeli six-day war of 1967. New MiG carries a gun as well as missiles, and has improved avionics for all-weather flying. It can be configured for photo-reconnaissance.

SS–9 Scarp ICBM buildup, which has now exceeded 275, compared with earlier predictions of only 230 for this time. While Scarp can carry a single 25-megaton warhead, recent tests have involved three re-entry vehicles, with probable megatonnage ceilings of five each. Independently targeted re-entry vehicles have apparently not yet been tested, although the Soviets are believed interested in attaining this capability.

Continued deployment of the smaller SS–11 Savage ICBM and the SS–13, which has not yet been publicly displayed by the Soviets. Including Scarp, the Russians are estimated to have more than 1,100 ICBMs operational at this time, and at their current buildup rate will have more than 1,250 by mid-year, compared with 1,054 U.S. Air Force Minuteman launchers. Based on current Soviet construction activity at launch sites, the present missile buildup will continue at least through mid-1971, with a possible level of 2,500 launchers being reached by the middle of the decade. Approximately 10,000 separate warheads could be encompassed in this number, based on current efforts to upgrade the SS–9.

Apparent shipbuilding priority on Y-class ballistic missile submarines, which are approximately equivalent in size and range to the nuclear-powered U.S. Polaris submarines. The Y-class submarine is capable of carrying 16 Sawfly underwater-launched ballistic missiles, which are roughly equivalent to the Lockheed Polaris A–3 in warhead. Sawfly, replacing the earlier Serb missile, has a range of only 1,200 naut. mi., and the Soviets may be developing a multi-warhead follow-on missile equivalent to the Lockheed Poseidon.

Major submarine-producing facility is at Severodvinsk on the north coast of European Russia, near Archangelsk. Production capacity of Severodvinsk and other yards totals eight annually.

Although the Russians had only 45 nuclear submarine ballistic missile launchers available to them as of September, 1968, one year later the total had risen to approximately 110, with construction still on the increase. All of the added capacity is in Y-class submarines. At the present rate of production and deployment, the Russians are expected to have as many as 50 nuclear missile submarines operational by 1974–75, at which time they will have as many as 800 launchers. This level will be reached two years earlier than the estimates of only one year ago.

At present approximately 30 Soviet submarines have cruise missile capability, carrying the Styx missile.

Ballistic missile defense improvements, with 60 Galosh anti-ballistic missile (ABM) launchers now deployed in the Moscow area. The Moscow ABM system is described as "nearly complete" by U.S. officials, who believe that the slowdown in deployment noted a year ago may have been related to near-completion of the installation. Galosh is roughly equivalent to the U.S. McDonnell Douglas Spartan and provides only a broad area defense.

Meanwhile, tests at the Sari-Shagan impact range, near Lake Balkash in Soviet Kazakhstan, indicate the Russians are developing an improved Galosh-type ABM and are actively working to improve their radar. Second-generation ABM components so far include advanced phased-array radars but not a Martin Sprint-type short-range missile.

Introduction of the SA–5 Griffon surface-to-air missile at locations other than Tallin, Estonia. SA–5 has intercept capability to 95,000 ft. and was originally deployed at Tallin to protect the western air approaches of Leningrad. It is now deployed near the Black Sea military port of Ilichovsk and others.

Continued development of a retro-fired missile, which may take the form of a fractional orbit bombardment system (FOBS) or a depressed-trajectory ICBM. Both weapons would greatly complicate the U.S. missile defense mission. Tests at Sari-Shagan, which is the world's largest impact range, indicate the Soviets may be attempting to develop both weapon concepts separately as well as a single weapon which would involve elements of both. U.S. officials believe some FOBS-type warheads may already be deployed in existing SS–9 missile silos.

In long-range manned bombers, the Soviets have shown no evidence of new developments, and in fact appear to be planning a slight retrogression in the number of active aircraft.

At present, Russia has between 150 and 200 Tupolev Tu–20 Bear and Myasishchev M–4 Bison heavy bombers in inventory, roughly the same figure as three years ago. About 50 tankers are included in the force level. In addition, the Soviet air force has about 700 medium bombers, including the Tupolev Tu–16 Badger and the Tu–22 Blinder, as well as tankers.

Of these, only the Tu–22 supersonic bomber appears to be still in production, but few of these are expected to be added over the next few years. It is not known how many of the variable-geometry follow-on Tu–22s will be activated during the 1970s.

Similarly, no great increase has been observed in the size of the Soviet intermediate-range missile forces in recent years. Approximately 700 launchers have been deployed, most of them mobile, with the majority still located in western Russia and aimed at North Atlantic Treaty Organization nations. Large numbers of these missiles were redeployed to Soviet Central Asia, near the Chinese western border, several months after the 1968 Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia, and they are still in the Chinese border area.

The major unknown in U.S. evaluation of Soviet military posture involves the degree of internal refinement the Russians intend to build into their deployed major weapons. U.S. officials can easily determine the number of aircraft the Soviets are flying and can count the number of missile launchers. But there is no effective way to determine the degree of technology embodied in these weapons.

In tactical air strength, the Soviets have boosted their manned interceptor inventory by 5% in the past year, largely in MiG–21s, Tu–28s and the new shortrange interceptor, Sukhoi Flagon A. U.S. officials believe that the Russians will permit their total interceptor force to decline later in the decade, as older MiG–19s and Yak–25s are phased out of the inventory to be placed by the higher-technology, newer aircraft.

Of present Soviet tactical air, approximately 40% is kept available for close air support, air strike and interdiction missions; another 40% for air defense and the remainder for reconnaissance and reconnaissance strike. A disproportionate number of obsolescent MiG–17 fighters and Ilyushin Il–28 light bombers are believed to be present in current ground attack and reconnaissance forces.

A major factor in Soviet tactical air is the relatively short range of the fighters. While the Russians place emphasis on the ability of their aircraft to operate from remote and unimproved fields, this very factor tends to lower the sortie rate which would be expected because of the difficulty in providing complex maintenance at such fields.

Russian tactical air is designed primarily for operations in Europe, where maintenance equipment and personnel could be quickly airlifted to advance fields, particularly with the use of the Mi–12 Homer heavy logistic helicopter.

In addition to the MiG–23 and the Flagon A, the Russians may be planning to introduce the variable-geometry MiG Flogger later in the decade, as well as Flagon B short takeoff and landing (STOL) fighter and an improved version of the Yakovlev Freehand vertical takeoff and landing (VTOL) fighter.

An armed helicopter so far has been missing from the Soviet Tactical air fleet, probably because counterinsurgency is not part of current Russian military doctrine. The Russians have been experimenting with guns on the Kamov Ka–25 helicopter, which is designated primarily for anti-submarine warfare.

TIGHTEN CONTROLS ON AUTHORIZATION CARDS

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, the reckless attitude of the National Labor Relations Board toward the use of union authorization cards was carefully documented in the recent report on the Board by the Judiciary Subcommittee on Separation of Powers.

The subcommittee, after extensive hearings and nearly 20 months of study, found that the NLRB often has distorted the intent of the Taft-Hartley Act by permitting these cards to be used in ways which destroy free employee choice.

The report also concluded that the NLRB has applied double standards toward employers and unions in its policy toward the cards, and has continued to issue bargaining orders based upon the cards even though the Board's own Chairman, Mr. Frank McCullough, has stated publicly that authorization cards are notoriously unreliable.

I was pleased this week to discover that the Wall Street Journal has taken up the fight against the NLRB in this important area. In an editorial published on March 19, 1970, the Journal urged that Congress take action to insure that the Board is more cautious in its acceptance of authorization cards at face value.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Wall Street Journal editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CAUTION ON CARDS

Unions trying to organize employes often ask them to sign "authorization" cards. There's nothing wrong with that process alone, but serious problems can stem from the card's later use.

In many cases, of course, the cards merely serve as evidence to support a union's petition for a National Labor Relations Board election. In a secret-ballot vote the employes then may decide whether or not they want the union to represent them.

Trouble can arise, however, from the fact that the employe has already chosen the union as his representative. The organizer doesn't always make that fact clear, and incautious employes often don't bother to read what they're signing. Many sign the cards in the belief that they're merely supporting an NLRB election.

Nonetheless, the board in some cases has accepted the cards, in lieu of a vote, as binding evidence of the employes' desires. It may do so, for instance, if it decides that some alleged misconduct by the employer has made a fair vote "impossible." While it's conceivable that employer conduct could make a fair election difficult, even the result of that sort of vote could be more meaningful than the cards of employes who may not have had the slightest idea what they signed.

Problems also can arise when the union first presents the cards to the employer. In one case a union did so, arguing that they showed a majority of the employes wanted the union to represent them. After verifying the signatures, the employer agreed and signed a contract.

Only later did he learn that a number of employes thought they had only asked for a union election. Yet when he and some employes appealed to the NLRB to decertify the union, they found that they were struck.

"In a long line of precedents the board has stated that its general practice in representation cases is to presume the regularity and legality of an agreement entered into by an employer with a union . . . and to refuse to admit evidence on the question of whether or not a majority of employes had freely designated the union as their bargaining representative," the NLRB said. "The board normally refuses to receive evidence in representation cases that signatures on cards were unlawfully obtained or were otherwise invalid or fradulent."

The employer and employes can, if they choose, file unfair labor practice charges and start through the legal mill once more. A more sensible solution would be for Congress to insist that the board take a more cautious attitude toward the cards.

FORMER ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF INTERIOR CAIN RECEIVES AWARD

Mr. HART. Mr. President, it is with very great pleasure that I note for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that the Ecological Society of America earlier this year designated Stanley A. Cain as "Eminent Ecologist." This is one of the highest honors of the Ecological Society, and it is awarded most appropriately to Dr. Cain, former Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Fish, Wildlife, and Parks and currently professor of conservation in the School of Natural Resources at the University of Michigan.

Dr. Cain is greatly respected in Washington, in the Nation, and, indeed, worldwide. His selection for this honor will be widely acclaimed. I ask unanimous consent that the Ann Arbor news article which describes the citation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROF. CAIN NAMED "EMINENT ECOLOGIST"

The designation "eminent ecologist," one of the highest honors of the Ecological Society of America, has been conferred upon University Prof. Stanley A. Cain.

Prof. Cain, who now serves as Charles Lathrop Pack professor of conservation in the U-M School of Natural Resources, recently completed three years as U.S. assistant secretary of the interior for fish, wildlife and parks.

The society acknowledged that Prof. Cain "has preceded us and led us in the development of the science of ecology." Ecology is that branch of biology concerned with the interrelationships between all organisms and their environment.

The citation reads in part:

"From his Hoosier days of wonder before the cypress swamps and ruins of New Harmony, he has always been guided by the double searchlight of scientific endeavor and social responsibility. Many of us have experienced the grave difficulty of choosing between scholarship and public works, bearing in mind that whatever message we might bring to our communities derived its value from our substance as scientists . . . Not so, it seems, for Stanley Cain in Indiana, Illinois, and Tennessee, when he gave himself so completely to the study of flora and vegetation, picking up clues from European workers then very poorly understood in America.

"He contributed more than anyone to break the embattled provincialism of the early 30s among American botanists, by restating and critically analyzing concepts of vegetation analysis. As for the science of floristics, his book 'Foundations of Plant Geography' set up a new framework for a tired discipline very badly in need of rejuvenation."

Educated at Butler University and the University of Chicago, Prof. Cain taught at Butler, Indiana University, the University of Tennessee and Cranbrook Institute of Science in Bloomfield Hills before joining the Michigan faculty in 1950.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, the Duluth News-Tribune, in an editorial published February 19, and the Faribault Daily News, in a March 6 editorial, commented on the hearings recently held on S. 3137, to make possible a toll reduction on the St. Lawrence Seaway. I was proud to introduce the bill with 14 cosponsors from both parties from all the States in the Upper Midwest.

The News-Tribune concluded that the "choice for Congress should be obvious." That is, to "drop the debt and allow the Seaway to fulfill its potential as an intra- and international waterway, creating jobs, stimulating trade and adding to the economy of the nation by providing a competitive avenue of commerce."

The Daily News pointed out that:

A significant reduction in toll rates . . . could produce an increase in traffic on the St. Lawrence Seaway.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the editorials be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIFT DEBT ON SEAWAY

By way of favorable decisions from the Interstate Commerce Commission and the U.S. Supreme Court, the federal government recently gave two major railroads permission to merge, thereby improving the railroads' competitive position.

It would seem only fair, then, for the federal government, through congressional action, to improve the competitive position of the St. Lawrence Seaway by removing from the seaway corporation the debt for construction of the Seaway.

It would seem especially fair considering that no other major waterway in the United States has to pay back the construction costs to the government.

Sen. Walter Mondale, D-Minn., (in a joint effort with senators from all the states bordering on the Great Lakes and therefore, which use the Seaway), last November introduced a bill to eliminate this debt. Tuesday, Mondale testified in support of that bill before a Senate subcommittee on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway.

At present, the St. Lawrence Seaway Corp. is required to pay back to the federal government by 2009 the $120 million capital cost of developing the Seaway, plus interest. At the same time, the corporation has been required to pay the Seaway's maintaince costs.

Mondale has called this "government sanctioned discrimination," and he supports that contention by pointing out that the government has paid $56 million to develop and $50 million to operate and maintain the Gulf Intercoastal Waterway; has paid $62 million to develop and $11 million to operate and maintain the Mississippi River-Gulf Outlet; has paid $33 million and $37 million to maintain and operate the Houston Ship Channel, and has paid $130 million to develop and $140 million to maintain and operate the Delaware River Channel to Philadelphia.

Mondale has proposed that the government only write off the Seaway debt, making it a permanent investment in a commerical waterway. He has taken the position that the Seaway can pay its own operating and maintenance costs if not faced with repaying the development costs.

Dropping the debt for development is the only sensible alternative available to the government really, if it wants to have the Seaway at all. If the debt isn't dropped, then the Seaway must consider repayment through increased toll fees, and this surely would diminish the traffic on the Seaway, making it even less able to make repayment.

The government's choice, then, is quite simple: it can continue to demand repayment, and perhaps get some repayment before the Seaway becomes inoperable because of bankruptcy—or the government may drop the debt and allow the Seaway to fulfill its potential as an intra- and international waterway, creating jobs, stimulating trade and adding to the economy of the nation by providing a competitive avenue of commerce.

The choice for Congress should be obvious.

SEAWAY HAS DEFICIT

The St. Lawrence Seaway has been busy ever since it was completed and has recorded increases in shipping tonnage every year except on since it opened in 1959. Even so, toll collections of the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corp, have been insufficient to meet payments on the $131.6 million debt to the U.S. Treasury for the American share (27 percent) of original seaway construction. An aide to Sen. Walter F. Mondale (D.Minn.) says that toll revenues of the corporation have paid off "hardly a nickel" of the debt, which now stands at around $150 million in principal and interest.

Mondale thus has sponsored a bill which would cancel the corporation's debt and permit all toll revenues to be used for meeting operation and maintenance costs. The senate commerce committee's sub-committee on Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway transportation, of which Mondale is chairman, will open hearings on the bill on Feb. 17. If the measure should be approved, and if Canada were to adopt similar legislation, it might be possible to reduce seaway toll rates by as much as two-thirds.

Cancellation of the U.S. portion of seaway debt would be, in one view, an act of simple justice. Herbert D. Doan, chairman of the 10th anniversary seaway celebration, pointed out last Dec. 13 that "Billions of dollars have been spent in other parts of the country on waterways, and yet the Great Lakes Seaway is the only waterway in the United States which requires the payment of tolls." Doan urged that governors of the Great Lakes states "get together and exercise their considerable power" to demand federal help in operating the seaway. But Doan may have over-rated the power of the Great Lakes states. Several previous bills aimed at easing the seaway corporation's financial burden have failed to win approval in congress.

U.S. waterway shipping operators are proud of their efficiency. For a dollar, they say, a customer can send a ton of cargo 330 miles by barge, as compared with 66.7 miles by rail and 15.4 miles by truck. Although waterway shippers have brought into use towboats that can push in one load as much cargo as could be lifted by 1,500 of the largest trucks or by almost 1,000 railroad cars, the industry has not raised its rate of three-tenths of a cent per ton-mile in 20 years. A significant reduction in toll rates therefore could produce an increase in traffic on the St. Lawrence Seaway sufficient to partially offset the drop in toll revenue.

THE AMERICAN STAKE IN THE DEFENSE OF ISRAEL

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, when Prime Minister Golda Meir of Israel visited our country in February, she asked our Government to sell Israel an additional 25 F–4 Phantom jets and 100 A–4 Skyhawk jets. The administration undertook to consider the proposal.

The decision on Israel's request was announced by Secretary of State Rogers at his press conference yesterday. The Secretary said that in the judgment of the State Department, Israel's air capacity is sufficient to meet its needs for the time being, and that, in consequence, it had been decided to hold in abeyance the decision on Israel's request for additional aircraft.

I know that the administration agrees that it is in our national interest to help Israel preserve her freedom, and that the destruction of Israel by the forces that threaten her would be a moral and political disaster for the entire free world.

Many of our people are concerned over the possibility of American involvement in the Mideast conflict.

I understand and share this concern.

The Israelis, however, have demonstrated that they are more than able to take care of themselves, if they can get the weapons to equip their own forces.

The surest way to prevent American involvement, under these circumstances, is to make certain that Israel has the weapons it needs to defend itself against the possibility of renewed Arab aggression.

It is because of this that I have serious misgivings about the administration's decision to put off action on the requested sale and to make the sale contingent on future assessments of the situation.

Israel's neighbors, between them, have from three to four times the number of aircraft that the Israelis have.

Moreover, the Soviets, in addition to pumping in ever more aircraft, are now sending large numbers of SAM–3 antiaircraft missiles and thousands of Soviet military personnel to Egypt.

It has been argued that, although the Israel air force is far inferior to the Arab forces in numbers, the Israelis are so far ahead of the Arabs qualitatively that, in actual fact, they enjoy superiority in the air.

As far as this present moment is concerned, there is something to this argument. In terms of the skill and elan and dedication of its pilots and the quality of its maintenance crews, the Israel air force is certainly one of the finest in the world.

The Arab air forces, on the other hand, although they have first-rate modern planes, perform abysmally because their pilot morale is low and their ground crews unskilled and unmotivated.

But the problem of aircraft attrition is a far more serious one for the Israelis than it is for the Arabs.

With their tiny air force of roughly 300 planes, the Israelis are flying virtually around the clock. The planes are even more overworked than the pilots, because the Israelis have two pilots for every plane.

Far more serious than their losses in battle is the day-in and day-out attriton that takes place, even with the best of maintenance, when planes are flown as hard as the Israelis fly theirs.

To give them the strength that they must have, a year from now or 2 years from now, to meet the continuing Arab buildup in military aviation, it is necessary that decisions be made today on future deliveries of aircraft to the Israelis. As a matter of fact, the experience has been that the average time lag between a contract for the sale of aircraft and actual delivery runs something like 18 months.

Secretary Rogers in his statement described the decision to hold up action on the sale of aircraft to Israel as an "interim decision"; and he said that if steps are taken to upset the current balance, the President would not hesitate to reconsider the matter.

The Secretary of State also confirmed that the United States would be granting economic aid totaling roughly $100 million to the State of Israel, including credits to cover payment on past military contracts.

The sincerity of the administration's commitment to the defense of Israelis, I believe, beyond challenge. But in the light of the facts I have here set forth, I hope that the administration will move to reassess the Mideast situation without undue delay, and that Israel will receive the planes she needs and has requested.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a number of recent newspaper articles dealing with the continuing buildup of Soviet arms in the Arab countries.

There being no objection the items were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Mar. 18, 1970]

NEW AIR-DEFENSE SYSTEM DELIVERED TO EGYPT—SOVIETS INCLUDE ANTIAIRCRAFT MISSILES, RADARS, COMPUTERS

(By John K. Cooley)

BEIRUT, LEBANON.—The Soviet Union has delivered a complete new air-defense system to the United Arab Republic.

It reportedly includes late-type antiaircraft missiles, radar, electronic guidance devices, computers, and Soviet technicians to man them.

Ten freighters brought the Soviet equipment to Alexandria from Yugoslav ports during the five-day period of March 12 to 16. More shipments were expected, a correspondent of the American Broadcasting Company's television news recently in Egypt reported.

Intelligence sources here said the shipments were of defensive equipment only, designed to repair Egyptian air defenses badly shattered to the Israeli air offensive that began last December.

Neither advanced jet aircraft such as the Soviet MIG–23 nor any surface-to-surface missiles were included, the sources added.

MISSILES INCLUDED

Main items in the shipments were Soviet SAM–3 missiles. These are two-stage antiaircraft weapons, probably of the type called Goa in NATO terminology. They are designed especially for use against low-flying aircraft usually unreachable with the earlier SAM–2 Guideline missile. Guidelines have been used by North Vietnam and Egypt and have been deployed in many Soviet-supplied countries for nearly 10 years.

Since the Israeli Air Force began heavy strikes inside Egypt last fall, the SAM–2's have knocked down only a few of the attacking Israeli planes, probably including one Phantom fighter bomber. Israeli fighter bombers have destroyed many SAM–2 emplacements.

Besides the SAM–3's, new factors in the latest Soviet shipments are much more sophisticated radar and computer equipment than the Soviet Union had supplied before, and the arrival of several hundred more Soviet technicians including, it was believed, firing crews supplied by the Soviet Red Army rocket-forces command.

Israeli commandos removed one complete Soviet radar set of an earlier type last December in a raid near Ras Gharib, on Egypt's Gulf of Suez coast, and flew it to Israel.

SPOKESMEN COMPLAIN

President Nasser has recently remarked that the United States had given Israel the most advanced possible electronic range finders and computers.

Egyptian spokesmen complained that it was difficult to obtain similar advanced equipment in these fields from the Soviets since Egypt had no sure knowledge of exactly what the Soviet inventory offered.

Soviet delivery of the new defensive weapons to Egypt is interpreted here as a signal from Moscow that it wants to reduce the damage done almost daily to Egypt by Israel's overwhelmingly superior Air Force.

At the same time, by holding off on deliveries of advanced jet planes or offensive missiles, Moscow is signaling Washington that it does not want to escalate the Mideast arms race in offensive weapons.

DISSUASION SEEN

This, the Soviets apparently feel, may dissuade President Nixon from granting Israel's requests for new United States Phantom and Skyhawk fighter bombers and for more than 100 large Sikorsky helicopters. Israel wants the helicopters for commando operations of the type it carried out against Syria March 16 and 17.

Washington reports said March 17 that President Nixon's decision, delayed past the March 1 deadline he had set, could be expected before the end of the current week.

The Soviet arms deliveries to Egypt through Yugoslavia were probably arranged in a series of talks since January between President Nasser, the Russian leadership and Yugoslav President Tito, who visited Egypt last month, Western diplomats believe.

FLEET REINFORCED

They were accompanied by a reinforcement of the Soviet Mediterranean fleet. One of the new units arriving in the Mediterranean from the Black Sea about March 11 was an 18,000-ton floating dock towed by three tugs. Turkish naval sources in Istanbul said it was headed for Egypt.

The dock might be intended for clearing or salvage operations in Egyptian harbors, such as Port Said, at the northern end of the blocked Suez Canal.

Or, naval expects here believed, it might serve Soviet naval units in some secluded but poorly equipped Egyptian Mediterranean port, such as Sollum near the Libyan frontier.

The total Soviet Mediterranean fleet strength increased during the two previous weeks, a NATO naval spokesman in Naples said March 17. There now were 50 to 52 ships including 11 to 13 submarines, he added. This was a total increase of 10 to 12 units during the period and is greater than Soviet strength at the same time last year.

The Soviet flotilla includes the helicopter carrier Moskva which reentered the Mediterranean Jan. 4. The Moskva also normally carries a contingent of Soviet marines.

[From the New York Times, Feb. 17, 1970]

SOVIET PROMISES "NECESSARY" HELP FOR ARAB STATES—SAYS IT WILL BOLSTER THEIR DEFENSES AGAINST ISRAEL'S "CRIMINAL" AGGRESSION—MIG–23'S MAY BE SENT—MOSCOW STATEMENT VOICES DESIRE TO HAVE A POLITICAL SETTLEMENT IN MIDEAST

(By Bernard Gwertzman)

Moscow.—The Soviet Union asserted tonight that it would supply the Arab countries with "the necessary support" to bolster their defenses against what it termed Israel's criminal policy of aggression.

A brief, but sharply worded statement issued by Tass, the Soviet press agency, combined what appeared to be a pledge of military aid to the Arabs with a reaffirmation of Soviet desires for a peaceful settlement of the Middle East crisis.

The statement was the latest in a series of public and private declarations by the Soviet Union since Premier Aleksei N. Kosygin's letter to Western leaders late last month calling for urgent diplomatic moves to end Israel's occupation of Arab territory.

Western diplomats tended to regard the Tass statement as an indication that barring a diplomatic solution, which seems unlikely at this moment, additional Soviet military aid, such as late model MIG–23 fighters, would be sent to the United Arab Republic and other Arab countries.

LANGUAGE IS VITUPERATIVE

The language of the statement was extremely vituperative against Israel, in line with occasional press articles here that compare Israel with Nazi Germany.

"The Soviet people resolutely denounce the barbarous aggressive actions of Israel," the statement said. "They express their solidarity with the Arab states fighting for their legitimate rights."

Asserting Soviet desire for a political settlement, the statement said: "The policy of the Soviet Union is aimed at establishing peace again in the Middle East, to make national strife and wars a thing of the past. And our country will not weaken its efforts in this direction."

NASSER SEEKS MIG–23'S

"But as long as the aggressor tramples underfoot the principles and goals of the United Nations Charter and decisions of that international organization on the liquidation of the consequences of Israeli aggression and the restoration of peace in the Middle East," the statement continued, "the Soviet Union will render the necessary support to the Arab states in strengthening their ability to uphold their security and their just interests."

The Soviet declaration did not specify what constituted necessary support.

President Gamal Abdel Nasser of the United Arab Republic has indicated in recent weeks that he would like the MIG–23's to counter the United States-made Phantoms recently acquired by Israel.

On Friday, President Nasser said in an interview with James Reston of The New York Times that he was seeking MIG–23's as well as Soviet technological aid to offset Israeli air attacks but that he was hesitating about asking for Soviet pilots to fly the aircraft.

If additional military aid is sent, Soviet officials undoubtedly would justify it as necessary in light of Israel's recent activity and the failure of President Nixon to side with the Soviet Union against Israel.

Mr. Nixon's proposal, in answer to Mr. Kosygin's letter, for a total arms embargo on the Middle East, was rejected by the Soviet Union last week on the ground that it drew no distinction between "the aggressor" and the "victims of aggression."

GUERRILLIAS SEEM IGNORED

Western diplomats also noted that the pledge to aid "Arab states" seemed to rule out overt Soviet military support for the Palestine guerrilla organizations. Yasir Arafat, the head of Al Fatah, the largest guerrilla organization, is in the Soviet Union as the guest of the African-Asian Solidarity Group, a nongovernmental body.

Mr. Arafat has been ignored by the Soviet press, and it is assumed that he is not getting the degree of publicity he may have liked.

The statement took note of last week's bombing by Israeli aircraft of a scrap-metal processing plant near Cairo in which at least 70 civilians were killed.

It said that "in its desire to thwart a peaceful political settlement in the Middle East, the Israeli leadership is prepared, apparently, to trespass all limits, to resort to any atrocities, disregarding the elementary principles of humaneness and norms of international law."

"The Israeli militarists and those who put weapons into their hands are confident, it appears, that by means of blackmail and threats, by means of the notorious escalation of aggression, they will be able to make the Arab states, and primarily the neighbors of Israel, renounce their lawful interests and accept the imperialist demands," it said.

THANT TO MEET JARRING

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y.—Secretary General Thant and Dr. Gunnar V. Jarring of Sweden, his special representative, will meet in Geneva Wednesday to access their "roles in seeking to cope" with the "increasingly serious deterioration" of the Middle East situation, a United Nations spokesman today said.

Mr. Thant will stop in Geneva on his way home to Burma, where he will spend a week with his two brothers and his ailing mother.

Mr. Thant is known to be deeply concerned over the intensification of fighting in the Middle East and the absence of progress in the Big Four talks here. The talks, now about a year old, were called in the hope that the big powers could agree on an outline for a peaceful settlement which Dr. Jarring would then submit to the Arab and Israeli governments.

A six-nation United Nations investigative body, meanwhile, reported that it had heard charges that the Israelis had allegedly tortured prisoners in prisons in Nablus, Jerusalem and Gaza. The conclusions of the report were made public by the United Nations.

The group said that it had collected evidence and heard witnesses in New York, Geneva, Beirut, Damascus, Amman and Cairo but had not obtained any cooperation from Israel and had been barred from the territories held by Israeli forces.

"The evidence received was one-sided, nevertheless the group was able to make an evaluation of such evidence," the report said. The group included representatives of Austria, India, Peru, Senegal, Tanzania and Yugoslavia. It was set a year ago, by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

The reporter said that in addition to charge of torture, the group had heard witnesses contend that "Israeli forces had occasionally ill-treated and killed civilians without provocation."

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Jan. 3, 1970]

ARABS CHART NEW ARMS BUILDUP AGAINST ISRAEL

(By John R. Cooley)

BEIRUT, LEBANON.—President Nasser's announcement in Khartoum, Sudan, Jan. 1 that Egypt will raise a million-man army opened what may become a warlike 1970 for the Arab states.

As the Egyptian leader spoke, Palestinian guerrilla warfare was intensified against Israel and new Israeli air blows were aimed at Egypt and Jordan.

Egypt's antiaircraft defenses along the Suez Canal were reported to be virtually destroyed in some sectors. Jordan's vital East Ghor irrigation canal was knocked out by Israeli bombing Jan. 1 for the third time since last June. Israel had permitted its repair on two previous occasions in return for assurances by King Hussein of low military and guerrilla activity against nearby Israeli settlements.

At the same time Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Dayan and Information Minister Israel Galili both warned Lebanon of "consequences" of guerrilla warfare like those suffered by Egypt's Suez Canal towns and the villages of the Jordan River valley.

BLAME AND PRAISE

In his remarks in Khartoum President Nasser had the sharpest blame for the United States and the highest praise for France and the Soviet Union since the breakdown of the Arab summit conference in Rabat Dec. 24.

To observers here the tenor of his remarks suggested the start of new psychological warfare against the United States and possibly against "reactionary" Arab regimes, mainly Saudi Arabia and Kuwait as well.

President Nasser and Egyptian Foreign Minister Mahmud Riyad were in Khartoum Jan. 1 and 2 for celebrations of Sudan's 14th Independence anniversary and for talks with Maj. Gen. Gaaun el Numeiry's Sudanese regime.

Their visit followed tripartite talks in Tripoli forming an unofficial alliance with the revolutionary regimes of Libya and Sudan.

ARMED FORCES ASSESSED

President Nasser said Egypt now has 500,000 men "at the front and we are in the process of building a strong army of 1 million fighters to confront Israel and those behind Israel."

Last October the Institute of Strategic Studies in London estimated Egypt's total armed forces including mobilized reserves at 207,000. Mohammed Hasanain Haykal, editor of the newspaper Al Ahram and a close associate of President Nasser, called the institute's figures "wrong" without explaining where the errors lay.

"We confront not only Israel but the United States and the other imperialist powers as well," President Nasser added. He termed the recent U.S. proposals for Egyptian-Israeli and Jordanian-Israeli peace settlements as "suspicious schemes" in which "the U.S. goal is to enable Israel to grasp the throats of Arab states and keep control of Arab territory."

President Nasser made no reference to the recent flight of five embargoed French-made gunboats to Israel. confirming views of observers here that Cairo and most other Arab capitals do not plan to allow the incident to disturb French-Arab relations.

In Cairo Al Ahram said France had given Israel "a slap in the face" by demanding recall of Adm. Mordechai Limon, chief of the Israeli purchasing mission in Paris and by suspending two senior French officers connected with the affair.

In Tripoli, however, the official radio quoted Col. Muammar al Quaddafi, the Libyan chief of state, as expressing "fear that the gunboat incident may affect relations between France and the Arabs" because of "the concern felt by Arab public opinion."

ARMS SALES REVISED

Paris and Tripoli have been negotiating for the sale of French arms, including Mirage 5 fighter-bombers and AMZ 30 heavy tanks to Libya.

Last week the British Aircraft Corporation canceled "with regret" an antiaircraft weapons system contract worth about $240 million, negotiated by the government of King Idris. Libya had failed to meet installment payments on the contract.

Since the Rabat summit conference Libya has shown intentions of aligning its arms purchases and defense policies with those of Egypt. These apparently aim at building up large conventional forces in the northeast corner of Africa for an ultimate showdown with Israel.

Some military sources expect as a result of the U.A.R.-Libyan-Sudanese talks the strengthening of Sudanese forces along the Suez Canal front and the dispatch of the first battalion of Libyan troops to the canal.

Kuwati and Algerian forces also serve on the canal, and Algerian artillerymen and commandos have been reported active in combat there.

[From the New York Times, Mar. 19, 1970]

SOVIET TROOPS AND MISSILES REPORTED TO BE IN EGYPT

A large number of Soviet troops and modern SAM–3 antiaircraft missiles have arrived in the United Arab Republic in the last week, according to information reaching here from reliable diplomatic sources in Cairo.

The missiles, designed to cope with low-flying enemy aircraft, are rapidly being put into position at the port city of Alexandria, at an air base west of Cairo and elsewhere in Egypt, it was reported.

Soviet soldiers have been observed driving trucks bearing nine missiles on the desert highway linking Cairo with Alexandria.

For the last week, according to the diplomatic sources, the highway has been closed to foreigners at intervals, and there have been rumors that it may be closed indefinitely to Western residents in the United Arab Republic.

The number of Soviet troops arriving in Egypt with the missiles, estimated from 1,500 upward, suggested to diplomatic observers that the Russians would operate the antiaircraft weapons and the complex radar support facilities.

Concern has been voiced about Soviet reaction if Israeli aircraft attacked the new missile sites, killing or wounding Russians. The Soviet Union might then feel compelled, it has been said, to send fighter squadrons to protect the antiaircraft forces.

The SAM–3 missiles have become important to the defense of Egypt since the Israeli action, undertaken in January, involving low-level air strikes against military targets in the heart of the country.

Many of the Israeli raids have been directed against Soviet-supplied SAM–2 missiles, which are effective against high-flying aircraft to an altitude of 60,000 feet but are generally unable to bring down low-flying planes.

USED AGAINST U.S. PLANE

It was a SAM–2 missile, according to Soviet reports, that ended the espionage flight of the American pilot Francis Gary Powers on May 1, 1960, when his U–2 plane was brought down near Sverdlovsk, in the Urals.

American pilots have learned in North Vietnam how to evade the SAM–2 by low-level attacks and by the use of electronic devices that disoriented the missiles. Israeli pilots flying over Egypt have emulated the tactics developed in the Vietnam war.

The arrival of SAM-3 missiles in Egypt, however, appears to have confronted the Israeli Air Force with the risk of a greater loss rate if the raids are continued. Of the handful of Israeli planes shot down by Egyptians thus far, most have been brought down by conventional antiaircraft weapons. Only one instance has been reported in which an Israeli plane was brought down by a missile.

DECISION WAS EXPECTED

Moscow's decision to send antiaircraft missile units to Egypt became almost inevitable, according to some analysts, after Israeli air strikes in the vicinity of Cairo in January and early February.

The Egyptian Air Force, although superior to that of Israel in the number of aircraft, has suffered from a lack of pilots sufficiently trained for combat against the skilled and experienced Israelis.

Following an Israeli Air strike against a metal plant near Cairo on February 12, in which 80 civilian workers were killed, there were indications that the Cairo leadership was pressing the Soviet Union for aircraft capable of carrying out retaliatory raids against Israel.

The short range of Egypt's soviet-supplied Sukhol-7's and MIG–21's does not permit raids against Israel from Egyptian bases. All Egyptian air action has been directed, therefore, against Israeli positions in the occupied Sinai Peninsula, near the Suez Canal.

SPECULATION ABOUT MIG–23'S

There was much speculation that the Soviet Union might supply the Egyptian Air Force with MIG–23's, a powerful twin-engine fighter capable of speeds up to 1,800 miles an hour, faster even than the Phantoms being delivered to Israel by the United States.

This possibility has been challenged by some experts, who say that the MIG–23 is not in squadron service yet even in the Soviet Union.

The United Arab Republic has some TU–16 long-range bombers, but experts doubt that these relatively slow planes would be able to penetrate Israeli air defenses.

In any event, it is considered most unlikely that the Soviet Union would endorse any air strikes against targets in Israel.

The delivery of the defensive antiaircraft missiles appears to have been what Premier Aleksei N. Kosygin and other Soviet officials had in mind when they warned several weeks ago that Israeli air raids against Egypt would force Moscow to render more effective military support to the Arabs.

PROBLEMS OF RURAL AMERICA

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, the crisis facing the citizens of our country who reside in rural America has recently caused the information of the Rural Affairs Council by President Nixon. The February 21, 1970, issue of the Kansas Farmer contains an article written by the distinguished Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), which discusses the problems of rural America and the approach of the Rural Affairs Council to solve this crisis.

Senator DOLE, who represents one of the most important agricultural States in the country, has long endeavored to improve conditions in rural America. Prior to his election to the Senate, he served with distinction as a member of the House Committee on Agriculture. He has sponsored and cosponsored many bills aimed at solving and preventing problems of farmers and rural people. Rural America has no more understanding or loyal friends than the junior Senator from Kansas.

I ask unanimous consent that the article written by Senator DOLE be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE RURAL AFFAIRS COUNCIL: A NEW APPROACH TO THE CRISIS IN RURAL AMERICA

(By Senator BOB DOLE)

Every day we hear of the crisis in our cities. Crime escalates, complexities of everyday affairs multiply and the quality of life in general continues to decline. No one disputes the severity and crucial nature of the urban situation, but there is another and equally important crisis in this country: the declining economy and eroded vitality of rural America.

On November 13, 1969, President Nixon created the Rural Affairs Council, a cabinet-level organization concerned particularly with encouraging the creation of new jobs in rural America, training people to fill those jobs and generally improving living conditions there.

In announcing the formation of the Rural Affairs Council, the President said: "We are a nation of cities, to be sure, but we are also a nation of small towns and villages, farms and forests mines and ranches, mountains and rivers and lakes. The people who live in rural America have urgent problems which deserve our attention. More importantly, they represent a great resource upon which all of us can draw."

America has always drawn upon both the natural and the human resources of her countryside, yet rural-to-urban migration brought about by the agricultural and industrial revolutions went far beyond any plans to cope with such mass relocations of people. In the cities, problems of overcrowding and strained facilities developed, and the countryside groped to adjust to the loss of jobs and the subsequent deterioration of services and institutions.

Several facts underscore the importance of the challenge we face.

60 percent of the Nation's substandard housing is in rural America.

More than 3 million rural Americans have not completed 5 years of school.

A third of our rural communities with a population of over 1,000 have no public sewage facilities.

Nearly half of the poverty-stricken of this country reside in rural America.

The improvement of the quality of living in rural America is vital to those who live there today, and to the millions more who will be born before the end of the Twentieth Century. The population of our country is likely to grow by 50 percent in the next 30 years, and the location of these next hundred million Americans is a tremendously important question for our society.

After an era in which people have moved steadily from the countryside to large and crowded cities, we must now encourage a more even distribution of population. The cities have become almost uninhabitable, but rural America has not been given the support and direction needed to offer a viable alternative to the technological and industrial concentrations of urban centers. The existence of such an alternative is important today, but it will reach critical proportions in direct relation to population increase.

The solution lies not in depopulating New York or Chicago or Detroit, but in changing rural America so Americans will have a genuine choice of where they want to live and work and raise their families. A successful program for rural America can stimulate a migration back to rural areas, remove some of the population pressure from cities, and thus improve life for all.

The membership of the Rural Affairs Council gives ample evidence of the importance attached to its mission. The broadest areas of concern and interest within the government are represented. The resources and experience of each agency or department will be available for the Council's work. The members are: the Secretaries of Agriculture, the Interior, Commerce, Health, Education and Welfare, Housing and Urban Development, Labor; the Chairman of the Council of the Council of Economic Advisors, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget and the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity.

While giving the Council a broad mandate to assist in nonmetropolitan development, the President specifically directed it to:

Secure information on the problems confronting rural America, identify their causes, and develop means to deal with them by using available programs or initiating new ones.

Foster effective use and coordination of federal programs in the nonmetropolitan areas in order to improve the delivery of public services to the people.

Encourage the fullest cooperation between federal, state and local governments, with special concern for local initiative and local decision-making.

Encourage the most effective role possible for voluntary organizations in dealing with rural problems.

Encourage an improved geographical distribution of the population.

The Rural Affairs Council will also receive and consider recommendations of the President's Task Force on Rural Development, which was established September 29, 1969. The Task Force is made up of people outside the government who are vitally interested in rural America. It has the responsibility of reviewing the effectiveness of present rural assistance programs and recommending what might be done in both the private and public sectors to stimulate rural development. The Task Force is intended to insure that the influence of government personnel and policies will not overwhelm the efforts to promote rural development, and to give continued emphasis to the importance of the role of the private citizen and private enterprise in developing the federal government's part in this undertaking; federal programs can be delivered effectively only when and where the people want them.

And most appropriately when the initiative for evaluating local needs, assessing local resources, planning local development and carrying out programs locally comes from outside Washington, from the states and communities which will be affected. The Task Force will be a valuable stimulant for states and localities to join the federal government and private enterprise in the job of bringing new growth and development to rural America.

Among the agencies involved at the federal level, the USDA, with its extensive field staff and traditional responsibilities in rural America, will play a leading role in rural development. Secretary Hardin has created within the department a Rural Development Committee which will coordinate programs, develop policy and maintain inter-departmental liaison for the department in this field.

Secretary Hardin has foreseen vital roles to be played by the Extension Services, the state universities and land grant colleges in helping the people develop rural America.

"Rural development begins at home," he has said. "It is the responsibility of state and local organizations, groups and leaders. They will provide the channel through which the people may improve their situations" by analyzing their local needs, assessing their local potentialities, and matching their community's potential with private and public programs at all levels of government.

Extension will be asked to bring cohesiveness into community development programs through education and to help people obtain the right kind of planning, financing and technical aid from other agencies. Each director of a state Extension Service has been asked to convene a USDA Committee for Rural Development in his state. These committees will work closely with state and local people in comprehensive planning and development and also provide technical assistance. Membership will include representatives from the Forest Service, the Soil Conservation Service, the Farmers Home Administration, the Rural Electrification Administration, the State Extension Service and anyone else whose representatives feel will contribute.

In the decade of the 70's the strength of rural America will be vital as never before to the whole nation. The quality of the American way of life depends on it. To have a healthy, growing and habitable country, we must have a nonmetropolitan alternative and solution to the uninhabitable, ungovernable city. The opportunity and potential are there. With dedication to the goal and faith in our abilities, our America, urban as well as rural, will become the place we all want it to be. The Rural Affairs Council and the concept it exemplifies are a significant and encouraging beginning.

Still, it is the people of each community who will decide the future of that community. A well-developed rural America with sufficiently good employment opportunities and living environments will be a sum of the efforts of those people, working with their governments at all levels.

THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION: MORAL LEADERSHIP, NOT MORAL EXEMPTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, one of the arguments that has been frequently presented against Senate ratification of the Genocide Convention is that this treaty is undesirable because it would allow our leaders and Nation as a whole to be brought up before an international tribunal on charges of genocide in connection with the war in Vietnam or the Black Panthers. I have dealt earlier with such arguments from a legal viewpoint, and demonstrated that these objections distort and gloss over many of the facts.

What particularly disturbs me at this time, however, is not simply that the facts are presented incorrectly. More fundamental is that this argument results from a kind of moral arrogance. It implies that somehow the United States should not be held accountable for the crime of genocide, but that this moral exemption is an exclusive American "privilege."

Moral arrogance and aloofness toward this hideous crime is a totally unwarranted reaction. It assumes that this country holds a monopoly on morality and that our moral posture is absolutely unimpeachable.

I am not saying that this is not a great country, and that its people are not good people. I am not saying that the United States cannot be a moral leader for the rest of the world. I am saying, however, that we are not inherently entitled to an exemption from morality.

The controversy surrounding the Army's investigations into the tragedies at Songmy is a good example of the effects of claiming this exemption from morality. When the first reports of a massacre began to come in from former servicemen, the instantaneous reaction of many Americans was, "Sheer nonsense. How could our American men ever do a horrible thing like that?" In other words, this country had a claim on morality in war.

But as the facts were compiled and evaluated, the inescapable conclusion was that a tragedy of major proportions had indeed occurred. As a result of the Army's 5-month official investigation, American boys are going to be brought to court-martial on charges of murder.

The point is not, as some have charged, that we are committing genocide in Vietnam. Rather, it is that we have no exemption from morality in war. Americans, under the battle stress and severe emotional strain of war, can react in the same way as men from other countries, when faced with the same situation.

Similarly, it would be a tragedy for us to claim a moral exemption—either through fear or arrogance—from other problems facing our country today. Some people have charged that genocide is being committed in action against the Black Panther movement in the United States. I, for one, do not believe that these charges have merit. However, it is not for me to stand here and pass on the judicial aspects of this situation. That is the function of a court of law.

And that is my point: The situation involving the Black Panthers should not and must not be used as an excuse for refusing to ratify the Genocide Convention. If we oppose this treaty out of fear, then our action lends credence to the charges of genocide. If we refuse to ratify because we claim a moral exemption from genocide, then we have not paid heed to the lessons of Songmy.

Let us resolve to face up to the problems of our country, and not use them as excuses for opposition to this treaty. If there is genocide in this Nation, and it is shown to be the case, then we cannot and must not run away from the causes of the charges.

Senate ratification of the Genocide Convention would be a symbol to the rest of the world, and more importantly to ourselves, that the United States is not afraid to face up to the problems that have brought about these charges. It would be a step toward moral leadership, and a recognition of the fact that we have no special claim on morality, no moral exemption. It would be a rededication of our efforts to protect the human rights of people in our country and throughout the world.

Let us make the Senate ratification of the Genocide Convention an exemplary exercise in American moral leadership. Refusal to ratify would only be a retreat from the battle for human rights.

NEED FOR CONSTRUCTIVE DEBATE ON FOREIGN POLICY CONTINUES

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, in light of growing problems and tensions around the globe, the need for responsible and constructive debate on our foreign policy continues.

Vietnam remains as frightening and as far from solution as ever. Laos and Cambodia threaten to widen the war throughout all of what used to be Indochina.

New directions are needed with respect to aid, trade, foreign troops levels, and a score of other foreign-policy matters.

The Democratic Policy Council has contributed to this discussion through a report prepared by Hon. Averell Harriman.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE, DEMOCRATIC POLICY COUNCIL

WASHINGTON, March 14.—On February 18, President Nixon submitted to the Congress "a first annual report on U.S. foreign policy"—a "State of the World" message. It is difficult to find in its 43,000 words much that adds to congressional or public understanding of the complex international issues we face. As a document that purports to be "a new approach to foreign policy," it lacks substance and candor in laying out the many serious issues the country faces, and it fails to offer a creative program of action to deal with them.

During his campaign, President Nixon declared he had a "plan for peace." Today American boys are still fighting and dying in Vietnam, and now after a year of heavy staff work the Nixon Administration has revealed its "New Strategy for Peace": "Peace requires partnership . . .; peace requires strength . . .; peace requires a willingness to negotiate . . .; peace, we have learned, cannot be gained by good will alone . . .; peace does not come simply with statemen's smiles." These are singularly empty phrases when compared to other statements such as President Kennedy's analysis of peace at American University in June of 1963.

The report is filled with unstinting self-praise for all kinds of "firsts," "new" departures and "innovations":

The Nixon Administration proclaims an "era of negotiations," disregarding the fact that there has been no shortage of negotiations in recent years and that there have been significant agreements achieved, including the limited test ban treaty, the outlawing of atomic weapons in outer space and nuclear non-proliferation.

Two decades after the Marshall Plan made "self-help and mutual assistance" the guiding principle, the Nixon Administration discovers "self-help" to be an essential ingredient in economic development.

A decade after President Kennedy initiated the "Alliance for Progress" we are told that the Nixon Administration is the first to decide that "partnership" should be the basis of our relations with Latin America.

More importantly, this simplistic sermonizing is accompanied by bureaucratic congestion. What is missing is an understanding that far more important than the procedures of decision-making are the decisions themselves and people who make them. A few good appointments are worth a score of committees. One wise decision is worth more than a stack of studies.

For page after page the report describes the "new" machinery which the Nixon Administration has created to handle foreign affairs: layer upon layer of "planning", "systematic review", "analysis", and "study of options"; committees within committees; panels within panels; groups within groups. What emerges is this picture: an Administration that has confused system with substance, that has substituted institutionalized mechanics for creative action.

After dismantling the Alliance for Progress, President Nixon's phrase-makers offer "action for progress." It is clear, however, that the pious preachments of "partnership" mask a "benign neglect" for the growing crisis of democracy and development in our Hemisphere.

As to Europe and NATO the report adds rhetoric in describing a "mature partnership" but no new substance to policies long established.

To Africa the Administration offers more generalities: "Our assistance throughout the continent will be flexible and imaginative,"—without describing the actions to be taken. The message states "the hard facts must be faced." Yet, the commendable step of closing our consulate in Southern Rhodesia, the Administration delayed for more than eight months after the British urged this action be taken.

Regarding Asia, the report implies that the region's peoples shall henceforth make do with their own "wide range of energy and genius." But the claims of new constraints on our involvement in Asia are hard to square with the Vice President's scatter-shot of promises to Asian leaders he met on his trip. However, we commend the initial steps taken toward improved relations with Communist China.

We agree with the President that, "Good U.S. economic policy is good U.S. foreign policy." Unfortunately, stumbling domestic economic mismanagement and our unfolding recession will have harmful repercussions abroad, especially among the developing nations.

Foreign aid was originally launched with wide bi-partisan cooperation, and we feel strongly that it should be continued on that basis. The recent recommendations of the President's Task Force for a new approach on international development give an opportunity for renewed bi-partisan cooperation for an effective program. The emphasis on increased support for the World Bank and the regional development institutions should be particularly welcomed. The proposals for multi-year funding are also sensible. However, careful examination should be given to those administrative proposals which divide responsibility for development among several high-level bodies for what is, in fact, one overall problem.

With regard to East-West relations, the message is one of hobbled gradualism on all fronts:

The S.A.L.T. negotiations—Despite the report's acknowledgement that these are the "most important arms control negotiations this country has ever entered," the Nixon Administration shows none of the urgency demanded by the rapid and deadly developments in the continuing arms race. A leisurely "building block" approach, which seeks to preserve all options while we move in measured steps toward "comprehensive assessments," ignores the mounting pressures on both sides for the deployment of weapons whose complexity gravely complicates the prospects for rational verifiable control.

In this connection the Administration's recent announcement of the decision to deploy MIRVs in June is deeply disturbing. This decision invites reciprocal escalation instead of mutual restraint in the nuclear arms race. It will make it far more difficult to reach a meaningful agreement on S.A.L.T.

A.B.M. System—The report tells us that the National Security apparatus "analyzed our options for proceeding with ballistic defenses on four separate occasions." But this fact of repeated consideration does not excuse the conclusion that we should build a costly system which neither offers security against a Soviet attack nor is needed to deter other nuclear threats.

Chemical and Biological Warfare—We support the President's initiatives in these fields, including the elimination of biological-toxin weapons and his submission to the Senate for action on the ratification of the 1925 Geneva Protocol prohibiting the use of chemical and biological weapons.

Improved relations between East and West in Europe—The matter is shunted aside with some cautionary phrases about the complexities and dangers of negotiations.

East-West Trade—The Administration does not seem to regard expanded trade in non-strategic goods as a commercially profitable step toward better relations. Rather the report suggests that the Soviets must pay with political concessions for the right to buy from us such products already obtainable in large quantities from Western Europe and Japan. This is not merely fruitless but counter-productive.

Laos—It is is a measure of the message's comprehensiveness and candor that Laos was not mentioned and that less than three weeks later the Administration has had to make detailed statements on this critical problem.

The Vietnam War—What might have been the vehicle for constructive initiative for negotiated settlement reveals nothing new. The report refers to the Administration's desire for a "just peace"—without attempting to define that term in any meaningful fashion. It tells us again that the Nixon Administration is placing its reliance on Vietnamization of the war as a "plan for peace" whereas this program at best can only perpetuate the fighting with continued U.S. involvement. It fails to provide either a program or a final date for the withdrawal of all American troops in Vietnam.

It continues to give a veto over U.S. efforts for a negotiated settlement to the repressive minority government of President Thieu. That Government shares neither our objective of a negotiated compromise settlement nor the deepest desires of its own people for peace. In fact, the recent arrest and conviction of Deputy Tran Ngoc Chau—in flagrant disregard of constitutional safeguards and judicial procedures—is another shocking instance of the pressure to silence all South Vietnamese who want peace through a negotiated settlement.

These views on Vietnam are not partisan ones. They are shared in major respects by many responsible people of both parties.

The "State of the World" paper is more notable for what it fails to say than what it says. Apparently, the Administration is content to substitute rhetoric and bureaucracy for effective and enlightened initiative in foreign affairs.

THE TOTAL ENVIRONMENT

Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART) spoke on March 14 at Western Michigan University on a subject of particular concern to me: the total environment.

He warned that we must do more than clean our air and water. We must develop a reverence for our fellow man as well as for nature or we shall have a "dangerously polluted environment," he told the environmental teach-in at that campus.

His words demanding that environment—in its fullest meaning—be the national priority deserve our attention. I ask unanimous consent that his remarks be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS BY SENATOR PHILIP A. HART

We meet today to pay homage to the latest in-thing, and to express the hope, at least on my part, that concern for man's inhumanity to nature will not only outlast the life span of its predecessors, but also grow to include other types of pollution which degrade our environment.

Remember the 1960's, when the in-things were civil rights, the war on poverty, and, for one fleeting moment, hunger in a land of plenty?

Those were in-things concerned with pollution too—the pollution of the spirit which poverty breeds, the pollution of the mind which results from malnutrition, the pollution of self-respect which is the end product of discrimination.

We don't hear so much about those wars any more. You might, if you were a stranger to our ways, think that the relative silence signifies victory.

But the truth, of course, is that we have pulled a switch on the saying which holds, "There is no substitute for victory."

There have been no victories, only substitutes of one war for another, a switching of in-things to keep the natives occupied, if not happy.

That is not to say the much described crisis facing nature is not real, but rather to warn that there can be no lasting victory for a better environment unless we rid society of all types of pollution.

To clean the air but not to feed childen, to build waste treatment plants but not to eradicate poverty, to develop a new reverence for nature but not for our fellow man will still leave us with a dangerously polluted environment.

An Indian youth said it better. He was asked what part of Indian culture he would most like to see preserved in modern life.

He answered:

"The part of Indian culture I would like to see restored is the respect for natural resources . . . an appreciation of the sky, winds and water.

"It's an appreciation of your surroundings and the people in it.

"The most important thing is your belief in those surroundings and not using them indiscriminately, especially people. It's a good thing to think and not just follow the crowd."

Use neither people nor nature indiscriminately. That says it all. If we have too long been content to measure progress for blacks in terms of the number of lunch counters opened to them, the number of school rooms integrated, we have too long measured national progress solely in terms of gross national product numbers, ignoring the damage those numbers have done to nature.

If we have been slow to see that progress for blacks can only be measured as it can be for any man—in terms of respect and self-esteem—we have been even slower in recognizing that we are also a brother to and a part of nature.

We are learning that just as respect for a man depends on approaching him as an individual, so too must we give individual attention to problems affecting nature.

Traditionally Congressional response to environmental problems has been to set minimum standards to define pollution and then to provide only limited means to enforce those standards.

Even if additional means of enforcement were supplied, over-reliance on this approach raises several difficulties.

There are matters of environmental importance—such as minimums for odors, deleterious effects on wildlife, esthetics—that cannot be quantified into standards.

Equally important, minimum standards encourage a minimum rather than a maximum effort to protect nature and necessarily entail an averaging of regulation which ignores special conditions and dulls the edge of regulatory effectiveness.

This is not to suggest that minimum standards must be supplemented with an approach which gives individual attention to the problem at hand and asks what is the best feasible answer from the point of view of nature.

This week Senator McGovern and I introduced a bill which would open the courts to individual appeals on individual environmental questions.

This approach establishes the right of an individual to sue for injunctive relief against any unreasonable pollution of the environment.

It rests on these assumptions:

First, that the concerned citizens lawsuit is an effective way to attack individual environmental problems.

And second, the courts are the best instrument we have for listening to arguments, sharpening issues and making decisions which take into account non-environmental and environmental factors.

Despite what one may feel about a recent happening in Chicago, I believe that the courts can fulfill this action.

Certainly they are better equipped to make decisions affecting nature than the agencies, such as AEC, the Bureau of Public Roads, the Corps of Engineers, which are charged with promoting projects which have a high capability of polluting the environment.

But neither should this function be turned over to an organization which may be biased against any alteration of nature.

Pollution problems have been caused because man acted as if he were separate from nature and free to despoil it at will.

The challenge of the environment will not be solved by going to the other extreme and once again separating man from nature, but rather acting with the understanding that man and nature are integral, indivisible components of a system called earth.

If we understand that, then we can understand that man not only shapes his environment, but is in turn shaped by it.

In the words of James Baldwin: "It means something to live where one sees space and sky, or to live where one sees nothing but rubble or nothing but high buildings."

Let us not debate the environment and national priorities, but recognize that the environment, in its fullest meaning, is the national priority.

If we do that, if we make our concern for nature part of a larger commitment to use neither people for nature indiscriminately, then we can indeed get about ridding our environment of all the pollutions which degrade it.

THE HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1970

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the distinguished list of sponsors of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1970. This piece of legislation embodies concepts which I believe must serve as the bases for constructive housing programs in the future.

Specifically, Secretary Romney's proposal seeks to streamline and consolidate FHA programs from approximately 50 in number to eight. I have long championed the need for sweeping changes in FHA programs as the means of producing a greater supply of housing, at reduced costs and with diminished bureaucratic involvement. While I have not had the opportunity to review the consolidation proposals in detail or solicit the comments of responsible organizations which are interested in this legislation, I am confident that these proposals, which will be subjected to intensive scrutiny by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee in the weeks to come, will serve to move us in the right direction.

I would inject one note of caution, however. Recent legislative changes in FHA programs have created some confusion in the housing industry. Builders and nonprofit sponsors who were familiar with such programs as 202 and 221(d)(3) found that these programs were marked for extinction. We may find similar concern expressed with respect to the elimination of present programs. We must carefully weigh these considerations against the advantages of adopting the new approaches.

I concur with the need to attract greater private sector investment in low-cost housing by eliminating unnecessary bureaucratic requirements and establishing uniform criteria for subsidized housing programs. Every effort must be made to encourage the production of housing by all elements of our economy which are capable of doing so. At the same time, bureaucratic timidity cannot be permitted to frustrate housing production during this critical period.

I am somewhat disappointed that the 1970 housing proposal failed to incorporate the recommendations of the President's Commission on Mortgage Interest Rates with respect to the ceilings on FHA and VA insured mortgages and loans. I have listened carefully to the Secretary's statements on this subject and do not find them entirely persuasive. The dual system proposed by the Commission was specifically designed to function during tight money situations and was not intended to be sheltered from the vicissitudes of the marketplace. I feel that additional discussion is required before this part of the proposal can be embraced by the committee.

The public housing provisions which appear in the proposal represent a recognition of the critical problems which are facing low-income families throughout the country. They also represent the manifestation of changes in congressional attitude on the subject of public housing. Until last year there was a certain timidity on the part of HUD officials to seek the sweeping innovations which were necessary to stem the tide of deterioration in public housing. Last year, however, Congress expressed its willingness to address these problems and HUD has seen its way clear in this housing package to meet that challenge.

While the specific provisions must be scrutinized in greater detail, I commend the Department on the development of a public housing homeownership program. I believe this proposal serves as an incentive to produce more low-income housing and to provide greater family participation in the ownership and operation of these dwellings. We must not lose sight, however, of the fact that homeownership alone is not a panacea. Homeownership must be coupled with the ability and wherewithal to maintain the structures and the opportunity to realize financial gains from the homeowner's endeavors. Thus, programs must be developed to educate new homeowners concerning maintenance and repair of their properties, as well as sanitation, recreation, and other family needs.

With respect to conventional public housing, I believe the departmental proposal represents a recodifications of provisions which I sponsored as part of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1969. It should be pointed out, however, that the Department proposes to pay subsidies equal to the difference between a 20–25 percent tenant income formula and the operating costs of the structure; whereas, last year's legislation provided for subsidies equal to the difference between 25 percent of a family's income and operating costs. Last year's legislation did not, however, require that tenant income contributions rise to a specified level as required in the present proposal. Accordingly, it is exceedingly important to determine whether the levels set forth in the instant bill are realistic. Added emphasis must be also placed on expanding the permissible categories of operating and maintenance expenses to provide for an improved standard of living which is so vitally needed in public housing. We cannot tolerate the conditions which have been allowed to persist until now. We cannot allow additional time to pass before the needs of the poor are heeded.

In this respect, I call upon the Department to fully implement the provisions of section 212 and 213 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1969 which were carefully designed to prevent the condition of public housing from further deteriorating. New legislation is not needed to clarify authority which HUD already possesses.

Last year, Congress authorized $75 million in contract authority to: first, offset existing operating deficits, second, maintain adequate operating and maintenance services, and third, provide additional payments to make up the amount by which rental charges exceed 25 percent of a tenant's income. To date, HUD has failed to implement the second aspect of this subsidy program. In the past, Congress has been accused of being negligent in failing to respond to the social needs of this country. In the case of public housing the administration alone carries the responsibility of committing resources to these worthwhile needs or turning aside, while the quality of life in public housing further declines. This choice does not involve the enactment of new legislation, but rather proper implementation of existing legislation.

The proposals embodied in this bill will undoubtedly be modified during the legislative process and joined by still other proposals which are designed to improve the quantity and quality of housing throughout the Nation. I cannot overemphasize the need to address these issues at this time. Last week, the Senate Banking and Currency Committee adopted several proposals designed to provide increased money to the housing industry. This legislation will be reported to the Senate in the near future, and I am hopeful that my colleagues will give careful consideration to the provisions contained therein. Only through a recognition by Congress and by the administration of the need to provide adequate shelter for low- and middle-income families alike will the goal of a "decent home for every American" be fulfilled.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR SPONG BEFORE VIRGINIA PUBLIC RELATIONS CONFERENCE

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, last Thursday, the Senator from Virginia (Mr. SPONG) in an address to the annual Virginia Public Relations Conference at Williamsburg, brought home to his audience a point that has the hard edge of truth: that in both politics and business there is often too much emphasis on public relations, or the creation of a public "image," at the expense of the substantive matters such an image should truly reflect.

Senator SPONG said:

The problem here is not the development and use of these techniques of communication which I think are invaluable to the functioning of a modern society.

The problem lies in their overuse and in the substitute of this kind of manipulation for efforts to deal with real problems.

I ask unanimous consent that Senator SPONG's address be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPEECH BY SEN. WILLIAM B. SPONG, JR.

In an age that fairly glitters with accomplishments in the field of mass communications, it is ironic that we should be threatened by something called a communication gap. Yet, it is a very real problem and one which I believe could be a major force shaping the political climate in the 1970's.

In a sense, I suppose we are the victims of our own success. There may be an analogy in the story of a small-town boy who goes away to college to master the fine art of the English language only to find when he gets home that he has lost the art of communicating with his parents and friends.

The problem of the communication gap is a good deal more complicated than that, of course, but in some respects it is the same. We have so perfected the art and techniques of reaching mass audiences with appeals that can be tailored to produce almost any desired effect, that we have made a genuine dialogue with our audience not impossible but very close to redundant.

Why should an individual or a company risk the uncertain outcome of a two-way exchange when he can be sure of achieving his objective through the gentle persuasion of one-way mass communication? Why should a political candidate bother with debates on the issues when he can get by on the strength of his rhetoric and his image properly packaged in a sufficient number of five-minute time spots?

The problem here is not the development and use of these techniques of communication which I think are invaluable to the functioning of a modern society. The problem lies in their overuse and in the substitute of this kind of manipulation for efforts to deal with real problems.

We know, of course, that this approach can be highly effective at least over a limited period of time. Customers can be persuaded to continue to buy products which they know to be inferior in quality, overpriced and even dangerous to their health or safety on the basis of an irrelevant appeal to their sexual or social status. And we know now that political candidates can be sold to the public in much the same manner as a new brand of toothpaste.

But wide-spread, this practice cannot be sustained for long without fearful cost to the integrity of our institutions and to public confidence in them. There are many signs today that this confidence is already in a serious state of erosion. The demand for more and more consumer legislation is one example and one which you in public relations and advertising must be acutely conscious of.

There was a time when the consumer could live with a "buyer beware" marketplace for he could hope to keep the situation in balance with his freedom of choice. But in today's mass-production economy where purchases are enticed by a billion-dollar advertising industry and where a consumer's complaints are as often as not relegated to a computer, there is a critical need to even up the odds.

It may seem like a small thing in an economy that produces 10 million cars a year that it is a rare man who buys a new automobile that has no defects in it the day he takes delivery. Rarer still is the man who is able to get prompt and satisfactory repair of the problems.

These are small things perhaps, but multiplied by countless other experiences with indifferent service, shoddy merchandise and threats to safety, they add up to a sizeable part of what the individual thinks of as the quality of his life.

It is a curious thing that dissatisfied though he may be, a consumer will often continue to purchase the same products—such is the power of mass communication. At the same time, however, he is demanding the intervention of government on an ever increasing scale to provide him with the basic protections and guarantees he is unable to win for himself in the marketplace. Such is the extent of his frustration and disillusionment with the reality he finds behind the facade.

Over the past eight years, Congress has been actively concerned with this problem.

In the field of product safety, it has enacted the National Motor Vehicle and Traffic Safety Act of 1966, the Child Protection Act of 1969, the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act, the Radiation Control for Health and Safety Act and the Flammable Fabrics Act.

To assure the consumer's right to honest, factual information the Congress enacted the Cigarette Labeling Act, the Fair Packaging and Labeling Act and the Truth-in-Lending Act.

This session there are at least a dozen more bills pending concerned with everything from product reliability and deceptive sales practices to the threat of insecticides to our environment and food supply.

In many of these areas, governmental action appears necessary. But, in the last analysis, consumer protection will depend on industry and business recognizing their responsibility to those they serve. And this, in turn, will depend in large measure upon opening up the channels of communication with their customers—listening to their complaints and their needs, and trying to do something about it.

I am far from suggesting that this problem of the communication gap is confined to the business world. If anything, there may be an even more serious problem in government.

It is said that we are experiencing a new politics of public relations today, one in which rhetoric is more highly valued than performance, and where the politics of our problems receive greater attention than the problems themselves. I believe there is truth to that. Certainly I cannot remember a time in my public life when public trust and confidence in government has been so low.

To a large extent, I believe that this unhealthy trend in politics and government is directly related to the availability and the willingness of some to misuse the modern techniques of the mass media. I think many of our young people are more aware of this sham than their more jaded parents and we ought to listen when they tell us the king is wearing no clothes.

More important than the manifestations we see on the surface, I believe there is growing public disenchantment with all aspects of American society which goes unexpressed. But it is there and it is working to weaken the fabric of our national life.

In my judgment, we face no challenge so urgent as stemming this erosion of public confidence. And there is no group better situated to contribute to this goal than you of the Public relations field.

VOTING RIGHTS IN WHEELER COUNTY, OREG.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, during the voting rights debate, the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOPER) included in the list of counties affected by his amendment a county in Oregon: Wheeler County.

Senators will recall that soon after, I telephoned the county clerk, Arlene Stegner, and found that Wheeler County would not be affected. I reported that on the floor of the Senate.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two editorials and news articles from the Portland Oregonian and Oregon Journal, and a March 11, 1970, UPI dispatch by Clarence Zaitz which amplify the Wheeler County situation.

There being no objection, the items were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Oregonian, Mar. 14, 1970]

WHEELER REDEEMED

Oregon's Sen. Mark Hatfield was quick on his feet the other day in the U.S. Senate when Wheeler County was named as one of the few counties in the north that would be subject to an amendment to the Voting Rights bill applying to those counties in which fewer than half those of voting age cast ballots in the 1968 general election.

He stepped off the floor to get the word by telephone from County Clerk Arlene Stegner in Fossil that it wasn't so, and he promptly so reported to the Senate.

Wheeler County did not shirk the polls in 1968. A total of 776, or more than 71 per cent, voted out of the 954 registered. If one calculates that about two-thirds the total population is 21 or over, that is about 65 per cent of the voting age population, well above the 50 per cent of the Voting Rights law standards.

The Senate sponsors of the bill got their figures from the Justice Department. Its data on Wheeler County population must be out of date. As recently as 1950, more than 3,300 residents lived there. Now there are only about 1,800, so proportions have changed.

It is not often that a congressman's telephone call can do so much directly for so many. And he didn't even have to drop in a dime to get the operator.

[From the Oregon Journal, Mar. 12, 1970]

HATFIELD "CLEARS" WHEELER'S NAME

(By Tom Stimmel)

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Sen. Mark Hatfield cleared the good name of Wheeler County during a crucial hour in the Senate voting rights debate.

Wheeler was named as one of the counties outside the South which would be subject to Justice Department control should an amendment to the voting bill become law.

The idea is to insure all citizens their right to register and vote. It has been applied since 1965 in seven Southern states. But the amendment would include other counties, including three in New York where fewer than half the potential voters were registered or voted in 1968.

Hatfield was astounded that Wheeler, Oregon's tiniest county, was among those accused. He stepped off the Senate floor to call county clerk Arlene Stegner at the court house in Fossil.

"Why, no," Mrs. Stegner insisted. She said there are 1,800 people in all of Wheeler County, 953 registered in 1968, and 776 voted. That's 72 per cent.

"We always have a good turnout," she told the Senator after she recovered from the shock of receiving his call.

Hatfield happily reported this to the Senate. The amendment sponsors said they were sorry. The information, they said, came from the Justice Department.

EFFECT IN OREGON RESENTED

(By Clarence Zaitz)

FOSSIL, OREG.—Mrs. Arlene Stegner doesn't think this sparsely-populated county needs any federal help in registering voters.

"I think it's a bunch of bunk," declared the outspoken Wheeler County clerk.

She was referring to Senate approval Tuesday of an amendment to the 1965 voting rights act. The measure would bring a number of areas in the north under the act's automatic coverage formula.

Included would be Wheeler County—the only county in Oregon—because its registration of voters is less than 50 per cent of those eligible.

The county has a population of 1,880. Mrs. Stegner said at last count she had 918 registered voters.

"I talked to Senator Mark Hatfield yesterday about it," said Mrs. Stegner, "and we can't figure out where they got those figures."

The last school census in the county indicated slightly more than 500 children between the ages of 4 and 19. That would leave at most 1,300 persons old enough to vote.

In the last general election 762 Wheeler County voters cast ballots for presidential candidates.

"We had a turnout of 81.4 per cent of the registered voters," Mrs. Stegner said.

She was aghast that federal officials thought there was any imbalance of voter registration. "We have a dozen registrars scattered among the five precincts of the county," she explained.

"It just isn't right . . . I know of no reason . . ." Mrs. Stegner just couldn't believe that her county would be lumped in with some in the country where voter registration was discouraged.

"For heaven's sake," she said, "I think we have more persons registered than they do in some of the cities."

Fossil, the county seat, is also the largest city in the county, with 525 persons. The county's population has steadily declined since it reached a peak of 3,313 in 1950.

"I just don't think we deserve all this publicity," Mrs. Stegner complained.

HATFIELD DENIES CHANGE IN COUNTY VOTE STATUS

WASHINGTON.—Oregon's Wheeler County was mentioned as one of a scattering of areas which would be covered by an amendment to the 1965 Voting Rights Act, approved by the Senate. But Sen. Mark Hatfeld, R-Ore., said it was not so.

The agreement, sponsored by Sen. John Sherman Cooper, R-Ky., would have extended the provisions of the 1965 act to any state or county using a voter literacy test, if less than 50 per cent of its voting age population was registered or voted in the last presidential election.

Sen. Cooper said Justice Department figures showed that Wheeler County, with a population of 1,880, would be covered by the amendment. Parts of New York City and other scattered areas were also included.

However, Hatfield said during debate on the amendment that he had talked with the Wheeler County clerk and learned that 953 persons were registered to vote in the county and 776 voted in 1968 election—in both cases more than half of those old enough to vote.

Jack Thompson, assistant secretary of state, said in Salem Wednesday that Wheeler County would not fall under provisions of the amendment.

The county, the state's smallest in population, is located in north central Oregon.

WHEELER COUNTY'S INNOCENT

Wheeler County has been wronged!

In testimony in the Senate on voting rights legislation, Wheeler was singled out with counties in the East and South as subject to Justice Department control over voter registration.

When fewer than half of the eligible voters are registered, federal authorities may step in to assure that any citizens qualified to vote will not be prevented from registering.

And somehow Justice Department investigators put Wheeler County on the list.

Wheeler's total population is 1,880. By rule of thumb, about half of them would be of voting age. In 1968, more than 950 registered. There could not have been very many who did not.

Just the opposite from criticism leveled at it in the Senate, Wheeler is a model of full registration.

U.S. Justice Department, your reliability gap is showing.

J. WILLARD MARRIOTT AND IRA A. HUGGINS TO RECEIVE HONORARY DEGREES FROM WEBER STATE COLLEGE

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, Weber State College has designated two prominent gentlemen to receive honorary doctor degrees during commencement exercises on June 6.

I am personally acquainted with both gentlemen and am pleased to see them receive this honor. They are: J. Willard Marriott, Sr., who is a well-known restaurant and hotel chain owner in Washington and Ira A. Huggins, an Ogden attorney.

The Ogden Standard Examiner published an article on their selections, I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ATTORNEY AND ALUMNUS WIN WEBER STATE COLLEGE HONORS

J. Willard Marriott, Sr., nationally known restaurant-chain owner, and Ira A. Huggins, Ogden attorney, were selected to receive honorary doctor degrees at Weber State College commencement exercises June 6.

Selection of the recipients was made by members of the Weber State College Institutional Council, announced Mr. O. C. Hammond, Chairman.

Mr. Marriott, a Weber alumnus and native of Weber County, has been nationally known for many years as owner of the Marriott Hot Shoppes, Inc., a restaurant chain based in Washington, D.C., but having international business dealings.

He was student president of the college class in 1923 when high school courses at Weber were discontinued. Mr. Marriott had delivered the commencement address to the Weber College graduating class in 1958.

He was chairman of inaugural arrangements for President Richard M. Nixon and has been affiliated with many national organizations and interests.

Mr. Marriott will receive an honorary Doctor of Humanities degree and Attorney Huggins an honorary Doctor of Law degree at the commencement.

Mr. Huggins' executive associations with Weber State date back to the Jr. college days when he served as a member and later chairman of the old Weber College Advisory Board.

He was appointed by the Governor in 1961 to be one of the original members of the former Weber State College Board of Trustees and had served on the Board until 1969 when it was abolished. During the past four years, he had officiated as the Board Chairman. He is now a member of the newly created Utah State Board of Higher Education. Mr. Huggins was a member of the Utah Senate in 1933 when Weber was transferred from the LDS Church to the State of Utah as a junior college.

QUALITY OF CARE IN VETERANS HOSPITALS

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, recent hearings held by the Senate Subcommittee on Veterans' Affairs and a survey undertaken by the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs in preparation for its forthcoming hearings reveal a shocking deterioration in the quality of care in our veterans hospitals.

Hospital after hospital has reported that it is unable to provide the type of care our veterans deserve because it does not have the funds to hire doctors, nurses, and other health personnel, nor is it able to purchase needed equipment or remodel antiquated buildings.

I believe it is imperative that adequate funds be made available as soon as possible to insure that all American veterans have access to hospital and medical care of the highest quality. I commend Senator CRANSTON and Chairman TEAGUE for their leadership in the effort to provide these funds, and assure them they will have my support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the news release by the House Veterans' Affairs Committee on conditions in Missouri's four VA hospitals be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the news release was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MISSOURI VA HOSPITALS UNDERFUNDED AND UNDERSTAFFED

Congressman Olin E. Teague (D.-Tex.) Chairman of the House Veterans Affairs Committee said today that Missouri VA hospitals are not receiving sufficient support to provide the kind of medical care that Missouri veterans deserve.

The House Veterans Affairs Committee Chairman said that searching in-depth hearings will get underway soon on operation of the Nation's 166 Veterans Administration hospitals. As a forerunner to the hearings, the Committee has recently undertaken an inquiry in an effort to learn whether VA hospitals are sufficiently staffed and funded to provide America's exservicemen and women with "second to none" medical care. Chairman Teague said that he was, "seriously concerned about recent reports from a variety of sources indicating that many VA Hospitals were being caught in an impossible squeeze between higher medical and drug costs and rising workloads without receiving proportionally higher funding and staffing allocations." "If this is true," Teague said, "such policies, if allowed to stand will wreck the VA hospital system and undermine the veterans medical program to the point of dangerous dilution in quality."

Chairman Teague said that the Veterans Administration is attempting to provide first class medical care with an inadequate staff. Teague pointed out that the general medical community hospitals and state and local government hospitals have an average staff ratio of 2.72 employees for each patient, while the Veterans Administration has only 1.5 staff for each patient. According to Teague, the university hospitals operated in connection with medical schools are even higher, and have a staff ratio of over 3 employees for each patient. Teague has written to President Nixon and advised that he expects to seek a minimum staffing ratio for the Veterans Administration of at least two employees for each patient in most VA general medical hospitals, and a one for one ratio in psychiatric hospitals.

The Veterans Affairs Committee investigation in December 1969 of Missouri Veterans Administration hospitals revealed funding deficiencies at that time for Fiscal Year 1970 of about $1.4 million to operate over 1800 hospital beds serving approximately 637,000 Missouri veterans.

In Missouri the VA operates 4 hospitals located at Jefferson Barracks, Kansas City, Poplar Bluff, and St. Louis. The Kansas City hospital also has responsibility for providing outpatient dental services to veterans who are served by the Wadsworth, Kansas, VA hospital.

The investigation being conducted by the House Veterans Affairs Committee revealed that under the hospital staffing formula advocated by Teague, the Missouri VA hospitals are about 1,000 short of needed staff. These extra positions would cost about $9.6 million annually. A few of these positions would be difficult to fill—mostly physicians and registered nurses—but most are recruitable at present VA salary scales. The Missouri hospital directors also reported in December 1969 that the community nursing care programs were underfunded in FY 1970 by approximately $395,000. This program provides nursing care in private nursing homes at VA expense for veterans who have received maximum hospital care and who now need less expensive care in nursing homes. Additional funding allocation for the community nursing home program totalling over $73,000 was distributed to Missour' VA hospitals in January 1970, however, a sizable annual deficiency still remains in the funding of this program. Due to increased workloads for dental care, mostly created by returning Vietnam veterans, Missouri hospitals are underfunded by over $300,000 for timely treatment of these cases even though $25,500 was allocated toward this deficiency in January 1970. Overall, Missouri hospitals received approximately $673,000 in January 1970 to apply against the deficiency reported to the Committee in December of over $1.3 million.

Dr. John F. Dee, Director of the 700-bed Jefferson Barracks hospital, told the Committee in December 1969 that he lacked funding for 58 full-time permanent positions costing over $210,000 annually which had been authorized to his hospital but no funds were made available to fill them. On January 28th Dr. Dee reported to the Committee that he had received $75,000 to partially sustain current employment levels but that it would still be necessary to divert approximately $130,000 from maintenance and repair projects and equipment funds to maintain current on-duty staffing at the Jefferson Barracks hospital. In December 1969 the hospital director had reported an $80,000 deficiency for the community nursing care program at the Jefferson Barracks hospital. This program provides nursing care in private nursing homes at VA expense for veterans who have received maximum hospital care and who now need less expensive care in nursing homes. In January 1970, $23,573 in additional funding was allocated to Jefferson Barracks for this program.

Dr. Dee indicated to the Committee that there was a declining psychiatric workload at the Jefferson Barracks hospital and that it was anticipated the hospital mission would be changed from a psychiatric type hospital to a GM&S hospital. Based on the present bed capacity and other factors, if the mission of the hospital is changed from a psychiatric to a general medical and surgical hospital, over 500 additional positions would be needed at an annual cost of over $5 million to bring the Jefferson Barracks hospital staffing ratio to at least two employees to each patient as advocated by Chairman Teague.

In December 1969, Hospital Director V. J. Belda at the Kansas City, Missouri hospital reported to the Veterans Affairs Committee that he was over $281,000 short in personnel funds for FY 1970, and that it would be necessary for him to divert equipment and maintenance and repair funds of approximately $212,000 to meet this deficiency. However, on February 6, 1970, the hospital director reported that VA Central Office had made available to the Kansas City hospital over $219,000 to apply to the total deficiency reported by his station of $557,000 in December 1969. Over $34,000 will be used to meet a drug deficiency and about $4,400 will be used to pay fees for consultant physicians to augment the present hospital staff. Approximately $19,000 will be applied against the $133,000 shortage in dental care funds which are needed mostly to treat returning Vietnam veterans. About $97,000 will be used for new and replacement equipment acquisitions and maintenance and repair projects at the Kansas City hospital. Almost $45,000 will be utilized to take care of increased workloads for out-patient care services at the Kansas City hospital, and about $20,000 of the additional funds will be used to relieve the December 1969 fund shortage in the community nursing care program of over $48,000.

In December 1969, W. W. Leak, Director of the 153 bed Poplar Bluff VA Hospital, reported funding deficiencies of approximately $184,000; $127,000 of this deficiency was for hospital staffing. On January 29th the hospital director advised the Committee that he had received $29,000 in additional funding of which $23,000 would be applied against his staffing deficiency. He said, "This small increase in funds does not reduce our salary deficiency of $127,000 sufficiently to permit us to continue to operate the hospital under any type of operational curtailment plan." The hospital director pointed out that they had very little personnel turnover. Apparently the hospital is left with three options—to reduce personnel which they have been ordered not to do by VA Central Office—receive additional funds from VA Central Office—or utilize a total of $98,000 in equipment and maintenance and repair funds which have not yet been obligated to sustain on-duty personnel.

The hospital director indicated the "Immediate need for an intensive care unit" at the Poplar Bluff hospital "in order that we can provide the same quality of care to veterans as is being provided to others in the community." The Poplar Bluff hospital director indicated to the Veterans Affairs Committee that he was confident he would be given some additional funding at an early date to assist with the greatly increased outpatient workload at the hospital. He said, "The question, of course, is how much?"

After receiving aproximately $326,000 in additional funds in January 1970 from VA Central Office, Dr. Francis Dickey, Director of the St. Louis VA Hospital, indicated that the deficit reported to the Veterans Affairs Committee in December of over $630,000 would preclude further personnel reductions at the St. Louis hospital although he is operating below the hospital's year end employment figure for FY 1969 despite increased workloads. About $233,000 will be applied against the previously deficiency of $379,000 for personnel. The balance of this personnel deficiency will be made up by diverting funds from equipment and maintenance and repair budgets totalling about $111,000. Dr. Dickey stated that other "needed staffing adjustments will be made by attrition." Other funds received in January 1970 will be distributed to meet non-recurring operating expenses of about $50,000; $23,000 will be applied to a $261,000 deficiency reported in December in the community nursing care program, and $6,500 will be applied toward a $208,000 deficiency to supply dental care, mostly for Vietnam veterans who have recently been discharged from the military service.

Some curtailment of VA funding and staffing has been blamed on the "war on inflation", Teague stated. "I take the position the Vietnam veterans has contributed enough when he fights the shooting war and that he should not be expected to fight the inflation war also at the expense of his health," Teague said. "This Nation has prided itself in its service to those who have borne the burden of battle. A bi-partisan attitude has long prevailed in Congress in the funding of an adequate medical program for America's veterans, and in providing for the educational and housing needs of returning servicemen. We in Congress of both parties have always acted in the belief that the finest medical care should be made available to those who served their Country in uniform, and especially to those who returned home suffering wounds and service connected disabilities."

"I do not intend to sit idly by and allow shortsighted policies to destroy a medical program that is absolutely necessary to care for America's veterans," Teague said, "and that's why we're conducting this survey we we can make a determination if we are doing all that needs to be done to properly and promptly serve America's ex-servicemen.

THE POSTAL CRISIS

Mr. HART. Mr. President, at least, and perhaps at most, three aspects of the current postal crisis are clear.

First, postal employees have been treated badly. Their salary, particularly in big cities, and their opportunities for advancement are far short of adequate. Postal workers have good cause to complain that their grievances, long voiced through correct channels, have been neither heeded, nor, in some quarters, even heard. They have been subsidizing their fellow citizens for too long.

Second, a postal strike causes widespread hardships, hardships that while affecting much if not all of our economy, bear hardest on many of those who are paying more than their fair share of the costs of fighting inflation.

Third, both Houses of Congress last year recognized that postal employees deserved a pay raise. While, for several reasons, the House and the Senate approved different levels of increased pay, we did agree that an increase was justified, not in face of a strike, but on the merits of case.

Mr. President, that third fact is most important.

There are those who say that to approve a pay raise now, even before all striking workers have returned to the job, would be to pay blackmail.

That position ignores the fact that last year both Houses of Congress approved a pay raise when there was no pressure from a strike.

That position argues that Congress, in order to punish a few, should further delay for the many what Congress said last year they all deserved.

That position would have Congress continue to ignore its responsibility to complete action on a pay increase bill now many months old.

Mr. President, I believe, and believe strongly, that Congress should complete the job it started last year. I urge the Senate and House conferees to meet now to resolve disagreements in the two bills and to report out a pay raise bill covering at least postal workers.

Certainly serious consideration should be given to including a raise for other Federal employees, but in the interest of speed and fairness, the issue of postal reform should be separated from the question of pay.

If the President of the United States wants to veto such a bill, that is his decision, but we should not be governed by any such threat.

We should do what we think is fair, and thought fair before any strike: Take final action on postal pay.

THE 1969 ASCS PROGRAM PAYMENTS OF $25,000 OR MORE—EXCLUDING PRICE SUPPORT LOANS

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, for many years I have been critical of the large cash payments that, under our agriculture program, are being paid to the large corporate-type farming operations.

In my opinion, if this program is to be continued, these payments should be limited not to exceed $20,000.

Today I have received a report of all cash payments in excess of $25,000 that were made in 1969 but to save space in the RECORD I have limited this report to a $60,000 minimum.

I shall ask unanimous consent that this report, listing all 1969 payments in excess of $60,000 be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

Significantly this report shows that one company, J. G. Bosnell Co., of California, received $4,370,657.

Griffen Inc. of California, received $3,412,867.

Seven companies received in excess of $1 million each.

Fourteen companies were paid between $500,000 and $1 million each.

Fifty-four companies were paid between $250,000 and one-half million dollars each.

These are not small farmers.

The Southern National Bank of Lumberton, N.C., was paid $224,254.

The First National Bank of East North Carolina at Dunn, N.C., was paid $69,943.

The First National Bank of Dumas, Tex., was paid $69,415.

The Waccamaw Bank & Trust Co., Lumberton, N.C., was paid $58,134.

First National Bank & Trust Co., Wichita Falls, Tex., received $34,686.

The Wilbur Security Co., Wilbur, Wash., was paid $27,445.

By what line of reasoning do these banks qualify as small farmers? This is ridiculous, and Congress should correct this law and by all means induce a limit on the amount of such cash payments.

The approval of such a limitation would save the taxpayers several hundred million dollars annually.

I ask unanimous consent that this list of 1969 cash payments in excess of $60,000 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE 1969 ASCS PROGRAM PAYMENTS OF $25,000 OR MORE—EXCLUDING PRICE SUPPORT LOANS

Name, address, and total payments:

J. G. Boswell Co., Corcoran, Calif., $4,370,657.

Giffen Inc., Huron, Calif., $3,412,867.

South Lake Farms, Fresno, Calif., $1,807,697.

Salyer Land Co., Corcoran, Calif., $1,637,961.

Hawaiian Commercial and Sugar Company, Box 3440, Honolulu, Hawaii, $1,311,255.

U.S. Sugar Corp., Clewiston, Fla., $1,181,195.

Mt. Whitney Farms, Five Points, Calif., $1,152,294.

Kern Co. Land Co., Bakersfield, Calif., $1,080,533.

S. A. Camp Farms Co., Shafter, Calif., $928,917.

Vista Del Land Farms, Firebaugh, Calif., $778,624.

Westlake Farms, Stratford, Calif., $746,586.

Vista Del Llano Farms, Firebaugh, Calif., $731,772.

Farmers Investment Co., Sahuarita, Ariz., $673,410.

Boston Ranch Co., LeMoore, Calif., $643,006.

State of Montana, Helena, Mt., $641,341.

Bud Antle Inc., Red Rock, Ariz., $596,293.

Waialua Sugar Co., Inc., Waialua, Hawaii, $566,785.

Oahu Sugar Co., Ltd., Waipahu, Hawaii, $540,036.

South Puerto Rico Sugar Co., South Bay, Fla., $539,429.

Lihue Plantation Co., Ltd., Lihue, Hawaii, $527,688.

Telles Ranch Inc., Firebaugh, Calif., $503,285.

Lee Wilson & Co., Wilson, Ark., $500,005.

Jack Harris Inc., Coalinga, Calif., $481,237.

Ewa Sugar Co., Inc., Ewa, Hawaii, $473,470.

C. & V. Growers Inc., Maricopa, Ariz., $468,899.

Pioneer Mill Co., Ltd., Lahaina, Hawaii, $468,030.

H. B. Murphy Co., Brawley, Calif., $457,591.

Hamilton Farms, Eloy, Ariz., $436,168.

Kekaha Sugar Co., Ltd., Kekaha, Hawaii $436,060.

Kohala Sugar Co., Hawi, Hawaii, $421,292.

Youngker Farms, Buckeye, Ariz., $400,496.

Mauna Kea Sugar Co., Inc., Hilo, Hawaii, $397,837.

Vernon L. Thomas Inc., Huron, Calif., $392,790.

Red River Land Co., Stanfield, Ariz., $391,237.

Honokaa Sugar Co., Haina, Hawaii, $382,742.

Hawaiian Agricultural Co., Pahala, Hawaii, $370,389.

Airway Farms, Inc., Fresno, Calif., $368,103.

McNair Farms, Laurinburg, N.C., $366,584.

Grove Farm Co. Inc., Lihue, Hawaii, $363,999.

BKW Farms, Inc., Marana, Ariz., $359,351.

Talisman Sugar Corp., Belle Glade, Fla., $353,889.

Pepeekeo Sugar Co., Pepeekeo, Hawaii, $352,454.

Laupahoehoe Sugar Co., Papaaloa, Hawaii, $346,738.

John D. Singh, Casa Grande, Ariz., $345,064.

Tx Dept of Corr, Sugarland, Tx., $343,654.

AK Chin Farms, Maricopa, Az., $336,796.

Barkley Co of Az., Somerton, Ariz., $332,142.

The South Coast Corp., Houma, La., $331,331.

Tom J. Moore, Navasota, Tx., $325,886.

Hamakua Mill Co., Paauilo, Hi, $322,450.

J. K. Griffith, Rt. 2, Morton, Tx, $322,355.

Hutchinson Sugar Co., Ltd., Naalehu, Hi, $319,610.

W. B. Camp & Sons, PO Bx 2028, Bakersfield, Ca., $319,552.

Puna Sugar Co. Ltd., Keaau, Hi, $316,649.

McBryde Sugar Co., Ltd., Eleele, Hi, $315,704.

Wilco Produce, Box 1179, Blythe, Ca., $314,402.

Timco, 5720 S. Washoe, Mendota, Ca., $313,112.

H. H. Moore and Sons, Box 7, Navasota, Tx., $310,414.

Baughman Farms Inc., Liberal, Ks., $310,255.

Wailuku Sugar Co., Wailuku, Hi., $309,788.

Olokele Sugar Co., Ltd, Kaumakani, Hi., $304,240.

Gila River Farms, Box 397, Sacaton, Az., $303,898.

Newhall Land & Farming, 10302 Ave 7½, Firbgh, Ca., $299,641.

Gilkey Farms Inc., PO Box 426, Corcoran, Ca., $295,415.

B. V. Fms & Miller & Lux, 550 Kearney, S. Francisco, Ca., $292,961.

Bogle Farms Inc., Box 485, Chandler, Az., $286,715.

Goodyear Farms, Litchfield Park, Az., $282,417.

J. G. Stone Land Co., Box 146, Stratford, Ca., $273,699.

Raymond Thomas Inc., 25810 Avenue 11, Madera, Ca., $272,280.

John B. McKee, Jr., Friars Point, Ms., $271,743.

Arizona Farming Co., Box 907, Eloy, Az., $269,198.

Joe Mendiburu, Bx 5096, Oildale, Ca., $263,343.

F. J. McCarthy & Sons, Box 1138, Tulare, Ca., $262,890.

Riverview Farm & Cattle, 500 N. Broadway, Blythe, Ca., $262,114.

Santiaga Ranch, RR 3, Bx 893, Bakersfield, Ca., $256,016.

Houchin Bros. Farming, Bx 493, Buttonwillow, Ca., $250,579.

Potter Bros. Inc., Box 349, Arcola, Ms., $248,244.

Kirby Hughes, 7200 San Anna, Tucson, Az., $245,643.

W. J. Deal, Box 427, Mendota, Ca., $244,755.

Gragnani Bros., P.O. Box 128 A, Tranquillity, Ca., $242,080.

Bruce Church Inc., P.O. Box 1009, Yuma, Az., $241,031.

W. T. Golston Farms, Box 698, Stanfield, Az., $239,469.

W. E. Young & W. E. Young, Jr., Box 267, Calipatria, Ca., $238,428.

West Haven Farming Co., 24487 Road 140, Tulare, Ca., $238,201.

Howe Lumber Company, Inc., Wabash, Ar., $237,251.
Schramm Ranches Inc., Box 487, San Joaquin, Ca., $235,345.
Paauhau Sugar Co., Ltd., Paauhau, Hi., $229,966.
Giumarra Vineyard Corp., Bakersfield, Calif., $227,539.
Ridgeside Farms, Bakersfield, Calif., $226,709.
Irvine Co., El Centro, Calif., $226,574.
C. J. Vignolo, Shafter, Calif., $225,797.
Ben Simmons, Parker, Ariz., $225,151.
Southern National Bank, Lumberton, N.C., $224,254.
Worsham Bros., Pecos, Tex., $222,487.
Hill Farms, Hart, Tex., $221,359.
R. A. Pickens & Son Co., Pickens, Ark., $221,325.
Roy Flowers, Mattson, Miss., $221,228.
Elmore Co., Brawley, Calif., $219,917.
Southdown, Inc., New Orleans, La., $218,-144.
J. E. O'Neill, Inc., Fresno, Calif., $216,610.
David A. Shumway, Queen Creek, Ariz., $215,684.
Kahuku Plantation Co., Kahuku, Hawaii, $215,256.
L–4 Ranches, Inc., Queen Creek, Ariz., $213,273.
Jack Elmore, Brawley, Calif., $213,052.
Twin Farms, Buttonwillow, Calif., $212,687.
M. J. & R. S. Allen, Coalinga, Calif., $209,-819.
Mazzie Farms, Arvin, Calif., $207,146.
Sinclair Ranches, Calipatria, Calif., $206,202.
Clarence Matheson, Mendota, Calif., $205,755.
Florida Sugar Corp., Belle Grade, Fla., $202,669.
Sherrill-LaFollette, Phoenix, Ariz., $202,602.
Crowe Farms, Arcola, Miss., $202,041.
Campbell Farming, Hardin, Mont., $201,260.
Taft McGee, Hereford, Texas, $200,309.
Three Way Land Co., DeKalb, Tex., $198,879.
Borba Bros., Riverdale, Calif., $196,986.
Pantherburn Co., Pantherburn, Miss., $194,960.
J. W. Olberg & Son, Yuma, Ariz., $194,624.
Topanga Caine Farm, Lake Cormorant, Miss., $193,671.
John A. Wheeler, Lorenzo, Tex., $193,645.
Coury Bros., Mesa, Ariz., $193,196.
Coberly-West Co., Los Angeles, Calif., $192,043.
Nichols Farms, Hanford, Calif., $190,944.
Rancho Tierra Prieta, Eloy, Ariz., $187,815.
Bill Hilburn, Bowie, Ariz., $187,574.
R. A. Ingram, Leland, Miss., $186,397.
R. A. Rowan & Co, Stratford, Calif, $186,216.
W. R. Mayes, Mayesville, S.C., $185,089.
William C. Maloney, Itta Bena, Miss., $184,630.
Emma Lawrence, Hobbs, New Mex., $184,580.
John J. and Ola V. Lord, Tucson, Ariz., $184,118.
Gay and Robinson, Makaweli, Hi., $183,-941.
I. F. Lee, Hale Center, Tex., $183,638.
Sam Hamburg Farms, Los Banos, Calif., $183,380.
D. M. Bryant Jr., Pond, Calif., $182,994.
M. and I. Farms, Delano, Calif., $181,701.
Halsell Cattle Co., Kansas City, Mo., $180,-907.
Buckhorn Planting Co., Greenwood, Ms., $180,440.
John Garrett and Sons, Clovis, NM., $179,598.
Boyett Farming, Corcoran, Ca., $179,401.
Coit Ranch Inc., Mendota, Ca., $178,949.
Community Gin, Scottsdale, Az., $178,790.
Roberts Farms Inc., Porterville, Ca., $178,-408.
Marion Harris, Tulare, Ca., $175,380.
Wolfsen Land and Cattle, Los Banos, Ca., $175,123.
Trail Lake Plantation, Tralake, Ms., $174,-602.
Russell Bros Rches Inc., Calipatria, Ca., $173,255.
Winston Farms, Parker, Az., $172,391.
Jimmy Cluck, Hart, Tx., $172,359.
Ercell Givens, Abernathy, Tx., $172,152.
George Yarbrough, Sicily Island, La., $171,967.
State of Wa, Ephrata, Wa., $171,781.
Redfern Ranches Inc., Dos Palos, Ca., $171,-289.
Kenneth Lindeman, Pecos, Tex., $170,334.
James D. Russell, San Benito, Tx., $169,964.
So Pac Company, San Francisco, Ca., $167,-277.
Wesson Farms Inc., Victoria, Ar., $166,-762.
Southmountain Farms Inc., Laveen, Az., $166,696.
Thunderbird Farms, Phoenix, Az., $166,-248.
George B. Willoughby, El Centro, Ca., $165,-889.
Fowler E. McDaniel, Tulia, Tx., $165,831.
John Kai, Marana, Az., $165,552.
Kilauea Sugar Co. Ltd., Kilauea Hi., $162,-761.
S. K. Ranch, Visalia, Ca., $162,648.
Engelman Farms, Elsa, Tex., $162,222.
Roscoe Farm Co., Scottsdale, Az., $161,122.
Em H. Mettler & Sons, Shafter, Ca., $159,-710.
Diwan Ranches Inc., Casa Grande, Az., $158,895.
E. F. Nunn and Co., Shuqualak, Ms., $158,-448.
J. H. Williams, Natchitoches, La., $158,-203.
Heidrick Farms, Inc., Woodland, Ca., $158,-112.
McKittrick Ranch Inc., Bakersfield, Ca., $157,674.
Hugh-Hudson Ranches, Calipatria, Ca., $156,662.
Reynold M. Mettler, Bakersfield, Calif., $156,566.
J. A. Roberts, Casa Grande, Ariz., $156,415.
Talla Farms, Inc., Stanfield, Ariz., $156,190.
Allen Gray Estate, Benoit, Ms., $155,976.
V. C. Britton, Co., Firebaugh, Calif., $155,-252.
F. C. Layton, Tolleson, Ariz., $155,168.
Oakhurst Co., Clarksdale, Mass., $153,734.
Comfort Farm, Inc., Dos Palos, Calif., $153,477.
Kesey Bros., Pecos, Tex., $151,294.
J. H. Benson Ranches, Inc., Brawley, Calif., $150,300.
John Fuson, Bakersfield, Calif., $149,935.
Stephen H. Elmore, Brawley, Calif., $149,-429.
Amana Society, Amana, Iowa, $149,172.
Arizona State Penal Farm, Grady, Ariz., $148,628.
Waddell Ranch Co., Waddell, Ariz., $148,-543.
C. & A. Equipment Co., Casa Grande, Ariz., $148,039.
Garrett Corp., Clovis, N. Mex., $147,319.
McQueen Smith Farms, Prattville, Ala., $147,272.
Eastland Plantation, Inc., Doddsville, Ms., $146,792.
Pilibos Bros., Inc., Fresno, Calif., $146,223.
Clarence Martin, Friona, Texas, $145,722.
Coelho Farms, Riverdale, Ca., $144,954.
Clark and Roberts, Pecos, Texas, $144,458.
Wildwood Plantation, Greenwood, Ms., $144,288.
Coyanosa Farms, Coyanosa, Tx., $143,993.
Shuklian Bros., Inc., Tulare, Ca., $143,701.
Texas Hill Farms, Yuma, Az., $143,243.
H. K. Hammett and Sons, Greenville, Ms., $143,003.
Bowles Farming Co., Los Banos, Ca., $142,-986.
Vahlsing Christina Corp., Mathis, Texas, $142,088.
Leyton Woolf, Glendale, Az., $142,061.
Krenmueller Farms, San Juan, Tex., $141,-971.
Broughton Land Co., Dayton, Wa., $141,688.
Indian Creek Planting Co., Robinsonville, Ms., $141,155.
G. W. Nickel, Jr., Wasco, Ca., $140,768.
Bill Weaver, Lamesa, Tx., $140,462.
Arena Co. of Ariz., Glendale, Az., $140,349.
Newton Brothers, Stratford, Ca., $140,048.
Hyneman Farms Inc., Trumann, Ar., $139,-709.
W. T. Waggoner Trust Est., Vernon, Tx., $139,651.
Sterling Sugars, Inc., Franklin, La., $139,-383.
Sumner Peck Ranch Inc., Mendota, Ca., $139,100.
Schwartz Farms, Inc., Stratford, Calif., $139,075.
Hammonds Ranch, Inc., Firebaugh, Calif., $138,559.
West, Inc., RR 1, Sidon, Miss., $138,022.
Tejon Ranch Co., P.O. Box 1560, Bakersfield, Calif., $137,963.
Roundaway Planting Co., Alligator, Miss., $137,286.
Bidart Bros., RR 1, Box 860, Bakersfield, Calif., $137,096.
Hugh Bennett, Star Rt. Box 450, Buckeye, Ariz., $136,801.
Isom & Isom, 110–C E Florence Blvd., Casa Grande, Ariz., $136,433.
Arthur Blohm, RR 1, Box 100, Wellton, Ariz., $135,785.
Perrin Bros., Box 1712, Hereford, Tex., $135,748.
E. Ritter and Co., Marked Tree, Ariz., $134,-432.
Highland Lake Farm, 46 Waverly Wood, Helena, Ark,, $134,351.
Harris Cattle Co., P.O. Box 167, Queen Creek, Ariz., $133,442.
Annapeg, Inc., care of Rufus Stainback, Minter City, Miss., $132,818.
H. C. Hitch, Jr., Box 1308, Guymon, Okla., $132,717.
Holland Porter, RR 2, Caldwell, Tex., $132,-441.
Wood Ranches, P.O. Box 247, Lemoore, Calif., $132,139.
A. Duda Sons., Inc., P.O. Box 257, Oviedo, Fla., $131,527.
C. T. Dearborn, P.O. Box 6055, Calipatria, Calif., $131,032.
Homer Hill, Hart, Tex., $130,979.
Abbay and Leatherman, Inc., Robinsonville, Miss., $130,562.
Murphy Jones, Nitta Yuma, Miss., $129,481.
Charles Lakin, Suite 217, Lakin Blvd., 8990 W. Dodge, Kans., $129,148.
Husbandville Plantation, care of W. T. Robertson, Holly Ridge, Miss., $129,052.
Charles Roos III, Box 501, Rio Grande City, Tex., $128,983.
Glen Holt, RR 1, Box 27H, Parker, Ariz., $128,928.
Four Fifths Plantation, RR 3, Greenwood, Miss., $128,878.
W. H. Gentry, Box 911, Hereford, Tex., $128,604.
Overmyer Farms, care of Lee Overmyer, Francesville, Ind., $128,586.
W. A. Sullivan, 2100 Wyoming, Pecos, Tex., $128,375.
Standard Oil Co., Box 5545, Oildale, Calif., $127,995.
Ed Ambrose, Rt. 1, Box 118–B, Buckeye, Ariz., $127,912.
Torrey Wood and Son, Hollandale, Miss., $127,835.
Jerry Lynn Hilburn, Box 156, Columbus, N. Mex., $127,637.
Martori Bros., P.O. Box 878, Glendale, Ariz., $127,526.
Finley Bros., Box 196, Gilbert, Ariz., $127,-087.
Clarence Robinson, P.O. Box 1064, Blythe, Calif., $127,025.
Cote Farms, Inc., St. Anne, Ill., $126,895.

Kennedy Bros., 79700 Ave. 54, Indio, Calif., $126,458.
Raymond, Schnepf, Rt. 1, Box 42, Queen Creek, Ariz., $126,123.
Kline Planting Co., Alligator, Miss., $126,-082.
Britz Chemical Co., P.O. Box 366, Five Points, Calif., $125,804.
C. L. Ranch, Dell City, Tex., $125,740.
Me. Sugar Industries, Inc., Easton, Maine, $125,606.
New Hope Sugar Co., Palm Beach, Fla., $124,968.
James E. and John Garrett, Clovis N. Mex., $124,899.
Su. Cane Farms Co., Palm Beach, Fla., $124,556.
Duncan Farms, Inc., Inverness, Miss., $124,350.
Billups Pltn. Inc., Indianola, Miss., $124,118.
Closter Farms, Inc., Belle Glade, Fla., $124,069.
G. L. Willis, Jr., Dimmit, Tx.,$123,572.
Glen Miller, Colfax, Wa., $123,532.
Asbury Wright, Pinehurst, Ga., $123,156.
Voth Farms, Inc., Wasco, Ca., $122,779
Est. Geo. C. Chance, Bryan, Tx., $122,724.
Schuh Bros., Chowchilla, Ca., $122,642.
John A. Abbott, Harlingen, Tx., $122,397.
W. T. Touchberry, Glen Allan, Ms., $122,327.
J. E. Mayes, Mayesville, S.C., $122,198.
King & Anderson, Inc., Clarksdale, Ms., $122,117.
Jr. & J. W. Cullison, Wellton, Az., $122,053.
John Norton Farms, Blythe, Ca., $121,803.
Ryan Bros., Mendota, Ca., $121,525.
Rabb Bros., San Joaquin Ca., 121,431.
J. Levington Est. Inc., Ruleville, Ms., $121,349.
R. T. Hoover Farms, Fabens, Tx., 121,314.
W. P. Hunter, Bell City, Mo., $121.058.
Delmer, Zweygardt, Burlington, Co., $121,057.
Donald H. Cox, Brawley, Ca., $121,047.
Oscar Mayfield & Sons, Taft, Tx., $120,887.
Kelly R. Mahan, Drew, Ms., $120,734.
Franklin Trotter, Greensville, Ms., $120,699
C. M. S. Farming Co., Phoenix, Az., $120,624.
Brazos A. Varisco, Bryan, Texas, $120,624.
Brooks Griffin, Elaine, Ar., $120,537.
Hill Farms, Inc., Indianola, Ms., $120,276.
Midway Farms, Inc., Osceola, Ar., $120,178.
The Delta Company Belzoni, Ms., $120,165.
Rodgers Bros., West Memphis, Ar., $119,806.
Claude P. Polston, Jr., Blenheim, S.C., $119,570.
Kenneth, Reynolds, Calipatria, Ca., $119,256.
Carl C. May, Helena, Ark., $119,144.
Meadowlark, Fms., Sullivan, In., $118,973.
Delmar R. Durrett, Amarillo, Tx., $118,789.
E. F. Mauldin, Town Creek, Al., $118,654.
Fifield Land Co., Brawley, Calif., $118,432.
Fred Tavoleti & Sons, Clarksdale, Ms., $118,228.
Hagan and Bruton Farm, Hollandale, Ms., $117,999.
Wheeler Farms, Bakersfield, Ca., $117,869.
Dave Mendrin & Sons, Madera, Ca., $117,539.
Belding Farms, Inc., Ft. Stockton, Tx., $117,209.
J. C. Mills, Abernathy, Tx., $117,201.
Carl E. Weller, Phoenix, Ariz., $117,180.
Griffin & Griffin, Coalinga, Ca., $116,892.
Lee Moor Farms, Clint, Tx., $116,798.
Correia Brothers, Visalia, Ca., $116,773.
Woods Co., Yuma, Az., $116,531.
The Mirasol Co., Buttonwillow, Ca., $116,516.
Greater Ariz Rch, Inc., Ariz City, Az., $116,341.
South Fork Ranch, Inc., Lemoore, Ca., $116,202.
Earl Hughes, Gadsden, Az., $115,891.
O Neill Farms, Inc., Huron, Ca., $115,724.
Roger Davidson, Marks, Ms., $115,597.
S. N. Knight Sons, Inc., Belle Glade, Fl., $115,499.
Ward Walton and Asso., Inc., Upper Sandusky, Oh., $115,235.
Peterson Farms, Corcoran, Ca., $115,130.
The Brown Farm, Schlater, Ms., $114,179.
Hubert Cheek, Jr., Bowersville, Ga., $114,065.
Lawrence E. Pence, McColl, S.C., $114,020.
Race Track Plantation, Greenwood, Ms., $113,286.
Elmer Heiskell, Dalhart, Tx., $112,990.
Basil Abate, Bremond, Tx., $112,932.
Virgil F. Marsh, Hereford, Tx., $112,404.
Lockmiller and Son, Clovis, N.M., $112,051.
O. F. Bledsoe Pltn Est., Greenwood, Ms., $111,781.
Busby Farms, Olton, Tx., $111,711.
C. & W. Ranches, Inc., Marana, Az., $111,599.
Glenn Lane, Coolidge, Az., $111,064.
Willis & Kurtz, Bakersfield, Ca., $110,574.
C. and C. Farms, Ft. Stockton, Tx., $110,372.
James H. Jones, Hearne, Tx., $110,069.
Sill Prop, Inc., Bakersfield, Ca., $109,995.
Adamek & Dessert, Seeley, Ca., $109,834.
John B. Ford, Darling, Ms., $109,773.
E. T. Jordan & Sons, Yazoo City, Ms., $109,621.
Joe I McHugh, Orrville, Al., $109,505.
Warner Reid, Tulia, Tx., $109,374.
Lakeview Pltg Co., Yazoo City, Ms., $109,338.
Milliken & Farwell, Inc., Port Allen, La., $108,907.
Carl J. Kuper, Dalhart, Tex., $108,810.
Elvin Crow, Pecos, Tex., $108,758.
Cameta Plantation, Inc., c/o Milton Kline, Anguilla, Miss., $108,294.
Davis Ranch Co., Post Office Box 55, Chandler Heights, Ariz., $108,147.
Patterson Farms, Inc., c/o G. D. Patterson, Maitland, Mo., $108,112.
Harold H. Hogue, 1415 Denrock, Dalhart, Tex., $107,964.
Fifield Farms, 229 Main Street, Brawley Calif., $107,820.
Smallwood Farms, Box 1086, Pecos, Tex., $107,664.
W. J. Scott, Route 1, Box 695A, Yuma, Ariz., $107,327.
Morrison Bros., Route 1, Box 13, Highley, Ariz., $107,184.
Armorel Planting Co., Armorel, Ariz., $107,147.
Lee Ross Hammond, 1616 East 21st, Clovis, N. Mex., $106,863.
Fridenmaker Farms, 223 South 4th Street, Phoenix, Ariz., $106,771.
McCarthy Hilderbrand Farms, Route 1, Box 246–A, Eloy, Ariz., $106,609.
Alexander Farms, Inc., 46 Waverly Wood, Helena, Ar., $106,371.
Wesley Hansen, P O Box 995, Corcoran, Ca., $106,312.
Banks & Co. Box 368, Hernando, Ms., $106,-176.
H. L. Anderson, R 1 Bx 475, Peoria, Az., $106,126.
Gladden Farms, P O Box 236, Cashion, Az., $106,057.
James E. Coleman, RR 4, Yazoo City, Ms., $106,035.
Sam Sparks, Rt 1, Santa Rosa, Tex., $105,-737.
Barham, Inc., c/o Joe Barham, Oak Ridge, La., $105,702.
C. H. Moore Trust Est., S Center St., Clinton, Ill., $105,428.
H. L. Yocum & Sons, 17801 10th Ave, Hanford, Ca., $105,332.
Carlson Brothers, RR 1, Box 568, Marion, Ark., $105,243.
Guy H. Shivers, Sr., Norwood, Ga., $105,-031.
Tracy Ranch, Inc., RR 1 Bx 177, Buttonwillow, Ca., $104,933.
George Hammond, 2829 Gidding, Clovis, N.M. $104,926.
Ben Estes Bearden, Box 387, Santa Rosa, Tex., $104,874.
715 Farms, Ltd., Box D, Pahokee, Fla., $104,864.
M. T. Hardy, Webb, Ms., $104,792.
Olive W. Garvey, Box 485, Colby, Ks., $104,788.
Empire Farms, Box 698, Eloy, Az., $104,640.
Walter J. Williams, 1223 Park Circle, Las Vegas, Nev., $104,537.
Cedarville Corp., Box 1288, Pecos, Tex., $104,447.
Geo. T. Helle, Rt. 2, Box 82–E, Mission, Tex., $104,309.
Mike P. Sturdivant, Glendora, Ms., $104,-261.
Fred Enke, 1405 N. Kadota, Casa Grande, Az., $104,222.
H. R. Watson and Sons, Tunica, Ms., $104,-202.
Eldon Blackburn, Star Route, Melrose, N.M., $104,069.
J. F. Bland, Jr., Mayesville, SC, $103,725.
Belluomini Bros., RR 1, Box 89, Buttonwillow, Ca., $103, 719.
Garden City Company, Garden City, Ks., $103,611.
John Valov, Tulare, Calif., $103,442.
J. A. Howarth, Jr., Cleveland, Ms., $103,325.
Weeth Ranches, Inc., Coalinga, Ca., $103,-085.
M. B. McFarland & Sons, McFarland, Ca., $102,872.
J. H. Sherard & Son, Sherard, Ms., $102,695.
Mitco, Inc., Crosbyton, Texas, $102,667.
G. L. Pratt, Visalia Ca., $102,554.
Gaddis Farms, Inc., Raymond Ms., $102,502.
William E. Armstrong, Lubbock, Tx., $102,-222.
Epps Plantation, Epps, La., $102,181.
McGregor Land & Livestk. Co., Hooper, Wa., $101,982.
E. L. Wallace, Woodland Ca., $101,847.
Lattner and Mills, Pecos, Tx., $101,834.
Parrott Inv. Co., Chico, Ca., $101,824.
Carl C. Bamert, Muleshoe, Tex., $101,763.
J. L. Hodges Farming Co., Buckeye Az., $101,721.
Rio Farms Inc., Edcouch, Tex., $101,580.
Baker Planting Co., Leland, Ms., $101,471.
J. C. Sides Sr., Coffeeville, Ms., $101,110.
Big Creek Farms Co., Joes, Co., $100,918.
W. D. Patterson, Rome, Ms., $100,854.
Norment Foley, Uvalde, Texas, $100,836.
J. L. Golightly, Jr., Mesa, Ariz., $100,698.
Bond Pltg. Co., Clarkedale, Ark., $100,676.
Farm Development Corp., Boise, Id., $100,-631.
Jones Farms, Stratford, Ca., $100,305.
Baretta & Little Farms, Calipatria, Ca., $100,073.
Ranches of the SW, Ft Stockton Tx. $100,025.
H. G. Carpenter, Rolling Fork, Ms., $100,000.
Egypt Planting Company, Cruger, Ms., $99,-876.
William J. Asmussen, Agar, SD., $99,815.
Abatti Bros., El Centro, Ca., $99,808.
Melcombs Ranch, Inc., San Joaquin, Ca., $99,803.
Gordon Bros., Tranquillity, Ca., $99,739.
Reetex Farms, Pecos, Tex., $99,582.
Hooper Farms Inc., Chowchilla, Ca., $99,-413.
Rossi Farms Inc., Bakersfield, Ca., $99,140.
C. C. Slaughter Farms, Morton, Tx., $98,-870.
Enrico Farms Inc., Firebaugh, Ca., $98,567.
J. D. Rankin, Canton, Ms., $98,407.
J. Boyd White, Marana, Az., $98,241.
E. W. Merritt Farms, Porterville, Ca., $98,-088.
Roebuck Plantation, Sidon, Ms., $98,039.
Cornerstone Farm & Gin. Co., Pine Bluff, Ark., $98,010.
I. D. Nunnery, Jr., Arcola, Miss., $97,963.
Wedderburn Bros., Lemoore, Calif., $97,837.
Bruce Parr, Friona, Tex., $97,668.
P. Hansen Ranch, Corcoran, Calif., $97,631.
C. B. Box Co., Midnight, Miss., $97,613.
Jack Ralston, Maricopa, Ariz., $97,491.
Sarah P. Sanders Extr., Walls, Miss., $97,472.

Jack Bros. & McBurney, Inc., Brawley, Calif., $97,245.
Charles A. Russell, Beulah, Miss., $96,743.
John W. Nigliazzo, Hearne, Tex., $96,650.
Dearborn & Maraccini, Calipatria, Calif., $96,522.
Coleman Farms, Okolona, Miss., $96,423.
Richard Gumz, North Judson, Ind., $96,238.
Bibb, Inc., Tunica, Miss., $96,092.
Linneman Ranches, Inc., Dos Palos, Calif., $95,940.
David C. McAteer, Ft. Stockton, Tex., $95,920.
Donald K. Donley, Yuma, Ariz., $95,916.
Walker Farms, Inc., Stoneville, Miss., $95,858.
Dean Pruett, Altoona Ala., $95,738.
Peter J. Robertson, Coolidge, Ariz., $95,729.
M. L. Earnheart Co., Tunica, Miss., $95,699.
Kenmar Farm, Arvin, Calif., $95,424.
White Farms & Cattle Co., Canyon, Tex., $95,383.
Bruneau Sheep Co., Grandview, Idaho, $95,372.
Vence, Corpora, Hearne, Tex., $95,331.
Hoparka Plantation, Sumner, Miss., $95,203.
James S. Garvey, Colby, Kans., $95,113.
Griset Bros., Santa Ana, Calif., $95,040.
Pacific Farms Co., Firebaugh, Calif., $94,876.
Cunningham Sheep Co., Pendleton, Oreg., $94,862.
Harold Senter, Wilson, Ark., $94,856.
Hollybrook Land Co., Inc., Lake Providence, La., $94,701.
Wm. J. Schulte, El Reno, Okla., $94,559.
Gilnockie Pltg. Co., Leland, Miss., $94,369.
Ranza Boggess, Friona, Tex., $94,120.
Dudley Pillow, Jr., Delta, La., $93,960.
Goodland Farms, Inc., Hearne, Tex., $93,909.
W. H. Haggard, Jr., Buckeye, Ariz., $93,759.
Hinkhouse Bros., Burlington Colo., $93,636.
W. A. Rountree, Dublin, Ga., $93,432.
W. W. Hill, Pecos, Tex., $93,428.
L. Z. Farms, Inc., Casa Grande, Ariz., $93,389.
Simpson & Wilson, Rio Hondo, Tex., $93,027.
Kriesant Operating Co., Inc., Mendota, Calif., $92,790.
H. & H. Farms, Inc., Bakersfield, Calif., $92,750.
E. O. Mitchell, Inc., Arvin, Ga., $92,663.
J. W. Wallace & Sons, Edinburg, Tex., $92,580.
Aden Brothers, Inc., Valley Park, Mass., $92,566.
E. C. Fedric, Glendora, Mass., $92,555.
Woodrow Lewis, Chandler, Ariz., $92,521.
Wilbur Wuertz, Casa Grande, Ariz., $92,494.
L. W. Wade Farms, Inc., Greenwood, Miss., $92,276.
B. Raymond Evans, Tulia, Tex., $92,096.
J. B. Hardwicke, Co., Ptn., McAllen, Tex., $92,093.
Winterrowd Bros., Pecos, Tex., $92,045.
Raymond O'Connel & Son, Brawley, Ga., $92,010.
Jacob S. Stephens, Buckeye, Ariz., $91,912.
Allen & Brashier, Pltg., Co., Indianola, Miss., $91,823.
John H. Spearman, Clovis, N. Mex., $91,741.
Fairfax Pltn., Tribbett, Miss., $91,641.
Anthony Denena & Son, Hearne, Tex., $91,640.
G. H. J. Farms, Ltd., Johnson, Kans., $91,596.
M. Lane, Shafter, Colo., $91,561.
Combs & Clegg Rnchs, Inc., Queen Crk., Ariz., $91,466.
E. R. McDonald & Sons, Newellton, La., $91,355.
Dulaney Bros., Shallowater, Tex., $91,353.
Ed Hall, Bouse, Ariz., $91,093.
J. G. Gourlay, Rosedale, Miss., $91,021.
Harp & Hansen, Corcoran, Ga., $90,860.
F. O. Masten, Sudan, Tex., $90,792.
Hubbard W. McDonald, McColl, S.C., $90,786.
J. & J. Ranch, Firebaugh, Colo., $90,741.
William P. Scamardo, Mumford, Tex., $90,733.
Giusti Farms, Inc., Fresno, Calif., $90,676.
A. B. Foster, Pecos, Tex., $90,550.
W. J. Chandler and Sons Moundville, Ala., $90,472.
San Juan Ranching Co., Dos Palos, Calif., $90,248.
Gilkens Farms, Inc., Edwards, Miss., $90,247.
C. B. Shields, Jr., Edcouch, Tex., $90,028.
J. F. Martin, Hereford, Tex., $90,000.
M. K. & J. F. Rieves, Jr., Marion, Ark, $89,924.
E. D. Graham, Sumner, Miss., $89,809.
C. J. Ritchie, Visalia, Calif., $89,602.
Paul Pilgrim, Shafter, Calif., $89,582.
Douglas Mallette, Indianola, Miss., $89,581.
Inco Farms, Inc., Bonsall, Calif., $89,500.
Wayne Sniffin, Firebaugh, Calif., $89,359.
Cass Edwards, II, Ft. Worth, Tex., $89,341.
Thomas L. Moran, Hartley, Tex., $89,178.
Vernon B. Clinton, Rupert, Idaho, $89,125.
Pacco Inc., Turrel, Ark., $89,120.
Deavenport Ranches, Inc., Fresno, Calif., $89,081.
G. J. Parkhill, Jr., Crosbyton, Tex., $88,994.
Sanders & Sanders, Bakersfield, Calif., $88,907.
Joe Lee McMahon, Verhalen, Tex., $88,883.
Neil Fifield Co., Brawley, Calif., $88,756.
Hardesty Bros., Buckeye, Ariz., $88,609.
Howard & Blythe Plt., Lake Cormorant, Mich., $88,188.
Dearmont Oliver, East Prairie, Mo., $88,099.
McMurchy Farms, Duncan, Ms., $88,062.
Power Ranches Inc., Higley, Az., $88,031.
Frank Robinson, Panhandle, Tex., $87,999.
Gus Pugh Sons Inc., Portland, Ar., $87,873.
D. T. Reed, Hereford, Tex., $87,677.
F. H. Hogue Prod. Co., Litchfield Park, Az., $87,638.
El Tejon Cattle Co., Bksfld., Ca., $87,373.
Beckwith Farms, Progreso, Tex., $87,160.
Post Montgomery, Levelland, Tx., $87,106.
S. E. Lowrance Ranch, Tranquillity, Ca., $87,026.
Owen Brothers, Tunica, Ms., $87,008.
Cattani Bros., Bakersfield, Ca., $87,008.
Fred Nussbaumer, Wellton, Az., $86,991.
Ruby Walker, Bentonia, Ms., $86,882.
Dossett Plantation Inc., Beulah, Ms., $86,733.
Elms Planting Corporation, Altheimer, Ark., $86,720.
Ben Wood Farms, Joiner, Ar., $86,515.
Miller Farms Company, Tulia, Tx., $86,462.
Aladdin Ranch, Fresno, Ca., $86,456.
A. Angeletti Inc., Crawfordsville, Ark., $86,363.
C. Mettler, Bakersfield, Ca., $86,349.
Ballard and Hurt, Plainview, Tex., $86,180.
M. L. Dudley & Co., Fresno, Ca., $85,959.
W. W. Clem, Pecos, Tex., $85,959.
Ruby Planting Co., Money, Ms., $85,945.
Dunn Farms, Maricopa, Az., $85,860.
John & Alex Kochergen, Fresno, Ca., $85,801.
Dan Claborn, Courtland, Al., $85,783.
P. & W., Inc. & Santa Monica Farms, Brownsville, Tex., $85,725.
Pirani & Sons, Turrell, Ar., $85,723.
Anderson Bros., Oakley, Id.. $85,706.
Sunset Rnchs, Inc., Rt. 1, Box 220, Eloy, Ar., $85,683.
Meagher Sheep Co., Box 122, Vernal Ut., $85,530.
Marshall Lands, Inc., Box 3, Charleston, Mo., $85,354.
P. S. Thompson, Box 787, Eloy, Az., $85,332.
H. S. Swayze, R.R. 2, Benton, Ms., $85,320.
Louisiana State Penitentiary Angola, La., $85,219.
Loy, Kilgore, 1721 Jefferson, Pecos, Tx., $85,190.
Stimson Veneer & Lumber Trust, Dumas, Ar,. $85,107.
Sanders Farms, R.R. 3, Bx 969, Bakersfield, Ca., $84,985.
D. E. Phillips, Lind, Wa., $84,840.
W. S. Heaton, Jr., Lyon, Ms., $84,669.
Sam & D. M. Biancucci, P.O. Box 337, Firebaugh, Ca., $84,527.
Salton Sea Farms, Box 277, Calipatria, Ca., $84,514.
Tallmadge Ranch, Inc., R.R. 1, Momence, Il., $84,498.
D. M. Brown, 921 W. Northern Ave., Phoenix, Az., $84,495.
Hobson, Gary, Schlater, Ms., $84,441.
Little Panther Plantation, Leland, Ms., $84,440.
Penny Ranch, Burlington Co., $84,436.
J. F. Twist Plantation, Twist, Ar., $84,404.
M. Curti & Sons, P.O. Box 158, Waukena, Ca., $84,335.
D. H. Dew, Jr., Eden, Ms., $84,334.
D. E. Reynolds, Jr., Glendora, Ms., $84,139.
Paul Battle, Jr., R.R. 1, Box 180, Tunica, Ms., $84,069.
Wallace Bales, 401 N. 6th Ave., Buckeye, Az., $84,061.
Albemarle Corporation, Box 215, Courtland, Al., $84,045.
Lee J. Fazzino, R.R. 1, Box 259, Bryan, Texas, $83,963.
Morgan Shillington Farms Co., Box 535, Rupert, Id., $83,732.
J. L. Hill & Co., Webb, Ms., $83,689.
Wolf Island Farms, Wolf Island, Mo., $83,489.
Rogers Farming Co., P.O. Box 348, Pville, Ca., $83,385.
Miller Lumber Co., Marianna, Ar., $83,365.
Martin Talla, Box 668, Stanfield, Az., $83,364.
Travis H. Jones 609 Ironwood Dr., Buckeye, Az., $83,266.
C. Elton Green, Star Route, Clovis, N.M., $83,262.
W. L. Corcoran, R.R. 2, Eufaula, Al., $83,235.
Daniel D. McDaniel, R.R. 3, Cameron, Tx., $83,120.
Fredlo Farms, P.O. Box 174, Arvin, Ca., $83,058.
Hugh Stephens, Box 186, New Albany, Ms., $82,850.
Phil Taber, Box 296, Casa Grande, Az., $82,827.
Jerry Skelton, Collierville, Tenn., $82,779.
White Face Farms, Inc., Levelland, Tex., $82,705.
Wilson Company, Inc., Ogden, Utah, $82,688.
Duane Ellsworth, Chandler, Ariz., $82,649.
Rowe and Turnbough, Box 1, Toyahvale, Tex., $82,628.
J. F. Higgins Farms, Inc., Schuyler, Ne., $82,593.
Call-Tenn L & C Co., Box EE, Calipatria, Ca., $82,587.
Lewis Barksdale, Jr., Rt. 1, Duncan, Ms., $82,527.
Antongiovanni & Jarrard, 1318 Baldwin Rd., Bakfld, Ca., $82,512.
H. L. Holland, Box 1598, Coolidge, Az., $82,486.
Riggan Planting Co., 501 N. Missouri, West Mphs., Ar., $82,339.
Scott & Knappenberger, Blythe, Ca., $82,316.
Independent Gin Co., Grande, Az., $82,261.
Coleman Planting Co., Yazoo City, Ms., $82,248.
J. P. Terrell and Son, Navasota, Texas, $82,203.
Mauldin Mauldin, Yuma, Az., $82,175.
Texas Dept. of Corr., Sugarland, Tx., $82,155.
R. C. Godwin Farms, Inc., Hereford, Tx., $82,140.
DW & BH Malcolm, Gostwick, Ga., $82,026.
Redd Ranches, Lasal, Ut., $82,084.
Schoeneck Farms, Inc., Macungie, Pa., $81,747.
A. E. Panetta Farms, Tipton, Ca., $81,707.
Elwood Elkins, Dekalb, Tx., $81,675.
Payne Valley Farms, Inc., Hamburg, Ia., $81,656.

A. Wilberts Sons L/S Co., Plaquemine, La., $81, 639.
Delton Caddell, Ralls, Tx., $81,618.
Willson Farms, Inc., Fresno, Ca., $81,542.
A. W. Langenegger, Hagerman, NM., $81,531.
M. B. M. Farms, Phoenix, Az., $81,497.
Price Giffen Ranch, Firebaugh, CA., $81,482.
Anderson-Palmisano Fms., Maricopa, Az., $81,427.
Parsons Ranch, Buttonwillow, Ca., $81,416.
Larry Chapman, Chowchilla, Ca., $81,400.
Leonard & Henry Franz, Lind, Wa., $81,156. $81, 156.
James E. Kemp, Dallas, Tx., $81,145.
Sierra Dawn Farms, Firebaugh, Ca., $80,971.
Billy Wayne Sisson, Hereford, Tx., $80,920.
Avra Land/Cattle Co. Ptnship., Tucson, Az., $80,893.
Barney-Mecham, Queen Creek, Az., $80,775.
William Hardison, Palo Verde, Az., $80,742.
C. Ray Robinson, Elroy, Az., $80,720.
O. F. Gremaud, Perryville, Mo., $80,671.
Deseret Lvst. Co., Inc., Salt Lake, Ut., $80,618.
T Cattle Co., Eagle Lake, Tx., $80,492.
Mason & Godwin, Monroe, La., $80,437.
Cerro Bros., Bakersfield, Ca., $80,431.
Rlds. Church, Indep., Mo., $80,397.
L. A. Robertson Fms., Inc., Shafter, Ca., $80,304.
Tunney Stinnett, Elaine, Ar., $80,253.
Davis & Gandy, Edinburg, Tex., $80,244.
Wesley Kroeker, Enid, Ok., $80,048.
John Garrett, Jr., Clovis, N.M., $79,893.
P. M. Commercial Corp., Bakersfield, Ca., $79,741.
Stafford Hannon, Brawley, Ca., $79,710.
W. G. Trotter and Son, Winterville, Ms., $79,619.
Martinus & Martinus, Lockwood, Ca., $79,615.
DBA D. L. Smith arms, Harlingen, Tx., $79,611.
Sweet Brothers, Widener, Ar., $79,533.
W. & Q. Farms, Inc., Calipatria, Ca., $79,530
R. W. Owen, Inc., Tunica, Ms., $79,514
C. L. & L. Farms, Stanfield, Az., $79,506.
Heirs of Jos. F. Green, Taft, Tx., $79,493.
Lynchfield Planting Company, Tchula, Ms., $79,438.
Cowan Bros., LaGrange, Tenn., $79,392.
Sunrise Dairy, Cleveland, Ms., $79,344.
Morris Stuhaan, Visalia, Ca., $79,254.
Leon C. Bramlett, Clarksdale, Ms., $79,254.
Bruins Plng. Co., Hughes, Ark., $79,176.
Garrett & Son, Clarksdale, Ms., $79,136.
W. M. Terry, Martin, S.C., $79,037.
J. E. Mayes, Mayesville, S.C., $78,979.
W. A. & T. A. Calloway, Bosco, La., $79,835.
A. A. Mabus, Philipp, Ms., $78,812.
Ben F. Bowden, Eufaula, Al., $78,657.
Joe Pugh, Bena, Ms., $78,654.
Jess Croft & Son, Idaho Falls, Id., $78,601.
C. Bruce Mace Ranch, Inc., Davis, Ca., $78,483.
John & Ray Brorman, Adrian, Tx., $78,440.
Hicks Graves, Petty, Tex., $78,284.
Wedel Farms, Wasco, Ca., $78,255.
Wagner Brothers, Inc., Lewiston, Id., $78,236.
Mission Planting Co., Ida, La., $78,144.
A. H. Wegis & Sons, Buttonwillow, Ca., $78,120.
John W. Bookout, Hartley, Texas, $78,104.
R. D. Hughes, Blytheville, Ar., $78,056.
Graydon Flowers, Mattson, Ms., $78,021.
Churchill & Thiabut, Inc., Donaldsonville, La., $78,105.
Luis Garcis/Sons, Inc., Spur, Tx., $78,005.
George B. Doshier, Vega, Tex., $77,973.
Bozeman Farms, Inc., Flora, Miss., $77,972.
Howard Hurd, 1008 E. Tate, Brownfield, Tex., $77,965.
Fox Brothers, Box 326, Lyon, Miss., $77,912.
Framack Farms, Box 1233, Amarillo, Tex., $77,904.
H. T. Dillahunty & Sons, Hughes, Ark., $77,899.
Cotton Dixie, Inc., care of J. B. Baker, Webb, Miss. $77,898.
Dan Crumpton, Jr., 924 Oakhurst, Clarksdale, Miss., $77,879.
Herbert Friemel, Rt. 1, Canyon, Tex., $77,798.
Lakeland Farms, Rt. 1, Box 380, Hollandale, Miss., $77,769.
Carr Planting Co., O. C. Carr, Jr., Clarksdale, Miss., $77,727.
Rhodell Farms, Inc., P.O. Box 638, Avondale, Ariz., $77,708.
Raymond Brown and J. M. Brown, Anguilla, Miss., $77,663.
Sutton Bros., Rt. 3, Box 769, Phoenix, Ariz., $77,650.
Stonewall Planting Co., P.O. Box 11, Thornton, Miss., $77,585.
Dale Steele, Ford, Kans., $77,573.
Horace Hutton, Rt. 1, Box A, Muleshoe, Tex., $77,499.
Palm Farms, Inc., 4016 Stockdale Highway, Bakersfield, Calif., $77,488.
Frank Bounds, 2015 Jackson, Pecos, Tex., $77,463.
S. A. Arnold, Jr., Tunica, Miss., $77,412.
H. T. Bonds, Rt. 1, Shelby, Miss., $77,318.
Frank Schuster Rt. 1, San Juan, Tex., $77,244.
Collier Bros., Inc., Box 1058, Spearman, Tex., $77,226.
Ben Riggs & Son., Rt. 2, Box 95, Chandler, Ariz., $77,175.
O. B. Nerren, Isola, Miss., $77,159.
Gordon V. Waldrop, Rt. C, Lamesa, Tex., $77,143.
Holcomb & Black, Rt. 2, Box 29C, Weslaco, Tex., $77,085.
Forrester Ranch, Inc., Box 546, Amarillo, Tex., $77,081.
M. C. Braswell Farms, Battleboro, N.C., $77,037.
Don & Vern Thiesen, Rt. 1, Box 432A, Kingsburgh, Calif., $77,011.
G. T. Hamilton, Rt. 8, Hillsboro, Ala., $76,970.
King Plantation, 1100 Poplar, Greenwood, Miss., $76,901.
Reinauer Bros., Box 1070, Hereford, Tex., $76,866.
Charles Vonderahe, Box 215, Brawley, Calif., $76,792.
T. K. Williamson, Box 931, Morton, Tex., $76,641.
Dale Elliott, Rt. 1, Clovis, N. Mex., $76,548.
C. J. Lowrance & Sons, Driver, Ark., $76,543.
Wedgworth Farms, Inc., P.O. Box 206, Belle Glade, Fla., $76,540.
Runnymede Plantation, Box 277, Itta Bena, Miss., $76,467.
Mashburn Farms, Inc., Rt. 5, Paris, Tex., $76,349.
Verney Towns, 3713 68th, Lubbock, Tex., $76,327.
C. W. Neely, Box 72, Gilbert, Ariz., $76,319.
James Blythe, Jr., Courtland, Ala., $76,192.
Standefer-Gray, Inc., Lubbock, Tex., $76,170.
Michael Giffen Ranch, Inc., Fresno, Calif., $76,142.
W. C. Huffaker, Jr., Tahoka, Tex., $76,070.
Clarence Winger & Sons, Johnson, Kans., $76,058.
James Cannon, Lockney, Tex., $75,999.
Arnold Farms, Inc., Tunica, Miss., $75,964.
Alex Curtis, Leland, Miss., $75,880.
Phelps & Palmer, Mesa, Ariz., $75,854.
Bonanza Farms, Bakersfield, Calif., $75,848.
Hoke Propst, Anson, Tex., $75,807.
L. R. Layton, Chandler, Ariz., $75,629.
J. R. Flautt & Sons, Swan Lake, Miss., $75,575.
Panola Co., Newellton, La., $75,547.
Hawk & Sperber, Holtville, Calif., $75,512.
Delta Ranches, Inc., Blythe, Calif., $75,480.
Williams & Burkhardt, Taft, Tex., $75,353.
Lone Oak Ranch, Corcoran, Calif., $75,339.
Cokers Ped. Seed Co., Hartsville, S.C., $75,293.
Dougherty Ranch, Phoenix, Ariz., $75,247.
Herbert C. Harris, Jr., Cherokee, Ala., $75,216.
Chas. Urrea & Sons, Mesa, Ariz., $75,153.
Lipe Farms, Inc., Indianola, Ms, $75,091.
Joe Reistino, Jr., Calvert, Tx, $75,088.
J. D. Smith, Littlefield, Tx, $75,078.
B. S. Baldwin & Sons, Bksfld, Ca, $75,015.
Pinal Farms, Inc., Stanfield, Az, $75,000.
R. W. Neely, Florence, Az, $74,966.
Billy Rogers Farms, South Bay, Fl, $74,950.
J. C. Mills, Abernathy, Texas, $74,944.
Jay Wilson, Casa Grande, Az, $74,939.
Davis Beauchamp, Calipatria, Ca, $74,931.
Jason H. Allen, Lubbock, Tex, $74,759.
Elmo Stephens, Plainview, Tx, $74,748.
Harry L. Laws Co., Inc., Brusly, La, $74,745.
California Sturges Ginning Co., Yuma, Az, $74,740.
M & T, Inc., Chico, Ca, $74678.
Otto Steinberg, Plainview, Tx, $74,662.
Milo Erwin, Fresno, Ca, $74,583.
R. Creecy & T. Tate, Osceola, Ar, $74,559.
Charles E. Lynch, Bville, SC, $74,522.
W. T. Millen, Muleshoe, Tx, $74,448.
Kirkland & Best, Ulmers, SC, $74,412.
Mohead Planting Company, Lula, Ms, $74,380.
La Strawberry & Vegetable Distributing Co., McAllen, Tex., $74,352.
H. H. Twiford, Alligator, Ms. $74,299.
Skousen & Hastings, Rt. 1, Box 44, Queen Creek Az., $74,253.
John C. Alford, Box 28, Petersburg, Texas, $74,190.
L. J. Barksdale, RR 1, Marks, Ms., $74,036.
Valley Onions, Inc., P.O. Box 35, McAllen, Tx., $73,994.
Henson & Sons, RR 3, Bx 920, Bakersfield, Ca., $73,936.
Raymond Beauchamp, 605 Ross Blvd., Pecos, $73,935.
Harriet Veck, PO Box 12, Animas, NM., $73,844.
Pylate Brothers, PO Box 100, Eudora, Ar., $73,775.
Grant-Vaughn Ellsworth, 2550 E. Southern Ave., Mesa, Az., $73,755.
Dave M. Thompson, Box 1027, Friona, Texas, $73,743.
Savoie Industries, Belle Rose, La., $73,709.
Carr-Mascott Pltn, Inc., RR 2, Box 161, Clarksdale, Ms., $73,612.
Ray Tribble, Money, Ms., $73,579.
E. Batsch, 18384 Ave. 200, Strathmore, Ca., $73,563.
C. H. & G. Farms, Inc., $8297 E. Sanders Ct., Fresno, Ca., $73,545.
Millhaven Co., J. K. Boddiford, Mgr., Rt. 1, Sylvania, Ga., $73,515.
Dalton R. Pittman, 4809 Camellia Ln., Shreveport, La., $73,423.
Shannon Bros., Entp., Bx. 2863 DeSota Sta., Memphis, Tn., $73,400.
Daniel Gustafson, Box 27, Lyford, Tx., $73,392.
Carl Bruegel, Bx 175, Dimmitt, Tx., $73,324.
H. L. Kenrick, Eloy, Az., $73,312.
T. V. Cardoza & Son., Tulare, Ca., $73,286.
J. Bert Williams, Farwell, Tx., $73,167.
Grady Shepard, Hale Center, Tex., $73,058.
Haas Inv., Co., Inc., Bunkie, La., $73,021.
Moore & Taylor, Waddell, Az., $72,955.
Roseta Farms, Eagle Pass, Tx., $72,940.
J. Antongiovanni & Sons, Bakersfield, Ca., $72,885.
Alex & Norman Pretzer, Eloy, Az., $72,862.
Reyher Farms, McClave, Co., $72,770.
W. W. Boswell, Jr., Corcoran, Ca., $72,610.
L. L. Lawson, Lubbock, Tx., $72,560.
Porter Land Co., Bakersfield, Ca., $72,544.
M. C. Ewing Co., Inc., Anguilla, Ms., $72,391.
Mallory Farms, Chatfield, Az., $72,361.
Charles Hill, Chandler, Az., $72,350.
Albert J. Hoelscher, Pecos, Tx., $72,270.
A. C. T. Ranches, Inc., Eloy, Az., $72,127
Richard Berry & Sons, Cutler, Ca., $72,103.
Twilight Planting Co., Glora, Ms., $72,052.
Couture Farms, Huron, Calif., $72,022.
Pappas & Co., Inc., Mendota, Ca., $71,930.

Rio Grande Equipment Company, Harlingen, Tx., $71,920.
George H. Moore, Canton, Ms., $71,908.
Roy Smith, Corpus Christi, Tx., $71,900.
Bear Kelso Plantation, Inc., Valley Park, Ms., $71,877.
Dan L. Smythe, Tribbett, Ms., $71,762.
Ralph T. Hand, Jr., Glendora, Ms., $71,706.
Snodgrass and Carlisle, Roswell, NM., $71,678.
Wood-Sanderlin Farm, Crumrod, Ar., $71,673.
Mouren Farming Co., Huron, Ca., $71,583.
Wayne Kirschenmann, Bksfld, Ca., $71,460.
W. A. Heiden & Son, Buckeye, Az., $71,428.
O. D. Bingham, Amarillo, Tx., $71,418.
G. H. Barker, Marks, Ms., $71,407.
Bouziden Bros., Alva, Ok., $71,385.
J. G. Adams and Son, Hughes, Ar., $71,384.
M. P. Moore, Senatobia, Ms., $71,365.
Dunn Farms, Yuma, Az., $71,347.
Johnson Bros. & Jones, Cambridge, Ne., $71,077.
Melvin May, Hereford, Tx., $71,032.
G. G. Passmore, Jefferson, Pecos, $70,975.
O. H. Pattison, Clovis, NM., $70,943.
Garone Brothers, Bksfld, Ca., $70,907.
Melvin McConnell Farms, Wasco, Ca., $70,898.
X. Y. Ranch Co., Granada, Co., $70,841.
Muldrow Farms, Brownsfield, Tx., $70,834.
P. M. B. Self Estate, Marks, Ms., $70,753.
Self & Co., Marks, Ms., $70,732.
Allen B. Helms, Clarkedale, Ark., $70,612.
Wayne Q. Winsett, Altus, Ok., $70,605.
Crouch Bros., Maricopa, Az., $70,544.
J. Kroeker Sons, Shafter, Ca., $70,513.
Gerald L. Morris, Jr., McCrory, Ar., $70,323.
Clide Barnett, Keiser, Ar., $70,300.
Stanley Asmussen, Agar, SD., $70,231.
Ed Wiest, Brawley, Ca., $70,186.
R. A. Hildebrand, Bakersfield, Ca., $70,116.
Clarence D. Carnahan, Hereford, Tx., $70,106.
T. C. Buford, Glendora, Ms., $70,098.
Bloemhof Hay Co., Buttonwillow, Ca., $70,081.
Elvis Jones, Lovington, $70,057.
W. T. Jamison, Jr., Tiptonville, Tenn., $70,047.
Double D. Ranch, Inc., Loxahatchee, Fl., $70,018.
First National Bank of ENC, Dunn, N.C., $69,943.
Gene Reeves, Americus, Ga., $69,810.
Jack Hart, Gruver, Tex., $69,777.
Carter Brothers, Rolling Fork, Ms., $69,767.
W C Skates & Son, Avon, Ms, $69,747.
D & R Farms, Rt 2 Box 167, Chandler, Az., $69,655.
Torrigiani, Bros., P O Bx 223, Buttonwillow, Ca., $69,645.
George Gabel, Rt 4, Dimmitt, Tx., $69,630.
Mike A Burkholder, Box 1562, Pecos, Texas, $69,570.
W P Scruggs Est., Doddsville, Ms., $69,490.
First National Bank, Dumas, Texas, $69,415.
W H Lovett, Dublin, Ga., $69,403.
James O Payne, Star Rt Bx 96, Wasco, Ca., $69,402.
Noel Williams, RR 1, Cordele, Ga., $69,381.
John W Dawson, RR 3, Hawkinsville, Ga., $69,299.
W H Morgan and Son Inc., 960 Weightman, Greenwood, Ms., $69,284.
H Buller Farms, 1730 Locust Ravine, Bakersfield, Ca., $69,251.
Equen Planting Co., C/O Melza Wilson, Minter City, Ms., $69,244.
King Farms, Rt 1 Box 162, Buckeye, Az., $69,191.
Angelo & Eugene Fanucchi, RR 3 Bx 1022, Bksfld, Ca., $69,159.
C O Pitrat & Sons, Rt 1 Box 12, Laveen, Az., $69,155.
McIntosh and Sons, 2034 14th St, Lewiston, Id., $69,147.
Phil Ladra, 5825 W Harmont Dr, Glendale, Az., $69,138.
F L Gerdes, Jr., Box 255, Leland, Ms., $69,113.
Joe G Fanucchi & Sons, RR 2 Bx 318, Bksfld, Ca., $69,105.
Dean Nelson, Onida, Sd., $69,078.
Garcia Farms Ptns., Rt 1 Box 75, Tolleson, Az., $69,055.
Warren Mathis, RR 1, Lockney, Tx., $69,043.
Carl V Grissom, 6863 S Plainsburg Rd, Le Grand, Ca., $69,021.
Leo Jessen, Oshkosh, Neb., $69,005.
Lake Plantation, C/O L Taylor Jr., Hughes, Ar., $68,975.
Lowrance Bros & Co., Driver, Ar., $68,966.
Sebastian Cot & Gr Corp., Box 104, Sebastian, Tex., $68,897.
Lee Wong Farms Inc., P O Box 866, Glendale, Az., $68,863.
B L Davis Ranch Inc., Adams, Or., $68,838.
J E Cunningham, Tchula, Ms., $68,827.
Dorris Jones, 506 S White, Floydada, Texas, $68,798.
Richard Swearingen, 20705 S Bishop, Riverdale, Ca., $68,760.
Warren Livestock, Box 848, Cheyenne, Wy., $68,703.
Morton, S., Inc., Drawer M. Douglas, Wy., $68,699.
Ganier Brothers, Hollandale, Ms., $68,674.
Arthur P. Gumz, North Judson In., $68,666.
George L Labar & Sons, Harlingen, Tex., $68,665.
Oaklawn Plantation, Inc., Dundee, Miss., $68,541.
R. I. Bennett, Lockney, Tex., $68,532.
Paul Spanbauer, Box 838, Burley, Id., $68,511.
Verlin O. Lasley, Stratford, Texas, $68,375.
K. V. Jordon and R. B. Coplen, Laveen, Az., $68,320.
Moore Planting Co., Inc., Cary, Ms., $68,285.
Hugh L. Gordon, Dalhart, Tx., $68,252.
J. R. Broadbent, Salt Lake City, Ut., $68,247.
T. R. and G. E. King Jr., McBee, S.C., $68,135.
Stanley Snitzer, Phoenix, Az., $68,106.
Starkey and Erwin, Avenal, Ca., $68,106.
McClellan & McClellan, Sunray, Tx., $68,102.
Lonnie R. Smith, Olton, Tx., $68,099.
D. D. McColl, St. Pauls, N.C., $68,052.
Billy Joe Waldrup, Drew, Ms., $68,026.
Buford Gladden, Casa Grande, Az., $68,011.
Triple M Planting Co., Sumner, Ms., $67,993.
Knapp Farms, Weslaco, Tex., $67,976.
Donald E. Morris, Fortescue, Mo., $67,964.
Goodman Traction Ranch, Tranquillity, Ca., $67,910.
Opal Fry & Sons, Bakersfield, Ca., $67,896.
Vincent Kovacevich, Whitesbridge, Fresno, Ca., $67,880.
Garst Company, Coon Rapids, Ia., $67,860.
J. C. Andresen, Whitesbridge, Fresno, Ca., $67,846.
Leon Marks, Clovis, N.M., $67,821.
Antongiovanni Bros., Bakersfield, Ca., $67,793.
Vernon Swearingen, Riverdale, Ca., $67,778.
J. C. Reed, Leland, Ms., $67,765.
John C. Reistino, Hearne, Tx., $67,687.
Clarement Farms, Huron, Ca., $67,658.
Levert St. John Inc., Martinville, La., $67,637.
Sugarland Ind., Inc., Sugarland, Tx., $67,591.
Dom Echeverria, Longmont, Co., $67,545.
E. H. Clarke & Co., Hughes, Ark., $67,543.
Aubrey L. Lockett, Rt. 1, Ropes, Tx., $67,510.
William M. Pitts, Indianola, Ms., $67,468.
Larry R. Scott, Arizona City, Az., $67,436.
Jimmy Millar, Morton, Tx., $67,309.
R. D. Hines, Yazoo City, Ms., $67,278.
Trans Pecos Farms Inc., Pecos, Tx., $67,269.
Jack Hale, Blytheville, Ar., $67,263.
Hanes and Demaio, Clovis, N.M., $67,240.
Barnard Bros., Bakersfield, Calif., $67,234.
Maryland Planting Co., Clarksdale, Ms. $67,154.
K. L. & D. E. Morrow Ptns., Lyford, Tx., $67,061.
Merlin Hamilton, Florence, Az., $67,044.
Fangman Farms, Inc., Friona, Texas, $67,028.
Rainbow Planting Co., Webb, Ms. $66,976.
John Gray Kelly, Fairbanks, In., $66,969.
J. N. Osterkamp Rches, Brawley, Ca., $66,957.
Paul Hays, Kress, Tx., $66,928.
Larry Woodard Farms, Inc., Lepanto, Ar., $66,879.
T. J. Wilson, Pecos, Tex., $66,866.
H. Fox Tindal, Pinewood, S.C., $66,854.
Pat Scates, Sr., Shawneetown, Il., $66,852.
J. T. John Co., Inc., Laurinburg, N.C., $66,850.
James F. Davis, Jr., Lorenzo, Tx., $66,801.
Kinard Bros., Willcox, Az., $66,745.
Wm. M. Harrison, Yuma, Az., $66,710.
A. L. Cone, Lubbock, Tx., $66,709.
A. D. Swindell, Pantego, N.C., $66,692.
Thomas L. James, Canton, Ms., $66,688.
M. H. Rich, Jr., Chatham, Ms., $66,673.
E. A. Houston, Abernathy, Tx., $66,593.
R. E. Smith & Sons, Pixley, Ca., $66,589.
Tollie Barton, Bakersfield, Ca., $66,571.
James U. Yeldell, Jr., Mer Rouge, La., $66,562.
Barling Bros., Wasco, Ca., $66,362.
H. D. Smith, Hart, Tx., $66,336.
J. Melvin Taylor, Tallassee, Al., $66,297.
Starr Produce Farm Acct., Rio Grnde City, Tx., $66,251.
J. B. Baird, Inverness, Ms., $66,242.
Heglar Ranch, Inc., Burley, Id., $66,218.
Donald Damon, Est., Warden, Wa., $66,141.
Robbins & Long, Rosedale, Ms., $66,139.
F. R. Trainor, Lambert, Ms., $66,138.
Brorman Bros., Hereford, Tx., $66,092.
W. W. & Earl Cochran, Portland, Ar., $66,092.
Vernon Denson, Hereford, Tx., $66,071.
Western Vly Ranches, Inc., Los Banos, Ca., $66,055.
Quien Sabe Farms, Hereford, Tx., $66,021.
J. H. Farms, Coolidge, Az., $65,993.
R. L. Polvado, Morton, Tx., $65,976.
Ivanhoe Assoc. Inc., Natchez, Ms., $65,936.
W. C. Bradley Co., Columbus, Ga., $65,929.
Ray Scroggins, Yazoo City, Ms., $65,865.
G. E. Paxton, Tulare, Calif., $65,753.
Herbert W. Bode, San Benito, Tex., $65,744.
Chanan Singh, Rt. 2, Box 630, Grande, Az., $65,743.
Green Top Farms, Inc., Rt. 4, Richmond, Mo., $65,722.
Bryants Incorporated, Bartow, Ga., $65,717.
Three H Ranch, 1709 30th St., Bakersfield, Ca., $65,696.
R. E. Hart, Box 384, Sinton, Tex., $65,694.
Ashly Plantation, RR 2, Box 117, Tallulah, La., $65,629.
Byron Campbell EST, 795 W Rockey, Raymondville, Tx., $65,606.
Singletary Farms, 263 N Main St., Blakely, Ga., $65,605.
R. L. Calhoun, PO Box 1336, Taft, Ca., $65,585.
Johnny Deniz, 19594 Ave. 17, Madera, Ca., $65,556.
Wilbur F. Johns Farms, Box 205, Joiner, Ar., $65.510.
Sloan Osborn, Rt. 2, Friona, Texas, $65,503.
W. E. Taylor, RR 2, Box 822, Greenville, Ms., $65,496.
Davidson Bros., Box 1286, Pecos, Tex., $65,468.
Joe S. Wolf, PO. Box 591, La Feria, Tex., $65,398.
El Dorado Ranch, Inc., Box 566, Stanfield, Az., $65,389.
Warren Spikes, Hugoton, Ks., $65,383.
Morris L. Hunt, Box 862, Dumas, Tx., $65,349 .

K. K. Skousen, Rt. 1, Box 85, Chandler, Az., $65,324.
Ralph C. Dickson, Drawer KK, McCamey, Tex., $65,260.
Crosthwait Farms Inc., Osceola, Ar., $65,-244.
Rusconi Farms, PO Box 65, San Joaquin, Ca., $65,191.
Carl Schuster, Rt. 1, Box 77–A, San Juan, Tex., $65,151.
Parr Bros., Inc., 902 H St., Rupert, Id., $65,133.
Guerra Bros., Box 38, Linn, Tex., $65,133.
Pauline V. Adair, Doddsville, Ms., $65,102.
Diablo Farms, PO Box 505, Arvin, Ca., $65,062.
Pecan Grove Pltn., % George J. Rice, Indianola, Ms., $65,016.
W. J. Denton, EST, % Ruby C. Denton Exrx., Wilson, Ar., $65,005.
Tom Passmore, 1901 Jackson, Pecos, Tex., $65,000.
West AC Farms, Inc., Rt. 4, Hereford, Tx., $64,974.
Clements Corp., 1236 1St. Ntl. Pioneer Bld., Lubbock, Tx., $64,940.
J. C. Moore Mercantile Co., RR 1, Marion, Al., $64,934.
S. M. Fewell & Co., Vance, Ms., $64,925.
W. P. Haggard & Son, Rt. 1, Box 114, Laveen, Az., $64,898.
Jack Phillips, PO Box 548, Delano, Ca., $64,891.
Elbert Harp, Box 729, Abernathy, Tx., $64,-850.
M & S Rnchs., Inc., Box 546, Stanfield, Az., $64,834.
Milton Addison, 1015 E. Tate, Brownfield, Tx., $64,771.
E. E. Gasque and Son, Elloree, S.C., $64,764.
Santa Cruz Farms, Inc., Eloy, Ariz., $64,710.
Faith Pltn., Tribbitt, Ms., $64,685.
Kalcevic Farms, Inc., Aurora, Colo., $64,-624.
Clinton P. Owen, Robinsonville, Ms., $64,-614.
T. A. Densford & Son, Millington, Tenn., $64,590.
B. W. Smith, Jr., Louise, Ms., $64,566.
S. U. Smith, Louise, Ms., $64,566.
Erma Griffith, Morton, Tex., $64,527.
Melvin R. Bryce, Pima, Ariz., $64,525.
Buffalo Farms, Inc., Goodland, Tex., $64,502.
C. C. & Jack Harbison, Mercedes, Tex., $64,497.
Bill Jim Stclair, Muleshoe, Tex., $64,479.
Donald J. Wright, Dimmitt, Tex., $64,450.
Vandergrift-Wims Fms, Inc., Pahokee, Fl., $64,432.
C. J. Shannon & Sons, Tulare, Ca., $64,-420.
J. Carter Caldwell, Slaton, Tx., $64,398.
W. S. Taylor, Jr., Como, Ms., $64,381.
F. T. Leavell, Minter City, Ms., $64,367.
Roy Barefield, Alexander, Ga., $64,358.
Devin Devin & Patterson, Tulia, Tex., $64,-346.
Joe Beck Trust, Hughes, Ar., $64,313.
H. S. Mitchell, Millington, Tn., $64,297.
Arcola Planting Co., Arcola, Ms., $64,294.
Glenn Schott & Sons, Pixley, Ca., $64,249.
J. E. Polado, Morton, Tx., $64,236.
William E. Glotz, Tranquillity, Ca., $64,-072.
Schindler Brothers, Ripley, Ca., $64,059.
James W. Dixon, Friona, Tex., $64,045.
Maryland Plantation, Inc., Shelby, Ms., $63,942.
Anthony Paschel, Hereford, Tx., $63,828.
Zumbro Planting Co., Cleveland, Ms., $63,-817.
Marshall Cator, Sunray, Tex., $63,799.
Hoodco Farms, Inc., Boise, Id., $63,792.
Chase & Harmon Farms, Arvin Ca. $63,708.
John M. Welch., Indianola, Ms., $63,688.
J. L. Francis, Kress, Tex., $63,672.
James Middleton, Darlove, Ms., $63,670.
Texas Technological Research F., Pantex, Tx., $63,654.
Weeks Plantation, Inc., Clarksdale, Ms., Bonard Stice, Brownfield, Tex., $63,650.
Joe B. Mercer, Silverton, Tex., $63,649.
Schmitt Bros. Farms Ptn., Los Fresnos, Tx., $63,584.
Wheeler Robertson, Idalou, Tex., $63,507.
T. C. Clanton, Plainview, Tex., $63,423.
Pluto Planting Company, Thornton, Miss., $63,356.
Refuge Pltn., Greenville, Miss., $63,342.
Gilbreath Farm Co., Dimmitt, Tex., $63,329.
Burke Bros. & Giltz Inc., Charleston, Mo., $63,313.
A. D. Murphree, Jr., Shelby, Miss., $63,313.
Thompson Land & Live Co., Cokeville, Wyo., $63,295.
Camp & Lachenmaier, Shafter, Calif., $63,-291.
L. O. Weaks, Silverton, Tex., $63,255.
M. E. Lee, Somerton, Ariz., $63,254.
Valley Acres, Santa Rosa, Tex., $63,225.
Charles H. Mayo, Taft, Tex., $63,223.
Evans Townes Plantation, Minter City, Miss., $63,222.
Joseph A. Meyer, Adrian, Tex., $63,219.
James A. Bullard, Hereford, Tex., $63,218.
Marathon Farms, Box 206, Casa Grande, Ariz., $63,204.
John Smith, Box 57, Maricopa, Ariz., $63,-196.
R. E. and Rue Sanders, 515 S. Bernice, Spearman, Tex., $63,192.
H. B. Barker, 602 E. Lincoln, Morton, Tex., $63,134.
Kenneth Heard, Rt. 1, Littlefield, Tex., $63,062.
Jerry Block, Rt. 1, Box 422, Mission, Tex., $63,023.
Henry L. Voss, 48 W. Glenn Dr., Phoenix, Ariz., $62,998.
Valley Packing Co. of Calif., PO Box 1751, Yuma, Ariz., $62,996.
Frank & Dorothy Sturdivant, Minter City, Miss., $62,993.
D. C. Parker, RR 1, Box 254, Tunica, Miss., $62,973.
Tracy Hutchins, Rt. 2, Box 315, Casa Grande, Ariz., $62,971.
Frank Wicks, Box 246, Clovis, N. Mex., $62,964.
H. Miller Tr V Chinn, RR 3, Box 983, Bakersfield, Calif., $62,954.
W. A. Fulford, 1305 E. Buckley, Brownfield, Tex., $62,943.
Flowers Brothers, Dublin, Miss., $62,939.
Herman Koehler, Robinsonville, Minn., $62,884.
Garrard Est, % W. M. Garrard, Jr., Indianola, Miss., $62,875.
Earl S. Dobson, Rt. 1, Box 120, Chandler, Ariz., $62,873.
Kleymann Brothers, % Kleymann, Tribune, Kans., $62,865.
Barker Brothers, Soda Spring, Idaho, $62,-861.
Dessert Seed Co., Inc., PO Box 181, El Centro, Calif., $62,847.
J. W. Bryan, 1916 Jackson, Pecos, Tex., $62,-817.
Douglass & Vandiver, RR 2, Madison, Ala., $62,802.
Ben E. Pittman, Box 66, Darling, Miss., $62,774.
Broyles Pecos Farm, 509 Colpitts, Ft. Stockton, Tex., $62,769.
Batman Farms Co., Grain Valley, Mo., $62,-756.
Bell Bros., Box 335, Elsa, Tex., $62,688.
Mitchener Farms Inc., Sumner, Miss., $62,673.
N. S. Garrott & Sons, Proctor, Ark., $62,642.
Broadwell, Inc., York, Nev., $62,628.
Sam C. Jenkins, Lamesa, Tex., $62,609.
Harry Brorman, Hereford, Tex., $62,580.
M and V Farms, Ehrenberg, Ariz., $62,570.
J. A. Pickett, Morrow, La., $62,506.
Evanna Plantation, Inc., Cary, Miss., $62,494.
Dowco Land Co., Cairo, Ill., $62,492.
Robert F. Ashley, La Feria, Tex., $62,473.
John D. Hamilton, Chandler, Ariz., $62,462.
C. E. Atkinson, Bishopville, S.C., $62,450.
Thomas A. & Charles O'Neal, Blenheim, S.C., $62,424.
Carl & Paul Shannon, Visalia, Calif., $62,402.
L. C. Hewitt, Littlefield, Tex., $62,337.
S. C. Wilson & Son, C/O Shelby T. Wilson, Dundee, Miss., $62,333.
D. H. Dew Sr., Eden, Miss., $62,312.
Nash Brothers, Redstone, Mont., $62,256.
M. E. Little, RR 2, Muleshoe, Tex., $62,248.
Fuller Farms, Rt. 2, Box 52, Weslaco, Tex., $62,237.
Vernon Porter, Rt. 2, Box 203H, Dos Palos, Calif., $62,224.
Edward Ray Hooper, PO Box 316, Columbus, N.Mex., $62,219.
Robert W. Brooks, Box 431, Queen Creek, Ariz., $62,201.
Floyd Warren, Inc., Hardin, Mont., $62,080.
Trail Lake Gin Co., Billy Percy, Tralake, Miss., $62,058.
Floyd Robbs, Box 905, Willcox, Ariz., $62,-053.
S & P Farms, Inc., Box 228, Gila Bend., Ariz., $62,045.
John T. Dillard, 502 Cypress St., Leland, Miss., $62,008.
Walter B. Shaw, RR 1, Tanner, Ala., $62,003.
Menezes Bros., 6010 Ave. 184, Tulare, Calif., $61,997.
Doe Cattle & Land Company, PO Box 401, Visalia, Calif., $61,981.
Powers Company, Inc., Cary, Miss., $61,976.
Paul Morgan, 707 N. 18th, Lamesa, Tex., $61,968.
W. E. Austin, 301 Clover Dr., Indianola, Miss., $61,939.
Kempton & Snedigar, 221 E. Loma Vista, Tempe, Ariz., $61,921.
Bill White, 10769 Ave., 96, Pixley, Calif., $61,879.
Withers & Seabrook, RR 1 Box 64, Tunica, Miss., $61,846.
House & Haskell, PO Box 426, El Centro, Calif., $61,840.
Hugh M. Arant, RR 2, Ruleville, Miss., $61,839.
Joe Freitas Jr., Rt. 2 Box 89, Bakersfield, Calif., $61,836.
Z. V. Pate, Inc., Laurel Hill, N.C., $61,835.
A. R. Dillard, 217 N Texas Ave, Hereford, Tex, $61,809.
Randy Johnson, Box 610, Muleshoe, Tex., $61,783.
Yarbrough Brothers, Sicily Island, La., $61,776.
J. C., Conn., Inc,. Coalinga, Calif., $61,774.
James J. Mullis, Chester, Ga., $61,770.
C.C.G. Farms, Inc., Glendale, Ariz., $61,752.
Era Mae Barnes, Chandler, Ariz., $61,724.
Grady Easley, Calhoun City, Miss., $61,707.
J. R. Durrett Trusts, Amarillo, Tex., $61,697.
Lloyd Kontny, Goodland, Kans., $61,696.
J. Walter Hobgood, Anton, Tex., $61,671.
Tule Ranch Apts., Corcoran, Calif., $61,629.
Glen Cox, Lenorah, Tex., $61,613.
Sam Degelia, Sr., Hearne, Tex., $61,586.
James M. Hamilton, Chandler, Ariz., $61,539.
Kenneth Hitchcock, Burlington, Colo., $61,494.
Garrison Bros. & Nelson, Hereford, Tex., $61,486.
John Valpredo, Bakersfield, Calif., $61,445.
Highland Pltn., Greenville, Miss., $61,442.
R. S. Barlow, Lemoore, Calif., $61,433.
Mahan, Mahan & Radcliff, Parma, Mo., $61,432.
Billy W. Clayton, Springlake, Tex., $61,407.
Paul E. Plummer and Sons, Johnson, Kans., $61,320.
Johnson Brothers, Friars Point, Miss., $61,306.
Drew Farms, Inc., Firebaugh, Calif., $61,299.
H. C. Berry, Dexter, N. Mex., $61,264.
G. Buster Brown, Casa Grande, Ariz., $61,260.
C. H. Fletcher, Lycan, Colo., $61,153.
Jay H. Hulet, Murphy, Idaho, $61,147.
Ralph Wheeler, Edmonson, Tex., $61,141.
Hal Bogle, Dexter, N. Mex., $61,135.

Joe Friemel, Umbarger, Tex., $61,102.
K & P Farms Inc., Edison, Ca., $61,101.
Hosea Foster Estate, Canyon, Tex., $61,082.
Alazan Farms, Harlingen, Tex., $61,059.
James M. Warner, Waco, Tex., $61,046.
Otis Whitlock, Bostwick, Ga., $61,027.
Lloyd Gambrel, Ralls, Tex., $61,022.
W. D. Scarborough, Jr., Petersburg, Tex., $60,995.
Leslie H. Laffere, Fatesville, Tex., $60,945.
Jerry Cluck, Dimmitt, Tex., $60,941.
Maricopa Growers Gin, Maricopa, Ariz., $60,924.
John Trimmier, Jr., Hale Center, Tex., $60,911.
Odus Rush, McAlister, N. Mex., $60,897.
Lone Butte Ranches, Gilbert, Ariz., $60,851.
Coyne E. Killian, Lorenzo, Tex., $60,845.
A. S. Perry & Sons, Inc., Tunica, Miss., $60,771.
Svoboda & Hannah, Ogallala, Nev., $60,743.
Harry Schmidt Farms, Brawley, Calif., $60,-699.
Scopena Plantation, Bossier City, La., $60,-685.
C. E. Roemer III, Bossier City, La., $60,685.
Wayne Watkins, Cruger, Miss., $60,671.
Warren W. Sullivan, Walls, Miss., $60,655.
T. R. Joines, Abernathy, Tex., $60,647.
Tyline N. Perry, Kress, Tex., $60,619.
Frank Moore, Plainview, Tex., $60,613.
Jean D. Smith, Ralls, Tex., $60,610.
Funk Farms, Inc., Harlingen, Tex., $60,609.
E. T. Schaefer, Yazoo City, Miss., $60,602.
Jerry Falls, Webb, Miss., $60,592.
Billy Ray McInroe, Levelland, Tex., $60,590.
Seward and Harris, Midnight, Miss., $60,552.
Baconia Plantation, Inc., Cary, Miss., $60,-531.
Slaughter Hill Co., Levelland, Tex., $60,522.
Poplar Grove Pltg./Ref. Co., Pt. Allen, La., $60,518.
W. F. Ponder, Hereford, Tex., $60,468.
R. S. Reese, Westmoreland, Calif., $60,405.
Riggs Bros., Blytheville, Ark., $60,398.
J. W. Lynn Plantation, Gilliam, La., $60,368.
Robert D. Bechtel, Coolidge, Ariz., $60,352.
Thompson Farms, Inc., Decker, Ind., $60,-336.
Lloyd M. Hale, Tulia, Tex., $60,311.
Rex Neely Trust, Chandler, Ariz., $60,298.
Sundial Farming Co., Brawley, Calif., $60,-263.
Clyde Curry, Somerton, Ariz., $60,249.
L. R. Allison Co., Tornillo, Tex., $60,209.
Reuben Crosno, Selma, Calif., $60,171.
Mahalitc Bros., Eagle Lake ,Tex., $60,167.
Jones Ranches, Bowie, Ariz., $60,133.
L. R. Talley, Texico, N. Mex., $60,112.
Dick Barrett, Indianola, Miss., $60,111.
Fritz Kuhn, Jr., Centro, Calif., $60,110.
Jeanne L. James, Burlington, Colo., $60,099.
E Bar S Ranch; Mesquite, Tex. $60,072.
B. A. Holaday Co., Louise, Miss., $60,028.
Barton Ingram, Arcola, Miss., $60,022.
E. L. Goodspeed, Buttonwillow, Calif., $60,-009.

TRASH SALVAGE

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, during these times of increasing awareness and concern over the state of our environment, a good deal of effort is underway on several fronts. The Subcommittee on Air and Water Pollution held hearings Februrary 20, 23, and 27 on S. 2005, the Resource Recovery Act of 1969, which would authorize $800 million over 5 years for Federal grants to States and municipalities for the construction of solid waste disposal plants.

During the hearings, the distinguished Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON) presented very thoughtful and constructive testimony. He said that the National Commission on Materials Policy proposed in S. 2005 should be directed to look into the effect of existing public policies, such as tax advantages and other economic incentives, on the recycling of materials. The Federal Government now offers inducements—usually in the form of tax incentives and depletion allowances—which encourage the exploitation of raw materials. He said that at a time when we are concerned about recycling the steel in junked cars, the 15-percent mineral depletion allowance reduces the cost of fresh ore, encouraging the use of ore and discouraging the use of scrap. The increase in the price of ore, resulting from the elimination of the depletion allowance, might help clear up junkyards full of old cars. He also pointed out that a 22-percent mineral depletion allowance presently decreases the price of sulfur, perhaps discouraging the recovery of sulfurous products from smokestacks.

The Senator from Missouri made a valid point in emphasizing the need to encourage the conservation of our resources by salvaging as much as possible from our wastes. It just makes good sense to me, both from the standpoint of environmental enhancement and conservation of natural resources, to establish national policies which will encourage the recycling of wastes or, at the very least, to take a long, hard look at our present policies which may actually have the effect of discouraging such practices.

I recently received a letter from a constituent in Indianapolis, Ind., Bruce Ayers, in which he expressed his concern over what he labeled a serious national crisis in the area of solid waste disposal problems. He also sent me a newsclipping from the Indianapolis News which contained an article by John Flora about a trash-salvage plan which is at present being tried in Muncie, Ind. The experiment in Muncie represents the kind of innovation which we need more of if we are to solve the vexing problem of cleaning up our environment through the reclamation of our solid wastes. I consider this effort in Muncie to be of sufficient significance to warrant the attention of Congress and the general public.

I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Ayers' letter and the article from the Indianapolis News be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the items were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.,
March 5, 1970.

Senator BIRCH BAYH,
Old Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

SENATOR BAYH: I have been reading various materials concerning our solid waste disposal problem. Until recently I did not realize it was such a serious national crisis. As of this date I have presented two speeches on our disposal problem to a class at Indiana University, and now I have become deeply concerned over it. I have enclosed an article from the Indianapolis News on how Muncie, Indiana is solving its waste problem. Of course this is not the only feasible solution. We can compress it and dump it into the ocean or use it as building material like the Japanese do; or we can build efficient incinerators that give off neither odor nor smoke. Solutions aside, we do need cures for the problem before so much of the needed life matter is locked into waste that the earth is no longer able to sustain the population living on it. Legislation would be most efficient at the federal level because then all states would be required to participate. Please, can you help us?!

Sincerely,

BRUCE E. AYERS.

TRASH SALVAGE PLAN IS TRIED IN MUNCIE
(By John Flora)

MUNCIE, IND.—Amid warnings that the world is in danger of being inundated by its own trash and garbage, Muncie has set in motion a system designed to "save" as much of the stuff as it can.

The idea is the brainchild of Ron Teal, executive vice-president of the Muncie Salvage Co., which this week began disposing of trash and garbage for the city on a temporary, day-to-day basis.

Under the agreement, the city pays $352 a day to Muncie Salvage to take the trash off its hands. City trucks haul the refuse to a processing plant on the city's Southwestside.

"This is the first plant of its kind that I know of," Teal explained above the rumble of a conveyor belt carrying refuse into a packer.

The difference is in the fact that Muncie Salvage "recycles" some of the 150 tons of trash and debris hauled in each day.

Each load is dumped in a heap on either side of a large, slow-moving conveyor in the middle of the concrete floor of the big plant.

Bulldozers shove the refuse onto a conveyor which carries it past sorters who pull out salvageable material and toss it onto another conveyor.

MAY SALVAGE 65 PERCENT

"Right now we're only salvaging paper products," Teal said, "and they amount to about 5 per cent of the total volume that comes in here.

"Eventually, we want to get this up to about 65 per cent when we start salvaging metals, wood, glass and maybe plastics."

Nonsalvageable material is carried into a packer which compresses it to a point where three unpacked truckloads will fit into one truck. From there the compacted material is loaded into Muncie Salvage trucks and carried to the firm's 1,000-acre sanitary landfill north of Muncie.

Meantime, the salvageable paper products are carried by a conveyor into a shredder which reduces everything to narrow strips. An overhead pneumatic tube carries the shredded paper to an automatic baler which compresses the paper into bales measuring 5-by-2 feet by about 30 inches.

The bales, Teal said, weigh between 805 and 1,400 pounds, depending on the type of paper. The bales are then stacked for shipment to one of nine paper mills which pay upward of $20 a ton for the paper.

"Residential trash from the city makes up only a small part of our volume," Teal said. "Most of the refuse comes from our commercial and industrial customers and a higher percentage of it is salvageable."

Sanitation Department trucks make residential pickups while Teal's trucks collect refuse from the firm's commercial and industrial customers.

SAVES TRUCKS, MANPOWER

The arrangement enables city trucks to bring most of their loads to the plant rather than drive to the sanitary landfill north of town, as before. Now, only city trucks working far Northside neighborhoods go to the landfill about 9 miles north of the city. The new method saves on gasoline, wear on trucks and man-hours.

"It remains to be seen how much we can get out of residential trash," Teal said. "We'll have to wait and see."

Recycling refuse, he said, and putting unusable material in landfills seems to be the best way of dealing with the problem.

"I don't know of any incinerators that are completely efficient and they're awfully expensive," he said.

The temporary arrangement with the city was made after Muncie Salvage's contract with the city expired and another firm, Aimco Services of Anderson, obtained a court injunction preventing action on new bids that had been sought by the city.

In earlier bidding, the city rejected bids from Muncie Salvage and Aimco because both were above the $100,000 appropriated. The court order came when a second set of bids was advertised. Aimco charged that, under the specifications, only Muncie Salvage could bid.

City sanitation officials said new bids will be sought soon.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

EXTENSION OF PROGRAMS OF ASSISTANCE FOR ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the order of yesterday, the Chair lays before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 514) to extend programs of assistance for elementary and secondary education, and for other purposes, which the clerk will state.

The bill clerk read the report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 91-937)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 514) to extend programs of assistance for elementary and secondary education, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1969"

POLICY WITH RESPECT TO THE APPLICATION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF FEDERAL LAW

SEC. 2. (a) It is the policy of the United States that guidelines and criteria established pursuant to title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and section 182 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1966 dealing with conditions of segregation by race, whether de jure or de facto, in the schools of the local educational agencies of any State shall be applied uniformly in all regions of the United States whatever the origin or cause of such segregation.

(b) Such uniformity refers to one policy applied uniformly to de jure segregation wherever found and such other policy as may be provided pursuant to law applied uniformly to de facto segregation wherever found.

(c) Nothing in this section shall be construed to diminish the obligation of responsible officials to enforce or comply with such guidelines and criteria in order to eliminate discrimination in federally-assisted programs and activities as required by title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

(d) It is the sense of the Congress that the Department of Justice and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare should request such additional funds as may be necessary to apply the policy set forth in this section throughout the United States.

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965

PART A—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE I OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965 (EDUCATION OF DISADVANTAGED CHILDREN)

EXTENSION OF TITLE I OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965

SEC. 101. (a) Section 102 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "June 30, 1970" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1973".

(b) The third sentence of section 103(a)(1)(A) of such title I is amended by striking out "the fiscal year ending June 30, 1969," and inserting in lieu thereof "each of the succeeding fiscal years ending prior to July 1, 1972,".

(c) Section 121(d) of such title I is amended by striking out "each" where it appears after "$50,000,000" and by striking out "the succeeding fiscal year" and inserting in lieu thereof "for each of the succeeding fiscal years ending prior to July 1, 1973".

STUDY OF ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

SEC. 102. (a) The Commissioner of Education shall make a study of the allocation of sums appropriated for the purposes of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 and of the effectiveness of the various provisions of such title in making funds available to State and local educational agencies in order to meet the purposes of such title I. Such study shall make special reference to the distribution of funds to local educational agencies within counties, the means by which such funds may be concentrated in school attendance areas with the highest concentrations of children from low-income families, the appropriateness of the Federal percentage and the low-income factor provided for in subsection (c) of section 103 of such title I when considered in the light of the extra cost of providing compensatory education for educationally deprived children (including the means of providing services authorized by such title to such children residing in rural areas), and the use of special incentive grants to increase State and local effort for education.

(b) Not later than March 31, 1972, the Commissioner shall submit to the Congress a report on the study required by subsection (a), together with such recommendations as he may deem appropriate with respect to modification of programs under title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965. Notwithstanding the first sentence of section 103(d) of such title I, the Commissioner shall not use data for the purposes of section 103 of such title I from the 1970 census of the United States prior to July 1, 1972.

DESIGNATION OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROVISION OF SPECIAL EDUCATIONAL SERVICES FOR INSTITUTIONALIZED NEGLECTED OR DELINQUENT CHILDREN

SEC. 103. (a) Paragraph (2) of section 103(a) of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, upon determination by the State educational agency that a local educational agency in the State is unable or unwilling to provide for the special educational needs of children, described in clause (C) of the first sentence of this paragraph, who are living in institutions for neglected or delinquent children, the State educational agency shall, if it assumes responsibility for the special educational needs of such children, be eligible to receive the portion of the allocation to such local educational agency which is attributable to such neglected or delinquent children, but if the State educational agency does not assume such responsibility, any other State or local public agency, as determined by regulations established by the Commissioner, which does assume such responsibility shall be eligible to receive such portion of the allocation."

(b) Section 103(d) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of this section, the Secretary shall consider all children who are in correctional institutions to be living in institutions for delinquent children."

INCLUSION OF PUERTO RICO AND OTHER OUTLYING AREAS WITH RESPECT TO NEGLECTED OR DELINQUENT CHILDREN

SEC. 104. (a) Paragraph (4) of section 103(a) of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "paragraph (5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (5) and (7)".

(b) The amendment made by this section shall be effective after June 30, 1970.

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO HANDICAPPED AND NEGLECTED OR DELINQUENT CHILDREN

SEC. 105. (a) Paragraph (5) of section 103(a) of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended to read as follows:

"(5) In the case of a State agency which is directly responsible for providing free public education for handicapped children (including mentally retarded, hard of hearing, deaf, speech impaired, visually handicapped, seriously emotionally disturbed, crippled, or other health impaired children who by reason thereof require special education), the maximum grant which that agency shall be eligible to receive under this part for any fiscal year shall be an amount equal to the Federal percentage of the average per pupil expenditure in the State or, if greater, in the United States, multiplied by the number of such children in average daily attendance, as determined by the Commissioner, at schools for handicapped children operated or supported by the State agency, including schools providing special education for handicapped children under contract or other arrangement with such State agency, in the most recent fiscal year for which satisfactory data are available. Such State agency shall use payments under this part only for programs and projects (including the acquisition of equipment and where necessary the construction of school facilities) which are designed to meet the special educational needs of such children."

(b) Paragraph (7) of section 103(a) of such title I is amended by inserting after "supported by that State agency" the following: ", including schools providing education for such children under contract or other arrangement with such agency,".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall be effective after June 30, 1970.

REQUIRING GRANTS FOR MIGRATORY CHILDREN TO BE BASED ON THE NUMBER TO BE SERVED

SEC. 106. (a) The first sentence of paragraph (6) of section 103(a) of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is, effective with the first allocation of funds pursuant to such title by the Commissioner after the date of enactment of this Act, amended to read as follows: "A State educational agency which has submitted and had approved an application under section 105(c) for any fiscal year shall be entitled to receive a grant for that year under this part, based on the number of migratory children of migratory agriculture workers to be served, for establishing or improving programs for such children."

(b) The second sentence thereof is amended by striking "shall be" the first time it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "may be made"; and by inserting immediately before the period in such second sentence the following: ", except that if, in the case of any State, such amount exceeds the amount required under the preceding sentence and under section 105(c)(2), the Commissioner shall allocate such excess, to the extent necessary, to other States whose maximum total of grants under this sentence would otherwise be insufficient for all such children to be served in such other States".

USE OF MOST RECENT DATA UNDER TITLE I

SEC. 107. (a) The third sentence of section 103(d) of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: "or, to the extent that such data are not available to him before April 1 of the calendar year in which the Secretary's determination is made, then on the basis of the most recent reliable data available to him at the time of such determination".

(b) Section 103(e) of such title is amended by inserting the following after "during the second fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the computation is made": "(or, if satisfactory data for that year are not available at the time of computation, then during the earliest preceding fiscal year for which satisfactory data are available)".

SALARY BONUSES FOR TEACHERS IN SCHOOLS WITH HIGH CONCENTRATIONS OF EDUCATIONALLY DEPRIVED CHILDREN

SEC. 108. Paragraph (1) of Section 105(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by inserting "payments to teachers of amounts in excess of regular salary schedules as a bonus for service in schools eligible for assistance under this section," after "including the acquisition of equipment,".

PROHIBITION AGAINST SUPPLANTING STATE AND LOCAL FUNDS WITH FEDERAL FUNDS

SEC. 109. (a) Paragraph (3) of section 105(a) of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended to read as follows:

"(3) that (A) the local educational agency has provided satisfactory assurance that the control of funds provided under this title, and title to property derived therefrom, shall be in a public agency for the uses and purposes provided in this title, and that a public agency will administer such funds and property, (B) Federal funds made available under this title will be so used (i) as to supplement and, to the extent practical, increase the level of funds that would, in the absence of such Federal funds, be made available from non-Federal sources for the education of pupils participating in programs and projects assisted under this title, and (ii) in no case, as to supplant such funds from non-Federal sources, and (C) State and local funds will be used in the district of such agency to provide services in project areas which, taken as a whole, are at least comparable to service being provided in areas in such district which are not receiving funds under this title: Provided, That any finding of noncompliance with this clause shall not affect the payment of funds to any local educational agency until the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1972, and Provided further, That each local educational agency receiving funds under this title shall report on or before July 1, 1971, and on or before July 1 of each year thereafter with respect to its compliance with this clause;".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective with respect to all applications submitted to State educational agencies after thirty days after the date of enactment of this Act. Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the supplanting of State and local funds with Federal funds prior to the effective date of the amendment made by this section.

APPLICATIONS TO BE MADE AVAILABLE TO PUBLIC

SEC. 110. Section 105(a) of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by redesignating paragraphs (8) through (11) as paragraphs (9) through (12), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (7) the following new paragraph:

"(8) that the local educational agency is making the application and all pertinent documents related thereto available to parents and other members of the general public and that all evaluations and reports required under paragraph (7) shall be public information;".

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO APPLICATIONS AND ASSURANCES

SEC. 111. (a) The parenthetical phrase in clause (A) of section 106(a)(3) of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by inserting "and of research and replication studies" immediately before the closing parenthesis.

(b) Section 105(a)(7) of such title is amended by inserting "(which in the case of reports relating to performance is in accordance with specific performance criteria related to program objectives)" after "such information".

NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL

SEC. 112. Section 134 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended to read as follows:

"NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL

"SEC. 134. (a) There shall be a National Advisory Council on the Education of Disadvantaged Children (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'National Council') consisting of fifteen members appointed by the President, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointment in the competitive service, for terms of three years, except that (1) in the case of initial members, five shall be appointed for terms of one year each and five shall be appointed for terms of two years each, and (2) appointments to fill vacancies shall be only for such terms as remain unexpired. The National Council shall meet at the call of the Chairman.

"(b) The National Council shall review and evaluate the administration and operation of this title, including its effectiveness in improving the educational attainment of educationally deprived children, including the effectiveness of programs to meet their occupational and career needs, and make recommendations for the improvement of this title and its administration and operation. These recommendations shall take into consideration experience gained under this and other Federal educational programs for disadvantaged children and, to the extent appropriate, experience gained under other public and private educational programs for disadvantaged children.

"(c) The National Council shall make such reports of its activities, findings, and recommendations (including recommendations for changes in the provisions of this title) as it may deem appropriate and shall make an annual report to the President and the Congress not later than March 31 of each calendar year. Such annual report shall include a report specifically on which of the various compensatory education programs funded in whole or in part under the provisions of this title, and of other public and private educational programs for educationally deprived children, hold the highest promise for raising the educational attainment of these educationally deprived children. The President is requested to transmit to the Congress such comments and recommendations as he may have with respect to such report."

INCREASE IN LOW-INCOME FACTOR AND SPECIAL GRANTS FOR URBAN AND RURAL SCHOOLS SERVING ATTENDANCE AREAS WITH THE HIGHEST CONCENTRATIONS OF CHILDREN FROM LOW-INCOME FAMILIES

SEC. 113. (a) The second sentence of subsection (c) of section 103 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by striking out all after "1968," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "and for the four succeeding fiscal years they shall be 50 per centum and $3,000, respectively, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973 they shall be 50 per centum and $4,000, respectively.".

(b)(1) Title I of such Act is further amended by striking out "PART A—BASIC GRANTS" where it appears before section 101 and inserting "PART A—BASIC GRANTS" before section 103.

(2) Section 101 of such title I is amended by striking out "this part" and inserting in lieu thereof "the following parts of this title".

(3) Sections 102, 105, 106, 107, and 108 of such title I are each amended by striking out "this part" and inserting in lieu thereof "this title".

(4) Sections 105, 106, 107, 108, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, and 136 of such title I, and all references thereto, are redesignated as sections 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, and 150, respectively.

(5) Such title I is further amended by striking out the heading of part C and by inserting before the caption heading of section 141 the following:

"PART D—GENERAL PROVISIONS"

(6) Such title I is further amended by striking out all of part B thereof and inserting after section 103 the following:

"PART B—SPECIAL INCENTIVE GRANTS

"MAXIMUM ENTITLEMENT

"SEC. 121. (a) In the case of any fiscal year ending after June 30, 1969, each State shall be entitled to a special incentive grant if such State has an effort index for the second preceding fiscal year that exceeds the national effort index for such year.

"(b) The maximum amount of a special incentive grant for which a State is eligible for any fiscal year shall be determined by multiplying the amount of $1 for each 0.01 per centum by which the effort index of that State for the second preceding fiscal year exceeds the national effort index for such year times the aggregate number of children counted for the purposes of entitled local educational agencies within such State to basic grants in accordance with clauses (2), (5), (6), and (7) of section 103(a), except that no State shall be eligible to receive a special incentive grant under this part in an amount in excess of 15 per centum of the total amount available for grants under this part.

"APPLICATIONS; USE OF FUNDS

"SEC. 122. Any State desiring the special incentive grant to which it is entitled under this part for any fiscal year shall make application therefor, in accordance with the requirements set forth in section 142, to the Commissioner. Such application shall be submitted at such time and contain such information as the Commissioner shall require by regulation and shall contain a statement of such policies and procedures as will insure that funds granted to the State under this part will be (1) made available to local educational agencies within that State which have the greatest need for assistance under this title, and (2) used, in accordance with the applicable provisions of this title, for programs and projects designed to meet the special educational needs of educationally deprived children.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 123. For the purpose of this part the term 'effort index' when applied to States, means the per centum expressing the ratio of expenditures from all non-Federal sources in a State for public elementary and secondary education to the total personal income in such State, and the term 'national effort index' means the per centum expressing the ratio of such expenditures in all States to the total personal income in all States; and the term 'State' means the fifty States and the District of Columbia.

"PART C—SPECIAL GRANTS FOR URBAN AND RURAL SCHOOLS SERVING AREAS WITH THE HIGHEST CONCENTRATIONS OF CHILDREN FROM LOW-INCOME FAMILIES

"ELIGIBILITY AND MAXIMUM AMOUNT OF GRANT

"SEC. 131. (a)(1) Each local educational agency which is eligible for a grant under paragraph (2) of section 103(a) shall be entitled to an additional grant under this paragraph for any fiscal year if—

"(A) the total number of children described in clause (A), (B), or (C) of section 103(a)(2) in the school district of such agency for such year amounts to at least 20 per centum of the total number of children, aged five to seventeen inclusive, in the school district of such agency for such year; or

"(B) the total number of children described in clause (A), (B), or (C) of section 103(a)(2) in the school district is at least 5,000 and amounts to at least 5 per centum of the total number of children, aged five to seventeen, inclusive, in such school district.

"(2) Each local educational agency which is eligible for a grant under paragraph (2) of section 103(a) and which (A) is not eligible for a grant under paragraph (1) of this subsection, but (B) would be eligible for a grant under such paragraph (1) if there were in the school district of such agency a relatively small increase in the number of children, aged five to seventeen, inclusive, described in clause (A), (B), or (C) of section 103(a)(2) shall be entitled to a grant under this paragraph (2) if the State educational agency of the State in which such agency is located determines (in accordance with criteria established by regulations of the Commissioner) that such agency has an urgent need for financial assistance to meet the special educational needs of the educationally deprived children in the school district of such agency.

"(b)(1) The maximum amount of any grant to any local educational agency under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) shall be—

"(A) for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970, 30 per centum of the amount that such agency is eligible to receive for such fiscal year under paragraph (2) of section 103(a); and

"(B) for any succeeding fiscal year, 40 per centum of the amount that such agency is eligible to receive for each such succeeding fiscal year.

The aggregate of the amounts for which all local educational agencies are eligible under this paragraph for any fiscal year shall not exceed the amount determined in the following manner:

"(i) compute the total amount for which all State and local educational agencies are eligible under this title for that fiscal year;

"(ii) subtract from such total, a sum equal to the figure set forth in paragraph (3) of section 144; and

"(iii) if that portion of such total which is attributable to amounts for which local educational agencies are eligible under this paragraph constitutes more than 15 per centum of the remainder of such total, reduce such portion until it constitutes 15 per centum of such remainder, through ratable reductions of the maximum grants for which local educational agencies are eligible under this paragraph.

"(2) The maximum amount of any grant to any local educational agency under paragraph (2) of subsection (a) shall not exceed the maximum amount to which it would have been entitled if it had been eligible under paragraph (1) of such subsection. The maximum amount which shall be available to the Commissioner for grants under such paragraph (2) of subsection (a) shall be, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970, equal to 3 per centum of the total amount available for grants for such fiscal year under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) and, for any succeeding fiscal year, such amount shall be equal to 5 per centum of the total amount available for grants for that year under such paragraph (1).

"(c) For the purposes of this section the term 'State' means the fifty States and the District of Columbia.

"(d)(1) In making determinations under this section the Commissioner is authorized, in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, to use the most recent satisfactory data made available to him by the appropriate State educational agency. If satisfactory data for determining the number of children described in clause (A), (B) or (C) of section 103(a)(2) in a school district for the purpose of subsection (a) are not otherwise available to the Commissioner, such determination may be made on the basis of data furnished to him by a State educational agency with respect to the amount of the maximum grant under part A of this title allocated by such State agency to the local educational agency for such district in the State for the purpose of the second sentence of section 103(a)(2), for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which such determination is made.

"(2) Determinations under this section may be made on the basis of data furnished in accordance with section 103(d).

"USES OF FUNDS

"SEC. 132. (a) Funds available for grants under this part shall be used solely for programs and projects designed to meet the special educational needs of educationally deprived children in preschool programs and in elementary schools serving areas with the highest concentrations of children from low-income families, except that such funds may be used for programs and projects for such children in secondary schools serving areas with the highest concentrations of children from low-income families if the local educational agency and its State educational agency determine (in according with criteria established by regulation of the Commissioner) that—

"(A) there is an urgent need for such programs and projects for such children in secondary schools in the area to be served by the local educational agency; and

"(B) there is satisfactory assurance that such programs and projects will be at least as effective in achieving the purposes of this title as the use of such funds for programs and projects for such children in elementary schools in such area.

"(b) In addition to meeting the requirements and conditions set forth in part D, applications for grants under this part shall meet such other requirements and conditions, consistent with the purposes of this title, as the Commissioner shall establish by regulation.".

(7) Section 141(a) of such title is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (10), and by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (11) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(12) in the case of funds received under part C of this title, the local educational agency sets forth such procedures and policies and provides such assurances as the Commissioner may require by regulation for the uses of funds available under such part C to carry out the purposes of this title, and, for any fiscal year ending after June 30, 1970, sets forth a comprehensive plan for meeting the special educational needs of children to be served under such part C including provisions for effective use of all funds available under this title and provisions setting forth specific objectives of such plan and the criteria and procedures, including objective measurements of educational achievement, that will be used to evaluate at least annually the extent to which the objectives of the plan have been met.".

(8) Section 143 of such title I is amended—

(A) by inserting before the period at the end of paragraph (2) of subsection (a) thereof "or section 131", and

(B) by striking out "sections 103 and 144" where it appears in clause (1) of subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 103, 131, and 144".

(9) Section 146 of such title I is amended by striking out ", 106(b), or 121(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "or 142(b)".

(10) Section 147 of such title I is amended by striking out ", 106(b) or 121(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "or 142(b)".

(c) Section 144 of such title is amended (A) by striking out "paragraphs (1) and (2)" in paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1), (2), and (3)", (B) by redesignating such paragraph (3) as paragraph (4), and (C) by inserting before such paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(3) that part of such sums for any fiscal year which is in excess of $1,396,975,000 shall be allocated on the basis of computations in accordance with remaining entitlements under section 103(a)(2), and entitlements under sections 121 and 131, as ratably reduced, but in no case shall allocations on the basis of computations in accordance with section 131 exceed 15 per centum of such excess; and".

(d) Effective for fiscal years ending after June 30, 1972, such section 144 is further amended—

(1) by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "For the purposes of parts B and C of this title, in determining entitlements under such parts, the number of children described in section 103(a) shall be ascertained by using a low-income factor of (i) $2,000 when allocations are made under clause (A) of paragraph (2) in the first sentence of this section, (ii) $3,000 when allocations are made under clause (B) of such paragraph, and (iii) $4,000 when allocations are made under clause (C) of such paragraph."; and

(2) by striking out clause (B) of paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) until appropriations are sufficient to satisfy all maximum grants as computed by using a low-income factor of $3,000, any amount remaining after allocations are computed pursuant to clause (A) shall be allocated by using a low-income factor of $3,000 with respect to children described in section 103(a)(2) who are not counted for purposes of clause (A); and

"(C) until appropriations are sufficient to satisfy all maximum grants as computed by using a low-income factor of $4,000, any amount remaining after allocations are computed pursuant to clauses (A) and (B) shall be allocated by using a low-income factor of $4,000 with respect to children described in section 103(a)(2) who are not counted for purposes of clause (A) or (B); and

"(D) the aggregate amount available for grants to local educational agencies within each State shall be not less than the aggregate amount allocated to local educational agencies within such State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1967, until the total sums available from appropriations for that fiscal year exceed $1,500,000,000 for Part A of title I; and"

(e) Except as otherwise provided, the amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to fiscal years ending after June 30, 1969.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

SEC. 114. Section 107(b)(2) of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "Wake Island,".

PART B—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE II OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965 (LIBRARY RESOURCES, TEXTBOOKS, AND OTHER PRINTED AND PUBLISHED MATERIALS)

EXTENSION OF TITLE II OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965

SEC. 121. (a) Section 201(b) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "and" where it appears after "1969," and by striking out "the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970" and inserting in lieu thereof "each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1970, and June 30, 1971, $210,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $220,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973".

(b) The third sentence of section 202(a)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "the fiscal year ending June 30, 1969," and inserting in lieu thereof "each of the succeeding fiscal years ending prior to July 1, 1972,".

(c) Section 204(b) of such Act is amended by striking out "July 1, 1970" and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1973".

PART C—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE III OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965 (SUPPLEMENTARY EDUCATIONAL SERVICES AND CENTERS)

CONSOLIDATION OF CERTAIN EDUCATION PROGRAMS

SEC. 131. (a)(1) Title III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE III—SUPPLEMENTARY EDUCATIONAL CENTERS AND SERVICES; GUIDANCE, COUNSELING, AND TESTING

"APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 301. (a) The Commissioner shall carry out a program for making grants for supplementary educational centers and services, to stimulate and assist in the provision of vitally needed educational services not available in sufficient quantity or quality, and to stimulate and assist in the development and establishment of exemplary elementary and secondary school educational programs to serve as models for regular school programs, and to assist the States in establishing and maintaining programs of testing and guidance and counseling.

"(b) For the purpose of making grants under this title, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $550,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, $575,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $605,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973. In addition, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, and each of the succeeding fiscal years, such sums as may be necessary for the administration of State plans, the activities of advisory councils, and the evaluation and dissemination activities required under this title.

"ALLOTMENT AMONG STATES

"SEC. 302. (a)(1) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year for the purposes of this paragraph an amount equal to not more than 3 per centum of the amount appropriated for such year for grants under this title. The Commissioner shall allot the amount appropriated pursuant to this paragraph among Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands according to their respective needs for assistance under this title. In addition for each fiscal year ending prior to July 1, 1972, he shall allot from such amount to (A) the Secretary of the Interior the amount necessary to provide programs and prospects for the purpose of this title for individuals on reservations serviced by elementary and secondary schools operated for Indian children by the Department of the Interior, and (B) the Secretary of Defense the amount necessary for such assistance for children and teachers in the overseas dependents schools of the Department of Defense. The terms upon which payments for such purpose shall be made to the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Defense shall be determined pursuant to such criteria as the Commissioner determines will best carry out the purposes of this title.

"(2) From the sums appropriated for making grants under this title for any fiscal year pursuant to section 301(b), the Commissioner shall allot $200,000 to each State and shall allot the remainder of such sums among the States as follows:

"(A) He shall allot to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to 50 percentum of such remainder as the number of children aged five to seventeen, inclusive, in the State bears to the number of children in all the States, and

"(B) He shall allot to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to 50 per centum of such remainder as the population of the State bears to the population of all the States.

For the purposes of this subsection, the term term "State" does not include the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

"(b) The number of children aged five to seventeen, inclusive, and the total population of a State and of all the States shall be determined by the Commissioner on the basis of the most recent satisfatcory data available to him.

"(c) The amount allotted to any State under subsection (a) for any fiscal year, which the Commissioner determines will not be required for the period for which that amount is available, shall be available for grants pursuant to section 306 in such State, and if not so needed may be reallotted or used for grants pursuant to section 306 in other States. Funds available for reallotment may be reallotted from time to time, on such dates during that period as the Commissioner may fix, among other States in proportion to the amounts originally allotted among those States under subsection (a) for that year, but with the proportionate amount for any of the other States being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Commissioner estimates that State needs and will be able to use for that period; and the total of these reductions may be similarly reallotted among the States whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced. Any amount reallotted to a State under this subsection from funds appropriated pursuant to section 301 for any fiscal year shall be deemed to be a part of the amount allotted to it under subsection (a) for that year.

"(d) The amounts made available under the first sentence of subsection (c) for any fiscal year shall remain available for grants during the next succeeding fiscal year.

"USES OF FEDERAL FUNDS

"SEC. 303. (a) It is the purpose of this title to combine within a single authorization, subject to the modifications imposed by the provisions and requirements of this title, the programs formerly authorized by this title and title V–A of the National Defense Education Act of 1958, and except as expressly modified by this title, Federal funds may be used for the same purposes and the funding of the same types of programs previously authorized by those titles.

"(b) Funds appropriated pursuant to section 301 shall be available only for grants in accordance with applications approved pursuant to this title for—

"(1) planning for and taking other steps leading to the development of programs or projects designed to provide supplementary educational activities and services described in paragraphs (2) and (3), including pilot projects designed to test the effectiveness of plans so developed;

"(2) the establishment or expansion of exemplary and innovative educational programs (including dual-enrollment programs and the lease or construction of necessary facilities) for the purpose of stimulating the adoption of new educational programs (including those described in section 503(4) and special programs for handicapped children) in the schools of the State; and

"(3) the establishment, maintenance, operation, and expansion of programs or projects, including the lease or construction of necessary facilities and the acquisition of necessary equipment, designed to enrich the programs of local elementary and secondary schools and to offer a diverse range of educational experience to persons of varying talents and needs by providing, especially through new and improved approaches, supplementary educational services and activities, such as—

"(A) remedial instruction, and school health, physical education, recreation, psychological, social work, and other services designed to enable and encourage persons to enter, remain in, or reenter educational programs, including the provision of special educational programs and study areas during periods when schools are not regularly in session;

"(B) comprehensive academic services and, where appropriate, vocational guidance and counseling, for continuing adult education;

"(C) specialized instruction and equipment for students interested in studying advanced scientific subjects, foreign languages, and other academic subjects which are not taught in the local schools or which can be provided more effectively on a centralized basis, or for persons who are handicapped or of preschool age;

"(D) making available modern educational equipment and specially qualified personnel, including artists and musicians, on a temporary basis for the benefit of children in public and other nonprofit schools, organizations, and institutions;

"(E) developing, producing, and transmitting radio and television programs for classroom and other educational use;

"(F) in the case of any local educational agency which is making a reasonable tax effort but which is nevertheless unable to meet critical educational needs (including preschool education), because some or all of its schools are seriously overcrowded, obsolete, or unsafe, initiating and carrying out programs or projects designed to meet those needs, particularly those which will result in more effective use of existing facilities;

"(G) providing special education and related services for persons who are in or from rural areas or who are or have been otherwise isolated from normal educational opportunities including, where appropriate, the provision of mobile educational services and equipment, special home study courses, radio, television, and related forms of instruction, bilingual education methods and visiting teachers' programs,

"(H) encouraging community involvement in educational programs;

"(I) providing programs for gifted and talented children; and

"(J) other specially designed educational programs or projects which meet the purposes of this title; and

"(4) programs for testing students in the public and private elementary and secondary schools and in junior colleges and technical institutes in the State, and programs designed to improve guidance and counseling services at the appropriate levels in such schools.

"(c) In addition to the uses specified in subsection (b), funds appropriated for carrying out this title may be used for—

"(1) proper and efficient administration of State plans;

"(2) obtaining technical, professional, and clerical assistance and the services of experts and consultants to assist the advisory councils authorized by this title in carrying out their responsibilities; and

"(3) evaluation of plans, programs, and projects, and dissemination of the results thereof.

"APPLICATION FOR GRANTS; CONDITIONS FOR APPROVAL

"SEC. 304. (a) A grant under this title pursuant to an approved State plan or by the Commissioner for a supplementary educational center or service program or project may be made only to a local educational agency or agencies, and then only if there is satisfactory assurance that, in the planning of that program or project there has been, and in the establishment and carrying out thereof there will be, participation of persons broadly representative of the cultural and educational resources of the area to be served. The term 'cultural and educational resources' includes State educational agencies, institutions of higher education, nonprofit private schools, public and nonprofit private agencies such as libraries, museums, musical and artistic organizations, educational radio and television, and other cultural and educational resources. Such grants may be made only upon application to the appropriate State educational agency or to the Commissioner, as the case may be, at such time or times, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Commissioner deems necessary. Such application shall—

"(1) provide that the activities and services for which assistance under this title is sought will be administered by or under the supervision of the applicant;

"(2) set forth a program for carrying out the puposes set forth in section 303(b) and provide for such methods of administration as are necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the programs;

"(3) set forth policies and procedures which assure that Federal funds made available under this title for any fiscal year will be so used as to supplement and, to the extent practical, increase the level of funds that would, in the absence of such Federal funds, be made available by the applicant for the purposes described in section 303(b), and in no case supplant such funds;

"(4) provide, in the case of an application for assistance under this title which includes a project for the construction of necessary facilities, satisfactory assurance that—

"(A) reasonable provision has been made, consistent with the other uses to be made of the facilities, for areas in such facilities which are adaptable for artistic and cultural activities,

"(B) upon completion of the construction, title to the facilities will be in a State or local educational agency, and

"(C) in developing plans for such facilities (i) due consideration will be given to excellence of architecture and design and to the inclusion of works of art (not representing more than 1 per centum of the cost of the project), and (ii) there will be compliance with such standards as the Secretary may prescribe or approve in order to insure that, to the extent appropriate in view of the uses to be made of the facilities, such facilities are accessible to and usable by handicapped persons;

"(5) provide for such fiscal control and fund accounting procedures as may be necessary to assure proper disbursement of and accounting for Federal funds paid to the applicant under this title; and

"(6) provide for making an annual report and such other reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Commissioner may reasonably require to carry out his functions under this title and to determine the extent to which funds provided under this title have been effective in improving the educational opportunities of persons in the area served, and for keeping such records and for affording such access thereto as the Commissioner may find necessary to assure the correctness and vertification of such reports.

"(b) An application by a local educational agency for a grant under this title may be approved only if it is consistent with the applicable provisions of this title and—

"(1) meets the requirements set forth in subsection (a);

"(2) provides that the program or project for which application is made—

"(A) will utilize the best available talents and resources and will substantially increase the educational opportunities in the area to be served by the applicant, and

"(B) to the extent consistent with the number of children enrolled in nonprofit private schools in the area to be served whose educational needs are of the type provided by the program and project, makes provision for the participation of such children; and

"(3) has been reviewed by a panel of experts.

"(c) Amendments of applications shall, except as the Commissioner may otherwise provide by or pursuant to regulations, be subject to approval in the same manner as original applications."

"STATE PLANS

"SEC. 305. (a)(1) Any State desiring to receive payments for any fiscal year to carry out a State plan under this title shall (A) establish within its State educational agency a State advisory council (hereinafter referred to as the State advisory council) which meets the requirements of this subsection, (B) set dates before which local educational agencies must have submitted applications for grants to the State educational agency, and (C) submit to the Commissioner, through its State educational agency, a State plan at such time and in such detail as the Commissioner may deem necessary. The Commissioner may, by regulation, set uniform dates for the submission of State plans and applications.

"(2) The State advisory council, established pursuant to paragraph (1), shall—

"(A) be appointed by the State educational agency, and be broadly representative of the cultural and educational resources of the State (as defined in section 304(a)) and of the public, including persons representative of—

"(i) elementary and secondary schools,

"(ii) institutions of higher education, and

"(iii) areas of professional competence in dealing with children needing special education because of physical or mental handicaps;

"(B) advise the State educational agency on the preparation of, and policy matters arising in the administration of, the State plan, including the development of criteria for approval of applications under such State plan;

"(C) review, and make recommendations to the State educational agency on the action to be taken with respect to, each application for a grant under the State plan;

"(D) evaluate programs and projects assisted under this title; and

"(E) prepare and submit through the State educational agency a report of its activities, recommendations, and evaluations, together with such additional comments as the State educational agency deems appropriate, to the Commissioner and to the National Advisory Council, established pursuant to this title, at such times, in such form, and in such detail, as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(3) Not less than ninety days prior to the beginning of any fiscal year in which a State desires to receive a grant under this title, such State shall certify the establishment of, and membership of, its State advisory council to the Commissioner.

"(4) Each State advisory council shall meet within thirty days after certification has been accepted by the Commissioner and select from its membership a chairman. The time, place, and manner of meeting shall be as provided by such council, except that such council shall have not less than one public meeting each year at which the public is given opportunity to express views concerning the administration and operation of this title.

"(5) State advisory councils shall be authorized to obtain the services of such professional, technical, and clerical personnel as may be necessary to enable them to carry out their functions under this title and to contract for such services as may be necessary to enable them to carry out their evaluation functions.

"(b) The Commissioner shall approve a State plan, or modification thereof, if he determines that the plan submitted for that fiscal year—

"(1)(A) except in the case of funds available for the purpose described in paragraph (4) of section 303(b), sets forth a program (including educational needs, and their basis, and the manner in which the funds paid to the State under this title shall be used in meeting such educational needs) under which funds paid to the State under section 307(a) will be expended solely for the improvement of education in the State through grants to local educational agencies for programs or projects in accordance with sections 303 and 304; Provided, That, in the case of a State educational agency that also is a local educational agency, its approval of a program or project to be carried out by it in the latter capacity shall, for the purposes of this title, be deemed an award of a grant by it upon application of a local educational agency if the State plan contains, in addition to the provisions otherwise required by this section, provisions and assurances (applicable to such programs or project) that are fully equivalent to those otherwise required of a local educational agency;

"(B) in the case of funds available for the purpose described in paragraph (4) of section 303(b), sets forth—

"(i) a program for testing students in the public elementary and secondary schools of such State or in the public junior colleges and technical institutes of such State, and, if authorized by law, in other elementary and secondary schools and in other junior colleges and technical institutes in such State, to identify students with outstanding aptitudes and ability, and the means of testing which will be utilized in carrying out such program; and

"(ii) a program of guidance and counseling at the appropriate levels in the public elementary and secondary schools or public junior colleges and technical institutes of such State; (A) to advise students of courses of study best suited to their ability, aptitudes and skills, (B) to advise students in their decisions as to the type of educational program they should pursue, the vocation they train for and enter, and the job opportunities in the various fields, and (C) to encourage students with outstanding aptitudes and ability to complete their secondary school education, take the necessary courses for admission to institutions of higher education, and enter such institutions and such programs may include, at the discretion of such State agency, short-term sessions for persons engaged in guidance and counseling in elementary and secondary schools, junior colleges, and technical institutes in such State;

"(2) sets forth the administrative organization and procedures, including the qualifications for personnel having responsibilities in the administration of the plan in such detail as the Commissioner may prescribe by regulation;

"(3) sets forth criteria for achieving an equitable distribution of assistance under this title, which criteria shall be based on consideration of (A) the size and population of the State, (B) the geographic distribution and density of the population within the State, and (C) the relative need of persons in different geographic areas and in different population groups within the State for the kinds of services and activities described in section 303, and the financial ability of the local educational agencies serving such persons to provide such services and activities;

"(4) provides for giving special consideration to the application of any local educational agency which is making a reasonable tax effort but which is nevertheless unable to meet critical educational needs, including preschool education for four- and five-year-olds and including where appropriate bilingual education, because some or all of its schools are seriously overcrowded (as a result of growth or shifts in enrollment or otherwise), obsolete, or unsafe;

"(5) provides that, in approving applications for grants for programs or projects, applications proposing to carry out programs or projects planned under this title will receive special consideration;

"(6) provides for adoption of effective procedures (A) for the evaluation, at least annually, of the effectiveness of the programs and projects, by the State advisory council, supported under the State plan in meeting the purposes of this title, (B) for appropriate dissemination of the results of such evaluations and other information pertaining to such programs or projects, and (C) for adopting, where appropriate, promising educational practices developed through such programs or projects;

"(7) provides that not less than 50 per centum of the amount which such State receives to carry out the plan in such fiscal year shall be used for purposes of paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 303(b);

"(8) provides that not less than 15 per centum of the amount which such State receives to carry out the plan in such fiscal year shall be used for special programs or projects for the education of handicapped children;

"(9) sets forth policies and procedures which give satisfactory assurance that Federal funds made available under this title for any fiscal year (A) will not be commingled with State funds, and (B) will be so used as to supplement and, to the extent practical, increase the fiscal effort (determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Commissioner, by regulation) that would, in the absence of such Federal funds, be made by the applicant for educational purposes;

"(10) provides for such fiscal control and fund accounting procedures as may be necessary to assure proper disbursement of and accounting for Federal funds paid to the State under this title;

"(11) provides for making an annual report and such other reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Commissioner may reasonably require to carry out his functions under this title and to determine the extent to which funds provided under this title have been effective in improving the educational opportunities of persons in the areas served by the programs or projects supported under the State plan and in the State as a whole, including reports of evaluations made in accordance with objective measurements under the State plan pursuant to paragraph (6), and for keeping such records and for affording such access thereto as the Commissioner may find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(12) provides that final action with respect to any application (or amendment thereof) regarding the proposed final disposition thereof shall not be taken without first affording the local educational agency or agencies submitting such application reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing; and

"(13) contains satisfactory assurance that, in determining the eligibility of any local educational agency for State aid or the amount of such aid, grants to that agency under this title shall not be taken into consideration.

"(c) The Commissioner may, if he finds that a State plan for any fiscal year ending prior to July 1, 1973, is in substantial compliance with the requirements set forth in subsection (b), approve that part of the plan which is in compliance with such requirements and make available (pursuant to section 307) to that State that part of the State's allotment which he determines to be necessary to carry out that part of the plan so approved. The remainder of the amount which such State is eligible to receive under this section may be made available to such State only if the unapproved portion of that State plan has been so modified as to bring the plan into compliance with such requirements: Provided, That the amount made available to a State pursurant to this subsection shall not be less than 50 per centum of the maximum amount which the State is eligible to receive under this section.

"(d) A State which has had a State plan approved for any fiscal year may receive for the purpose of carrying out such plan an amount not in excess of 85 per centum of its allotment pursuant to section 302.

"(e)(1) The Comissioner shall not finally disapprove any plan submitted under subsection (a), or any modification thereof, without first affording the State educational agency submitting the plan reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing.

"(2) Whenever the Commissioner, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearings to any State educational agency, finds that there has been a failure to comply substantially with any requirements set forth in the plan of that State approved under section 305 or with any requirement set forth in the application of a local educational agency approved pursuant to section 304, the Commissioner shall notify the agency that further payments will not be made to the State under this title (or, in his discretion, that the State educational agency shall not make further payments under this title to specified local educational agencies affected by the failure) until he is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied, no further payments shall be made to the State under this title, or payments by the State educational agency under this title shall be limited to local educational agencies not affected by the failure, as the case may be.

"(3)(A) If any State is dissatisfied with the Commissioner's final action with respect to the approval of a plan submitted under subsection (a) or with his final action under paragraph (2), such State may, within 60 days after notice of such action, file with the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which such State is located a petition for review of that action. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commisisoner. The Commissioner thereupon shall file in the court the record of the proceedings on which he based his action as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

"(B) The findings of fact by the Commissioner, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive; but the court, for good cause shown may remand the case to the Commissioner to take further evidence, and the Commissioner may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify his previous action, and shall certify to the court the record of the further proceedings.

"(C) The court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Commissioner or to set it aside, in whole or in part. The judgment of the court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"(f)(1) If any local educational agency is dissatisfied with the final action of the State educational agency with respect to approval of an application of such local agency for a grant pursuant to this title, such local agency may, within sixty days after such final action or notice thereof, whichever is later, file with the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the State is located a petition for review of that action. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the State educational agency. The State educational agency thereupon shall file in the court the record of the proceedings on which the State educational agency based its action as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

"(2) The findings of fact by the State educational agency, if supported by substantial evidence shall be conclusive; but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the State educational agency to take further evidence, and the State educational agency may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify its previous action, and shall certify to the court the record of the further proceedings.

"(3) The court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the State educational agency or to set it aside, in whole or in part. The judgment of the court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"SPECIAL PROGRAMS AND PROJECTS

"SEC. 306. (a) From the amount allotted to any State pursuant to section 302 which is not available to that State under a State plan approved pursuant to section 305, the Commissioner is authorized, subject to the provisions of section 304, to make grants to local educational agencies in such State for programs or projects which meet the purposes of section 303 and which, in the case of a local educational agency in a State which has a State plan approved, hold promise of making a substantial contribution to the solution of critical educational problems common to all or several States. The Commissioner may not approve an application under this section unless the application has been submitted to the appropriate State educational agency for comment and recommendation with respect to the action to be taken by the Commissioner regarding the disposition of the application.

"(b) Not less than 15 per centum of the funds granted pursuant to this section in any fiscal year shall be used for programs or projects designed to meet the special educational needs of handicapped children.

"PAYMENTS

"SEC. 307. (a) From the allotment to each State pursuant to section 302, for any fiscal year, the Commissioner shall pay to each State, which has had a plan approved pursuant to section 305 for that fiscal year, the amount necessary to carry out its State plan as approved.

"(b) The Commissioner is authorized to pay to each State amounts necessary for the activities described in section 303(c), during any fiscal year, except that (1) the total of such payments shall not be in excess of an amount equal to 7½ per centum of its allotment for that fiscal year or, $150,000 ($50,000 in the case of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands), whichever is greater, and (2) in such payment, the amount paid for the administration of the State plan for any fiscal year shall not exceed an amount equal to 5 per centum of its allotment for that fiscal year of $100,000 ($35,000 in the case of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands), whichever is greater.

"(c) The Commissioner shall pay to each applicant which has an application approved pursuant to section 306 the amount necessary to carry out the program or project pursuant to such application.

"(d) Payments under this section may be made in installments and in advance or by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments.

"(e) No payments shall be made under this title to any local educational agency or to any State unless the Commissioner finds, in the case of a local educational agency, that the combined fiscal effort of that agency and the State with respect to the provision of free public education by that agency for the preceding fiscal year was not less than such combined fiscal effort for that purpose for the second preceding fiscal year or, in the case of a State, that the fiscal effort of that State for State aid (as defined by regulation) with respect to the provision of free public eduaction in that State for the preceding fiscal year was not less than such fiscal effort for State aid for the second preceding fiscal year.

"(f)(1) In any State which has a State plan approved under section 305(c) and in which no State agency is authorized by law to provide, or in which there is a substantial failure to provide, for effective participation on an equitable basis in programs authorized by this title by children enrolled in any one or more private elementary or secondary schools of such State in the area or areas served by such programs, the Commissioner shall arrange for the provision, on an equitable basis, of such programs and shall pay the costs thereof for any fiscal year out of that State's allotment. The Commissioner may arrange for such programs through contracts with institutions of higher education, or other competent nonprofit institutions or organizations.

"(2) In determining the amount to be withheld from any State's allotment for the provision of such programs, the Commissioner shall take into account the number of children and teachers in the area or areas served by such programs who are excluded from participation therein and who, except for such exclusion, might reasonably have been expected to participate.

"RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS

"SEC. 308. If within twenty year after completion of any construction for which Federal funds have been paid under this title—

"(a) the owner of the facility shall cease to be a State or local educational agency, or

"(b) the facility shall cease to be used for the educational and related purposes for which it was constructed, unless the Commissioner determines in accordance with regulations that there is good cause for releasing the applicant or other owner from the obligation to do so.

the United States shall be entitled to recover from the applicant or other owner of the facility an amount which bears to the then value of the facility (or so much thereof as constituted an approved project or projects) the same ratio as the amount of such Federal funds bore to the cost of the facility financed with the aid of such funds. Such value shall be determined by agreement of the parties or by action brought in the United States district court for the district in which the facility is situated.

"NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL

"SEC. 309. (a) The President shall appoint a National Advisory Council on Supplementary Centers and Services which shall—

"(1) review the administration of, general regulations for, and operation of this title, including its effectiveness in meeting the purposes set forth in section 303;

"(2) review, evaluate, and transmit to the Congress and the President the reports submitted pursuant to section 305(a)(2)(E);

"(3) evaluate programs and projects carried out under this title and disseminate the results thereof; and

"(4) make recommendations for the improvement of this title, and its administration and operation.

"(b) The Council shall be appointed by the President without regard to the civil service laws and shall consist of twelve members, a majority of whom shall be broadly representative of the educational and cultural resources of the United States including at least one person who has professional competence in the area of education of handicapped children. Such members shall be appointed for terms of 3 years except that (1) in the case of the initial members, four shall be appointed for terms of 1 year and four shall be appointed for terms of 2 years each, and (2) appointments to fill the unexpired portion of any terms shall be for such portion only. When requested by the President, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall engage such technical and professional assistance as may be required to carry out the functions of the Council, and shall make available to the Council such secretarial, clerical and other assistance and such pertinent data prepared by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare as it may require to carry out its functions.

"(c) The Council shall make an annual report of its findings and recommendations (including recommendations for changes in the provisions of this title) to the President and the Congress not later than January 20 of each year. The President is requested to transmit to the Congress such comments and recommendations as he may have with respect to such report."

(b) In the case of any fiscal year ending prior to July 1, 1973, each State submitting a State plan under title III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 shall assure the Commissioner of Education that it will expend for the purpose described in paragraph (4) of section 303(b) of such title III an amount at least equal to 50 per centum of the amount expended by that State for the purposes of title V–A of the National Defense Education Act of 1968 from funds appropriated pursuant to such title V–A for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970.

(c) Any appropriation for the purposes of title V of the National Defense Education Act of 1958 for any fiscal year ending after June 30, 1970, shall be deemed to have been appropriated pursuant to section 301 of Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

(d) The amendment made by this section shall be effective with respect to fiscal years ending after June 30, 1970.

PART D—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE V OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965 (STRENGTHENING STATE DEPARTMENTS OF EDUCATION)

EXTENSION OF TITLE V OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965

SEC. 141. Section 501(b) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "and" where it appears after "1969," and by striking out all that follows "1968" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "$80,000,000 each for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1969, June 30, 1970, and June 30, 1971, $85,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $90,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973".

PROVISION RELATING TO GIFTED AND TALENTED CHILDREN

SEC. 142. (a) Section 503(11) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (relating to grants to strengthen State departments of education) is amended by inserting after "handicapped" a comma and the following: "and gifted and talented children".

(b) The amendment made by this section shall be effective upon enactment of this Act.

STRENGTHENING LEADERSHIP AND QUALITY IN EDUCATION; IMPROVING PLANNING AND EVALUATION OF EDUCATION PROGRAMS

SEC. 143. (a)(1) The heading of title V of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE V—STRENGTHENING STATE AND LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES".

(2) Such title V is amended by inserting before section 501 thereof the following heading:

"PART A—GRANTS TO STRENGTHEN STATE DEPARTMENTS OF EDUCATION".

(3) Section 507 of such title V, and all references thereto, is redesignated as section 553 of such title and is amended, in subsection (a), by striking out "but it does not include a local educational agency" and inserting in lieu thereof "including local educational agencies".

(4) Such title V is amended—

(A) by striking out sections 506, 508, 509, and 510;

(B) in sections 501, 502, 503, 504, and 505, by striking out "this title" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "this part";

(C) in section 503, by inserting "and" at the end of clause (11), by striking out the semicolon at the end of clause (12) and inserting in lieu thereof a period, and by striking out clauses (13) and (14); and

(D) by inserting after section 505 the following:

"PART B—LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES

"APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 521. (a) The Commissioner shall carry out a program for making grants to stimulate and assist local educational agencies in strengthening the leadership resources of their districts, and to assist those agencies in the establishment and improvement of programs to identify and meet the educational needs of their districts.

"(b) For the purpose of making grants under this part, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970, $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, $30,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $40,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973.

"APPORTIONMENT AMONG STATES

"SEC. 522. (a) From the sums appropriated for carrying out this part for each fiscal year, the Commissioner shall reserve such amount, but not in excess of 2 per centum of such sums, as he may determine and shall apportion such amount among the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands according to their respective needs for assistance under this part. The remainder of such sums shall be apportioned by the Commissioner as follows:

"(A) He shall apportion 40 per centum of such remainder among the States in equal amounts.

"(B) He shall apportion to each State an amount that bears the same ratio to 60 per centum of such remainder as the number of public school pupils in all the State bears to the number of public school pupils in all the States, as determined by the Commissioner on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available to him.

For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'State' does not include the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

"(b) The amount apportioned to any State under subsection (a) for any fiscal year which the Commissioner determines will not be required for that year shall be available for reapportionment from time to time, on such dates during that year as the Commissioner may fix, to other States in proportion to the amounts originally apportioned among those States under subsection (a) for that year, but with the proportionate amount for any of the other States being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Commissioner estimates the local educational agencies of such State need and will be able to use for that year; and the total of these reductions shall be similarly reapportioned among the States whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced. Any amount reapportioned to a State under this subsection from funds appropriated pursuant to section 521 for any fiscal year shall be deemed part of the amount apportioned to it under subsection (a) for that year.

"GRANTS FROM APPORTIONED FUNDS

"SEC. 523. From the amount apportioned to any State for any fiscal year under section 522 the Commissioner may, upon approval of an application in accordance with section 524 submitted to him by a local educational agency of such State, after approval by the State educational agency in accordance with section 525, make a grant or grants to such local educational agency equal to the expenditures incurred by such agency for the planning of, and for programs for, the development, improvement, or expansion of activities promoting the purposes set forth in section 521(a) and more particularly described in such application and for which such application is approved, such as—

"(1) educational planning on a district basis, including the identification of educational problems, issues, and needs in the district and the evalution on a periodic or continuing basis of educational programs in the district;

"(2) providing support or services for the comprehensive and compatible recording, collecting, processing, analyzing, interpreting, storing, retrieving, and reporting of educational data including the use of automated data systems;

"(3) programs for conducting, sponsoring, or cooperating in educational research and demonstration programs and projects such as (A) establishing and maintaining curriculum research and innovation centers to assist in locating and evaluating curriculum research findings, (B) discovering and testing new educational ideas (including new uses of printed and audiovisual media) and more effective educational practices, and putting into use those which show promise of success, and (C) studying ways to improve the legal and organizational structure for education, and the management and administration of education in the district of such agency;

"(4) programs to improve the quality of teacher preparation, including student-teaching arrangements, in cooperation with institutions of higher education and State educational agencies;

"(5) programs and other activities specifically designed to encourage the full and adequate utilization and acceptance of auxiliary personnel (such as instructional assistants and teacher aides) in elementary and secondary schools on a permanent basis;

"(6) providing such agencies and the schools of such agencies with consultative and technical assistance and services relating to academic subjects and to particular aspects of education such as the education of the handicapped, the gifted and talented, and the disadvantaged, vocational education, school building design and utilization, school social work, the utilization of modern instructional materials and equipment, transportation, educational administrative procedures, and school health, physical education, and recreation;

"(7) training programs for the officials of such agencies; and

"(8) carrying out any such activities or programs, where appropriate, in cooperation with other local educational agencies.

"APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS BY THE COMMISSIONER

"SEC. 524. (a) An application for a grant under this part for each fiscal year shall set forth a plan under which Federal funds received by the applicant under this part for that fiscal year will be used solely for a program of activities specifically designed to strengthen the leadership resources of the applicant and to establish and improve programs to identify and meet the educational needs of the persons served by the applicant.

"(b) The Commissioner may approve an application under this part only if the application for that year—

"(1) contains or is supported by adequate assurance that Federal funds made available under the approved application will be so used as to supplement, and to the extent practical, increase the amounts of State and local funds that would in the absence of such Federal funds be made available for projects and activities which meet the requirements of section 523;

"(2) sets forth such fiscal control and fund accounting procedures as may be necessary to assure proper disbursement of, and accounting for, Federal funds paid under this part; and

"(3) provides for making such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Commissioner may require to carry out his functions under this part, and for keeping such records and for affording such access thereto as the Commissioner may find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports.

"APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS BY STATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES

"SEC. 525. In approving applications for the purposes of this part a State educational agency shall—

"(1) approve only such applications for proposed projects, programs, or activities as will—

"(A) make a significant contribution to strengthening the leadership resources of the applicant or its ability to participate effectively in meeting the educational needs of its district, and

"(B) involve an expenditure of at least $2,500, and

"(2) provide for an equitable distribution on the basis of need of funds provided pursuant to this part, and, to the extent possible within such a distribution, give priority to exemplary projects, programs, or activities.

"PART C—COMPREHENSIVE EDUCATIONAL PLANNING AND EVALUATION

"AUTHORIZATION

"SEC. 531, (a) The Commissioner is authorized to make comprehensive planning and evaluation grants to State and local educational agencies in order to assist and stimulate them to enhance their capability to make effective progress, through comprehensive and continuing planning and evaluation, toward the achievement of opportunities for high-quality education for all segments of the population.

"(b) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this part, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, $15,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973.

"(c)(1)(A) From the sums appropriated for carrying out this part for each fiscal year, the Commissioner shall reserve such amount, but not in excess of 2 per centum of such per centum, as he may determine and shall apportion such amount among the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, according to their respective needs for assistance under this part. The remainder shall be apportioned by the Commissioner as follows:

"(i) He shall apportion 40 per centum of such remainder among the States in equal amounts.

"(ii) He shall apportion to each State an amount that bears the same ratio to 60 per centum of such remainder as the population of the State bears to the population of all the States, as determined by the Commissioner on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available to him.

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph (1), the term 'State' does not include the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

"(2) The amount apportioned to any State under paragraph (1) of this subsection for any fiscal year which the Commissioner determines will not be required for that year shall be available for reapportionment from time to time, on such dates during that year as the Commissioner may fix, to other States in proportion to the amounts originally apportioned among those States under such paragraph for that year, but with the proportionate amount for any of the other States being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Commissioner estimates the State and local educational agencies of such State need and will be able to use for that year; and the total of these reductions shall be similarly reapportioned among the States whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced. Any amount reapportioned to a State under this paragraph from funds appropriated pursuant to this section for any fiscal year shall be deemed part of the amount apportioned to it under paragraph (1) of that year.

"(3) Grants for any fiscal year to a State agency and any local educational agency in such State pursuant to this part shall be made from such State's apportionment for such year pursuant to this subsection.

"COMPREHENSIVE PLANNING AND EVALUATION GRANTS: ELIGIBLE AGENCIES

"SEC. 532. (a) Any State desiring to receive a grant under this part for any fiscal year shall designate or establish within its State educational agency a single office or unit (hereafter in this part referred to as the State planning and evaluation agency) as the sole agency for administering a comprehensive program of systematic planning and evaluation of elementary and secondary education in the State. The State planning and evaluation agency shall have the primary responsibility for planning and evaluating the education programs of the State and for the administration of funds received by the State under this part.

"(b) Any local educational agency desiring to receive a grant under this part must provide the Commissioner with satisfactory assurance that—

"(1) the local educational agency or agencies have a planning and evaluation office or unit which has or will have, as the result of assistance under this part, the capability of carrying out a comprehensive program of systematic planning and evaluation meeting the purposes of this part;

"(2) the appropriate State educational agency or agencies have been consulted and have had the opportunity to comment on, and advise the local educational agencies and the Commissioner with regard to, the application; and

"(3) the planning and evaluation activities of the local educational agency or agencies will be closely coordinated with such activities of the appropriate State agencies; and must further provide the Commissioner with satisfactory assurance that—

"(4) the local educational agency serves, or, if two or more local educational agencies are making joint application, those agencies serve, an area with a population sufficient to merit a comprehensive planning and evaluation program in addition to that of the State or of other local educational agencies in the area or region to be served by the applicant; or

"(5) the local educational agency or agencies will use the funds for demonstration projects to plan, develop, test, and improve planning and evaluation systems and techniques consistent with, and to further the purposes of, this part.

"(c) In making grants pursuant to this section the Commissioner shall give special emphasis on developing coordinated and comprehensive plans for educational planning and evaluations between and among the Office of Education, State educational agencies, and local educational agencies, including projects on an interstate, regional, or metropolitan area basis.

"(d) No grant shall be made by the Commissioner to a local educational agency or agencies under this part unless the application for such grant has been submitted to the State educational agency or agencies in the State or States in which it is to be carried out. If, within sixty days of such submission or within such longer period of time as the Commissioner may determine pursuant to regulations, the State agency or agencies disapprove the proposed program or project, the Commissioner shall review the application with the appropriate State and local educational agencies before making a final decision.

"APPLICATION

"SEC. 533. (a) An application for a grant under this part shall be submitted to the Commissioner at such time or times, in such form, and containing such information as he may deem necessary. Such application shall include—

"(1) a statement of present and projected educational needs of persons residing in the area to be served;

"(2) a description of a program for meeting those needs which includes—

"(A) setting long-range areawide goals in meeting educational needs and establishing priorities among such goals,

"(B) developing long-range plans for achieving such goals, taking into consideration the resources available and the educational effectiveness of each of the alternatives,

"(C) planning new programs and improvements in existing programs based on the results of analyses of alternative means of achieving educational goals,

"(D) objectively evaluating at intermediate stages the progress and effectiveness of programs in achieving such goals, and, when appropriate, adjusting goals, plans, and programs to maximize educational effectiveness, and

"(E) utilizing available management information, planning, and evaluation systems and techniques;

"(3) a plan for developing and strengthening the capabilities of the applicant to improve its planning capacity and to conduct, on a continuous basis, objective evaluations of the effectiveness of education programs and projects;

"(4) a plan for utilizing the resources of, and coordinating with, programs affecting education of other Federal, State, and local agencies, organizations, and persons; and

"(5) a statement of policies and procedures which have been, or will be, established and implemented for developing and maintaining a permanent system for obtaining and collecting significant information necessary for the assessment of education in the area to be served by the applicant, for consulting with and involving parents of children served by the applicant, and for making full and detailed information concerning the educational planning and evaluation activities and findings of the applicant and other agencies and persons receiving assistance under this part reasonably available to the public.

"(b) Applications for grants under this section may be approved by the Commissioner only if he determines that the application—

"(1) has been submitted only after interested parents have been given reasonable notice and an opportunity to express their views thereon;

"(2) set forth, in such detail as the Commissioner may determine necessary, such policies and procedures as will provide satisfactory assurance that—

"(A) the assistance provided under this section, together with other available resources, will be so used for the purposes of this part as to result in the maximum possible effective progress toward the achievement of a high level of planning and evaluation competence, and

"(B) assistance under this part will be used primarily in strengthening the capabilities of the planning and evaluation staff of the agency, office, or unit responsible for the administration of the application plan; and

"(3) sets forth such policies and procedures as will insure that Federal funds made available under the application will be so used as to supplement, and to the extent practical, increase the amounts of State or local funds that would, in the absence of Federal funds, be made available for activities meeting the purposes of this title;

"(4) in the case of applications from States, makes adequate provision (consistent with such criteria as the Commissioner shall prescribe by regulation) for using funds granted under this section to make program planning and evaluation services available to local educational agencies in the State.

"(c) A grant made pursuant to an application under this section may be used to pay not to exceed 75 per centum of the cost of the activities covered by the application.

"REPORTS

"SEC. 534. Each recipient of a grant shall make an annual report on the activities carried out with the funds from such grant which includes such information as the Commissioner determines will permit on evaluation of the effectiveness of the program authorized by the part in achieving its purposes. Each such recipient shall also make such other reports, in such form and containing such information as the Commissioner may require to carry out his functions under this part.

"PART D—COUNCILS ON QUALITY IN EDUCATION

"NATIONAL AND STATE ADVISORY COUNCILS

"SEC. 541. (a) (1) There is hereby established a National Council on Quality in Education (hereafter referred to as the 'National Council') composed of fifteen members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The membership of the National Council shall include persons who are familiar with the educational needs and goals of the Nation, persons with competence in assessing the progress of the education agencies, institutions, and organizations in meeting those needs and achieving those goals, persons familiar with the administration of State and local educational agencies and of institutions of higher education, and persons representative of the general public. Members shall be appointed for terms of three years, except that (1) in the case of initial members, one-third of the members shall be appointed for terms of one year each and one-third of the members shall be appointed for terms of two years each, and (2) appointments to fill the unexpired portion of any term shall be for such portion only.

"(2) The National Council shall—

"(A) review the administration of general regulations for, and operation of the programs assisted under this title at the Federal, State, and local levels, and other Federal education programs;

"(B) advise the Commissioner and, when appropriate, the Secretary and other Federal officials with respect to the educational needs and goals of the Nation and assess the progress of the educational agencies, institutions, and organizations of the Nation toward meeting those needs and achieving those goals;

"(C) conduct objective evaluations of specific education programs and projects in order to ascertain the effectiveness of such programs and projects in achieving the purpose for which they are intended;

"(D) review, evaluate, and transmit to the Congress and the President the reports submitted pursuant to clause (E) of paragraph (3) of subsection (b) of this section;

"(E) make recommendations (including recommendations for changes in legislation) for the improvement of the administration and operation of education programs including the programs authorized by this title;

"(F) consult with Federal, State, local, and other educational agencies, institutions, and organizations with respect to assessing education in the Nation and the improvement of the quality of education, including—

"(i) areas of unmet needs in education and national goals and the means by which those areas of need may be met and those national goals may be achieved;

"(ii) determinations of priorities among unmet needs and national goals; and

"(iii) specific means of improving the quality and effectiveness of teaching, curricula, and educational media and of raising standards of scholarship and levels of achievement:

"(G) conduct national conferences on the assessment and improvement of education, in which national and regional education associations and organizations, State and local education officers and administrators, and other organizations, institutions, and persons (including parents of children participating in Federal education programs) may exchange and disseminate information on the improvement of education; and

"(H) conduct, and report on, comparative studies and evaluations of education systems in foreign countries.

"(3) The National Council shall make an annual report, and such other reports as it deems appropriate, on its findings, recommendations, and activities to the Congress and the President. The President is requested to transmit to the Congress, at least annually, such comments and recommendations as he may have with respect to such reports and its activities.

"(4) In carrying out its responsibilities under this section, the National Council shall consult with the National Advisory Council on the Education of Disadvantaged Children, the National Advisory Council on Supplementary Centers and Services, the National Advisory Council on Education Professions Development, and such other advisory councils and committees as may have information and competence to assist the National Council. All Federal agencies are directed to cooperate with the National Council in assisting it in carrying out its functions.

"(b)(1) Any State receiving payments under this title for any fiscal year may establish a State advisory council (hereinafter referred to as 'State council') which if it meets the requirements and has the authority specified in this subsection may receive payments pursuant to paragraph (7). The State council shall be appointed by the Governor or, in the case of States in which the members of the State educational agency are elected (including election by the State legislature), by such agency.

"(2) The State council established pursuant to this subsection shall be broadly representative of the educational resources of the State and of the public. Representation on the State council shall include, but not be limited to, persons representative of—

"(A) public and nonprofit private elementary and secondary schools,

"(B) institutions of higher education,

"(C) areas of competence in planning and evaluating education programs, and the assessment of the effectiveness of, and the administration of, such programs at the State and local levels; and

"(D) areas of competence in dealing with children for whom special educational assistance is available under this act.

"(3) The State council shall—

"(A) prepare and submit through the State educational agency a report of its activities, recommendations, and evaluations, together with such additional comments as the State educational agency deems appropriate, to the Commissioner and the National Council at such times, in such form, and in such detail, as the Commissioner may prescribe;

(B) advise the State educational agency on the preparation of, and policy matters arising in the administration of, State and local educational programs in the State, including the development of criteria for approval of applications for assistance under this title;

(C) advise State and local officials who have a responsibility for education in the States with respect to the planning, evaluating, administration, and assessment of education in the State;

"(D) review and make recommendations to the State educational agency on the action to be taken with respect to applications for assistance under this title by local educational agencies; and

"(E) evaluate programs and projects assisted under this title.

"(4) Any such State shall certify the establishment of, and membership of its State council to, the Commissioner.

"(5) Such State council shall meet within thirty days after its certification has been accepted by the Commissioner and select from among its membership a chairman. The time, place, and manner of meeting shall be as provided by the rules of the State council, except that such rules must provide for not less than one public meeting each year at which the public is given opportunity to express views concerning the operation of programs and projects assisted under this title.

"(6) Such State council shall be authorized to obtain the services of such professional, technical, and clerical personnel as may be necessary to enable them to carry out their functions under this title and to contract for such services as may be necessary to enable them to carry out their evaluation functions.

"(7) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums, not in excess of 2½ per centum of the amount otherwise appropriated for such year for the purposes of this title, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subsection.

"PART E—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"ADMINISTRATION OF PLANS

"SEC. 551. (a) The Commissioner shall not finally disapprove any application from a State or a local educational agency, submitted under part A or B of this title, or any modification thereof, without affording the applicant reasonable notice and an opportunity for a hearing.

"(b) Whenever the Commissioner, after reasonable notice and an opportunity for a hearing to a State or a local educational agency administering a program under an application approved under this title, finds that there has been a failure to comply substantially with the appropriate provisions of this title or with the provisions of an application approved under this title, he shall notify the State or the local educational agency, as the case may be, that further payments will not be made to that State or that local educational agency under that application until he is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied, no further payments shall be made to that State or that local educational agency under the application. Whenever a local educational agency is given notice under the first sentence of this subsection, notice shall also be submitted to the appropriate State educational agency.

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 552. (a) If any State or any local educational agency is dissatisfied with the Commissioner's final action with respect to the approval of an application submitted under part A or B of this title or with his final action under section 551(b), such State or local educational agency may, within sixty days after notice of such action, file with the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which such State or local educational agency is located a petition for review of that action. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commissioner. The Commissioner thereupon shall file in the court the record of the proceedings on which he based his action as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

"(b) The findings of fact by the Commissioner, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive; but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Commissioner to take further evidence, and the Commissioner may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify his previous action, and shall certify to the court the record of the further proceedings. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

"(c) The court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Commissioner or to set it aside, in whole or in part. The judgment of the court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code."

(b) The Act of July 26, 1954, entitled "An Act to establish a National Advisory Committee on Education" (Public Law 532, Eighty-third Congress) is hereby repealed.

(c) Subsections (a)(1) and (b)(1) of section 2 of the Cooperative Research Act are each amended by striking out "section 503(a)(4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 503(4) and 523(a)(3)".

PART E—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE VII OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965 (BILINGUAL EDUCATION)

EXTENSION OF TITLE VII OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965 (THE BILINGUAL EDUCATION ACT)

SEC. 151. Section 703(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "and" where it appears after "1969," and by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: $80,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $135,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973".

APPLICATION TO INDIANS ON RESERVATIONS

SEC. 152. (a) Title VII of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by redesignating sections 706, 707, and 708 (and references thereto) as sections 707, 708, and 709 thereof and by inserting the following new section immediately after section 705:

"CHILDREN IN SCHOOLS ON RESERVATIONS

"SEC. 706. (a) For the purpose of carrying out programs pursuant to this title for individuals on reservations serviced by elementary and secondary schools operated on such reservations for Indian children, a nonprofit institution or organization of the Indian tribe concerned which operates any such school and which is approved by the Commissioner for the purposes of this section, may be considered to be a local educational agency as such term is used in this title.

"(b) From the sums appropriated pursuant to section 703, the Commissioner may also make payments to the Secretary of the Interior for elementary and secondary school programs to carry out the policy of section 702 with respect to individuals on reservations serviced by elementary and secondary schools for Indian children operated or funded by the Department of the Interior. The terms upon which payments for that purpose may be made to the Secretary of the Interior shall be determined pursuant to such criteria as the Commissioner determines will best carry out the policy of section 702."

(b) Section 707(a) of such Act (as redesignated by this Act) is amended by inserting the following before the period at the end thereof: "or, in the case of payments to the Secretary of the Interior, an amount determined pursuant to section 706(b)".

INCREASE IN MEMBERSHIP OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON THE EDUCATION OF BILINGUAL CHILDREN

SEC. 153. Section 708(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 as redesignated by this Act, is amended (1) by striking out "nine" and inserting in lieu thereof "fifteen", and (2) by striking out "four" and inserting, in lieu thereof "seven".

PART F—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE VIII OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1956 (GENERAL PROVISIONS)

EXTENSION OF SECTION 807 OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1966

SEC. 161. Section 807(c) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated $30,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1970, and June 30, 1971, $31,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $33,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973."

DEFINITION OF "GIFTED AND TALENTED CHILDREN"

SEC. 162. Section 801 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (relating to definitions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(1) The term 'gifted and talented children' means, in accordance with objective criteria prescribed by the Commissioner, children who have outstanding intellectual ability or creative talent the development of which requires special activities or services not ordinarily provided by local educational agencies."

REVISION OF FEDERAL ADMINISTRATION SECTION

SEC. 163. Section 803(c) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "(1)" and by striking out everything after "by such other departments and agencies" and inserting in lieu thereof a period and the following: "Federal departments and agencies administering programs which may be effectively coordinated with programs carried out under this Act or any Act amended by this Act, including community action programs carried out under title II of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, shall, to the fullest extent permitted by other applicable law, carry out such programs in such a manner as to assist in carrying out, and to make more effective, the programs under this Act or any Act amended by this Act."

SCHOOL NUTRITION AND HEALTH SERVICES AND RESEARCH IN CORRECTION EDUCATION SERVICES

SEC. 164. Title VIII of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by adding to the end thereof the following new sections:

"GRANTS FOR DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS TO IMPROVE SCHOOL NUTRITION AND HEALTH SERVICES FOR CHILDREN FROM LOW-INCOME FAMILIES

"SEC. 808. (a) The Secretary shall carry out a program of making grants to local educational agencies and, where appropriate, nonprofit private educational organizations, to support demonstration projects designed to improve nutrition and health services in public and private schools serving areas with high concentrations of children from low-income families.

"(b) Funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (d) shall be available for grants pursuant to applications approved under this section to pay the cost of (1) coordinating nutrition and health service resources in the areas to be served by a demonstration project supported under this section, (2) providing supplemental health, nutritional, mental health, and food services to children from low-income families when the resources for such services available to the applicant from other sources are inadequate to meet the needs of such children, (3) nutrition and health education programs designed to train professional and other school personnel to provide nutrition and health services in a manner which meets the needs of children from low-income families for such services, and (4) the evaluation of projects assisted under this section with respect to their effectiveness in improving school nutrition and health services for such children.

"(c) Applications for a grant under this section shall be submitted at such time, contain such information, and be consistent with such criteria as the Secretary may require by regulation. Such applications shall provide for—

"(1) the use of funds available under this section and the coordination of health care facilities and resources and such nutrition resources as may be available to the applicant in order to insure that a comprehensive program of physical and mental health and nutrition services are available to children from low-income families in the area to be served;

"(2) the development of health and nutrition curriculum materials related to the specific needs of persons involved with the project and to new and improved approaches to health services and food technology;

"(3) the training of (A) school administrators, teachers, and school health and nutrition personnel in order to assist them in meeting the health and nutritional needs of children from low-income families, and (B) professional and subprofessional personnel for service in school nutrition and health programs; and

"(4) adequate provision for evaluation of the project.

"(d) For the purpose of making grants under this section there are hereby authorized to be appropriated $2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970, $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 3, 1971, $16,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $26,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973.

"RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS IN CORRECTION EDUCATION SERVICES

"SEC. 809. (a) The Commissioner is authorized to make grants to State and local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and other public and private nonprofit research agencies and organizations for research or demonstration projects, relating to the academic and vocational education of antisocial, aggressive, or delinquent persons, including juvenile delinquents, youth offenders, and adult criminal offenders, including the development of criteria for the identification for specialized educational instruction of such persons from the general elementary and secondary school age population and special curriculums, and guidance and counseling programs. All projects shall include an evaluation component.

"(b) The Commissioner is authorized to appoint such special or technical advisory committees as he may deem necessary to advise him on matters of general policy relating to the education of persons intended to be benefited by this section, and shall secure the advice and recommendations of the Director, Bureau of Prisons, of the Director, Office of Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Development, the Director of the Teacher Corps, the head of the National Institute of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice, the Administrator of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, and such other persons and organizations as he, in his discretion, deems necessary before making any grant under this section."

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO PUBLIC LAWS 815 AND 874 OF THE EIGHTY-FIRST CONGRESS (IMPACTED AREAS PROGRAMS)

EXTENSION OF THE IMPACTED AREAS PROGRAMS

SEC. 201. (a)(1) Section 3 of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 815, Eighty-first Congress), is amended by striking out "June 30, 1970" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1973".

(2) Section 15(15) of such Act is amended by striking out "1965–1966" and inserting in lieu thereof "1968–1969".

(b) Sections 2(a), 3(b), and 4(a) of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, Eighty-first Congress), are each amended by striking out "1970" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "1973".

(c) Section 16(a)(1)(A) of the Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, Eighty-first Congress), and section 7(a)(1)(A) of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, Eighty-first Congress), are each amended by striking out "July 1, 1970" and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1973".

CERTAIN REFUGEE CHILDREN

SEC. 202. (a) Section 3(b) of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, Eighty-first Congress), is amended by striking out the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "In the case of fiscal years ending prior to July 1, 1973, the Commissioner shall also determine the number of children (other than children to whom subsection (a) or any other provision of this subsection applies) who were in average daily attendance at the schools of a local educational agency and for whom such agency provided free public education, during such fiscal year, and who, while in attendance at such schools resided with a parent who was, at any time during the three-year period immediately preceding the fiscal year for which the determination is made, a refugee who meets the requirements of section 2(b)(3)(A) and (B) of the Migration and Refugee Assistance Act of 1962.".

(b) Section 3(c)(2) of such Act is amended (1) by inserting before "subsection (b)" both times it appears the following: "the first sentence of", and (2) by inserting after "to whom such subsection" the following: "or such sentence".

(c) Section 3(c) of such Act is amended by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) No local educational agency shall be entitled to receive any payment for a fiscal year with respect to a number of children determined under the second sentence of subsection (b) unless the number of children who were in average daily attendance to whom such sentence applies amounts to 20 per centum or more of the number of children who were in average daily attendance during such year and for whom such agency provided free public education, but in determining the number of such children under such second sentence no child shall be counted with respect to whose education a payment was made under section 2(b)(4) of the Migration and Refuge Assistance Act of 1962."

INCLUSION OF CHILDREN RESIDING IN LOW-RENT PUBLIC HOUSING AS FEDERALLY CONNECTED CHILDREN

SEC. 203. (a)(1) The second sentence of section 15(1) of the Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, Eighty-first Congress), is amended by striking out "and (B)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(B) any low-rent housing (whether or not owned by the United States) which is part of a low-rent housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937, and (C)".

(2) The fourth sentence of such section 15(1) is amended (A) by striking out the comma before "(B)" and inserting in lieu thereof "and", and (B) by striking out all that follows "postal services" and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

(3) Section 5(c) of such Act is amended by striking out the colon and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof a period and the following: "In determining the eligibility of a local educational agency under this subsection and in determining the number of federally connected children who are in the average daily membership of the schools of such agency during a base year and in estimating the increase since the base year in the number of such children under subsection (a), children residing on any housing property (whether or not owned by the United States), which is part of a low-rent housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937, shall not be considered as having been federally connected during the base year if such housing project was begun after the base year 1964–1965.".

(b)(1) The second sentence of section 303(1) of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, Eighty-first Congress), is amended by striking out ", and (C)" and inserting in lieu thereof ", (C) any low-rent housing (whether or not owned by the United States) which is part of a low-rent housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937, section 516 of the Housing Act of 1949, or part B of title III of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, and (D)".

(2) The fourth sentence of such section 303(1) is amended by striking out "(A) any real property used for a labor supply center, labor home or labor camp for migratory workers, (B)" and by striking out all that follows "postal services" and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

(c)(1) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall be effective after June 30, 1970.

(2) For the purposes of section 5 of such Act of September 23, 1950, the number of children in the membership of a local educational agency residing in a low-rent housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937 during the years of the base period preceding the effective date provided in paragraph (1) shall be determined by the Commissioner on the basis of estimates.

(3) Section 3 of such Act of September 23, 1950, is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Such order of priority shall provide that applications for payments based upon increases in the number of children residing on, or residing with a parent employed on, property which is part of a low-rent housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937 shall not be approved for any fiscal year until all other applications under paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (a) of section 5 have been approved for that fiscal year.".

(4) Subsection (c) of section 5 of such Act of September 30, 1950, is amended to read as follows:

"ADJUSTMENTS WHERE NECESSITATED BY APPROPRIATIONS

"(c) (1) If the funds appropriated for any fiscal year for making payments under this title are not sufficient to pay in full the total amounts which the Commissioner estimates all local educational agencies will be entitled to receive under this title for such year, the Commissioner (A) shall determine the part of the entitlement of each such local educational agency which is attributable to determinations under subsections (a) and (b) of section 3 of the number of children who resided on, or resided with a parent employed on, property which is part of a low-rent housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937, section 516 of the Housing Act of 1949, or part B of title III of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, and (B) except as otherwise provided in paragraph (3), shall allocate such funds, other than so much thereof as he estimates may be required for carrying out the provisions of section 6, among sections 2, 3, and 4(a) in the proportion that the amount he estimates to be required under each such section bears to the total estimated to be required under all such sections, except that he shall not take into consideration any part of any entitlement determined under clause (A). The amount so allocated to any such section shall be available for payment of a percentage of the amount to which each local educational agency is entitled under such section. Such percentage shall be equal to the percentage which the amount allocated to a section under the second sentence of this paragraph is of the amount to which all such agencies are entitled under such section. For the purposes of this paragraph, in determining the amount to which each local educational agency is entitled under section 3 he shall include any increases under paragraph (4) of subsection (c) thereof; but he shall exclude any part of any entitlement determined under clause (A) of this paragraph.

"(2) If the funds available for allocation under paragraph (1) for any fiscal year exceed the amount necessary to fully satisfy entitlements for which allocations will be made under such paragraph, that excess shall be available for payment of a percentage of that part of the entitlement of each local educational agency determined under clause (A) of paragraph (1). Such percentage shall be equal to the percentage which the amount of such excess is of the total amount to which all such agencies are so entitled.

"(3) All funds appropriated for making payments under this title for any fiscal year shall be allocated in the manner specified in paragraphs (1) and (2), unless an Act making appropriations for making payments under this title for any fiscal year specifically makes funds available for payments on the basis of entitlements determined under clause (A) of paragraph (1), apart from other payments under this title, in which case, if the funds so appropriated are not sufficient to pay in full the total amount to which all local educational agencies are so entitled, such funds shall be available for making payments in the manner specified in paragraph (2) respecting allocations of any excess appropriations.

"(4) In case the amount allocated to a section under paragraph (1) for a fiscal year exceeds the total to which all local educational agencies are entitled under such section for such year or, in case additional funds become available for making payments under this title, the excess or such additional funds, as the case may be, shall be allocated among sections for which previous allocations are inadequate, on the same basis as is provided in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) for the initial allocation."

MINIMUM ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENT FOR PUBLIC LAW 815

SEC. 204. (a) The first sentence of section 5(c) of the Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, Eighty-first Congress), as amended by section 203(a)(3) of this Act, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) A local educational agency shall not be eligible to have any amount included in its maximum by reason of paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (a) unless the increase in children referred to in such paragraph, prior to the application of the limitation in subsection (d) is at least twenty and—

"(1) in the case of paragraph (1) or (2), is—

"(A) equal to at least 6 per centum of the number of all children who were in the average daily membership of the schools of such agency during the base year, or

"(B) at least one thousand five hundred, whichever is the lesser; and

"(2) in the case of paragraph (3), is—

"(A) equal to at least 10 per centum of the number of all children who were in the average daily membership of the schools of such agency during the base year, or

"(B) at least two thousand five hundred, whichever is the lesser: Provided, That no local educational agency shall be regarded as eligible under this paragraph (2) unless the Commissioner finds that the construction of additional minimum school facilities for the number of children in such increase will impose an undue financial burden on the taxing and borrowing authority of such agency."

(b) Section 5(d) of such Act is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence thereof the following: ", except that the number of children counted for the purposes of paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (a) shall not be reduced by more than one thousand five hundred and that the number of children counted for the purposes of paragraph (3) of subsection (a) shall not be reduced by more than two thousand five hundred".

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE WHERE THE IMMUNITY OF CERTAIN FEDERAL PROPERTY FROM TAXATION CREATES A SUBSTANTIAL AND CONTINUING IMPAIRMENT OF THE ABILITY TO FINANCE NEEDED SCHOOL FACILITIES

SEC. 205. (a) Section 14 of the Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, Eighty-first Congress), is amended by redesignating subsections (c), (d), (e), and (f) of such subsection, and all references thereto, as subsections (d), (e), (f), and (g), respectively, and inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(c) If the Commissioner determines with respect to any local educational agency—

"(1) that (A) such agency is providing or, upon completion of the school facilities for which provision is made herein, will provide, free public education for children who are inadequately housed by minimum school facilities and whose membership in the schools of such agency has not formed and will not form the basis for payments under other provisions of this Act, and (B) the total number of such children represents a substantial percentage of the total number of children for whom such agency provides free public education, and (C) Federal property constitutes a substantial part of the school district of such agency,

"(2) that the immunity of such Federal property from taxation by such agency has created a substantial and continuing impairment of such agency's ability to finance needed school facilities,

"(3) that such agency is making a reasonable tax effort and is exercising due diligence in availing itself of State and other financial assistance for the purpose, and

"(4) that such agency does not have sufficient funds available to it from other Federal, State, and local sources to provide the minimum school facilities required for free public education of a substantial percentage of the children in the membership of its schools, he may provide the assistance necessary to enable such agency to provide minimum school facilities for children in the membership of the schools of such agency whom the Commissioner finds to be inadequately housed, upon such terms and conditions, and in such amounts (subject to the applicable provisions of this section) as the Commissioner may consider to be in the public interest. Such assistance may not exceed the portion of the cost of such facilities which the Commissioner estimates has not been, and is not to be, recovered by the local educational agency from other sources, including payments by the United States under any other provisions of this Act or any other law. Notwithstanding the provisions of this subsection, the Commissioner may waive the percentage requirement in paragraph (1) whenever, in his judgment, exceptional circumstances exist which make such action necessary to avoid inequity and avoid defeating the purposes of this subsection."

DECLARATION OF POLICY WITH RESPECT TO SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE FOR INDIAN CHILDREN

SEC. 206. Section 14 of the Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, Eighty-first Congress), relating to public schools with children residing on Indian lands, is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(h) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that the provision of assistance pursuant to subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall be given a priority at least equal to that given to payments made pursuant to section 10 of this Act."

TITLE III—AMENDMENTS TO THE ADULT EDUCATION ACT OF 1966

EXTENSION AND REVISION OF THE ADULT EDUCATION ACT OF 1966

SEC. 301. Effective on and after July 1, 1969, title III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1966 (the Adult Education Act of 1966) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE III—ADULT EDUCATION

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 301. This title may be cited as the 'Adult Education Act'.

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 302. It is the purpose of this title to expand educational opportunity and encourage the establishment of programs of adult public education that will enable all adults to continue their education to at least the level of completion of secondary school and make available the means to secure training that will enable them to become more employable, productive, and responsible citizens.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 303. As used in this title—

"(a) The term 'adult' means any individual who has attained the age of sixteen.

"(b) The term 'adult education' means services or instruction below the college level (as determined by the Commissioner), for adults who—

"(1) do not have a certificate of graduation from a school providing secondary education and who have not achieved an equivalent level of education, and

"(2) are not currently required to be enrolled in schools.

"(c) The term 'adult basic education' means adult education for adults whose inability to speak, read, or write the English language constitutes a substantial impairment of their ability to get or retain employment commensurate with their real ability, which is designed to help eliminate such inability and raise the level of education of such individuals with a view to making them less likely to become dependent on others, to improving their ability to benefit from occupational training and otherwise increasing their opportunities for more productive and profitable employment, and to making them better able to meet their adult responsibilities.

"(d) The term 'Commissioner' means the Commissioner of Education.

"(e) The term 'local educational agency' means a public board of education or other public authority legally constituted within a State for either administrative control or direction of public elementary or secondary schools in a city, county, township, school district, or other political subdivision of a State, or such combination of school districts or counties as are recognized in a State as an administrative agency for its public elementary or secondary schools, except that, if there is a separate board or other legally constituted local authority having administrative control and direction of adult education in public schools therein, such term means such other board or authority.

"(f) The term 'State' includes the District of Columbia, and (except for the purposes of section 305(a)) the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Virgin Islands.

"(g) The term 'State educational agency' means the State board of education or other agency or officer primarily responsible for the State supervision of public elementary and secondary schools, or if there is a separate State agency or officer primarily responsible for supervision of adult education in public schools then such agency or officer may be designated for the purpose of this title by the Governor or by State law. If no agency or officer qualifies under the preceding sentence, such term shall mean an appropriate agency or officer designated for the purposes of this title by the Governor.

"(h) The term 'academic education' means the theoretical, the liberal, the speculative, and classical subject matter found to compose the curriculum of the public secondary school.

"(i) The term 'institution of higher education' means any such institution as defined by section 801(e) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

"GRANTS TO STATES FOR ADULT EDUCATION

"SEC. 304. (a) From the sums appropriated pursuant to section 312, not less than 10 per centum nor more than 20 per centum shall be reserved for the purposes of section 309.

"(b) From the remainder of such sums, the Commissioner is authorized to make grants to States, which have State plans approved by him under section 306 for the purposes of this section, to pay the Federal share of the cost of (1) the establishment or expansion of adult basic education programs to be carried out by local educational agencies and private nonprofit agencies, and (2) the establishment or expansion of adult education programs to be carried out by local educational agencies and private nonprofit agencies.

"ALLOTMENT FOR ADULT EDUCATION

"SEC. 305. (a) From the sums available for purposes of section 304(b) for any fiscal year, the Commissioner shall allot (1) not more than 2 per centum thereof among Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Virgin Islands according to their respective needs for assistance under such section, and (2) $150,000 to each State. From the remainder of such sums he shall allot to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to such remainder as the number of adults who do not have a certificate of graduation from a school providing secondary education (or its equivalent) and who are not currently required to be enrolled in schools in such State bears to the number of such adults in all States.

"(b) The portion of any State's allotment under subsection (a) for a fiscal year which the Commissioner determines will not be required, for the period such allotment is available, for carrying out the State plan approved under this title shall be available for reallotment from time to time, on such dates during such period as the Commissioner shall fix, to other States in proportion to the original allotments to such States under subsection (a) for such year, but with such proportionate amount for any of such other States being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum which the Commissioner estimates such State needs and will be able to use for such period for carrying out its State plan approved under this title, and the total of such reductions shall be similarly reallotted among the States whose proportionate amounts are not so reduced. Any amount reallotted to a State under this subsection during a year shall be deemed part of its allotment under subsection (a) for such year.

"STATE PLANS

"SEC. 306. (a) Any State desiring to receive its allotment of Federal funds for any any grant under this title shall submit through its State educational agency a State plan. Such State plan shall be in such detail as the Commissioner deems necessary, and shall—

"(1) set forth a program for the use of grants, in accordance with section 304(b), which affords assurance of substantial progress with respect to all segments of the adult population and all areas of the State, toward carrying out the purposes of such section;

"(2) provide for the administration of such plan by the State educational agency;

"(3) provide for cooperative arrangements between the State educational agency and the State health authority authorizing the use of such health information and services for adults as may be available from such agencies and as may reasonably be necessary to enable them to benefit from the instruction provided pursuant to this title;

"(4) provide for grants to public and private nonprofit agencies for special projects, teacher-training, and research;

"(5) provide for cooperation with Community Action programs, Work Experience programs, VISTA, Work Study, and other programs relating to the antipoverty effort;

"(6) provide that such agency will make such reports to the Commissioner, in such form and containing such information, as may reasonably be necessary to enable the Commissioner to perform his duties under this title and will keep such records and afford such access thereto as the Commissioner finds necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(7) provide such fiscal control and fund accounting procedures as may be necessary to assure proper disbursement of and accounting for Federal funds paid the State under this title (including such funds paid by the State to local educational agencies and private nonprofit agencies);

"(8) provide that special emphasis be given to adult basic education programs except where such needs can be shown to have been met in the State; and

"(9) provide such further information and assurances as the Commissioner may by regulation require.

"(b) The Commissioner shall not finally disapprove any State plan submitted under this title, or any modification thereof, without first affording the State educational agency reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing.

"PAYMENTS

"SEC. 307. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the Federal share of expenditures to carry out a State plan shall be paid from a State's allotment available for grants to such State. The Federal share for each State shall be 90 per centum, except that with respect to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands such Federal share shall be 100 per centum.

"(b) No payment shall be made to any State from its allotment for any fiscal year unless the Commissioner finds that the amount available for expenditure by such State for adult education from non-Federal sources for such year will be not less than the amount expended for such purposes from such sources during the preceding fiscal year, but no State shall be required to use its funds to supplant any portion of the Federal share.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS; HEARINGS AND JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 308. (a) Whenever the Commissioner, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State educational agency administering a State plan approved under this title, finds that—

"(1) the State plan has been so changed that it no longer complies with the provisions of section 306, or

"(2) in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any such provision, the Commissioner shall notify such State agency that no further payments will be made to the State under this title (or, in his discretion, that further payments to the State will be limited to programs under or portions of the State plan not affected by such failure), until he is satisfied that there will no longer be any failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied, no further payments may be made to such State under this title (or payments shall be limited to programs under or portions of the State plan not affected by such failure).

"(b) A State educational agency dissatisfied with a final action of the Commissioner under section 306 or subsection (a) of this section may appeal to the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the State is located, by filing a petition with such court within sixty days after such final action. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commissioner or any officer designated by him for that purpose. The Commissioner there upon shall file in the court the record of the proceedings on which he based his action, as provided in section 2112, of title 28, United States Code. Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Commissioner or to set it aside, in whole or in part, temporarily or permanently, but until the filing of the record, the Commissioner may modify or set aside his order. The findings of the Commissioner as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Commissioner to take further evidence, and the Commissioner may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify his previous action, and shall file in the court the record of the further proceedings. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence. The judgment of the court affirming or setting aside, in whole or part, any action of the Commissioner shall be final, subject to the review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall not, unless so specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commissioner's action.

"SPECIAL EXPERIMENTAL DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS AND TEACHER TRAINING

"SEC. 309. (a) The sums reserved in section 304(a) for the purposes of this section shall be used for making special project grants or providing teacher-training grants in accordance with this section.

"(b) The Commissioner is authorized to make grants to local educational agencies or other public or private nonprofit agencies, including educational television stations, for special projects which will be carried out in furtherance of the purposes of this title, and which—

"(1) involve the use of innovative methods, systems, materials, or programs which the Commissioner determines may have national significance or be of special value in promoting effective programs under this title, or

"(2) involve programs of adult education, carried out in cooperation with other Federal, federally assisted, State, or local programs which the Commissioner determines have unusual promise in promoting a comprehensive or coordinated approach to the problems of persons with educational deficiencies.

The Commissioner shall establish procedures for making grants under this subsection which shall require a non-Federal contribution of at last 10 per centum of the costs of such projects wherever feasible and not inconsistent with the purposes of this subsection.

"(c) The Commissioner is authorized to make provision for training persons engaged, or preparing to engage, as personnel in adult education programs designed to carry out the purposes of this title, including the payment of such stipends and allowances (including traveling and subsistence expenses, if any, for such persons and their dependents) as the Commissioner may determine by regulation. The Commissioner may provide such training directly or by contract or he may provide for such training by making grants to institutions of higher education, State or local educational agencies, or other appropriate public or private agencies or organizations.

"NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON ADULT EDUCATION

"SEC. 310. (a) The President shall appoint a National Advisory Council on Adult Education (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Council').

"(b) The Council shall consist of fifteen members who shall, to the extent possible, include persons knowledgeable in the field of adult education, State and local public school officials, and other persons having special knowledge and experience, or qualifications with respect to adult education, and persons representative of the general public. The Council shall meet initially at the call of the Commissioner and elect from its number a chairman. The Council will thereafter meet at the call of the chairman, but not less often than twice a year.

"(c) The Council shall advise the Commissioner in the preparation of general regulations and with respect to policy matters arising in the administration of this title, including policies and procedures governing the approval of State plans under section 306 and policies to eliminate duplication, and to effectuate the coordination of programs under this title and other programs offering adult education activities and services.

"(d) The Council shall review the administration, and effectiveness of programs under this title, make recommendations with respect thereto, and make annual reports to the President of its findings and recommendations (including recommendations for changes in this title and other Federal laws relating to adult education activities and services). The President shall transmit each such report to the Congress together with his comments and recommendations. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall coordinate the work of the Council with that of other related advisory councils.

"LIMITATION

"SEC. 311. No grant may be made under this title for any educational program, activity, or service related to sectarian instruction or religious worship, or provided by a school or department of divinity. For purposes of this section, the term 'school or department of divinity' means an institution or a department or branch of an institution whose program is specifically for the education of students to prepare them to become ministers of religion or to enter upon some other religious vocation, or to prepare them to teach theological subjects.

"APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 312. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated $160,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970, $200,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, and $225,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1972, and June 30, 1973, for the purposes of this title.

"(b) There are further authorized to be appropriated for each such fiscal year such sums, not to exceed 5 per centum of the amount appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) for such year, as may be necessary to pay the cost of the administration and development of State plans, and other activities required pursuant to this title."

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON ADULT EDUCATION

SEC. 302. Members of the National Advisory Council on Adult Education shall be appointed within ninety days after the date of enactment of this Act.

TITLE IV—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE IV OF PUBLIC LAW 90-247

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 401. (a) Title IV of the Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1967 is amended in the following respects:

(1) The heading of such title is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE IV—GENERAL PROVISIONS CONCERNING EDUCATION".

(2) Section 401 of such title is amended—

(A) by adding at the end of the caption head "; DEFINITIONS; APPROPRIATIONS; SHORT TITLE", and

(B) by inserting "(a)" after "SEC. 401." and adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(b) For the purposes of this title, the term—

"(1) 'Commissioner' means the Commissioner of Education;

"(2) 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare; and

"(3) 'applicable program' means a program to which this title is applicable.

"(c) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for any fiscal year, as part of the appropriations for salaries and expenses for the Office of Education, such sums as the Congress may determine to be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

"(d) This title may be cited as the 'General Education Provisions Act'.".

(3) Section 402 of such title is amended to read as follows:

"PROGRAM PLANNING AND EVALUATION

"SEC. 402. (a) Sums appropriated pursuant to section 401(c) may include for any fiscal year for which appropriations are otherwise authorized under any applicable program not to exceed $25,000,000 which shall be available to the Secretary, in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, for expenses, including grants, contracts, or other payments, for (1) planning for the succeeding year for any such program, and (2) evaluation of such programs.

"(b) No later than July 31 of each calendar year, the Secretary shall transmit to the respective committees of the Congress having legislative jurisdiction over any applicable program a report containing (1) a brief description of each contract or grant for evaluation of such program or programs (whetner or not such contract or grant was made under this section), any part of the performance of which occurred during the preceding fiscal year, (2) the name of the firm or individual who is to carry out the evaluation, and (3) the amount to be paid under the contract or grant."

(4) Section 403 of such title is amended by striking out "Act referred to in section 401" and inserting in lieu thereof "applicable program" and by striking out "under any such Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "under such program".

(5) Sections 404 and 405 of such title are amended by striking out "Act referred to in section 401" and inserting in lieu thereof "applicable program".

(6) Section 404 of such title is amended—

(A) in the caption head thereof, by striking out "AND" and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and by inserting "CONTINGENT EXTENSION OF EXPIRING APPROPRIATION AUTHORITY" at the end thereof; and

(B) by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Unless the Congress—

"(1) in the regular session in which a comprehensive evaluation report required by subsection (b) is submitted to Congress, has passed or formally rejected legislation extending the authorization for appropriations then specified for any title, part, or section of law to which such evaluation relates, or

"(2) prior to July 1, 1973, by action of either House approves a resolution stating that the provisions of this subsection shall no longer apply, such authorization is hereby automatically extended, at the level specified for the terminal year of such authorization for one fiscal year beyond such terminal year, as specified in such legislation.".

(7) Section 405 of such title is amended by inserting "loans," after "grants,".

(8) Section 405 of such title is further amended by inserting "(a)" after "SEC. 405." and by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, unless enacted in specific limitation of the provisions of this subsection, any funds from appropriations to carry out any programs to which this title is applicable during any fiscal year, ending prior to July 1, 1973, which are not obligated and expended prior to the beginning of the fiscal year succeeding the fiscal year for which such funds were appropriated shall remain available for obligation and expenditure during such succeeding fiscal year.".

(9) Section 406 of such title is amended by inserting "and expenditure" after "obligation".

(10) Such title is further amended by inserting after section 401 the following heading: "PART A—APPROPRIATIONS AND EVALUATIONS" and by adding at the end thereof the following new parts:

"PART B—GENERAL REQUIREMENTS AND CONDITIONS CONCERNING THE OPERATIONS AND ADMINISTRATION OF EDUCATION PROGRAMS; GENERAL AUTHORITY OF THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION

"SUBPART 1—GENERAL AUTHORITY

"DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY; UTILIZATION OF OTHER AGENCIES

"SEC. 411. (a) The Commissioner is authorized to delegate any of his functions under any applicable program, except the making of regulations and the approval of State plans, to any officer or employee of the Office of Education.

"(b) In administering any applicable program, the Commissioner is authorized to utilize the services and facilities of any agency of the Federal Government and of any other public or nonprofit agency or institution in accordance with appropriate agreements, and to pay for such services either in advance or by way of reimbursement, as may be agreed upon.

"COLLECTION AND DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION

"SEC. 412. (a) The Commissioner shall—

"(1) prepare and disseminate to State and local educational agencies and institutions information concerning applicable programs and cooperate with other Federal officials who administer programs affecting education in disseminating information concerning such programs:

"(2) inform the public on federally supported education programs;

"(3) collect data and information on applicable programs for the purpose of obtaining objective measurements of the effectiveness of such programs in achieving their purposes; and

"(4) prepare and publish an annual report (to be referred to as 'the Commissioner's annual report') on (A) the condition of education in the nation, (B) developments in the administration, utilization, and impact of applicable programs, (C) results of investigations and activities by the Office of Education, and (D) such facts and recommendations as will serve the purpose for which the Office of Education is established (as set forth in section 516 of the Revised Statutes (20 U.S.C. 1)).

"(b) The Commissioner's annual report shall be submitted to the Congress not later than March 31 of each calendar year. The Commissioner's annual report shall be made available to State and local educational agencies and other appropriate agencies and institutions and to the general public.

"(c) The Commissioner is authorized to enter into contracts with public or private agencies, organizations, groups, or individuals to carry out the provisions of this section.

"CATALOG OF FEDERAL EDUCATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

"SEC. 413. The Commissioner shall prepare and make available in such form as he deems appropriate a catalog of all Federal education assistance programs whether or not such programs are administered by him. The catalog shall—

"(1) identify each such program, and include the name of the program, the authorizing statute, the specific Federal administering officials, and a brief description of such program;

"(2) set forth the availability of benefits and eligibility restrictions in each such program;

"(3) set forth the budget requests for each such program, past appropriations, obligations incurred, and pertinent financial information indicating (A) the size of each such program for selected fiscal years, and (B) any funds remaining available;

"(4) set forth the prerequisites, including the cost to the recipient, of receiving assistance under each such program, and any duties required of the recipient after receiving benefits;

"(5) identify appropriate officials, in Washington, District of Columbia, as well as in each State and locality (if applicable). to whom application of reference for information for each such program may be made;

"(6) set forth the application procedures;

"(7) contain a detailed index designed to assist the potential beneficiary in identifying all education assistance programs related to a particular need or category of potential beneficiaries;

"(8) contain such other program information and data as the Commissioner deems necessary or desirable in order to assist the potential program beneficiary to understand and take advantage of each Federal education assistance program; and

"(9) be transmitted to Congress with the Commissioner's annual report.

"TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 414. (a) For the purpose of carrying out more effectively Federal education programs, the Commissioner is authorized, upon request, to provide advice, counsel, and technical assistance to State educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and, with the approval of the appropriate State educational agency, elementary and secondary schools—

"(1) in determining benefits available to them under Federal law;

"(2) in preparing applications for, and meeting requirements of, applicable programs;

"(3) in order to enhance the quality, increase the depth, or broaden the scope of activities under applicable programs; and

"(4) in order to encourage simplification of applications, reports, evaluations, and other administrative procedures.

"(b) The Commissioner shall permit local educational agencies to use organized and systematic approaches in determining cost allocation, collection, measurement, and reporting under any applicable program, if he determines (1) that the use of such approaches will not in any manner lessen the effectiveness and impact of such program in achieving purposes for which it is intended, (2) that the agency will use such procedures as will insure adequate evaluation of each of the programs involved, and (3) that such approaches are consistent with criteria prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States for the purposes of audit. For the purpose of this subsection a cost is allocable to a particular cost objective to the extent of relative benefits received by such objective.

"(c) The Commissioner's annual report shall contain a statement of the Commissioner's activities under this section.

"PARENTAL INVOLVEMENT AND DISSEMINATION

"SEC. 415. In the case of any applicable program in which the Commissioner determines that parental participation at the State or local level would increase the effectiveness of the program in achieving its purposes, he shall promulgate regulations with respect to such program setting forth criteria designed to encourage such participation. If the program for which such determination provides for payments to local educational agencies, applications for such payments shall—

"(1) set forth such policies and procedures as will ensure that programs and projects assisted under the application have been planned and developed, and will be operated, in consultation with, and with the involvement of, parents of the children to be served by such programs and projects;

"(2) be submitted with assurance that such parents have had an opportunity to present their views with respect to the application; and

"(3) set forth policies and procedures for adequate dissemination of program plans and evaluations to such parents and the public.

"USE OF FUNDS WITHHELD FOR FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH OTHER PROVISIONS OF FEDERAL LAW

"SEC. 416. At any time that the Commissioner establishes an entitlement, or makes an allotment or reallotment to any State, under any applicable program, he shall reduce such entitlement, allotment, or reallotment by such amount as he determines it would have been reduced, had the data on which the entitlement, allotment, or reallotment is based excluded all data relating to local educational agencies of the State which on the date of the Commissioner's action are ineligible to receive the Federal financial assistance involved because of a failure to comply with title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Any appropriated funds which will not be paid to a State as a result of the preceding sentence may be used by the Commissioner for grants to local educational agencies of that State in accordance with section 405 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

"AUTHORITY TO FURNISH INFORMATION

"SEC. 417. (a) The Commissioner is authorized to furnish transcripts or copies of tables and other records of the Office of Education to, and to make special statistical compilations and surveys for, State or local officials, private organizations, or individuals. Such statistical compilations and surveys shall be made subject to the payment of the actual or estimated cost of such work. In the case of nonprofit organizations or agencies the Commissioner may engage in joint statistical projects, the cost of which shall be shared equitably as determined by the Commissioner, provided that the purposes are otherwise authorized by law.

"(b) All moneys received in payment for work or services enumerated under this section shall be deposited in a separate account which may be used to pay directly the costs of such work or services, to repay appropriations which initially bore all or part of such costs, or to refund excess sums when necessary.

"SUBPART 2—ADMINISTRATION: REQUIREMENTS AND LIMITATIONS

"RULES: REQUIREMENTS AND ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 421. (a) Rules, regulations, guidelines, or other published interpretations or orders issued by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare or the Office of Education, or by any official of such agencies, in connection with, or affecting, the administration of any applicable program shall contain immediately following each substantive provision of such rules, regulations, guidelines, interpretations, or orders, citations to the particular section or sections of statutory law or other legal authority upon which such provision is based.

"(b) No standard, rule, regulation, or requirement of general applicability prescribed for the administration of any applicable program may take effect until thirty days after it is published in the Federal Register.

"(c) All such rules, regulations, guidelines, interpretations, or orders shall be uniformly applied and enforced throughout the fifty States.

"PROHIBITION AGAINST FEDERAL CONTROL OF EDUCATION

"SEC. 422. No provision of the Act of September 30, 1950, Public Law 874, Eighty-first Congress; the National Defense Education Act of 1958; the Act of September 23, 1950, Public Law 815, Eighty-first Congress; the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963; the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; the Higher Education Act of 1965; the International Education Act of 1966; or the Vocational Education Act of 1963 shall be construed to authorize any department, agency, officer, or employee of the United States to exercise any direction, supervision, or control over the curriculum, program of instruction, administration, or personnel of any educational institution, school, or school system, or over the selection of library resources, textbooks, or other printed or published instructional materials by any educational institution or school system, or to require the assignment or transportation of students or teachers in order to overcome racial imbalance.

"LABOR STANDARDS

"SEC. 423. Except for emergency relief under section 7 of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, Eighty-first Congress), all laborers and mechanics employed by contractors or subcontractors on all construction and minor remodeling projects assisted under any applicable program shall be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing on similar construction and minor remodeling in the locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Davis-Bacon Act, as amended (40 U.S.C. 276a—276a-5). The Secretary of Labor shall have, with respect to the labor standards specified in this section, the authority and functions set forth in Reorganization Plan Numbered 14 of 1950 and section 2 of the Act of June 13, 1934, as amended (40 U.S.C. 276c).

"RECORDS AND AUDIT

"SEC. 424. (a) Each recipient of funds from a grant or contract under any applicable program shall keep such records as the Commissioner shall prescribe, including records which fully disclose the amount and disposition by such recipient of the proceeds of such grant, the total cost of the prospect or undertaking in connections with which such grant or contract is given or used, and the amount of that portion of the cost of the project or undertaking supplied by other sources, and such other records as will facilitate an effective audit.

"(b) The Secretary and the Comptroller General of the United States, or any of their duly authorized representatives, shall have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of the recipients that are pertinent to the grant or contract received under any applicable program.

"PAYMENTS

"SEC. 425. Payments pursuant to grants or contracts under any applicable program may be made in installments, and in advance or by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments, as the Commissioner may determine.

"AUTHORITY TO VEST TITLE TO EQUIPMENT

"SEC. 426. The authority of the Commissioner of Education to make a grant to or contract with a local educational agency or State educational agency as such agencies are defined in sections 801(f) and 801(k) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, under any applicable program, shall include discretionary authority, whenever he determines that it would be in the public interest, to vest title to equipment purchased with grant or contract funds in such agency (or waive accountability to the United States for such equipment) without further obligation to the Government or on such terms or conditions as the Commissioner deems appropriate. The authority provided by this section shall be applicable to equipment purchased with funds provided by grants or contracts made on, before, or after the date of the enactment of this section.

"PART C—ADVISORY COUNCILS

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 431. As used in this part, the term—

"(1) 'advisory council' means any committee, board, commission, council, or other similar group (A) established or organized pursuant to any applicable statute, or (B) established under the authority of section 432; but such term does not include State advisory councils or commissions established pursuant to any such statute;

"(2) 'statutory advisory council' means an advisory council established by, or pursuant to, statute to advise and make recommendations with respect to the administration or improvement of an applicable program or other related matter;

"(3) 'nonstatutory advisory council' means an advisory council which is (A) established under the authority of section 432, or (B) established to advise and make recommendations with respect to the approval of applications for grants or contracts as required by statute;

"(4) 'Presidential advisory council' means a statutory advisory council, the members of which are appointed by the President;

"(5) 'Secretarial advisory council' means a statutory advisory council, the members of which are appointed by the Secretary;

"(6) 'Commissioner's advisory council' means a statutory advisory council, the members of which are appointed by the Commissioner;

"(7) 'applicable statute' means any statute (or title, part, or section thereof) which authorizes an applicable program or controls the administration of any such program.

"AUTHORIZATION FOR NECESSARY ADVISORY COUNCILS

"SEC. 432. (a) The Commissioner is authorized to create, and appoint the members of, such advisory councils as he determines in writing to be necessary to advise him with respect to—

"(1) the organization of the Office of Education and its conduct in the administration of applicable programs;

"(2) recommendations for legislation regarding education programs and the means by which the educational needs of the Nation may be met; and

"(3) special problems and areas of special interest in education.

"(b) Each advisory council created under the authority of subsection (a) shall terminate not later than one year from the date of its creation unless the Commissioner determines in writing not more than thirty days prior to the expiration of such one year that its existence for an additional period, not to exceed one year, is necessary in order to complete the recommendations or reports for which it was created.

"(c) The Commissioner shall include in his report submitted pursuant to section 438 a statement on all advisory councils created or extended under the authority of this section and their activities.

"MEMBERSHIP AND REPORTS OF STATUTORY ADVISORY COUNCILS

"SEC. 433. Notwithstanding any other provision of law unless expressly in limitation of the provisions of this section, each statutory advisory council—

"(1) shall be composed of the number of members provided by statute who may be appointed, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointment in the competitive service, and shall serve for terms of not to exceed three years, which in the case of initial members, shall be staggered; and

"(2) shall make an annual report of its activities, findings and recommendations to the Congress not later than March 31 of each calendar year, which shall be submitted with the Commissioner's annual report.

The Commissioner shall not serve as a member of any such advisory council.

"COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS OF ADVISORY COUNCILS

"SEC. 434. Members of all advisory councils to which this part is applicable who are not in the regular full-time employ of the United States shall, while attending meetings or conferences of the advisory council or otherwise engaged in the business of the advisory council, be entitled to receive compensation at a rate fixed by the Commissioner, but not exceeding the rate specified at the time of such service for grade GS–18 in section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, including traveltime, and while so serving on the business of the advisory council away from their homes or regular places of business, they may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in the Government service.

"PROFESSIONAL, TECHNICAL, AND CLERICAL STAFF; TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 435. (a) Presidential advisory councils are authorized to appoint, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, or otherwise obtain the services of, such professional, technical, and clerical personnel as may be necessary to enable them to carry out their functions, as prescribed by law.

"(b) The Commissioner shall engage such personnel and technical assistance as may be required to permit Secretarial and Commissioner's advisory councils to carry out their functions as prescribed by law.

"(c) Subject to regulations of the Commissioner, Presidential advisory councils are authorized to procure temporary and intermittent services of such personnel as are necessary to the extent authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but at rates not to exceed the rate specified at the time of such service for grade GS–18 in section 5532 of such title.

"MEETINGS OF ADVISORY COUNCILS

"SEC. 436. (a) Each statutory advisory council shall meet at the call of the chairman thereof but not less than two times each year. Nonstatutory advisory councils shall meet in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Commissioner.

"(b) Minutes of each meeting of each advisory council shall be kept and shall contain a record of the persons present, a description of matters discussed and conclusions reached, and copies of all reports received, issued, or approved by the advisory council. The accuracy of all minutes shall be certified to by the chairman of the advisory council.

"AUDITING AND REVIEW OF ADVISORY COUNCIL ACTIVITIES

"SEC. 437. (a) Each statutory advisory council shall be subject to such general regulations as the Commissioner may promulgate respecting the governance of statutory advisory councils and shall keep such records of its activities as will fully disclose the disposition of any funds which may be at its disposal and the nature and extent of its activities in carrying out its functions.

"(b) The Comptroller General of the United States, or any of his duly authorized representatives, shall have access, for the purpose of audit and examinations, to any books, documents, papers, and records of each statutory advisory council.

"REPORT BY THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION

"SEC. 438. (a) Not later than March 31 of each calendar year after 1970, the Commissioner shall submit, as part of the Commissioner's annual report, a report on the activities of the advisory councils which are subject to this part to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare of the Senate and the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives. Such report shall contain, at least, a list of all such advisory councils, the names and affiliations of their members, a description of the function of each advisory council, and a statement of the dates of the meetings of each such advisory council.

"(b) If the Commissioner determines that a statutory advisory council is not needed or that the functions of two or more statutory advisory councils should be combined, he shall include in the report a recommendation that such advisory council be abolished or that such functions be combined. Unless there is an objection to such action by either the Senate or the House of Representatives within ninety days after the submission of such report, the Commissioner is authorized to abolish such advisory council or combine the functions of two or more advisory councils as recommended in such report.".

(b) Sections 1207, 1208, 1209, and 1210 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (as added by Public Law 90–575) are superseded by part A of title IV of Public Law 90–247 and are hereby repealed.

(c) The following provisions of law relating to the delegation of functions and utilization of the services of other agencies by the Office of Education are superseded by section 411 of Public Law 90–247 and are hereby repealed:

(1) The third sentence of subsection (a) of section 302 of the Act of September 30, 1950, Public Law 874, Eighty-first Congress (20 U.S.C. 243(a));

(2) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 803 of the Eelementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 883 (a) and (b));

(3) Subsection (a) of section 13 of the Act of September 23, 1950, Public Law 815, Eighty-first Congress (20 U.S.C. 643(a));

(4) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 1001 of the National Defense Education Act of 1958 (20 U.S.C. 581 (a), (b));

(5) Section 1203 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1143);

(6) Subsectons (a) and (b) of section 402 of the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963 (20 U.S.C. 752 (a), (b));

(7) Subsection (b) of section 103 of the International Education Act of 1966 (20 U.S.C. 1174(b)); and

(d) The following provisions of law concerning dissemination of information and reports by the Commissioner of Education are superseded by sections 412, 413, and 414 of Public Law 90–247 and are hereby repealed:

(1) Section 518 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (20 U.S.C. 4);

(2) The sixth paragraph under the heading "Department of Education" in the material relating to the Department of the Interior in the Act of May 28, 1896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, which authorizes the Commissioner of Education to prepare and publish a bulletin concerning the condition of education (20 U.S.C. 3);

(3) Section 303 of Public Law 90–576 (20 U.S.C. 6);

(4) Section 806 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 886); and

(5) Section 1206 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1146).

(e) The following provisions of law concerning requirements for rules and regulations for education programs are superseded by section 421 of Public Law 90–247 and are hereby repealed:

(1) Section 2 of Public Law 90–247 (20 U.S.C. 888); and

(2) Section 505 of Public Law 90–575 (20 U.S.C. 1001, note).

(f) The following provisions of law concerning Federal control of education are superseded by section 422 of Public Law 90–247 and are hereby repealed:

(1) Subsection (g) of section 6 and subsection (a) of section 301 of the Act of September 30, 1950, Public Law 874, Eighty-first Congress (20 U.S.C. 241(g), 242(a));

(2) Section 102 of the National Defense Education Act of 1958 (20 U.S.C. 402);

(3) Subsection (a) of section 12 of the Act of September 23, 1950, Public Law 815, Eighty-first Congress (20 U.S.C. 642(a));

(4) Section 407 of the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963 (20 U.S.C. 757);

(5) Section 804 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 884);

(6) Subsection (a) of section 1204 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1144 (a));

(7) Section 104 of the International Education Act of 1966 (20 U.S.C. 1175);

(8) Section 105 of the Vocational Education Act of 1963 (20 U.S.C. 1245).

(g) The following provisions of law concerning the payment of wages at prevailing rates on federally assisted construction projects are superseded by section 423 of Public Law 90–247 and are hereby repealed:

(1) Section 145 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as redesignated by this Act (20 U.S.C. 2411);

(2) Subsection (c) of section 4 of the Act of July 26, 1954, Public Law 531, Eighty-third Congress (20 U.S.C. 332a(c));

(3) Subsection (a)(4) of section 203 of the Library Services and Construction Act (20 U.S.C. 355c(a)(4)), and subsection (a)(3) of such section is amended by striking out the semicolon and the word "and" and at the end thereof inserting in lieu thereof a period;

(4) Subsection (b)(1)(E) of section 6 and subsection (d) of section 12 of the Act of September 23, 1950, Public Law 815, Eighty-first Congress (20 U.S.C. 636(b)(1)(E), 642 (d));

(5) Section 709 (as redesignated by section 152 of this Act) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 880b–6); and

(6) Section 106 of the Vocational Education Act of 1963 (20 U.S.C. 1246).

(h) The following provisions of law concerning advisory councils and committees are superseded by part C of title IV of Public Law 90–247 and are hereby repealed:

(1) Subsection (d) of section 761 and sections 1002 and 1003 of the National Defense Education Act of 1958 (20 U.S.C. 561(d), 582, 583);

(2) Subsection (c) of section 402 of the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963 (20 U.S.C. 752(c));

(3) Subsections (c), (d), and (e) of section 510, subsection (c) of section 708, and section 802 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 870 (c), (d), (e), 880b–5(c), 882);

(4) Subsections (d) and (e) of section 109, subsection (c) of section 205, subsection (c) of section 224, subsection (c) of section 303, subsections (c) and (d) of section 469, subsections (d) and (e) of section 502, and subsections (c) and (d) of section 1205 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1009 (d), (e), 1025(e), 1034(c), 1053(c), 1089(c), 1091a (d), (e), 1145 (c), (d));

(5) Subsections (c) and (d) of section 106 of the International Education Act of 1966 (20 U.S.C. 1177 (c)(d)).

(6) Paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of section 104 of the Vocational Education Act of 1963 (20 U.S.C. 1244(a)(3)).

TITLE V—CANCELLATION OF STUDENT LOANS FOR CERTAIN PUBLIC SERVICE

CANCELLATION OF LOANS FOR CERTAIN PUBLIC SERVICE

SEC. 501. (a) Section 205(a)(3) of the National Defense Education Act of 1958 is amended—

(1) by striking out "made prior to July 1, 1970 (plus interest)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(plus interest) (A)";

(2) thereafter by striking out "(A)", "(B)", or "(C)" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "(i)", "(ii)", or "(iii)", respectively; and

(3) by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof a comma and the following: "and (B) shall be canceled for service after June 30, 1970, as a member of the Armed Forces of the United States at the rate of 12½ per centum of the total amount of such loan plus interest thereon for each year of consecutive service".

(b) The amendment made by this section shall apply to loans made after the date of enactment of this Act.

TITLE VI—EDUCATION OF THE HANDICAPPED

"PART A—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 601. This title may be cited as the "Education of the Handicapped Act".

DEFINITION

SEC. 602. As used in this title—

(1) The term "handicapped children" means mentally retarded, hard of hearing, deaf, speech impaired, visually handicapped, seriously emotionally disturbed, crippled, or other health impaired children who by reason thereof require special education and related services.

(2) The term "Commissioner" means the Commisioner of Education.

(3) The term "Advisory Committee" means the National Advisory Committee on Handicapped Children.

(4) The term "construction", except where otherwise specified, means (A) erection of new or expansion of existing structures, and the acquisition and installation of equipment therefor: or (B) acquisition of existing structures not owned by any agency or institution making application for assistance under this title; or (C) remodeling or alteration (including the acquisition, installation, modernization, or replacement of equipment) of existing structures; or (D) acquisition of land in connection with the activities in clauses (A), (B), and (C); or (E) a combination of any two or more of the foregoing.

(5) The term "equipment" includes machinery, utilities, and built-in equipment and any necessary enclosures or structures to house them, and includes all other items necessary for the functioning of a particular facility as a facility for the provisions of educational services, including items such as instructional equipment and necessary furniture, printed, published, and audio-visual instructional materials, and books, periodicals, documents, and other related materials.

(6) The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(7) The term "State educational agency" means the State board of education or other agency or officer primarily responsible for the State supervision of public elementary and secondary schools, or, if there is no such officer or agency, an officer or agency designated by the Governor or by State law.

(8) The term "local educational agency" means a public board of education or other public authority legally constituted within a State for either administrative control or direction of, or to perform a service function for, public elementary, or secondary schools in a city, county, township, school district, or other political subdivision of a State, or such combination of school districts or counties as are recognized in a State as an administrative agency for its public elementary or secondary schools. Such term also includes any other public institution or agency having administrative control and direction of a public elementary or secondary school.

(9) The term "elementary school" means a day or residential school which provides elementary education, as determined under State law.

(10) The term "secondary school" means a day or residential school which provides secondary education, as determined under State law, except that it does not include any education provided beyond grade 12.

(11) The term "institution of higher education" means and educational institution in any State which—

(A) admits as regular students only individuals having a certificate of graduation from a high school, or the recognized equivalent of such a certificate;

(B) is legally authorized within such State to provide a program of education beyond high school;

(C) provides an educational program for which it awards a bachelor's degree, or provides not less than a two-year program which is acceptable for full credit toward such a degree, or offers a two-year program in engineering, mathematics, or the physical or biological sciences which is designed to prepare the student to work as a technician and at a semiprofessional level in engineering, scientific, or other technological fields which require the understanding and application of basic engineering, scientific, or mathematical principles or knowledge;

(D) is a public or other nonprofit institution; and

(E) is accredited by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or association listed by the Commissioner pursuant to this paragraph or, if not so accredited, is an institution whose credits are accepted, on transfer, by not less than three institutions which are so accredited, for credit on the same basis as if transferred from an institution so accredited: Provided, however, That in the case of an institution offering a two-year program in engineering, mathematics, or the physical or biological sciences which is designed to prepare the student to work as a technician and at a semiprofessional level in engineering, scientific, or technological fields which require the understanding and application of basic engineering, scientific, or mathematical principles or knowledge, if the Commissioner determines that there is no nationally recognized accrediting agency or association qualified to accredit such institutions, he shall appoint an advisory committee, composed of persons specially qualified to evaluate training provided by such institutions, which shall prescribe the standards of content, scope, and quality which must be met in order to qualify such institutions to participate under this Act and shall also determine whether particular institutions meet such standards. For the purposes of this paragraph the Commissioner shall publish a list of nationally recognized accrediting agencies or associations which he determines to be reliable authority as to the quality of education or training offered.

(12) The term "nonprofit" as applied to a school, agency, organization, or institution means a school, agency, organization, or institution owned and operated by one or more nonprofit corporations or associations no part of the net earnings of which inures, or may lawfully inure, to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.

(13) The term "research and related purposes" means research, research training (including the payment of stipends and allowances), surveys, or demonstrations in the field of education of handicapped children, or the dissemination of information derived therefrom, including (but without limitation) experimental schools.

(14) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

(15) The term "children with specific learning disabilities" means those children who have a disorder in one or more of the basic psychological processes involved in understanding or in using language, spoken or written, which disorder may manifest itself in imperfect ability to listen, think, speak, read, write, spell, or do mathematical calculations. Such disorders include such conditions as perceptual handicaps, brain injury, minimal brain dysfunction, dyslexia, and developmental aphasia. Such term does not include children who have learning problems which are primarily the result of visual, hearing, or motor handicaps, of mental retardation, of emotional disturbance, or of environmental disadvantage.

BUREAU FOR EDUCATION AND TRAINING OF THE HANDICAPPED

SEC. 603. There shall be, within the Office of Education, a bureau for the education and training of the handicapped which shall be the principal agency in the Office of Education for administering and carrying out programs and projects relating to the education and training of the handicapped, including programs and projects for the training of teachers of the handicapped and for research in such education and training.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

SEC. 604. (a) The Commissioner shall establish in the Office of Education a National Advisory Committee on Handicapped Children, consisting of fifteen members, appointed by the Commissioner. At least eight of such members shall be persons affiliated with educational, training, or research programs for the handicapped.

(b) The Advisory Committee shall review the administration and operation of the programs authorized by this title and other provisions of law administered by the Commissioner with respect to handicapped children, including their effect in improving the educational attainment of such children, and make recommendations for the improvement of such administration and operation with respect to such children. Such recommendations shall take into consideration experience gained under this and other Federal programs for handicapped children and, to the extent appropriate, experience gained under other public and private programs for handicapped children. The Advisory Committee shall from time to time make such recommendations as it may deem appropriate to the Commissioner and shall make an annual report of its findings and recommendations to the Commissioner not later than March 31 of each year. The Commissioner shall transmit each such report to the Secretary together with his comments and recommendations, and the Secretary shall transmit such report, comments, and recommendations to the Congress together with any comments or recommendations he may have with respect thereto.

ACQUISITION OF EQUIPMENT AND CONSTRUCTION OF NECESSARY FACILITIES

SEC. 605. (a) In the case of any program authorized by this title, if the Commissioner determines that such program will be improved by permitting the funds authorized for such program to be used for the acquisition of equipment and the construction of necessary facilities, he may authorize the use of such funds for such purposes.

(b) If within twenty years after the completion of any construction (except minor remodeling or alteration) for which funds have been paid pursuant to a grant or contract under this title the facility constructed ceases to be used for the purposes for which it was constructed, the United States, unless the Secretary determines that there is good cause for releasing the recipient of the funds from its obligation, shall be entitled to recover from the applicant or other owner of the facility an amount which bears the same ratio to the then value of the facility as the amount of such Federal funds bore to the cost of the portion of the facility financed with such funds. Such value shall be determined by agreement of the parties or by action brought in the United States district court for the district in which the facility is situated.

PART B—ASSISTANCE TO STATES FOR EDUCATION OF HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 611. (a) The Commissioner is authorized to make grants pursuant to the provisions of this part for the purpose of assisting the States in the initiation, expansion, and improvement of programs and projects for the education of handicapped children at the preschool, elementary school, and secondary school levels.

(b) For the purpose of making grants under this part there is authorized to be appropriated $200,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, $210,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $220,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973.

ALLOTMENT OF FUNDS

SEC. 612. (a)(1) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year for the purposes of this paragraph an amount equal to not more than 3 per centum of the amount appropriated for such year for payments to States under section 611(b). The Commissioner shall allot the amount appropriated pursuant to this paragraph among—

(A) Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, according to their respective needs, and

(B) for each fiscal year ending prior to July 1, 1972, the Secretary of the Interior, according to the need for such assistance for the education of handicapped children on reservations serviced by elementary and secondary schools operated for Indian children by the Department of the Interior and the terms upon which payments for such purposes shall be made to the Secretary of the Interior shall be determined pursuant to such criteria as the Commissioner determines will best carry out the purposes of this part.

(2) From the total amount appropriated pursuant to section 611(b) for any fiscal year the Commissioner shall allot to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to such amount as the number of children aged three to twenty-one, inclusive, in the State bears to the number of such children in all the States, except that no State shall be allotted less than $200,000 or three-tenths of 1 per centum of such amount available for allotment to the States, whichever is greater. For purposes of this paragraph and subsection (b), the term "State" shall not include the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(b) The number of children aged three to twenty-one, inclusive, in any State and in all the States shall be determined, for purposes of this section, by the Commissioner on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available to him.

(c) The amount of any State's allotment under subsection (a) for any fiscal year which the Commissioner determines will not be required for that year shall be available for reallotment, from time to time and on such dates during such year as the Commissioner may fix, to other States in proportion to the original allotments to such States under subsection (a) for that year, but with such proportionate amount for any of such other States being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Commissioner estimates such State needs and will be able to use for such year; and the total of such reductions shall be similarly reallotted among the States whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced. Any amount reallotted to a State under this subsection during a year shall be deemed part of its allotment under subsection (a) for that year.

STATE PLANS

SEC. 613. (a) Any State which desires to receive grants under this part shall submit to the Commissioner through its State educational agency a State plan (not part of any other plan) in such detail as the Commissioner deems necessary. Such State plan shall—

(1) set forth such policies and procedures as will provide satisfactory assurance that funds paid to the State under this part will be expended (A) either directly or through individual, or combinations of, local educational agencies, solely to initiate, expand, or improve programs and projects, including preschool programs and projects, (i) which are designed to meet the special educational and related needs of handicapped children throughout the State, and (ii) which are of sufficient size, scope, and quality (taken into consideration the special educational needs of such children) as to give reasonable promise of substantial progress toward meeting those needs, and (B) for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan (including State leadership activities and consultative services), and for planning on the State and local level: Provided, That the amount expended for such administration and planning shall not exceed 5 per centum of the amount allotted to the State for any fiscal year or $100,000 ($35,000 in the case of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands), whichever is greater;

(2) provide satisfactory assurance that, to the extent consistent with the number and location of handicapped children in the State who are enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools, provision will be made for participation of such children in programs assisted or carried out under this part;

(3) provide satisfactory assurance that the control of funds provided under this part, and title to property derived therefrom, shall be in a public agency for the uses and purposes provided in this part, and that a public agency will administer such funds and property;

(4) set forth policies and procedures which provide satisfactory assurance that Federal funds made available under this part will be so used as to supplement and, to the extent practical, increase the level of State, local, and private funds expended for the education of handicapped children, and in no case supplant such State, local and private funds;

(5) provide that effective procedures, including provision for appropriate objective measurement of educational achievement, will be adopted for evaluating at least annually the effectiveness of the programs in meeting the special educational needs of, and providing related services for, handicapped children;

(6) provide that the State educational agency will be the sole agency for administering or supervising the administration of the plan;

(7) provide for (A) making such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Commissioner may require to carry out his functions under this part, including reports of the objective measurements required by clause (5) of this subsection, and (B) keeping such records and for affording such access thereto as the Commissioner may find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports and proper disbursement of Federal funds under this part;

(8) provide satisfactory assurance that such fiscal control and fund accounting procedures will be adopted as may be necessary to assure proper disbursement of, and accounting for, Federal funds paid under this part to the State, including any such funds paid by the State to local educational agencies;

(9) provide satisfactory assurance that funds paid to the State under this part shall not be made available for handicapped children eligible for assistance under section 103(a)(5) of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965;

(10) provide satisfactory assurance that effective procedures will be adopted for acquiring and disseminating to teachers of, and administrators of programs for, handicapped children significant information derived from educational research, demonstration, and similar projects, and for adopting, where appropriate, promising educational practices developed through such projects; and

(11) contain a statement of policies and procedures which will be designed to insure that all education programs for the handicapped in the State will be properly coordinated by the persons in charge of special education programs for handicapped children in the State educational agency.

(b) The Commissioner shall approve any State plan which he determines meets the requirements and purposes of this part.

(c)(1) The Commissioner shall not approve any State plan pursuant to this section for any fiscal year unless the plan has, prior to its submission, been made public as a separate document by the State educational agency and a reasonable opportunity has been given by that agency for comment thereon by interested persons (as defined by regulation). The State educational agency shall make public the plan as finally approved. The Commissioner shall not finally disapprove any plan submitted under this section or any modification thereof, without first affording the State educational agency submitting the plan reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing.

(2) Whenever the Commissioner, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to such State agency, finds—

(A) that the State plan has been so changed that it no longer complies with the provisions of this part, or

(B) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any such provision or with any requirements set forth in the application of a local educational agency approved pursuant to such plan, the Commissioner shall notify the agency that further payments will not be made to the State under this part (or in his discretion, that further payments to the State will be limited to programs or projects under the State plan, or portions thereof, not affected by the failure, or that the State educational agency shall not make further payments under this part to specified local agencies affected by the failure) until he is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied, the Commissioner shall make no further payments to the State under this part (or shall limit payments to programs or projects under, or parts of, the State plan not affected by the failure, or payments by the State educational agency under this part shall be limited to local educational agencies not affected by the failure, as the case may be).

(d)(1) If any State is dissatisfied with the Commissioner's final action with respect to the approval of its State plan submitted under subsection (a) or with his final action under subsection (c), such State may, within sixty days after notice of such action, file with the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which such State is located a petition for review of that action. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commissioner. The Commissioner hereupon shall file in the court the record of the proceedings on which he based his action, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

(2) The findings of fact by the Commissioner, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive; but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Commissioner to take further evidence, and the Commissioner may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify his previous action, and shall certify to the court the record of the further proceedings. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

(3) The court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Commissioner or to set it aside, in whole or in part. The judgment of the court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

PAYMENTS

SEC. 614. From the amounts allotted to each State under this part, the Commissioner shall pay to that State an amount equal to the amount expended by the State in carrying out its State plan.

PART C—CENTERS AND SERVICES TO MEET SPECIAL NEEDS OF THE HANDICAPPED

REGIONAL RESOURCE CENTERS

SEC. 621. (a) The Commissioner is authorized to make grants to or contracts with installations of higher education, State educational agencies, or combinations of such agencies or institutions, which combinations may include one or more local educational agencies, within particular regions of the United States, to pay all or part of the cost of the establishment and operation of regional centers which will develop and apply the best methods of appraising the special educational needs of handicapped children referred to them and will provide other services to assist in meeting such needs. Centers established or operated under this section shall (1) provide testing and educational evaluation to determine the special educational needs of handicapped children referred to such centers, (2) develop educational programs to meet those needs, and (3) assist schools and other appropriate agencies, organizations, and institutions in providing such educational programs through services such as consultation (including, in appropriate cases, consultation with parents or teachers of handicapped children at such regional centers), periodic reexamination and reevaluation of special educational programs, and other technical services.

(b) In determining whether to approve an application for a project under this section, the Commissioner shall consider the need for such a center in the region to be served by the applicant and the capability of the applicant to develop and apply, with the assistance of funds under this section, new methods, techniques, devices, or facilities relating to educational evaluation or education of handicapped children.

CENTERS AND SERVICES FOR DEAF-BLIND CHILDREN

SEC. 622. (a) It is the purpose of this section to provide, through a limited number of model centers for deaf-blind children, a program designed to develop and bring to bear upon such children, beginning as early as feasible in life, those specialized, intensive professional and allied services, methods, and aids that are found to be most effective to enable them to achieve their full potential for communication with, and adjustment to, the world around them, for useful and meaningful participation in society, and for self-fulfillment.

(b) The Commissioner is authorized, upon such terms and conditions (subject to the provisions of subsection (d)(1) of this section) as he deems appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section, to make grants to or contracts with public or nonprofit private agencies, organizations, or institutions to pay all or part of the cost of establishment, including construction, which for the purposes of this section shall include the construction of residential facilities, and operation of centers for deaf-blind children.

(c) In determining whether to make a grant or contract under subsection (b), the Commissioner shall take into consideration the need for a center for deaf-blind children in the light of the general availability and quality of existing services for such children in the part of the country involved.

(d) (1) A grant or contract pursuant to subsection (b) shall be made only if the Commissioner determines that there is satisfactory assurance that the center will provide such services as he has by regulation prescribed, including at least—

(A) comprehensive diagnostic and evaluative services for deaf-blind children;

(B) a program for the adjustment, orientation, and education of deaf-blind children which integrates all the professional and allied services necessary therefor; and

(C) effective consultative services for parents, teachers, and others who play a direct role in the lives of deaf-blind children to enable them to understand the special problems of such children and to assist in the process of their adjustment, orientation, and education.

(2) Any such services may be provided to deaf-blind children (and, where applicable, other persons) regardless of whether they reside in the center, may be provided at some place other than the center, and may include the provision of transportation for any such children (including an attendant) and for parents.

EARLY EDUCATION FOR HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

SEC. 623. (a) The Commissioner is authorized to arrange by contract, grant, or otherwise with appropriate public agencies and private nonprofit organizations, for the development and carrying out by such agencies and organizations, of experimental preschool and early education programs for handicapped children which the Commissioner determines show promise of promoting a comprehensive and strengthened approach to the special problems of such children. Such programs shall be distributed to the greatest extent possible throughout the Nation, and shall be carried out both in urban and in rural areas. Such programs shall include activities and services designed to (1) facilitate the intellectual, emotional, physical, mental, social, and language development of such children; (2) encourage the participation of the parents of such children in the development and operation of any such program; and (3) acquaint the community to be served by any such program with the problems and potentialities of such children.

EARLY EDUCATION FOR HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

(b) Each arrangement for developing or carrying out a program authorized by this section shall provide for the effective coordination of each such program with similar programs in the schools of the community to be served by such a program.

(c) No arrangement pursuant to this section shall provide for the payment of more than 90 per centum of the cost of developing, carrying out, or evaluating such a program. Non-Federal contributions may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including, but not limited to, plant, equipment, and services.

RESEARCH, INNOVATION, TRAINING, AND DISSEMINATION ACTIVITIES IN CONNECTION WITH CENTERS AND SERVICES FOR THE HANDICAPPED

SEC. 624. (a) The Commissioner is authorized, either as part of any grant or contract under this part, or by separate grant to or contract with, an agency, organization, or institution operating a center or providing a service which meets such requirements as the Commissioner determines to be appropriate, consistent with the purposes of this part, to pay all or part of the cost of such activities as—

(1) research to identify and meet the full range of special needs of handicapped children;

(2) development or demonstration of new, or improvements in existing, methods, approaches, or techniques, which would contribute to the adjustment and education of such children;

(3) training (either directly or otherwise) of professional and allied personnel engaged or preparing to engage in programs specifically designed for such children, including payment of stipends for trainees and allowances for travel and other expenses for them and their dependents; and

(4) dissemination of materials and information about practices found effective in working with such children.

(b) In making grants and contracts under this section, the Commissioner shall insure that the activities funded under such grants and contracts will be coordinated with similar activities funded from grants and contracts under other parts of this title.

EVALUATIONS

SEC. 625. The Commissioner shall conduct, either directly or by contract with independent organizations, a thorough and continuing evaluation of the effectiveness of each program assisted under this part.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 626. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated $36,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, $51,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $66,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this part.

PART D—TRAINING PERSONNEL FOR THE EDUCATION OF THE HANDICAPPED

GRANTS TO INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION AND OTHER APPROPRIATE INSTITUTIONS OR AGENCIES

SEC. 631. The Commissioner is authorized to make grants to institutions of higher education and other appropriate nonprofit institutions or agencies to assist them—

(1) in providing training of professional personnel to conduct training of teachers and other specialists in fields related to the education of handicapped children;

(2) in providing training for personnel engaged or preparing to engage in employment as teachers of handicapped children, as supervisors of such teachers, or as speech correctionists or other special personnel providing special services for the education of such children, or engaged or preparing to engage in research in fields related to the education of such children; and

(3) in establishing and maintaining scholarships, with such stipends and allowances as may be determined by the Commissioner, for training personnel engaged in or preparing to engage in employment as teachers of the handicapped or as related specialists. Grants under this subsection may be used by such institutions to assist in covering the cost of courses of training or study for such personnel and for establishing and maintaining fellowships or traineeships with such stipends and allowances as may be determined by the Commissioner.

GRANTS TO STATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES

SEC. 632. The Commissioner is authorized to make grants to State educational agencies to assist them in establishing and maintaining, directly or through grants to institutions of higher education, programs for training personnel engaged, or preparing to engage, in employment as teachers of handicapped children or as supervisors of such teachers. Such grants shall also be available to assist such institutions in meeting the cost of training such personnel.

GRANTS OR CONTRACTS TO IMPROVE RECRUITING OF EDUCATIONAL PERSONNEL, AND TO IMPROVE DISSENINATION OF INFORMATION CONCERNING EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR THE HANDICAPPED

SEC. 633. The Commissioner is authorized to make grants to public or nonprofit private agencies, organizations, or institutions, or to enter into contracts with public or private agencies, organizations, or institutions, for projects for—

(1) encouraging students and professional personnel to work in various fields of education of handicapped children and youth through, among other ways, developing and distributing imaginative or innovative materials to assist in recruiting personnel for such careers, or publicizing existing forms of financial aid which might enable students to pursue such careers, or

(2) disseminating information about the programs, services, and resources for the education of handicapped children, or providing referral services to parents, teachers, and other persons especially interested in the handicapped.

TRAINING OF PHYSICAL EDUCATORS AND RECREATION PERSONNEL FOR HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

SEC. 634. The Commissioner is authorized to make grants to institutions of higher education to assist them in providing training for personnel engaged or preparing to engage in employment as physical educators or recreation personnel for handicapped children or as educators or supervisors of such personnel, or engaged or preparing to engage in research or teaching in fields related to the physical education or recreation of such children.

REPORTS

SEC. 635. Each recipient of a grant under this part during any fiscal year shall, after the end of such fiscal year, submit a report to the Commissioner. Such report shall be in such form and detail and contain such information as the Commissioner determines to be appropriate.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 636. There are authorized to be appropriated for carrying out this part, $69,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, $87,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $103,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973.

PART E—RESEARCH IN THE EDUCATION OF THE HANDICAPPED

RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS IN EDUCATION OF HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

SEC. 641. The Commissioner is authorized to make grants to States, State or local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and other public or nonprofit private educational or research agencies and organizations, and to make contracts with States, State or local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and other public or private educational or research agencies and organizations, for research and related purposes and to conduct research, surveys, or demonstrations, relating to education of handicapped children.

RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS IN PHYSICAL EDUCATION AND RECREATION FOR HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

SEC. 642. The Commissioner authorized to make grants to States, State or local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and other public or nonprofit private educational or research agencies and organizations, and to make contracts with States, State or local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and other public or private educational or research agencies and organizations, for research and related purposes relating to physical education or recreation for handicapped children, and to conduct research, surveys, or demonstrations relating to physical education or recreation for handicapped children.

PANELS OF EXPERTS

SEC. 643. The Commissioner shall from time to time appoint panels of experts who are competent to evaluate various types of research or demonstration projects under this part, and shall secure the advice and recommendations of one such panel before making any grant under this part.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 644. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated $27,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, $35,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $45,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973, for carrying out the provisions of this part.

PART F—INSTRUCTIONAL MEDIA FOR THE HANDICAPPED

PURPOSE

SEC. 651. (a) The purposes of this part are to promote—

(1) the general welfare of deaf persons by (A) bringing to such persons understanding and appreciation of those films which play such an important part in the general and cultural advancement of hearing persons, (B) providing through these films enriched educational and cultural experiences through which deaf persons can be brought into better touch with the realities of their environment, and (C) providing a wholesome and rewarding experience which deaf persons may share together; and

(2) the educational advancement of handicapped persons by (A) carrying on research in the use of educational media for the handicapped. (B) producing and distributing educational media for the use of handicapped persons, their parents, their actual or potential employers, and other persons directly involved in work for the advancement of the handicapped, and (C) training persons in the use of eductional media for the instruction of the handicapped.

CAPTIONED FILMS AND EDUCATIONAL MEDIA FOR HANDICAPPED PERSONS

SEC. 652. (a) The Commissioner shall establish a loan service of captioned films and educational media for the purpose of making such materials available in the United States for nonprofit purposes to handicapped persons, parents of handicapped persons, and other persons directly involved in activities for the advancement of the handicapped in accordance with regulations.

(b) The Commissioner is authorized to—

(1) acquire films (or rights thereto) and other educational media by purchase, lease, or gift;

(2) acquire by lease or purchase equipment necessary to the administration of this part;

(3) provide for the captioning of films;

(4) provide for the distribution of captioned films and other educational media and equipment through State schools for the handicapped and such other agencies as the Commissioner may deem appropriate to serve as local or regional centers for such distribution;

(5) provide for the conduct of research in the use of educational and training films and other educational media for the handicapped, for the production and distribution of educational and training films and other educational media for the handicapped and the training of persons in the use of such films and media, including the payment to those persons of such stipends (including allowances for travel and other expenses of such persons and their dependents) as he may determine, which shall be consistent with prevailing practices under comparable federally supported programs;

(6) utilize the facilities and services of other governmental agencies; and

(7) accept gifts, contributions, and voluntary and uncompensated services of individuals and organizations.

NATIONAL CENTER ON EDUCATIONAL MEDIA AND MATERIALS FOR THE HANDICAPPED

SEC. 653. (a) The Secretary is authorized to enter into an agreement with an institution of higher education for the establishment and operation of a National Center on Educational Media and Materials for the Handicapped, which will provide a comprehensive program of activities to facilitate the use of new educational technology in education programs for handicapped persons, including designing and developing, and adapting instructional materials, and such other activities consistent with the purposes of this part as the Secretary may prescribe in the agreement. Such agreement shall—

(1) provide that Federal funds paid to the Center will be used solely for such purposes as are set forth in the agreement;

(2) authorize the Center, subject to the Secretary's prior approval, to contract with public and private agencies and organizations for demonstration projects; and

(3) provide for an annual report on the activities of the Center which will be transmitted to the Congress.

(b) In considering proposals from institutions of higher education to enter into an agreement under this subsection, the Secretary shall give preference to institutions—

(1) which have demonstrated the capabilities necessary for the development and evaluation of educational media for the handicapped; and

(2) which can serve the educational technology needs of the Model High School for the Deaf (established under Public Law 89–694).

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 654. For the purpose of carrying out this part, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $12,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, $15,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, and $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973, and each succeeding fiscal year thereafter.

PART G—SPECIAL PROGRAMS FOR CHILDREN WITH SPECIFIC LEARNING DISABILITIES

RESEARCH, TRAINING, AND MODEL CENTERS

SEC. 661. (a) The Commissioner is authorized to make grants to, and contracts with, institutions of higher education, State and local educational agencies, and other public and private educational and research agencies and organizations (except that no grant shall be made other than to a nonprofit agency or organization) in order to carry out a program of—

(1) research and related purposes relating to the education of children with specific learning disabilities;

(2) professional or advanced training for educational personnel who are teaching, or are preparing to be teachers of, children with specific learning disabilities, or such training for persons who are, or are preparing to be, supervisors and teachers of such personnel; and

(3) establishing and operating model centers for the improvement of education of children with specific learning disabilities, which centers shall (A) provide testing and educational evaluation to identify children with learning disabilities who have been referred to such centers, (B) develop and conduct model programs designed to meet the special educational needs of such children, (C) assist appropriate educational agencies, organizations, and institutions in making such model programs available to other children with learning disabilities, and (D) disseminate new methods or techniques for overcoming learning disabilities to educational institutions, organizations, and agencies within the area served by such center and evaluate the effectiveness of the dissemination process. Such evaluation shall be conducted annually after the first year of operation of a center.

In making grants and contracts under this section the Commissioner shall give special consideration to applications which propose innovative and creative approaches to meeting the educational needs of children with specific learning disabilities, and those which emphasize the prevention and early identification of learning disabilities.

(b) In making grants and controls under this section, the Commissioner shall—

(1) for the purposes of clause (2) of subsection (a), seek to achieve an equitable geographical distribution of training programs and trained personnel throughout the Nation, and

(2) for the purposes of clause (3) of subsection (a), to the extent feasible, taking into consideration the appropriations pursuant to this section, seek to encourage the establishment of a model center in each of the States.

(c) For the purpose of making grants and contracts under this section there are hereby authorized to be appropriated $12,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970, $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, and $31,000,000 for each of the succeeding fiscal years ending prior to July 1, 1973.

REPEALER

SEC. 662. Effective July 1, 1971, the following provisions of law are repealed:

(1) That part of section 1 of the Act of September 2, 1958 (Public Law 85–905), which follows the enacting clause and sections 2, 3, and 4 of such Act;

(2) The Act of September 6, 1958 (Public Law 85–926);

(3) Title VI of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (Public Law 89–10);

(4) Titles III and V of the Act of October 31, 1963 (Public Law 88–164); and

(5) The Act of September 30, 1968 (Public Law 90–538).

TITLE VII—VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

EXTENSION OF PROGRAM OF GRANTS FOR SPECIAL PROGRAMS FOR DISADVANTAGED STUDENTS

SEC. 701. Section 102(b) of the Vocational Education Act of 1963 is amended by inserting after "1970," the following: $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, and $60,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972,".

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

SEC. 702. Section 103(a)(2)(D) of the Vocational Education Act of 1963 is amended by striking out "5 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof "15 per centum".

CLARIFYING AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO STATE ADVISORY COUNCILS

SEC. 703. Section 104(b)(1) of the Vocational Education Act of 1963 is amended by inserting after "State board are elected" the following: "(including election by the State legislature)".

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY FOR RESIDENTIAL FACILITIES

SEC. 704. (a) Section 152(a)(1) of the Vocational Education Act of 1963 is amended by striking out "$15,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970" and inserting in lieu thereof "for each of the succeeding fiscal years ending prior to July 1, 1972".

(b) Section 153(d)(2) of such Act is amended by striking out "1969" and inserting in lieu thereof "1970, and on July 1, 1971".

PROMOTION OF KNOWLEDGE OF NUTRITION

SEC. 705. Section 161(b) of the Vocational Education Act of 1963 is amended by adding after "consumer education programs," the following: "including promotion of nutritional knowledge and food use and the understanding of the economic aspects of food use and purchase,".

EXTENSION OF WORK-STUDY PROGRAMS

SEC. 706. (a) Section 181(a) of the Vocational Education Act of 1963 is amended by inserting after "1970" a comma and the following: "$45,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, and $55,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972,".

(b) Section 183(a) of such Act is amended by striking out "the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970" and inserting in lieu thereof "any succeeding fiscal year".

EXTENSION OF CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

SEC. 707. Section 191(b) of the Vocational Education Act of 1963 is amended by striking out "the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970" and inserting in lieu thereof "each of the succeeding fiscal years ending prior to July 1, 1972".

EXTENSION OF PART F OF THE EDUCATION PROFESSIONS DEVELOPMENT ACT

SEC. 708. Section 555 of the Education Professions Development Act (title V of the Higher Education Act of 1965) is amended by striking out "and" where it appears after "1969," and by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "the sum of $40,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, and the sum of $45,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972".

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

SEC. 709. Section 104 of the Vocational Education Amendments of 1968 is amended by striking out "this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "the Vocational Education Act of 1963".

TITLE VIII—MISCELLANEOUS

WAIVER OF MATCHING REQUIREMENT IN THE UPWARD BOUND PROGRAM

SEC. 801. Section 408(c)(1) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 is amended by inserting after the third sentence thereof the following: "The Commissioner may, however, approve assistance in excess of such percentage if he determines, in accordance with regulations establishing objective criteria, that such action is required in furtherance of the purposes of this section. Non-Federal contributions may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including but not limited to plant, equipment, or services."

EXTENSION OF AUTHORIZATION FOR ADVISORY COUNCIL UNDER EDUCATION PROFESSIONS DEVELOPMENT ACT

SEC. 802. Section 502(f) of the Education Professions Development Act (title V of the Higher Education Act of 1965) is amended by striking out "two" and inserting in lieu thereof "three".

TEACHER CORPS ASSISTANCE FOR INDIAN CHILDREN

SEC. 803. The first sentence of section 513(c)(2) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 is amended to read as follows: "Not to exceed 3 per centum of the number of members of the Teachers Corps who are available shall be allocated to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands and not to exceed 5 per centum of such members shall be allocated to the elementary and secondary schools operated for Indian children by the Department of Interior, according to their respective needs."

STUDENT TEACHER CORPS

SEC. 804. (a) It is the purpose of this section to encourage high school and college students, parents, and other community residents to volunteer for service on a part-time or full-time basis as tutors or instructional assistants for children in disadvantaged areas and to provide support by the Teacher Corps of volunteer programs to be carried out by State and local educational agencies and institutions of higher education.

(b)(1) Section 511(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 is amended by deleting the word "and" at the end of paragraph (1), by deleting the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and", and by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) attracting volunteers to serve as part-time tutors or full-time instructional assistants in programs carried out by local educational agencies and institutions of higher education serving such areas."

(2) Section 511(b) of such Act is amended by striking out "$56,000,000 for each of the succeeding fiscal years ending prior to July 1, 1971" and inserting in lieu thereof "$80,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970, and $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971".

(c) Paragraph (1) of section 513(a) of such Act is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof a comma and the following: "and, for such periods as the Commissioner may prescribe by regulation, persons who volunteer to serve as part-time tutors or full-time instructional assistants".

(d) Section 513(a) of such Act is further amended by redesignating paragraphs (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (6), (7), and (8), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) enter into contracts or other arrangements with local educational agencies or institutions of higher education, upon approval by the appropriate State educational agency, under which provisions (including payment of the cost of such arrangements) will be made (A) to carry out programs serving disadvantaged areas in which volunteers (including high school and college students) serve as part-time tutors or full-time instructional assistants in teams with other Teacher Corps members, under the guidance of experienced teachers, but not in excess of 90 per centum of the cost of compensation for such tutors and instructional assistants may be paid from Federal funds, and (B) to provide appropriate training to prepare tutors and instructional assistants for service in such programs;".

(e) Section 514(a) of such Act is amended—

(1) by inserting after "paragraph (3) of section 513(a)" a comma and the following: "or an arrangement with a local educational agency or institution of higher education pursuant to paragraph (5) of section 513(a),";

(2) by striking out in paragraph (2) "is equal to" and inserting in lieu thereof "does not exceed", and by striking out "$75 per week" in such paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof "$90 per week"; and

(3) by deleting the word "and" at the end of paragraph (1), by deleting the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and", and by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) tutors and instructional assistants shall be compensated at such rates as the Commissioner may determine to be consistent with prevailing practices under comparable federally supported work-study programs."

TEACHER CORPS CORRECTIONS EDUCATION PROJECTS

SEC. 805. (a) Section 511(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (as amended by section 804(b) of this Act) is further amended by deleting the word "and" at the end of paragraph (2), by deleting the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and", and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) attracting and training educational personnel to provide relevant remedial, basic, and secondary educational training, including literacy and communications skills, for juvenile delinquents, youth offenders, and adult criminal offenders."

(b) Section 513(a) of such Act is further amended by redesignating paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) (as redesignated by section 804(d) of this Act), and all references thereto, as paragraphs (7), (8), and (9), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (5) the following new paragraph:

"(6) enter into arrangements, through grants or contracts, with State and local educational agencies, and with institutions of higher education, and such other agencies or institutions approved by the Commissioner according to criteria which shall be established by him to carry out the purposes of this paragraph, under which provisions (including payment of the cost of such arrangements) will be made to furnish to such agencies members of the Teacher Corps to carry out projects designed to meet the special educational needs of juvenile delinquents, youth offenders, and adult criminal offenders, and persons who have been determined by State or local educational agency, court of law, law enforcement agency, or any other State or local public agency to be predelinquent juveniles, but not in excess of 90 per centum of the cost of compensation for Teacher Corps members serving in such projects may be paid from Federal funds;".

(c) Section 514(a) of such Act is further amended by inserting before "shall provide" the following: "or an arrangement with any agency pursuant to paragraph (6) of Section 513(a),".

PROVISIONS RELATED TO GIFTED AND TALENTED CHILDREN

SEC. 806. (a) Section 521 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (relating to fellowships for teachers) is amended by inserting in the last sentence thereof after the words "handicapped children" a comma and the following: "and for gifted and talented children".

(b) Section 1201 of such Act (relating to definitions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(k) The term 'gifted and talented children' means, in accordance with objective criteria prescribed by the Commissioner, children who have outstanding intellectual ability or creative talent."

(c)(1) The Commissioner of Education shall:

(A) determine the extent to which special educational assistance programs are necessary or useful to meet the needs of gifted and talented children.

(B) Show which existing Federal educational assistance programs are being used to meet the needs of gifted and talented children,

(C) evaluate how existing Federal educational assistance programs can be more effectively used to meet these needs, and

(D) recommend which new programs, if any, are needed to meet these needs.

(2) The Commissioner shall report his findings, together with his recommendations, to the Congress not later than one year after the enactment of this Act.

CONSOLIDATION OF TITLE III OF THE NATIONAL DEFENSE EDUCATION ACT OF 1958 AND SECTION 12 OF THE NATIONAL FOUNDATION FOR THE ARTS AND THE HUMANITIES ACT OF 1965

SEC. 807. (a)(1) Section 303(a) of the National Defense Education Act of 1958 is amended by striking out "science, mathematics, history, civics, geography, economics, industrial arts, modern foreign language, English, or reading" and inserting in lieu thereof "academic subjects".

(2) Section 303(a)(5) of such Act is amended by striking out "the fields of science, mathematics, history, civics, geography, economics, industrial arts, modern foreign language, English, and reading" and inserting in lieu thereof "academic subjects".

(3) The first sentence of section 301 of such Act is amended by striking out $120,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$120,- 500,000" and by striking out "$130,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$130,500,000".

(b) Section 12 of the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965 is hereby repealed.

ADVISORY COUNCIL ON RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

SEC. 808. Section 2 of the Cooperative Research Act of 1954 is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(e) (1) The Commissioner shall establish in the Office of Education an Advisory Council on Research and Development, consisting of fifteen members appointed, without regard to the civil service laws, by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. The Commissioner shall appoint one such member as Chairman. Such members shall include persons recognized as authorities in the field of educational research and development or in related fields.

"(2) The Advisory Council shall advise the Commissioner with respect to matters of general policy arising in the administration of this Act."

RESEARCH ON PROBLEMS OF FINANCING ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION

SEC. 809. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) insufficient national concern has been focused upon the escalating operating expenses and construction costs faced by school districts, including serious inequities within and among States in financial support of elementary and secondary education;

(2) taxpayer resistance to the existing tax structure is growing and school bond issues and budget requests are being rejected;

(3) school districts are facing serious fiscal crises as they approach or exceed statutory limits on taxing and bonding authority; and

(4) there is a need for additional knowledge to solve these problems.

(b) It is the purpose of this section—

(1) to provide for research and reports on such problems under the Cooperative Research Act; and

(2) to provide for a National Commission on School Finance to study such problems and report to the Commissioner and the Congress within two years.

(c) Section 2(a) of the Cooperative Research Act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(3) The Commissioner shall, pursuant to his authority under this Act, provide for research regarding the problems of financing elementary and secondary education. Such research shall include, but not be limited to, recommendations concerning—

"(A) an appropriate division of responsibility among local, State, and the Federal Government in financing elementary and secondary education;

"(B) an appropriate balance of categorical aid, general aid, and school construction aid in the total Federal responsibility for financing elementary and secondary education;

"(C) new approaches to relieve the fiscal crisis now facing the schools;

"(D) the use of Federal revenue sharing for supporting elementary and secondary education; and

"(E) methods to minimize variations within and among States in per pupil expenditures for elementary and secondary education. The Commissioner shall make a preliminary report to the Congress not later than one hundred and twenty days after the date of enactment of the Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1969 identifying all existing federally financed research in this area (whether authorized under this or any other Act) and the current status of such research. Thereafter, the Commissioner shall report the results of, and recommendations with respect to, research under this paragraph as a separate and distinct part of his annual report pursuant to subsection (d)."

(d) The Commissioner shall, not later than ninety days after the date of enactment of this Act, establish a National Commission on School Finance. Such Commission shall consist of fifteen members appointed from (1) members of State and local educational agencies, (2) State and local government officials, (3) education administrators, (4) teachers, (5) financial experts, (6) parents with one or more children in a public elementary or secondary school, (7) the Office of Education, (8) the Department of the Treasury, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and (9) other appropriate fields. The Commissioner shall appoint a chairman and vice chairman from among such members. Such Commission shall make a full and complete investigation and study of the financing of elementary and secondary education, including but not limited to, the matters referred to in section 2(a)(3) of the Cooperative Research Act (as amended by subsection (c) of this section). The Commission shall report the results of such investigation and study and its recommendations to the Commissioner and the Congress not later than two years after the date of enactment of this Act. Funds available for the purposes of the Cooperative Research Act and for the purposes of section 402 of Public Law 90–247 shall be available for the purposes of this subsection.

CONSTRUCTION OF EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH FACILITIES

SEC. 810. Section 4(a) of the Cooperative Research Act (Public Law 83–531) is amended by striking out "July 1, 1970" and substituting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1973", and by striking out "July 1, 1971" and substituting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1974".

AMENDMENT RELATING TO THE AMERICAN PRINTING HOUSE FOR THE BLIND

SEC. 811. (a) The paragraph designated "First" in section 3 of the Act entitled "An Act to promote the education of the blind", approved March 3, 1879 (20 U.S.C. 102), is amended to read as follows:

"First. (A) Such appropriation shall be expended by the trustees of the American Printing House for the Blind each year in manufacturing and furnishing books and other materials specially adapted for instruction of the blind; and the total amount of such books and other materials so manufactured and furnished by such appropriation shall each year be distributed among all the public and private nonprofit institutions in the States, territories, and possessions of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia, in which blind pupils are educated. Each public and private nonprofit institution for the education of the blind shall receive, in books and other materials, upon requisition of its superintendent, that portion of the appropriation as is shown by the ratio between the number of blind pupils in that institution and the total number of blind pupils in all of the public and private nonprofit institutions in which blind pupils are educated. Each chief State school officer shall receive, in books and other materials, upon requisition, that portion of the appropriation as is shown by the ratio between the number of blind pupils in public and private nonprofit institutions (in the State) in which blind pupils are educated, other than institutions to which the preceding sentence is applicable, and the total number of blind pupils in the public and private nonprofit institutions in which blind pupils are educated in all of the States, territories, and possessions of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia. The ratio referred to in each of the two immediately preceding sentences shall be computed upon the first Monday in January of each year; and for purposes of such sentences the number of blind pupils in public and private nonprofit institutions in which blind pupils are educated shall be authenticated in such manner and as often as the trustees of the American Printing House for the Blind shall require. For purposes of this Act, an institution for the education of the blind is any institution which provides education exclusively for the blind, or exclusively for the blind and other handicapped children (in which case special classes are provided for the blind); the chief State school officer of a State is the superintendent of public elementary and secondary schools in such State or, if there is none, such other official as the Governor certifies to have comparable responsibility in the State; and a blind pupil is a blind individual pursuing a course of study in an institution of less than college grade.

"(B) The portion of the appropriation received by each chief State school officer, in such books and other materials under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph which represents the number of blind pupils in private nonprofit institutions in such State in which blind pupils are educated shall be distributed among such institutions on the basis of the number of blind pupils in each such institution as compared to the total number of such pupils in all of the private nonprofit institutions in which blind pupils are educated in such State.

"(C) All books and other materials furnished pursuant to this Act, and control and administration of their use, shall vest only in a public agency. Such books and materials made available pursuant to this Act for use of teachers and blind pupils in any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia in any school shall be limited to those books and materials which have been approved by an appropriate educational authority or agency of such State, Territory, possession, Commonwealth, or District, or any local educational authority thereof, for use, or are used, in a public elementary or secondary school therein."

(b) The paragraph designated "Fourth" of section 3 of the Act entitled "An Act to promote the education of the blind", approved March 3, 1879, as amended (20 U.S.C. 102), is amended by inserting immediately after "public", the following: "and private nonprofit".

(c) Section 4 of such Act is amended by inserting immediately after "public", the following: "or private nonprofit".

And the Senate agree to the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the staff of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare necessary for a discussion of the conference report be permitted on the floor without the usual limitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Rhode Island will yield, the language of the conference report that raises a question of understanding is section 2(b) with additional language:

> Such uniformity refers to one policy applied uniformly to de jure segregation wherever found and such other policy as may be provided pursuant to law applied uniformly to de facto segregation wherever found.

I would ask the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, after we passed the Stennis amendment by a vote of 56 to 36, what was the compulsion, if any, to add this further language, and does he think it explanatory? Does he really think this elucidates or clarifies the intent of the Senate or not?

Mr. PELL. In the first place, the Stennis amendment was hard fought in the conference. I think the conference, according to my recollection, broke up 2 or 3 days due to our standing pat on it. The language before us was offered by a House Member.

As I understand it, this language does not denigrate or dilute the Stennis amendment, but seeks to set forth the view that where de facto segregation occurs—and de facto segregation can occur in Atlanta, Ga., just as it can in Providence, R.I.—then the applicable law would apply to desegregation there, as anywhere else in the country. However, it must be noted that in this regard, no laws presently apply because de facto segregation has not been ruled unconstitutional.

I am not deeply versed or grounded in civil rights legislation, but, as I understand it, this language seeks to do what the Senator from Mississippi was seeking to do and clarifies the effect of the amendment with respect to those situations that are an outgrowth of dual school systems or previous laws, but de facto segregation would be handled in Georgia, for example, as in Chicago, or New York, or Providence.

That is what I understand the language does.

If the Senator from South Carolina disagrees with me, I shall be delighted to hear his views.

Mr. HOLLINGS. As I read the language, it says such a uniformity refers to one policy applied uniformly to de jure segregation wherever found.

Mr. PELL. That is right.

Mr. HOLLINGS. And then, on the other hand, to such other policy as may be provided pursuant to law applied uniformly to de facto segregation.

In other words, the language added in the conference report would call for uniformity of treatment as between de facto situations wherever found, on the one hand, and uniformity of treatment as between de jure situations wherever found, on the other hand; but not uniformity as between the two.

Mr. PELL. That is as I understand it.

Mr. HOLLINGS. If the Senator understands the language to be that, is it not a fact that the Stennis amendment, just above that, in section 2(a), says that when you come to segregation, when you come to discrimination, when you come to people, we do not separate them by class in this country, but that we are going to have uniformity of application. That is what the Senate said by the Stennis amendment, and this language was added in conference to the Stennis amendment under the thrust or suggestion of some of those who were talking so grandly and profoundly about civil rights, "whether de jure or de facto."

Is that not the language just above section 2(b)? It did not call for uniformity within de facto guidelines, or uniformity within de jure guidelines, but as between the two it says the U.S. Senate is not going to make any class distinction here. If we do, we have got segregation. The law has been in effect for 15 or 16 years, and whether you define it it as de jure or de facto, in and of itself it is bad, and we want uniform application of the law.

Does not the Senator agree?

Mr. PELL. That is correct. We tried to have the language left intact. From a practical, political viewpoint, there was considerable merit to leaving the language completely as it was brought to the conference, because it would have assured greater acceptance of the conference report by the House of Representatives, and the argument had been thoroughly thrashed out in the Senate.

But when we go into these conferences, we go in as managers, and try to do what we can. I think that in this case we came out, not with half a loaf, but with two-thirds of a loaf. The House would have liked us to have retreated a good deal farther. This language I thought, treated fairly the different classes of segregation around the country. But the Senator is correct; it does not lump together de facto and de jure segregation.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Is that not abhorrent to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, that it does not lump them together? I ask him sincerely. I know the Senator from Rhode Island is a great civil libertarian, and he believes in equality. From the viewpoint of equality, is not the language in section 2(b) abhorrent to the Senator?

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PELL. I respect the legal ability of the Senator from Missouri very much more than my own legal ability, but to my mind, this is fair, because it treats the two kinds of segregation the same way all over the country. And you cannot wipe out history. There is a difference between the situation where a dual school system has been set up for a hundred years and the situation where there is no dual school system.

Mr. HOLLINGS. But that is the same thing as saying "separate but equal." That was the argument of me and my colleagues for 100 years. We interpreted the Constitution under the separate-but-equal doctrine of Plessy against Ferguson. But then they came along with Brown against Board of Education of Topeka, Kans., and they said there is no such thing as separate but equal; you have got to have desegregation in and of itself. Chief Justice Vinson in September of 1952 said:

> Don't give us this argument about separate but equal; talk about the constitutionality in and of itself.

Mr. PELL. The only kind of segregation that is illegal at this time is de jure segregation. De facto segregation has not been ruled illegal.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Was not the U.S. Senate, in December, saying that might be a nicety in understanding, and we can read what we can into the decisions, but in the Senate, in a conscience-ridden session extending over days, particularly distinguished by the leadership of the Senator from Maryland and that of the Senator from Mississippi on his own amendment, after all the debate that was carried through, we said regardless of all of that, we would put in there, to clarify the Stennis amendment, "whether de jure or de facto"; that we are not going to separate citizens by class in this country any longer—at least so far as the policy of the Senate and the Congress is concerned—in education in America.

Mr. PELL. Nevertheless, as I understand it, the law does not presently touch de facto segregation. What the amendment really does is provide that, in those areas of the South where segregation results from economic situations or living patterns, the efforts to desegregate would be nullified.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Does the distinguished Senator maintain that we in the U.S. Senate, are supposed to pass laws in accordance with the existing laws, or are we supposed to change laws? Is not that what we do when we pass laws?

Mr. PELL. We are supposed to pass laws that will be upheld by the courts.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Does the Senator think the Stennis amendment was unconstitutional?

Mr. PELL. No.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Does he not think this class distinction could be held unconstitutional, when we come in and talk about a distinction between types of segregation in the public education system of America, where the fundamental right in all of the school cases is based on the 14th amendment, that no State shall deny or deprive an individual because of race, color, or creed?

I say it is an individual denial, and that this is writing unconstitutional language, by saying that if the individual happens to be caught up in a de jure system, he gets one right, but if he gets caught up in a de facto system, he does not get that right at all.

Mr. PELL. I thought this was the great argument we had the other day, which led to putting into the language the phrase "de facto or de jure."

Mr. HOLLINGS. No, sir. If the Senator please, that was the language of the distinguished senior Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), who was bringing in all this "de jure" and "de facto." Every Member of this body came forward with fine talks about human rights, equal rights—rights, rights, rights—and then they come along, when we finally come to the question of policy, and say, "Let us not have two classes of citizens in the public schools," but then they go off into the de jure and de facto business.

What we tried to say, in the U.S. Senate, is what we did say, "whether de jure or de facto." Either one. And rather than clarifying that, does not the Senator from Rhode Island agree that rather than clarifying, the conference amendment nullifies that expression "whether de jure or de facto"?

We said it explicitly in the Stennis amendment, and the conferees explicitly changed it by applying the uniformity within the class of de jure or within the class of de facto, but not as between the two, as the language says. Is that not right?

Mr. PELL. I would imagine that both the Stennis amendment and the language we evolved in conference will have to be tested, as of course it should. I see the point of the Senator's argument. It perhaps would have been better if we could have left the language as it was, but if we had left the language as it was, there was no possibility of agreement in conference. Senators could then ask, "Why did we not come back with the point in disagreement with the House?" I think my job, as manager of the bill, was to try to resolve as much of the difference as we could. The language before you is our suggested resolution of the differing points of view.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PELL. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. EAGLETON. I thank the Senator from Rhode Island. I would like to address myself to the questions propounded to him by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, by way of background and for the purposes of clarification.

The Senator from Rhode Island is correct in his recitation of the agony, one might call it, that the conference committee went through in numerous sessions, in which the House was adamant in its refusal to accept the Stennis amendment.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Will the distinguished Senator from Missouri yield at that point?

Mr. EAGLETON. May I finish my exposition? Then I shall be happy to answer any questions the Senator has.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Very well.

Mr. EAGLETON. After meeting day after day, and after recess after recess, it became evident that if there was to be any bill reported out of conference, something had to be done with respect to this item, because it was the item most in contention among the conferees. That reemphasizes and underscores what the Senator from Rhode Island has already said.

With respect to the law and specifically with respect to the Stennis amendment, one of the hangups about the Stennis amendment is that no one is quite certain what it does mean or was intended to do. After reading the Senate debate on the Stennis amendment—which, as we all know, consumed hours and days, with many, many Senators participating—we came up with an enormous number of varying assertions as to what was meant by the Stennis amendment as modified by the Ribicoff amendment.

The Senator from South Carolina said it was the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) who cluttered this amendment up with "de jure" and "de facto." Far from it. It was the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) who offered his "perfecting amendment," which was resoundingly accepted by the Senate and which introduced the words "de jure" and "de facto" into the original text of the Stennis amendment. I defy anyone today to tell me what the original Stennis amendment meant for sure. To Senator STENNIS, presumably, it meant one thing; to Senator RIBICOFF it may have meant another thing; to Senator MONDALE it meant another thing; to Senator SCOTT it meant another thing. Hence, with the cluttered record, with the gross ambiguity of what it did mean, the House conferees submitted their proposal, which is now incorporated in the bill, and which does precisely clarify the situation. Whether it is acceptable, whether it is tolerable, whether it is accepted with glee or joy, is a matter separate and apart. It, at least, is susceptible to being read and understood and applied and enforced.

It is uniform. It is constitutional. It is constitutional under the 14th amendment. What is prohibited by the 14th amendment is the State from acting in a way violative of due process and violative of the equal protection of the laws.

When the State acts, it must act uniformly—to wit, de jure segregation is, as is has been since the Brown case, unconstitutional per se, across the board. It is prohibited wherever it exists—North, South, East, or West; in California, Mississippi, Georgia, or wherever. Where the State or one of its subdivisions, a county or a school district, sets up a dual school system, one for blacks and one for whites, such is unconstitutional and illegal.

Likewise, it says with respect to de facto segregation that it shall be treated uniformly. We do not know as of this moment the constitutionality of de facto segregation, for the U.S. Supreme Court has declined to take jurisdiction in any case so as to rule on de facto segregation.

I believe one case grew out of my State in Kansas City, Mo., in which an attempt was made to take the case to U.S. Supreme Court. The Court denied certiorari. We do not know for sure what the attitude of the Court will be. The new Chief Justice seemingly wants to rule on this point, and he is advertising for business. Whether his advertisement will be answered, I do not know. Thus, at this juncture we do not know about de facto segregation insofar as its constitutionality is concerned.

Thus, section 2(b) of the conference committee report has this significance. Assume that Atlanta, Ga., years ago or even a few years ago there was a de jure segregated school system. I am making this as a hypothetical assumption. I do not know about Atlanta, Ga. What section 2(b) says is that, regardless of what it was in yesteryear, regardless of what its ancestry was, if in fact and in truth today, in 1970, it is a de facto segregated district, it is treated coequally with any other de facto segregated district.

For example, Washington, D.C., is 94.6 percent black and 5.4 percent white. It is obviously a de facto segregated district. If the same situation obtains in Atlanta, if Atlanta is in fact and in truth a de facto segregated district, then the same rules have to apply to Atlanta, to Washington, to St. Louis, to New York, to Kansas City. That is what 2(b) says. It is clear. It is unequivocal. It is not susceptible to duplicitous interpretation. It is not susceptible to the varying analyses to which I think the original Stennis amendment was susceptible.

Therefore, I think it has more to commend it than to condemn it because of its clarity and because of its uniformity of application.

I would be glad to answer any other questions.

Mr. HOLLINGS. If the distinguished Senator from Missouri would yield, it is great to listen to the arguments of what we did not know and what we did not understand. We do not know about Atlanta; we did not know about the Stennis amendment; we did not know about all those other things.

It is my contention, and the contention of the country, that position flies fully in the face of everything that occured here on the Stennis amendment debate. Everybody knew what the Senate intended.

I go back to the comment I made about the Senator from New York. I was not talking about the authorship. In the colloquy between the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from New York, the Senator from Connecticut said, "If you want to get into that, let's just clarify it and say what we mean, whether de jure or de facto." In order to clarify it and make absolutely certain what we meant, and that was that we were going to treat all citizens alike.

The distinguished Senator talks about the agony of a conference committee. Is it not a greater agony to come up with a segregation law, one that segregates de jure from de facto? Is not the Stennis amendment putting them together, integrating them, saying uniformity, whether de jure or de facto? The distinguished Senator from Mississippi integrated them upon the Senate floor, and the Senator from Missouri went into the conference committee and segregated them.

Mr. EAGLETON. I think the Stennis amendment, regardless of what semantics one wishes to apply to it, "clutter-gated" them together. It "clutter-gated" or obfuscated the whole field of law. The Senator from Mississippi, himself, on television, after the adoption of his amendment, when he was interviewed, said it is "too early to tell for certain what its effect will be." He counseled caution to the constituents of his State and said they have to be cautious, because it is too early "to tell what the effect will be."

Mr. HOLLINGS. Exactly. But what we are talking about is intent.

Mr. EAGLETON. If the Stennis amendment on its face is confusing and susceptible of varying interpretations, I think it is in the best interest of Congress to try to tell the American public precisely—subject to no equivocation, subject to no duplicitous interpretation—what Congress was intending.

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is right. That is the intent. And the intent of Congress. The effect is always unclear in this particular field because of the duplicity—by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Congress spoke loudly, clearly, and eloquently with respect to the 1964 Civil Rights Act on racial imbalance. But then came the U.S. Supreme Court and completely ignored it.

So we speak again clearly, and what I rather resist is the Senate trying to outdo the U.S. Supreme Court in compounding and confusing the manifest and clear intent of the Senate when it says "whether de jure or de facto," and coming around and instead asking us this morning to vote for a segregation law, and it is being led by the so-called integrationists.

That is what I am trying to get at. The Senator from Missouri is the one segregating it. We integrated the terms. We said, "whether de jure or de facto," and we made it clear.

The Senator said the effect might be clouded somewhat as it always seems to be in school litigation, but not with respect to the intent. Does the distinguished Senator from Missouri think that the language in section (b) clarifies or nullifies the language "whether de jure or de facto"? Does the Senator think that clarifies it?

Mr. EAGLETON. I will answer that. Ours is not to segregate. Ours is to specify. Ours is not to obfuscate. Ours is to elucidate.

One of the varying interpretations of the original Stennis amendment was made by the Library of Congress. The people at the Library were a little confused about it. But they came up with this "possible conclusion" of the Stennis amendment. They said that the most likely—they are not sure—the most likely result of the Stennis amendment would be to end enforcement of title VI of the Civil Rights Act against admittedly dual systems.

I take it that the Senator from South Carolina, since he is now for the total integration of statutory language, would not want to see such an evil deed result from the adoption of the original Stennis amendment—that is, the cessation of enforcement of title VI against dual school systems?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Uniformly.

Mr. EAGLETON. Uniformly segregated?

Mr. HOLLINGS. No, uniformly the elimination of dual school systems—uniformly, whether de facto or de jure. In fact, the Court gives a rather good guideline by saying "unitary." They say unitary, but we say uniformly. But a bunch of segregationist Senators going to the conference committee segregate de jure from de facto. Is that not agony to the Senator from Missouri? When the Senator talks about the agony of a conference committee, how could he agonize so and come up with that?

Mr. EAGLETON. I am much less agonized today than I was during the long, hot conferences that went on into the late hours of the night in which we were trying to effectuate some rational compromise so that the public educational system of this county could go forward. We thought it was a commendable objective, and I still believe so.

We call for the uniform application of desegregation laws in dual school system. Dual school systems have got to go now, says the Supreme Court. We also call for a uniform application of whatever rules may be devised in futuro with respect to de facto segregation.

I repeat, I think the Senator from South Carolina is overlooking a very important point here that has not heretofore been in any Federal statute to my knowledge, but will be in a Federal statute if the conference report is adopted; namely, that de facto segregation in Atlanta, if, in fact, it be that today will be treated the same as de facto segregation anywhere else in the country, regardless of the historical ancestry or origin of that de facto segregation.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield.

Mr. ERVIN. If I may lapse into North Carolina vernacular here, "de fact is" that the change made in the conference committee segregates schools in the South from those in the North for the purpose of integration.

Mr. EAGLETON. I respectfully disagree with the Senator.

Mr. ERVIN. That is "de fact."

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is "de fact" both in Latin and English; right?

Mr. ERVIN. That is correct.

Mr. EAGLETON. I respectfully disagree with the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Well, now, let us go to New York, South Carolina, or Missouri. Missouri does not have any freedom-of-choice laws. It does not have a school law. The Senator from Missouri says freedom of choice is a thing, a gimmick, to promote and continue segregation.

Mr. EAGLETON. We did not wait for the 1954 Brown against Board of Education case. In Missouri, the 872 Missouri school districts voluntarily began the desegregation process in 1948.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Then, there is no freedom-of-choice law in Missouri?

Mr. EAGLETON. We have selective assignment laws for every student originally enrolled in his closest neighborhood school. If in a certain section of any school district there is overcrowding and if in another section of the school district there is an undersupply of students and an abundance of space, one can apply for a transfer from the original neighborhood assignment to the less crowded school.

Mr. HOLLINGS. But what about with respect to freedom of choice? Does that amount to freedom of choice?

Mr. EAGLETON. Unlike the Senator from South Carolina, I do not get hung up on the cliches or the vernacular in the involvement in this matter. All I say is that Missouri schools are integrated insofar as it is conceivably possible to have them integrated, bearing in mind the geographical and ethnic housing patterns.

Take my own city of St. Louis. Generally speaking, north St. Louis is black. Generally speaking, south St. Louis is white. Generally speaking, the schools in north St. Louis have black students. Generally speaking, the schools of south side of St. Louis have white students.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Missouri does not have segregated schools, does it?

Mr. EAGLETON. All Missouri school district are unitary school districts.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Now we are back to the vernacular.

Mr. EAGLETON. We are back to the law. That is what we are debating here. We are debating the law both what it has been and what it will be.

Mr. HOLLINGS. What has the Supreme Court said about freedom of choice? Has it not said that it has been a gimmick to continue the dual school system?

Mr. EAGLETON. I believe it has; yes.

Mr. HOLLINGS. It said that freedom of choice, generally, by law, is bad, did it not? That it is a sort of segregation law? New York has a freedom-of-choice law, has it not?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I call for the regular order. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming calls for the regular order.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island yielded to the Senator from Missouri and then took his seat, thus losing the floor; therefore, at this time, the Chair does recognize the Senator from Missouri in his own right.

Mr. EAGLETON. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, the courts have said that if freedom of choice is used as a sham and a pretense and as an excuse for the furtherance of the dual school system—which has been done in many instances—then that is violative of the Brown against Board of Education decision and is violative of the 14th amendment.

Mr. HOLLINGS. New York has a freedom-of-choice system, does it not?

Mr. EAGLETON. New York has a freedom-of-choice system in a unitary school district.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield.

Mr. ERVIN. Has not the Supreme Court held in the past 3 or 4 weeks that a unitary school system is a school system in which no child is effectively excluded from any school on account of race or color?

Mr. EAGLETON. By official action.

Mr. ERVIN. I agree, yes; by official action. I submitted an amendment which made clear what the bill itself undertook to do. It provided that there should be no assignment of children to any school, and no transportation of children to any school, to alter the racial composition of any school. That is clearly in harmony with the latest decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. EAGLETON. Pardon me. Is the Senator not talking about his amendment that was adopted in the bill and has now been taken out of the conference report?

Mr. ERVIN. Yes. So evidently the conference committee goes beyond—at least the majority on the conference committee go beyond—whatever the Supreme Court said on the question of forced integration.

Mr. EAGLETON. I must disagree with the Senator from North Carolina. I remember his amendment quite well. I remember the debate on it in the conference committee. The Senator from North Carolina may remember that when he was proposing and debating his amendment, he had extensive colloquy on it with the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE). The Senator from Rhode Island was willing to accept the new additional language that the Senator from North Carolina was going to add the words: "or alter racial composition." I then asked the Senator from Rhode Island if, in his judgment, the adoption of that language, which at first he was unwilling to accept, but later did accept, in any way altered, affected, or changed the law that existed as of that moment. He said it did not and that in his judgment it was "innocuous surplusage." I agreed with the Senator from Rhode Island, and the House conferees thought it was innocuous surplusage and that it did not add or subtract much; hence, it was deleted.

Mr. ERVIN. The point I made with the Senator from Rhode Island on the floor of the Senate was that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 said that desegregation meant the assignment of children to schools without regard to race, that desegregation did not mean the assignment of children to schools to overcome racial imbalance. I thought that that was plain. But I pointed out that the necessity for my amendment was that HEW steadfastly refused to recognize the congressional intent, although it was expressed in the 1964 Civil Rights Act and had been three times reiterated since then; hence, putting in the words "or alter racial composition" meant just exactly what they said, and what Congress had said, that we could not bus children or assign children so as to make any changes, however imperceptible, in the racial composition of a school.

It seems to me that the conference committee should have retained that wording, which made that clear, and not allow any further rule for HEW to wiggle and twist and turn and disobey the acts of Congress; yet the conference committee had that chance, and the conference committee refused to avail itself of that opportunity.

Mr. EAGLETON. The Senator is correct. The conference committee did agree to delete the amendment.

I do not have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the day in question in front of me, but it is my recollection that in his presentation of the amendment, the Senator from North Carolina articulated the fact that he himself saw no difference between the words racial imbalance and the words racial composition.

Again, to the Senator from North Carolina, as a student of the English language and a distinguished jurist, those words signified the same thing, and he so stated, if my recollection serves me right in his presentation. Hence, since they added nothing new, since racial composition is not a way of talking about racial imbalance, and since in our judgment they added nothing new, I did not think we were giving up very much.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I stated very emphatically on the floor of the Senate that I wanted to put it in the RECORD to make clear the meaning of the original Act 1964, because for some strange reason HEW seemed to be incapable of understanding the English language.

It seems to me that the conference committee should retain it for that reason, and I cannot escape the conviction that this change made in the Stennis amendment and the dropping by the conference committee of the amendment proposed by me is intended to accomplish the purpose which has existed since the 1964 act—for the HEW and the Federal courts to browbeat the South and ignore similar conditions which exist in other sections of the country.

I think it was designed—as I say "defact is"—to segregate the South from the rest of the country. And that will be the result of it if the HEW pursues the course of action which it has thus far taken.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I yield briefly to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, this morning President Nixon issued a very significant and comprehensive statement on the subject of elementary and secondary school desegregation. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the statement be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE.

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT ON ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOL DESEGREGATION

My purpose in this statement is to set forth in detail this Administration's policies on the subject of desegregation of America's elementary and secondary schools.

Few public issues are so emotionally charged as that of school desegregation, few so wrapped in confusion and clouded with misunderstanding. None is more important to our national unity and progress.

This issue is not partisan. It is not sectional. It is an American issue, of direct and immediate concern to every citizen.

I hope that this statement will reduce the prevailing confusion and will help place public discussion of the issue on a more rational and realistic level in all parts of the nation. It is time to strip away the hypocrisy, the prejudice and the ignorance that too long have characterized discussion of this issue.

My specific objectives in this statement are:

To reaffirm my personal belief that the 1954 decision of the Supreme Court in Brown v. Board of Education was right in both Constitutional and human terms.

To assess our progress in the 16 years since Brown and to point the way to continuing progress.

To clarify the present state of the law, as developed by the courts and the Congress, and the Administration policies guided by it.

To discuss some of the difficulties encountered by courts and communities as desegregation has accelerated in recent years, and to suggest approaches that can mitigate such problems as we complete the process of compliance with Brown.

To place the question of school desegregation in its larger context, as part of America's historic commitment to the achievement of a free and open society.

Anxiety over this issue has been fed by many sources.

On the one hand, some have interpreted various Administration statements and actions as a backing away from the principle of Brown—and have therefore feared that the painstaking work of a decade and a half might be undermined. We are not backing away. The Constitutional mandate will be enforced.

On the other hand, several recent decisions by lower courts have raised widespread fears that the nation might face a massive disruption of public education: that wholesale compulsory busing may be ordered and the neighborhood school virtually doomed. A comprehensive review of school desegregation cases indicates that these latter are untypical decisions, and that the prevailing trend of judicial opinion is by no means so extreme.

Certain changes are needed in the nation's approach to school desegregation. It would be remarkable if sixteen years of hard, often tempestuous experience had not taught us something about how better to manage the task with a decent regard for the legitimate interests of all concerned—and especially the children. Drawing on this experience, I am confident the remaining problems can be overcome.

WHAT THE LAW REQUIRES

In order to determine what ought to be done, it is important first to be as clear as possible about what must be done.

We are dealing fundamentally with inalienable human rights, some of them constitutionally protected. The final arbiter of Constitutional questions is the United States Supreme Court.

The President's Responsibility

There are a number of questions involved in the school controversy on which the Supreme Court has not yet spoken definitively. Where it has spoken, its decrees are the law. Where is has not spoken, where Congress has not acted, and where differing lower courts have left the issue in doubt, my responsibilities as Chief Executive make it necessary that I determine, on the basis of my best judgment, what must be done.

In reaching that determination, I have sought to ascertain the prevailing judicial view as developed in decisions by the Supreme Court and the various Circuit Courts of Appeals. In this statement I list a number of principles derived from that prevailing judicial view. I accept those principles and shall be guided by them. The Departments and agencies of the Government will adhere to them.

A few recent cases in the lower courts have gone beyond those generally accepted principles. Unless affirmed by the Supreme Court, I will not consider them as precedents to guide Administration policy elsewhere.

What the Supreme Court Has Said

To determine the present state of the law, we must first remind ourselves of the recent history of Supreme Court rulings in this area.

This begins with the Brown case in 1954, when the Court laid down the principle that deliberate segregation of students by race in the public schools was unconstitutional. In that historic ruling, the court gave legal sanction to two fundamental truths—that separation by law establishes schools that are inherently unequal, and that a promise of equality before the law cannot be squared with use of the law to establish two classes of people, one black and one white.

The Court requested further argument, however, and propounded the following questions, among others:

"Assuming it is decided that segregation in public schools violates the Fourteenth Amendment

"a. would a decree necessarily follow providing that, within the limits set by normal geographic school districting, Negro children should forthwith be admitted to schools of their choice, or

"b. may this Court, in the exercise of its equity powers, permit an effective gradual adjustment to be brought about from existing segregated systems to a system not based on color distinctions?"

In its second Brown decision the following year, the Court addressed itself to these questions of manner and timing of compliance. Its ruling included these principles:

Local school problems vary: school authorities have the primary responsibility for solving these problems; courts must consider whether these authorities are acting in good faith.

The courts should be guided by principles of equity, which traditionally are "characterized by a practical flexibility in shaping its remedies and by a facility for adjusting and reconciling public and private needs."

Compliance must be achieved "with all deliberate speed," including "a prompt and reasonable start" toward achieving full compliance "at the earliest practicable date."

In 1964, the Supreme Court spoke again: "The time for mere 'deliberate speed' has run out, and that phrase can no longer justify denying these . . . children their constitutional rights."

At the same time, Congress also added to the impetus of desegragation by passing the Civil Rights Act of 1964, an Act that as a private citizen I endorsed and supported.

Although the Supreme Court in the Brown cases concerned itself primarily, if not exclusively, with pupil assignments, its decree applied also to teacher assignments and school facilities as a whole.

In 1968, the Supreme Court reiterated the principle enunciated in prior decisions, that teacher assignments are an important aspect of the basic task of achieving a public school system wholly freed from racial discrimination. During that same year, in another group of Supreme Court decisions, a significant and new set of principles also emerged.

That a school board must establish "that its proposed plan promises meaningful and immediate progress toward disestablishing State-imposed segregation," and that the plan must "have real prospects for dismantling the State-imposed dual system 'at the earliest practicable date.'"

That one test of whether a school board has met its affirmative duty to take whatever steps might be necessary to convert to a unitary system in which racial discrimination would be eliminated root and branch" is the extent to which racial separation persists under its plan.

That the argument that effective desegregation might cause white families to flee the neighborhood cannot be used to sustain devices designed to perpetuate segregation.

That when geographic zoning is combined with "free transfers," and the effect of the transfer privilege is to perpetuate segregation despite the zoning, the plan is unacceptable.

The most recent decisions by the Supreme Court have now rejected any further delay, adding to the Court's mandate:

"The obligation of every school district is to terminate dual systems at once and to operate now and hereafter only unitary schools."

That the obligation of such districts is an affirmative one and not a passive one.

That freedom of choice plans could no longer be considered as an appropriate substitute for the affirmative obligation imposed by the Court unless they, in fact, discharge that obligation immediately.

The Court has dealt only in very general terms with the question of what constitutes a "unitary" system, referring to it as one "within which no person is to be effectively excluded from any school because of race or color." It has not spoken definitely on whether or not, or the extent to which, "desegregation" may mean "integration."

In an opinion earlier this month, Chief Justice Burger pointed out a number of "basic practical problems" which the Court had not yet resolved, "including whether, as a Constitutional matter, any particular racial balance must be achieved in the schools: to what extent school districts and zones may or must be altered as a Constitutional matter; to what extent transportation may or must be provided to achieve the ends sought by prior holdings of this Court."

One of these areas of legal uncertainty cited by Chief Justice Burger—school transportation—involves Congressional pronouncement.

In the 1964 Civil Rights Act, the Congress stated, ". . . nothing herein shall empower any official or court of the United States to issue any order seeking to achieve a racial balance in any school by requiring the transportation of pupils or students from one school to another or one school district to another in order to achieve such racial balance, or otherwise enlarge the existing power of the court to insure compliance with constitutional standards."

In the 1966 amendments to the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, the Congress further stated, ". . . . nothing contained in this Act shall . . . require the assignment or transportation of students or teachers in order to overcome racial imbalance."

I am advised that these provisions cannot constitutionally be applied to de jure segregation. However, not all segregation as it exists today is de jure.

I have consistently expressed my opposition to any compulsory busing of pupils beyond normal geographic school zones for the purpose of achieving racial balance.

What the lower courts have said

In the absence of definitive Supreme Court rulings, these and other "basic practical problems" have been left for case-by-case determination in the lower courts—and both real and apparent contradictions among some of these lower court rulings have generated considerable public confusion about what the law really requires.

In an often-cited case in 1955 (Briggs v. Elliott), a District Court held that "the Constitution . . . does not require integration. . . . It merely forbids the use of governmental power to enforce segregation."

But in 1966 another court took issue with this doctrine, pointing out that it had been used as justifying "techniques for perpetuating school segregation," and declaring that:

". . . the only adequate redress for a previously overt systemwide policy of segregation directed against Negroes as a collective entity is a system-wide policy of integration."

In 1969, the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals declared:

"The famous Briggs v. Elliott dictum—adhered to by this court for many years—that the Constitution forbids segregation but does not require integration. . . . is now dead."

Cases in two circuit courts have held that the continued existence of some all-black schools in a formerly segregated district did not demonstrate unconstitutionality, with one noting that there is "no duty to balance the races in the school system in conformity with some mathematical formula."

Another circuit court decision declared that even though a district's geographic zones were based on objective, non-racial criteria, the fact that they failed to produce any significant degree of integration meant that they were unconstitutional.

Two very recent Federal court decisions continue to illustrate the range of opinion: a plan of a southern school district has been upheld even though three schools would remain all-black, but a northern school system has been ordered by another Federal court to integrate all of its schools completely "by the revising of boundary lines for attendance purposes as well as busing so as to achieve maximum racial integration."

This range of differences demonstrates that lawyers and judges have honest disagreements about what the law requires. There have been some rulings that would divert such huge sums of money to non-educational purposes, and would create such severe dislocations of public school systems, as to impair the primary function of providing a good education. In one, for example—probably the most extreme judicial decree so far—a California State court recently ordered the Los Angeles School Board to establish a virtually uniform racial balance throughout its 711 square mile district, with its 775,000 children in 561 schools. Local leaders anticipate that this decree would impose an expenditure of $40,000,000 over the next school year to lease 1,600 buses, to acquire site locations to house them, to hire drivers, and to defray operating costs. Subsequent costs would approximate $20,000,000 annually. Some recent rulings by federal district courts applicable to other school districts appear to be no less severe.

I am dedicated to continued progress toward a truly desegregated public school system. But, considering the always heavy demands for more school operating funds, I believe it is preferable, when we have to make the choice, to use limited financial resources for the improvement of education—for better teaching facilities, better methods, and advanced educational materials—and for the upgrading of the disadvantaged areas in the community rather than buying buses, tires and gasoline to transport young children miles away from their neighborhood schools.

What most of the courts agree on

Despite the obvious confusion, a careful survey of rulings both by the Supreme Court and by the Circuit Courts of Appeals suggests that the basic judicial approach may be more reasonable than some have feared. Whatever a few lower courts might have held to the contrary, the prevailing trend of judicial opinion appears to be summed up in these principles:

There is a fundamental distinction between so-called "de jure" and "de facto" segregation: de jure segregation arises by law or by the deliberate act of school officials and is unconstitutional; de facto segregation results from residential housing patterns and does not violate the Constitution. (The clearest example of de jure segregation is the dual school system as it existed in the South prior to the decision in Brown—two schools, one Negro and one White, comprised of the same grades and serving the same geographical area. This is the system with which most of the decisions, and the Supreme Court cases up until now, have been concerned.)

Where school boards have demonstrated a good-faith effort to comply with court rulings, the courts have generally allowed substantial latitude as to method—often making the explicit point that administrative choices should, wherever possible, be made by the local school authorities themselves.

In devising particular plans, questions of cost, capacity, and convenience for pupils and parents are relevant considerations.

Whatever the racial composition of student bodies, faculties and staff must be assigned in a way that does not contribute to identifying a given school as "Negro" or "White."

In school districts that previously operated dual systems, affirmative steps toward integration are a key element in disestablishing the dual system. This positive integration, however, does not necessarily have to result in "racial balance" throughout the system. When there is racial separation in housing, the Constitutional requirement has been held satisfied even though some schools remained all-black.

While the dual school system is the most obvious example, de jure segregation is also found in more subtle forms. Where authorities have deliberately drawn attendance zones or chosen school locations for the express purpose of creating and maintaining racially separate schools, de jure segregation is held to exist. In such a case the school board has a positive duty to remedy it. This is so even though the board ostensibly operates a unitary system.

In determining whether school authorities are responsible for existing racial separation—and thus whether they are Constitutionally required to remedy it—the intent of their action in locating schools, drawing zones, etc., is a crucial factor.

In the case of genuine de facto segregation (i.e., where housing patterns produce substantially all-Negro or all-White schools, and where this racial separation has not been caused by deliberate official action) school authorities are not Constitutionally required to take any positive steps to correct the imbalance.

To summarize: There is a Constitutional mandate that dual school systems and other forms of de jure segregation be eliminated totally. But within the framework of that requirement an area of flexibility—a "rule of reason"—exists, in which school boards, acting in good faith, can formulate plans of segregation which best suit the needs of their own localities.

De facto segregation, which exists in many areas both North and South, is undesirable but is not generally held to violate the Constitution. Thus, residential housing patterns may result in the continued existence of some all-Negro schools even in a system which fully meets Constitutional standards. But in any event, local school officials may if they so choose, take steps beyond the Constitutional minimums to diminish racial separation.

SCHOOL DESEGREGATION TODAY

The progress

Though it began slowly, the momentum of school desegregation has become dramatic.

Thousands of school districts throughout the South have met the requirements of law.

In the past year alone, the number of black children attending southern schools held to be in compliance has doubled, from less than 600,000 to nearly 1,200,000—representing 40 per cent of the Negro student population.

In most cases, this has been peacefully achieved.

However, serious problems are being encountered both by communities and by courts—in part as a consequence of this accelerating pace.

The problems

In some communities, racially mixed schools have brought the community greater interracial harmony; in others they have heightened racial tension and exacerbated racial frictions. Integration is no longer seen automatically and necessarily as an unmixed blessing for the Negro, Puerto Rican or Mexican-American child. "Racial balance" has been discovered to be neither a static nor a finite condition; in many cases it has turned out to be only a way station on the road to resegregation. Whites have deserted the public schools, often for grossly inadequate private schools. They have left the now re-segregated public schools foundering for lack of support. And when whites flee the central city in pursuit of all- or predominantly-white schools in the suburbs, it is not only the central city schools that become racially isolated, but the central city itself.

These are not theoretical problems, but actual problems. They exist not just in the realm of law, but in the realm of human attitudes and human behavior. They are part of the real world, and we have to take account of them.

The Complexities

Courts are confronted with problems of equity, and administrators with problems of policy. For example: To what extent does desegregation of dual systems require positive steps to achieve integration? How are the rights of individual children and their parents to be guarded in the process of enforcement? What are the educational impacts of the various means of desegregation—and where they appear to conflict, how should the claims of education be balanced against those of integration? To what extent should desegregation plans attempt to anticipate the problem of *re*segregation?

These questions suggest the complexity of the problems. These problems confront us in the North as well as the South, and in rural communities, suburbs and central cities.

The troubles in our schools have many sources. They stem in part from deeply rooted racial attitudes; in part from differences in social, economic and behavioral patterns; in part from weaknesses and inequities in the educational system itself; in part from the fact that by making schools the primary focus of efforts to remedy long-standing social ills, in some cases greater pressure has been brought to bear on the schools than they could withstand.

The Context

Progress toward school desegregation is part of two larger processes, each equally essential:

The improvement of educational opportunities for all of America's children.

The lowering of artificial racial barriers in all aspects of American life.

Only if we keep each of these considerations clearly in mind—and only if we recognize their separate natures—can we approach the question of school desegregation realistically.

It may be helpful to step back for a moment, and to consider the problem of school desegregation in its larger context.

The school stands in a unique relationship to the community, to the family, and to the individual student. It is a focal point of community life. It has a powerful impact on the future of all who attend. It is a place not only of learning, but also of living—where a child's friendship center, where he learns to measure himself against others, to share, to compete, to cooperate—and it is the one institution above all others with which the parent shares his child.

Thus it is natural that whatever affects the schools stirs deep feelings among parents, and in the community at large.

Whatever threatens the schools, parents perceive—rightly—as a threat to their children.

Whatever makes the schools more distant from the family undermines one of the important supports of learning.

Quite understandably, the prospect of any abrupt change in the schools is seen as a threat.

As we look back over these sixteen years, we find that many changes that stirred fears when they first were ordered have turned out well. In many Southern communities, black and white children now learn together—and both the schools and the communities are better where the essential changes have been accomplished in a peaceful way.

But we also have seen situations in which the changes have not worked well. These have tended to command the headlines, thus increasing the anxieties of those still facing change.

Overburdening the schools

One of the mistakes of past policy has been to demand too much of our schools: They have been expected not only to educate, but also to accomplish a social transformation. Children in many instances have not been served, but used—in what all too often has proved a tragically futile effort to achieve in the schools the kind of a multiracial society which the adult community has failed to achieve for itself.

If we are to be realists, we must recognize that in a free society there are limits to the amount of government coercion that can reasonably be used; that in achieving desegregation we must proceed with the least possible disruption of the education of the nation's children; and that our children are highly sensitive to conflict, and highly vulnerable to lasting psychic injury.

Failing to recognize these factors, past policies have placed on the schools and the children too great a share of the burden of eliminating racial disparities throughout our society. A major part of this task falls to the schools. But they cannot do it all or even most of it by themselves. Other institutions can share the burden of breaking down racial barriers, but only the schools can perform the task of education itself. If our schools fail to educate, then whatever they may achieve in integrating the races will turn out to be only a pyrrhic victory.

With housing patterns what they are in many places in the nation, the sheer numbers of pupils and the distances between schools make full and prompt school integration in every such community impractical—even if there were a sufficient desire on the part of the community to achieve it. In Los Angeles, 78 per cent of all Negro pupils attend schools that are 95 per cent or more black. In Chicago the figure is 85 per cent—the same as in Mobile, Alabama. Many smaller cities have the same patterns. Nationwide, 61 per cent of all Negro students attend schools which are 95 per cent or more black.

Demands that an arbitrary "racial balance" be established as a matter of right misinterpret the law and misstate the priorities.

As a matter of educational policy, some school boards have chosen to arrange their school systems in such a way as to provide a greater measure of racial integration. The important point to bear in mind is that where the existing racial separation has not been caused by official action, this increased integration is and should remain a matter for local determination.

Pupil assignments involve problems which do not arise in the case of the assignment of teachers. If school administrators were truly color blind and teacher assignments did not reflect the color of the teacher's skin, the law of averages would eventually dictate an approximate racial balance of teachers in each school within a system.

Not just a matter of race

Available data on the educational effects of integration are neither definitive nor comprehensive. But such data as we have suggest strongly that, under the appropriate conditions, racial integration in the classroom can be a significant factor in improving the quality of education for the disadvantaged. At the same time, the data lead us into several more of the complexities that surround the desegregation issue.

For one thing, they serve as a reminder that, from an educational standpoint, to approach school questions solely in terms of race is to go astray. The data tell us that in educational terms, the significant factor is not race but rather the educational environment in the home—and indeed, that the single most important educational factor in a school is the kind of home environment its pupils come from. As a general rule, children from families whose home environment encourages learning—whatever their race—are higher achievers; those from homes offering little encouragement are lower achievers.

Which effect the home environment has depends on such things as whether books and magazines are available, whether the family subscribes to a newspaper, the educational level of the parents, and their attitude toward the child's education.

The data strongly suggest, also, that in order for the positive benefits of integration to be achieved, the school must have a majority of children from environments that encourage learning—recognizing, again, that the key factor is not race but the kind of home the child comes from. The greater concentration of pupils whose homes encourage learning—of whatever race—the higher the achievement levels not only of those pupils, but also of others in the same school. Students learn from students. The reverse is also true: the greater concentration of pupils from homes that discourage learning, the lower the achievement levels of all.

We should bear very carefully in mind, therefore, the distinction between educational difficulty as a result of race, and educational difficulty as a result of social or economic levels, of family background, of cultural patterns, or simply of bad schools. Providing better education for the disadvantaged requires a more sophisticated approach than mere racial mathematics.

In this same connection, we should recognize that a smug paternalism has characterized the attitudes of many white Americans toward school questions. There has been an implicit assumption that blacks or others of minority races would be improved by association with whites. The notion that an all-black or predominantly-black school is automatically inferior to one which is all or predominantly-white—even though not a product of a dual system—inescapably carries racist overtones. And, of course, we know of hypocrisy: not a few of those in the North most stridently demanding racial integration of public schools in the South at the same time send their children to private schools to avoid the assumed inferiority of mixed public schools.

It is unquestionably true that most black schools—though by no means all—are in fact inferior to most white schools. This is due in part to past neglect or shortchanging of the black schools; and in part to long-term patterns of racial discrimination which caused a greater proportion of Negroes to be left behind educationally, left out culturally, and trapped in low paying jobs. It is not really because they serve black children that most of these schools are inferior, but rather because they serve poor children who often lack the home environment that encourages learning.

Innovative approaches

Most public discussion of overcoming racial isolation centers on such concepts as compulsory "busing"—taking children out of the schools they would normally attend, and forcing them instead to attend others more distant, often in strange or even hostile neighborhoods. Massive "busing" is seen by some as the only alternative to massive racial isolation.

However, a number of new educational ideas are being developed, designed to provide the educational benefits of integration without depriving the student of his own neighborhood school.

For example, rather than attempting dislocation of whole schools, a portion of a child's educational activities may be shared with children from other schools. Some of his education is in a "home-base" school, but some outside it. This "outside learning" is in settings that are defined neither as black nor white, and sometimes in settings that are not even in traditional school buildings. It may range all the way from intensive work in reading to training in technical skills, and to joint efforts such as drama and athletics.

By bringing the children together on "neutral" territory friction may be dispelled; by limiting it to part-time activities no one would be deprived of his own neighborhood school; and the activities themselves provide the children with better education.

This sort of innovative approach demonstrates that the alternatives are not limited to perpetuating racial isolation on the one hand, and massively disrupting existing school patterns on the other. Without uprooting students, devices of this kind can provide an additional educational experience within an integrated setting. The child gains both ways.

Good faith and the courts

Where desegregation proceeds under the mandate of law, the best results require that the plans be carefully adapted to local circumstances.

A sense of compassionate balance is indispensable. The concept of balance is no stranger to our Constitution. Even First Amendment freedoms are not absolute and unlimited; rather the scales of that "balance" have been adjusted with minute care, case by case, and the process continues.

In my discussion of the status of school desegregation law, I indicated that the Supreme Court has left a substantial degree of latitude within which specific desegregation plans can be designed. Many lower courts have left a comparable degree of latitude. This does not mean that the courts will tolerate or the Administration condone evasions or subterfuges; it does mean that if the essential elements of good faith is present, it should ordinarily be possible to achieve legal compliance with a minimum of educational disruption, and through a plan designed to be responsive to the community's own local circumstances.

This matter of good faith is critical.

Thus the far-sighted local leaders who have demonstrated good faith by smoothing the path of compliance in their communities have helped lay the basis for judicial attitudes taking more fully into account the practical problems of compliance.

How the Supreme Court finally rules on the major issues it has not yet determined can have a crucial impact on the future of public education in the United States.

Traditionally, the Court has refrained from deciding Constitutional questions until it became necessary. This period of legal uncertainty has occasioned vigorous controversy over what the thrust of the law should be.

As a nation, we should create a climate in which these questions, when they finally are decided by the Court, can be decided in a framework most conducive to reasonable and realistic interpretation.

We should not provoke any court to push a Constitutional principle beyond its ultimate limit in order to compel compliance with the court's essential, but more modest, mandate. The best way to avoid this is for the nation to demonstrate that it does intend to carry out the full spirit of the Constitutional mandate.

POLICIES OF THIS ADMINISTRATION

It will be the purpose of this Administration to carry out the law fully and fairly. And where problems exist that are beyond the mandate of legal requirements, it will be our purpose to seek solutions that are both realistic and appropriate.

I have instructed the Attorney General, the Secrtary of Health, Education and Welfare, and other appropriate officials of the Government to be guided by these basic principles and policies:

Principles of enforcement

Deliberate racial segregation of pupils by official action is unlawful, wherever it exists. In the words of the Supreme Court, it must be eliminated "root and branch"—and it must be eliminated at once.

Segregation of teachers must be eliminated. To this end, each school system in this nation, North and South, East and West, must move immediately, as the Supreme Court has ruled, toward a goal under which "in each school the ratio of White to Negro faculty members is substantially the same as it is throughout the system."

With respect to school facilities, school administrators throughout the nation, North and South, East and West, must move immediately, also in conformance with the Court's ruling, to assure that schools within individual school districts do not discriminate with respect to the quality of facilities or the quality of education delivered to the children within the district.

In devising local compliance plans, primary weight should be given to the considered judgment of local school boards—provided they act in good faith, and within Constitutional limits.

The neighborhood school will be deemed the most appropriate base for such a system.

Transportation of pupils beyond normal geographic school zones for the purpose of achieving racial balance will not be required.

Federal advice and assistance will be made available on request, but Federal officials should not go beyond the requirements of law in attempting to impose their own judgment on the local school district.

School boards will be encouraged to be flexible and creative in formulating plans that are educationally sound and that result in effective desegregation.

Racial imbalance in a school system may be partly de jure in origin, and partly de facto. In such a case, it is appropriate to insist on remedy for the de jure portion, which is unlawful, without insisting on a remedy for the lawful de facto portion.

De facto racial separation, resulting genuinely from housing patterns, exist in the South as well as the North; in neither area should this condition by itself be cause for Federal enforcement actions. De jure segregation brought about by deliberate school-board gerrymandering exists in the North as the South; in both areas this must be remedied. In all respects, the law should be applied equally, North and South, East and West.

This is one nation. We are one people. I feel strongly that as Americans we must be done, now and for all future time, with the divisive notion that these problems are sectional.

Policies for progress

In those communities facing desegregation orders, the leaders of the communities will be encouraged to lead—not in defiance, but in smoothing the way of compliance. One clear lesson of experience is that local leadership is a fundamental factor in determining success or failure. Where leadership has been present, where it has been mobilized, where it has been effective, many districts have found that they could, after all, desegregate their schools successfully. Where local leadership has failed, the community has failed and the schools and the children have borne the brunt of that failure.

We shall launch a concerted, sustained and honest effort to assemble and evaluate the lessons of experience: to determine what methods of school desegregation have worked, in what situations, and why—and also what has not worked. The Cabinet-level working group I recently appointed will have as one of its principal functions amassing just this sort of information and helping make it available to the communities in need of assistance.

We shall attempt to develop a far greater body of reliable data than now exists on the effects of various integration patterns on the learning process. Our effort must always be to preserve the educational benefit for the children.

We shall explore ways of sharing more broadly the burdens of social transition that have been laid disproportionately on the schools—ways, that is, of shifting to other public institutions a greater share of the task of undoing the effects of racial isolation.

We shall seek to develop and test a varied set of approaches to the problems associated with "de facto" segregation, North as well as South.

We shall intensify our efforts to ensure that the gifted child—the potential leader—is not stifled intellectually merely because he is black or brown or lives in a slum.

While raising the quality of education in all schools, we shall concentrate especially on racially-impacted schools, and particularly on equalizing those schools that are furthest behind.

Words often ring empty without deeds. In government, words can ring even emptier without dollars.

In order to give substance to these commitments, I shall ask Congress to divert $500 million from my previous budget requests for other domestic programs for Fiscal 1971, to be put instead into programs for improving education in racially-impacted areas, North and South, and for assisting school districts in meeting special problems incident to court-ordered desegregation. For Fiscal 1972, I have ordered that $1 billion be budgeted for the same purposes.

I am not content simply to see this money spent, and then to count the spending as the measure of accomplishment. For much too long, national "commitments" have been measured by the number of Federal dollars spent rather than by more valid measures such as the quality of imagination displayed, the amount of private energy enlisted or, even more to the point, the results achieved.

If this $1.5 billion accomplishes nothing, then the commitment will mean nothing.

If it enables us to break significant new ground, then the commitment will mean everything.

This I deeply believe:

Communities desegregating their schools face special needs—for classrooms, facilities, teachers, teacher training—and the nation should help meet those needs.

The nation also has a vital and special stake in upgrading education where de facto segregation persists—and where extra efforts are needed if the schools are to do their job. These schools, too, need extra money for teachers and facilities.

Beyond this, we need to press forward with innovative new ways of overcoming the effects of racial isolation and of making up for environmental deficiencies among the poor.

I have asked the Vice President's Cabinet Committee on School Desegregation, together with the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, to consult with experts in and out of government and prepare a set of recommended criteria for the allocation of these funds.

I have specified that these criteria should give special weight to four categories of need:

The special needs of desegregating (or recently desegregated) districts for additional facilities, personnel and training required to get the new, unitary system successfully started.

The special needs of racially-impacted schools where de facto segregation persists—and where immediate infusions of money can make a real difference in terms of educational effectiveness.

The special needs of those districts that have the furthest to go to catch up educationally with the rest of the nation.

The financing of innovative techniques for providing educationally sound inter-racial experiences for children in racially isolated schools.

This money—the $500 million next year, and $1 billion in Fiscal 1972—must come from other programs. Inevitably, it represents a further reordering of priorities on the domestic scene. It represents a heightened priority for making school desegregation work, and for helping the victims of racial isolation learn.

Nothing is more vital to the future of our nation than the education of its children; and at the heart of equal opportunity is equal educational opportunity. These funds will be an investment in both the quality and the equality of that opportunity.

This money is meant to provide help now, where help is needed now.

As we look to the longer-term future, it is vital that we concentrate more effort on understanding the process of learning—and improving the process of teaching. The educational needs we face cannot be met simply with more books, more classrooms and more teachers—however urgently these are needed now in schools that face shortages. We need more effective methods of teaching, and especially of teaching those children who are hardest to reach and most lacking in a home environment that encourages learning.

In my message on education reform earlier this month, I proposed creation of a National Institute of Education to conduct and to sponsor basic and applied educational research—with special emphasis on compensatory education for the disadvantaged, on the Right to Read, on experimental schools and on the use of television for educational purposes.

I repeat that proposal—and I ask that the Congress consider it a matter of high priority.

A FREE AND OPEN SOCIETY

The goal of this Administration is a free and open society. In saying this, I use the words "free" and "open" quite precisely.

Freedom has two essential elements: the right to choose, and the ability to choose. The right to move out of a mid-city slum, for example, means little without the means of doing so. The right to apply for a good job means little without access to the skills that make it attainable. By the same token, those skills are of little use if arbitrary policies exclude the person who has them because of race or other distinction.

Similarly, an "open" society is one of open choices—and one in which the individual has the mobility to take advantage of those choices.

In speaking of "desegregation" or "integration," we often lose sight of what these mean within the context of a free, open, pluralistic society. We cannot be free, and at the same time be required to fit our lives into prescribed places on a racial grid—whether segregated or integrated, and whether by some mathematical formula or by automatic assignment. Neither can we be free, and at the same time be denied—because of race—the right to associate with our fellow-citizens on a basis of human equality.

An open society does not have to be homogeneous, or even fully integrated. There is room within it for many communities. Especially in a nation like America, it is natural that people with a common heritage retain special ties; it is natural and right that we have Italian or Irish or Negro or Norwegian neighborhoods; it is natural and right that members of those communities feel a sense of group identity and group pride. In terms of an open society, what matters is mobility: the right and the ability of each person to decide for himself where and how he wants to live, whether as part of the ethnic enclave or as part of the larger society—or, as many do, share the life of both.

We are richer for our cultural diversity; mobility is what allows us to enjoy it.

Economic, educational, social mobility—all these, too, are essential elements of the open society. When we speak of equal opportunity we mean just that: that each person should have an equal chance at the starting line, and an equal chance to go just as high and as far as his talents and energies will take him.

This Administration's programs for helping the poor, for equal opportunity, for expanded opportunity, all have taken a significantly changed direction from those of previous years—and those principles of a free and open society are the keys to the new direction.

Instead of making a man's decisions for him, we aim to give him both the right and ability to choose for himself—and the mobility to move upward. Instead of creating a permanent welfare class catered to by a permanent welfare bureaucracy, for example, my welfare reform proposal provides job training and a job requirement for all those able to work—and also a regular Family Assistance payment instead of the demeaning welfare handout.

By pressing hard for the "Philadelphia Plan," we have sought to crack the color bar in the construction unions—and thus to give black and other minority Americans both the right and the ability to choose jobs in the construction trades, among the highest paid in the nation.

We have inaugurated new Minority Business Enterprise programs—not only to help minority members get started in business themselves, but also, by developing more black and brown entrepreneurs, to demonstrate to young blacks, Mexican-Americans and others that they, too, can aspire to this same sort of upward economic mobility.

In our education programs, we have stressed the need for far greater diversity in offerings to match the diversity of individual needs—including more and better vocational and technical training, and a greater development of 2-year community colleges.

Such approaches have been based essentially on faith in the individual—knowing that he sometimes needs help, but believing that in the long run he usually knows what is best for himself. Through them also runs a belief that education is the key that opens the door to personal progress.

As we strive to make our schools places of equal educational opportunity, we should keep our eye fixed on this goal: To achieve a set of conditions in which neither the laws nor the institutions supported by law any longer draw an invidious distinction based on race; and going one step further, we must seek to repair the human damage wrought by past segregation. We must give the minority child, that equal place at the starting line that his parents were denied—and the pride, the dignity, the self-respect, that are the birthright of a free American.

We can do no less and still be true to our conscience and our Constitution. I believe that most Americans today, whether North or South, accept this as their duty.

The issues involved in desegregating schools, reducing racial isolation and providing equal educational opportunity are not simple. Many of the questions are profound, the factors complex, the legitimate considerations in conflict, and the answers elusive. Our continuing search, therefore, must be not for the perfect set of answers, but for the most nearly perfect and the most constructive.

I am aware that there are many sincere Americans who believe deeply in instant solutions and who will say that my approach does not go far enough fast enough. They feel that the only way to bring about social justice is to integrate all schools now, everywhere, no matter what the cost in the disruption of education.

I am aware, too, that there are many equally sincere citizens—North and South, black and white—who believe that racial separation is right, and wish the clock of progress would stop or be turned back to 1953. They will be disappointed, too.

But the call for equal educational opportunity today is in the American tradition. From the outset of the nation, one of the great struggles in America has been to transform the system of education into one that truly provided equal opportunity for all. At first, the focus was on economic discrimination. The system of "fee schools" and "pauper schools" persisted well into the 19th century.

Heated debates preceded the establishment of universal free public education—and even in such States as New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, the system is barely a century old.

Even today, inequities persist. Children in poor areas often are served by poor schools—and unlike the children of the wealthy, they cannot escape to private schools. But we have been narrowing the gap—providing more and better education in more of the public schools, and making higher education more widely available through free tuition, scholarships and loans.

In other areas, too, there were long struggles to eliminate discrimination that had nothing to do with race. Property and even religious qualifications for voting persisted well into the 19th century—and not until 1920 were women finally guaranteed the right to vote.

Now the focus is on race—and on the dismantling of all racial bars to equality of opportunity in the schools. As with the lowering of economic barriers, the pull of conscience and the pull of national self-interest both are in the same direction. A system that leaves any segment of its people poorly educated serves the nation badly, a system that educates all of its people well serves the nation well.

We have overcome many problems in our 190 years as a nation. We can overcome this problem. We have managed to extend opportunity in other areas. We can extend it in this area. Just as other rights have been secured, so too can these rights be secured—and once again the nation will be better for having done so.

I am confident that we can preserve and improve our schools, carry out the mandate of our Constitution, and be true to our national conscience.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will continue the discussion about one thought I had, perhaps he can clarify something for me. The Senator said New York has a freedom of choice law. Is that correct?

Mr. EAGLETON. Yes. We discussed that in the debate.

Mr. HOLLINGS. As a matter of fact, the New York Times, and I think the CBS in a New Year's roundup in December, said segregation had increased under that law in 1969; that at the end of the year segregation was on the increase.

Mr. EAGLETON. I am not familiar with that article from the Times. But if the Senator says that is what it said, that is correct.

Mr. HOLLINGS. If that is what they say occurred in New York, and that is what occurred under the law in New York, then New York is a de jure State, is it not?

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, New York is one of the 50 States of the Union, but it is happily one of the States that does not apply to de jure or a dual school system.

Mr. HOLLINGS. If that is a freedom of choice, and segregation is on the increase, how does that make it de jure?

Mr. EAGLETON. The statutes of New York do not set up, nor do the New York school districts by administrative fiat set up, separate or dual school systems, one for the blacks and one for the whites.

Mr. HOLLINGS. In New York it results in segregation. But when we pass a law that applies to the South, the law must result in integration. In the North when it results in segregation, they try to maintain that it is de jure segregation and that the law does not apply to New York. However, they say the law does apply to South Carolina, which did away with its segregation 15 years ago.

Mr. EAGLETON. De jure segregation is to be affected by subsection (b) wherever found, from Maine to Hawaii, with every State included in between.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The difference depends on whether they pass a law in the South. If they happen to have had laws in 1954 which did away with that situation, they still consider it de facto. But in a State like New York that in 1969 passed a freedom of choice plan which results in segregation that is de jure segregation. Is that correct?

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, we had a colloquy during the debate with the Senator from New York on this matter.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Does the Senator from Minnesota have the floor?

Mr. MONDALE. I do not have the floor.

Mr. EAGLETON. I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, do I have the floor? I would like to have the Senator from Minnesota have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri had the floor. He has yielded to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I simply wanted to clear up one point. During the debate, the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) mentioned that he opposed the New York law. He made it very clear that wherever there was official segregation, including New York, it was clearly unconstitutional and illegal and had to be eliminated.

There is a uniform rule prohibiting official discrimination. And if the law in New York seeks in any way to impair the protection of Constitutional rights it obviously is ineffective.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator from Minnesota would stop at that particular point, no one doubts the sincerity of the Senator from New York. But perhaps that is where the administration got its guidelines. They say, "Lower your voice. Do not judge this administration by what we say, but by what we do."

And when we, from our vantage point, looked at the distinguished State of New York and looked at the record of New York, we did not hear any objections until finally we pressured them with the Stennis amendment. We had to flush them out like rabbits out of the brier patch. Then they came up with the statement as to how they opposed the freedom of choice.

We did not see the Secretary of HEW receive any letter from New York about the application of integration guidelines in that 8- by 40-block area known as Harlem.

We find them all the time arm in arm, demonstrating in every fashion possible to show what a terrible situation exists in the South in running the schools in the South.

That is why we wonder when we hear that they got into the conference committee and justified the action of the State of New York. We begin to question it.

Does the Senator from Minnesota really believe in that segregation provision test? He did not write this in the conference committee?

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I think it is probably in order to describe the matter.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Who wrote this section?

Mr. MONDALE. The President has clarified his position on civil rights today. It is all spelled out in 19 pages. I have not read it. But I know it clarifies his position.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Does the Senator know whether the President dealt with de facto and de jure? Do the words de facto or de jure appear anywhere in those 19 pages?

Mr. MONDALE. I would hope so. I believe it does.

Mr. HOLLINGS. We will both research that.

Senators who have preceded the Senator from Minnesota this morning said in the debate that it was not clear about the intent of the Stennis amendment. But is it not a fact that we said, "Let's make it clear and add the language, whether de jure or de facto. We are not going to have two classes of citizens"? Under HEW administration of school laws in America, if an individual, under the 14th amendment and the Constitution, happened to find himself under a de jure system, he had no rights; but if he was in a de facto system, he had some rights. We were trying to go back to what Chief Justice Vinson announced in the original cases in the early 1950's: Let us not have any of this "either/or"; let us treat citizens fairly and equally, regardless of de jure or de facto.

I am sure that is the creed of the Senator from Minnesota. Did the Senator join in this particular provision?

Mr. MONDALE. I think it is important to try to indicate the degree to which the conferees tried to sustain the position of the Senate, a position which initially was sustained by a vote of 48 to 46. I refer to the effort by the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT) to substitute his proposal for the Stennis amendment. I recall that that effort was defeated by a 2-vote margin.

The conference was in session for nearly 2 weeks. The Stennis amendment was repeatedly brought up, but the House conferees were adamantly opposed to any Stennis amendment at all.

First the House conferees, I think with one dissenting vote, asked the Senate to recede and delete the Stennis amendment completely.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes, but——

Mr. MONDALE. If the Senator will let me finish this statement, I think it is important for us to get a sense of the position of the Senate conferees here.

The Senate refused to yield. Thereafter, the House offered a modification, substituting the word "discrimination" for the word "segregation" and deleting the words "whether de facto or de jure" and deleting the words appearing in the Stennis amendment "without regard to the origin of cause of such segregation."

This amendment was offered by Representative QUIE, of Minnesota. The Senate conferees once again refused to yield; as a matter of fact, I think we refused to yield to that version on two occasions.

Then the Senate—and this was after nearly 2 weeks of debate which involved a good deal of discussion on this issue—offered a modification adding to the Stennis amendment the following phrase: "To the extent of otherwise applicable law," hoping this would provide a basis for settlement; and adding what is now subsection (c):

Providing nothing in this section will be construed to diminish the obligation of responsible officials to enforce or comply with such guidelines in order to eliminate discrimination in federally assisted programs and activities as required by title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

In other words, this was our effort to maintain what we then thought was the best and most complete Senate position that was then possible and still reach agreement. The House rejected that proposal.

Then the House offered the modified language now in the conference report. I believe it was offered by Representative FORD of Michigan.

Mr. HOLLINGS. So subsection (b) was written by Representative FORD of Michigan?

Mr. MONDALE. Yes; but I would like to get all of this in the record at this point and then go back. It was Representative WILLIAM FORD of Michigan.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Of Michigan.

Mr. MONDALE. Next, the Senate amended the House offer by substituting the original Stennis language for subsection (a) and sent this modification back to the House conferees. The House rejected the Senate amendments and re-offered the modified language now in the conference report. Finally, reluctantly, after two weeks the Senate accepted the House offer in order to complete the conference.

I assure the Senator from South Carolina that the Senate conferees tried to be, to the fullest extent possible, trustees of the action of the Senate.

I say this for the chairman of our conference committee, the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island. If ever there was a chairman of a Senate delegation who tried harder to sustain a position on a controversial point with which there may have been personal disagreement, I am not aware of it. But it was felt that the principle of the conferees in their representative character required that kind of representation, which was performed by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island.

If the Senator from South Carolina does not object, I would like to yield to the Senator from Rhode Island on this very point.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Let me clarify the record for just a moment, since I still have the floor, and then we will proceed as the Senator requested.

Mr. MONDALE. Very well.

Mr. HOLLINGS. No one doubts the sincerity and dedication of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 1 minute?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield.

Mr. PELL. I would like to make the point that every member of the Senate conferees fought hard on this matter, particularly the senior Senator from New York, the ranking minority member (Mr. JAVITS), as well as the other Senate conferees who were in disagreement with the body of the Stennis amendment when it was considered on the floor. They fought for it. In fact, I think we produced a considerable surprise in the conference. One member on the House side seemed very upset. He felt all of his members were not reflecting the body as a whole and took the occasion—I believe he was from the Senator's State—to remark on what an able job Senators were doing in upholding the views of the Senate, although they were not upholding their own views on the subject.

Mr. HOLLINGS. One can understand the apprehension and somewhat sense of misgiving, when we talk about fighting hard. We know how able, resourceful, and effective the senior Senator from New York is; yet his State ends up with a freedom of choice law on the books, to which the Senator finds no objection. The Stennis amendment was adopted in the Senate by a vote of 56 to 36. We somehow get a feeling of delivering letters by rabbit when they say they fought hard.

I yield to my distinguished friend.

Mr. PELL. We did fight hard. I made a mistake. The gentleman was not from the State of the Senator from South Carolina, but from a State to the immediate north.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I see.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I voted for the Stennis amendment in the Senate, and I was a conferee. I can assure the distinguished Senator from South Carolina that the conferees, in my judgment, did everything possible to sustain the action of the Senate on the Stennis amendment. I voted for it when it was before the Senate. I did my best, and I am sure every member of the conference committee on the Senate side worked steadfastly and did everything in his power to maintain the position of the Senate.

Mr. HOLLINGS. We know the record of the House of Representatives. That is the body by which a good majority sends over here each year the Whitten amendment, which is far more stringent and far more segregationist, if we want to use colorful language, than the language of the Stennis amendment. The Stennis amendment was not segregationist at all. We clarified it and said de jure or de facto.

When the Senator talks about the conference taking 2 weeks, I am reminded of his valiant fight on open and equal housing. It took some 7 or 8 months to debate that. That bill was almost a month on the floor of the Senate. I cannot see him coming out of that conference committee and putting certain pupils in America in one house of de jure segregation and putting other pupils in another house of de facto segregation.

Is that not what we said in the Stennis amendment—that there is not going to be that classification? We said, whether de jure or de facto, there is going to be equal application under the law. I cannot imagine my friend coming up with provision for segregation in here.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. I was not a conferee. I do not see anything greatly wrong with the substitute except that, like the original, neither one of them has any constitutional effect. Neither one is enforceable. Neither one expresses anything more than a pious hope that people will obey the law, and they ought to obey it everywhere alike. But the President, in his message this morning, demolishes completely the need for any one of these amendments, when we get down to it. Therefore, I cannot care very much whether it is section (b) or (c) or page 1, because, on page 7 of the Preseident's message on school desegregation, the President says:

To summarize: There is a Constitutional mandate that dual school systems and other forms of de jure segregation be eliminated totally. But within the framework of that requirement an area of flexibility—a "rule of reason"—exists, in which school boards, acting in good faith, can formulate plans of desegregation which best suit the needs of their own localities.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania construe that language to mean that the President supports de facto segregation?

Mr. SCOTT. I will go on to read what the President himself says on de facto segregation. I am simply pointing out that this previous portion of the message ought to be acceptable in every section of the country as being fair. The next paragraph is equally so. I quote now from the President's statement delivered at 11 o'clock a.m.:

De facto segregation, which exists in many areas both North and South, is undesirable but is not generally held to violate the Constitution. Thus, residential housing patterns may result in the continued existence of some all-Negro schools even in a system which fully meets Constitutional standards. But in any event, local school officials may, if they so choose, take steps beyond the Constitutional minimums to diminish racial separation.

That is the end of the quotation.

What I am saying is that in this morning's meeting the President was asked about these two paragraphs and he said the evil is the same, but the approach is different, because in de facto segregation there is the difference of the law, the absence of Supreme Court decision, there is the difference in the cost of the application, as witness the Los Angeles decision, and there is a difference in the application of the remedies.

I am paraphrasing the discussion of this morning, but what I am saying is that the President's message makes it very clear that de jure segregation is one thing and the law is going to be applied in this country in all sections fairly and justly and equally; and he is right. He says that de facto segregation is undesirable also. I go further and say it is wrong and it is evil. But he goes further to say it is not yet held to be unconstitutional, as he phrased it.

Therefore, the point I make is that I think the furor over that section or the original Stennis amendment is no longer not only unworthy but is a tempest in a teapot gone cold with disuse or no reason for its use.

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is, if the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania lives in Pennsylvania, but if he lives in the State of South Carolina, it is no tempest gone cold. It has become very, very warm and it has been warm for years.

I cannot comment on the President's message, because I have not read it, so I will withhold comment on it, but what we are about to do in the Senate today is enact a law, and what we say in the Elementary and Secondary Education Act is, "Look, Mr. HEW, it is a policy of the United States, the guidelines and criteria, not about the Constitution, not about de jure or de facto, not North or South, not whether it is the law, or good policy or bad policy or not." Regardless of all those things, JOHN STENNIS, with the help of ABE RIBICOFF of Connecticut, made it crystal clear. They said:

> Now this government shall apply the guidelines and criteria uniformly, whether the segregation be de jure or de facto.

Is not that what the U.S. Senate said by a vote of 56 to 36?

Mr. SCOTT. It is what the distinguished Senate said, but in doing so, it, with that rare facility which we have in the Senate and as lawyers, totally ignored the law and the Constitution of the United States. That we are quite able to do, and often do, all of us. We all sin, and peccavi is our policy in that regard.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The Senator says, "the law." We have the Stennis amendment, which more nearly approximates equal justice under the law than the language in the report does. Would the Senator divide the application of the law, and make it one way under de jure and another under de facto segregation?

Mr. SCOTT. I say the equal application of the law is the most desirable result we can achieve, but we have to achieve it in accordance with what the Supreme Court has said. It has ruled on de jure segregation. It has not ruled on de facto segregation. I had nothing to do with the wording of section (b), but if it is applied to de jure segregation, it should be applied uniformly throughout the whole country.

If the Senator is talking about de facto, if it is to be applied uniformly throughout the country, as applied to de jure violations or de facto violations, the great thrust of what the President said today is that he pleads for an end to regional distinction between North and South; and again I say he is right.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Is there a better plea than the Stennis amendment? Let us get back to the Morning Show in which Secretary of Labor Shultz was commenting on the postal strike, in which a striking lady postal worker said: "Everybody else is doing it; why shouldn't we?"

It gets to the point that what is wrong is that the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare have no uniformity of application. They send their agents and bring their guidelines to one section only, and they do not apply the law uniformly. Did not this all start with the Senator from Georgia when he found that 17 HEW agents were in South Carolina and only two in Chicago, and one in the entire State of Minnesota, and I think six in New York? Was it not the thinking that all the evil was down there? And all we are saying is, invoke equal justice under the law and a better feeling about integration and allowing them in the schools together, regardless of where they live, in the South or North. They say the greater evil exists in the South. Is not that what is ruining our progress in the South, because we feel we are discriminated against when we see the leadership ignore the segregation law in some areas and we know it?

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I wish to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania to complete his thought.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina yields to the Senator from Pennsylvania. The Chair would suggest that the Senator from Pennsylvania did not ask the Senator from South Carolina to yield.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I admit I did not ask for it, but I had my mouth open, which is preliminary to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania certainly has had his mouth open for the last 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Pennsylvania had his mouth open because of some of the illogical statements made which he heard with arrectis auribus, even though his mind rejected them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has been yielded to.

Mr. SCOTT. By the way, "arrectis auribus" means upright ears, if any Senator has any doubt about it. May I say I think such arguments as the Senator made, that the laws should be equally applied, I agree with. All I am saying is that the court has not yet ruled on how to apply the law as to de facto segregation. Until it does, we do not know how to apply it, either. All section (b) says is, wherever the courts have said it is de jure, apply the law equally. Wherever the courts have failed to rule on de facto, apply such law, as remains left in your hands, until it is finally decided by the courts, but apply it equally. What is wrong with that?

Mr. HOLLINGS. We are not waiting for the Supreme Court for this application, because it is a moving target in this area.

We have a very difficult time, but when you get to a conscience-ridden discussion like the debate we had on the Stennis amendment, I think it is salutary for this country. We were telling it like it is, and everybody was making his talk about equal rights and human rights, and when we added to the amendment, "whether de jure or de facto," we were setting down the policy as it concerned the legislative branch of this Government.

We were not trying to outguess the courts. We said whether they found it de facto or whatever it was, we were asking for uniformity and equal justice under the law. That is all the Senate was asking for; why recede from it? Why are we now saying, all of a sudden, we cannot say what the court is going to do, and going into all this doubletalk? What the conference report is trying to do is replace dual school systems with dual citizenship.

Mr. SCOTT. What does the Senator find wrong with what the conferees have done? They are still asking for equal application of the law so far as it has been handed down.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, am I recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Just a moment. Is the Senator from Rhode Island asking for recognition? If so, for what purpose?

Mr. PELL. I was asking for recognition to yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator have the floor? The Presiding Officer did not know that; he thought the Senator from South Carolina had it.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yielded the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair then recognizes the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair, but I did not really seek recognition. I think the Senator from Rhode Island, who is handling the conference report, is entitled to the floor if he wishes it.

Mr. PELL. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator.

I wanted to make a point, Mr. President, in respect to the colloquy between the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Pennsylvania. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I am going to mention his State in the figures I am about to cite.

Mr. SCOTT. I would be delighted to listen to my friend.

Mr. STENNIS. The figures I am about to recite for my State were supplied by HEW. They advise me that according to their records on 118 districts in Mississippi, containing 223,784 Negro students, of that number, 50.4 percent attend either majority white schools in HEW-monitored voluntary plan districts—that means plans under HEW—or school districts which have been integrated under court order, based upon HEW-approved plans.

There are 30 districts that are not included in this tabulation I have given, and they have 30,500 Negro students. They are set aside from the tabulation because they were not in the records, because they were not drawing any Federal funds, and HEW did not have records on them; so I set them out separately.

I repeat, in these 118 districts—which is all of them, as I have stated, except 30—with 223,784 Negro students, 50.4 percent of those students are in schools that are majority white schools.

This compares with an average, for the 32 States outside the South—I call them the Northern, the Eastern, and the Western States—of 27.6 percent.

In other words, 27.6 percent of the Negro students in those States are in majority white schools. The percentage in Illinois is down as low as 13.6 percent Negro students in majority white schools. I have already stated the figures for Mississippi: 50.4 percent, leaving out these 30 districts.

In the State of California, 22.5 percent.

In the State of New York, 32.3 percent.

In the State of Michigan, 20.6 percent.

In the State of Nebraska, 27.3 percent.

In the State of Ohio, 27.7 percent.

In the State of Pennsylvania, 27.5 percent.

In the State of Indiana, 35 percent.

If I may have the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I have given these figure showing the number of Negro students in majority white schools in Mississippi, excluding 30 special districts, at 50.4 percent, as compared to a figure for his State of Pennsylvania of only 27.5 percent.

Under the amendment that we discussed, Mississippi would come under the de jure classification, and would be condemned on all fours, all over the State, in spite of these favorable figures; whereas, under the amendment brought back by the committee, the State of Pennsylvania would be exempt. According to this amendment, it could not be touched.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. Let me finish my statement, and I shall be happy to yield.

It could not be touched, just because of a legalism, as the Senator from Pennsylvania says, which the Supreme Court has not passed on. And the Supreme Court, in case after case after case, has refused to pass on the question if the case originated outside the South, and in case after case, as the Senator already knows, they have passed on it if the case came up from the South.

If that is fairness, if that is unity, if that is equity, if that is right, then I will have to relearn everything I was ever taught. But that is exactly the situation we are up against here, and that is what we were trying to do something about.

If you want to perpetuate and protect segregation in your schools, you stand with the group that are sponsoring this amendment. If you want to get at the real problem, let us start off with something that is fair, and has equality to it, and get down to where the grubbing is, where the people are, and do something about these hundreds of thousands or millions of colored school children outside the South.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. STENNIS. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Mississippi knows my very high regard for him. He has spoken of what he learned. He and I were educated in the same schools; we were taught the same things; but I suggest, with great respect, that we learned different conclusions. That is what we are arguing about here.

What I would like to point out, with the utmost respect, since the Senator has asked what is the difference between Pennsylvania and Mississippi—the distinguished Senator from South Carolina has missed his usual opportunity to refer to me as a Philadelphia lawyer; but I would not want that opportunity to be missed, and so I insert it myself—is that there is a difference, and the difference is that de jure segregation, or de jure integration, results because the Supreme Court has said that certain States took certain actions to avoid the voluntary integration of their students and to end the dual school system.

Pennsylvania does not have, and has not had within my memory, a dual school system, nor has it taken any statutory or other evasive methods to avoid the integration of its students. Yet, it does have, woefully and unfortunately, a considerable amount of de facto segregation; I admit that. I agree to it. I deplore it, if those people who are segregated de facto wish to have a different system by which they can gain their education, and many do. But the difference is that the law was passed to remedy something that was wrong, and that is in parts of the country that were not disposed to allow black children and white children to go to school together. It is as simple as that.

The Senator has not only pride of authorship; he also has a right to regret the fact that the conferees changed his amendment. It happens to all of us. But I cannot see where the change in the amendment has done any good—has done any harm or any good. No, I will make it that way, because I really meant to say—it was more than a Freudian slip—I do not think the change has done any good or any harm. I do not think either the Senator's amendment or this one has any bearing whatever on the law.

The Supreme Court has the last best guess as to the law, and the Supreme Court has decided that the law regarding de jure segregation is thus and so. It has not passed on de facto, and when it does, I hope it will do something about Philadelphia and Chicago and all the other places. But until it does, it seems to me entirely nugatory to argue that the condition in Mississippi and the condition in Pennsylvania are different. We know they are different, and it is because we want to catch one wrong situation at a time that we have the civil rights legislation.

Mr. STENNIS. Will the Senator yield to me on the point he has made?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. Does the Senator know of any State program in Pennsylvania that is trying to integrate the schools? Does Pennsylvania have a State program?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes. We have a Civil Rights Commission, which is a State organization, and we have local civil rights commissions using different designations in each community, all of whom are engaged, in one way or another, wherever the difficulty exists, in seeking to make sure that we have real quality education for all our children. It is imperfect.

Mr. STENNIS. Does the Senator know of any school that has been integrated?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes. The Henry School, which is near where I live in Philadelphia, has been integrated, for example. It is an elementary school.

Mr. STENNIS. Does the Senator object to HEW investigators and Department of Justice investigators coming in and checking these schools?

Mr. SCOTT. I personally have no objection, because they will not find any de jure violation of the law. What they will find is a residential pattern which has led to de facto segregation. That is wrong. I wish it were not so.

Mr. STENNIS. De jure segregation can come through manipulation of a school board——

Mr. SCOTT. Not in my city.

Mr. STENNIS. —by gerrymandering and resort to practices of that kind.

Mr. SCOTT. Not in our city.

If the Senator thinks I am liberal, he ought to see the head of the Philadelphia School Board, the Honorable Richardson Dilworth. I assure the Senator that there is no such deviousness in our school board.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I did not intend to get the floor. I wanted the Senator from Rhode Island to finish.

Mr. SCOTT. I am through.

Mr. STENNIS. Let me point out that what we are dealing with here is not Supreme Court decisions. This is a matter of policy to be determined by Congress. What is Congress going to do about all these segregated conditions all over the Nation? What is Congress going to do? What is HEW, which is an agency of the executive branch, going to do? What are going to be some of the guidelines that Congress would propose for the operation nationwide?

We already have Federal officials and their policy guidelines operating in all the Southern area of the country. Why is there opposition to their going in other parts of the Nation with somewhat the same standard, the same test, the same requirements? Make a start, anyway. That is what the amendment as adopted by the Senate would have done. But when it comes back here, we find that it applies to the South but protects the North.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. PELL. I thank the Senator from Mississippi.

My recollection is that there was a case in Los Angeles, where there was some gerrymandering on the part of the school board. I believe the State court took action, and found de jure segregation.

I know that in Providence, the capital city of my State, an effort is now being made to make sure that there is no more than 20 percent minority children in any school.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PELL. I yield.

Mr. MONDALE. I want to make one point. The statement is often made that to limit one's self solely to the enforcement of constitutional prohibitions against official discrimination is simply an anti-South position. In fact, several lawsuits have been brought against de jure discrimination in northern communities throughout this country. I placed the names of several of those in the RECORD in the debate on the original Stennis amendment.

The Los Angeles case, to which the Senator has made reference, was a State court case, but it involved the application of the Federal prohibition against official discrimination. There was a case in South Holland, Ill., and a case in Michigan. In several other places as well official discrimination has been successfully found and attacked outside the South.

It is true, as the Senator from Mississippi has said, that what may appear to be de facto discrimination, upon close examination can in fact be official discrimination. But the same constitutional point applies—that it is illegal and must be eliminated, wherever it is found.

The same is true about enforcement under title VI. Title VI does not precede the Constitution. It follows the court decisions. Under title VI there have been investigations and enforcement proceedings brought throughout this country. It is not simply a southern matter at all.

Once again, these efforts are striking at official discrimination. It is not simply a regional matter. We are talking about national uniformity.

Similarly, there may be a good deal of de facto discrimination in the South as well as the North. If we can eliminate official discrimination, we will be left with this knotty, complex, undesirable although not illegal matter of racial isolation, which is what the newly created Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity is designed to explore and seek to understand.

Mr. PELL. I thank the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PELL. I yield.

Mr. DOMINICK. Just for the purpose of the record, Mr. President, and to give some backing to the conference, when we were debating this issue originally with the distinguished Senator from Mississippi—who is my chairman on another commttee and for whom I have great affection—I pointed out to him that the problem with his amendment as it originally read was with the words "without regard to the origin or cause of segregation." I pointed out that this was the very issue that was being tried before a Federal court in Colorado at that moment.

This was the same issue, really, that we were fighting in committee. In trying to maintain the position of the Senator from Mississippi, over and over again, we continued to reject the House efforts to try to change this amendment, as the chairman will remember. Finally, it became apparent that we either were not going to get a bill or we had to do something which would reenforce the general emotional tenor, which was that rules should be applied uniformly across the country, while still maintaining a constitutional differential between de jure segregation and de facto segregation. I note in the President's message today, on page 14—I will read it into the RECORD if the chairman will permit me. It states in part:

> Racial imbalance in a school system may be partly de jure in origin, and partly de facto. In such a case, it is appropriate to insist on remedy for the de jure portion, which is unlawful, without insisting on a remedy for the lawful de facto portion.
>
> De facto racial separation, resulting genuinely from housing patterns, exist in the South as well as the North; in neither area should this condition by itself be cause for Federal enforcement actions. De jure segregation brought about by deliberate school-board gerrymandering exists in the North as the South; in both areas this must be remedied. In all respects, the law should be applied equally, North and South, East and West.
>
> This is one nation. We are one people. I feel strongly that as Americans we must be done, now and for all future time, with the divisive notion that these problems are sectional.

Mr. President, I subscribe to that 100 percent. It seems to me that this is exactly what the conference committee was trying to point out in its report; namely, that to the extent they are illegal de facto situations will be dealt with uniformly in all areas, and de jure situations will be dealt with uniformly in all areas, that the two policies, by necessity, must be different because they are different in their origin and different in their pattern.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island for yielding.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Colorado very much. Another point backing up what the Senator from Colorado said is that subsection (b) of the amended Stennis language was inserted in the conference, recognizing that there are two types of segregation in our country, as the original amendment did, and that they exist, and that while the law of the land goes to de jure segregation, it does not go to de facto segregation.

(At this point Mr. CRANSTON took the chair as Presiding Officer.)

Mr. PELL. The conference amendment goes further and by implication says that if there is one policy for de facto segregation which at the present time is not touched by law, the policy or lack of it should be applicable in the South and the presumption that all segregation in the South is de jure segregation will no longer be in effect. What this means in practical terms is that if a school district no longer runs a dual school system and does not bus black children by a white school, or vice versa, but does have segregation by neighborhood and economics; then such segregation is not presently touched in the North and it cannot be touched in the South.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, earlier, I yielded for what I thought was a few minutes, to convenience one of my colleagues, prior to making a presentation of the conference report. I would like to return to a discussion of the conference report, for this is a major bill and carries with it some bell ringing legislation.

Members of the conference, from both Senate and House, believe that this is a great educational bill which will return great benefits to our children both from the viewpoint of improving the quality of education, and also the making of education available to more people.

There were various innovative ideas adopted, which most of us—in fact I would say all of us—were quite proud of.

Mr. President, the conferees on the part of the Senate, Senators YARBOROUGH, RANDOLPH, WILLIAMS of New Jersey, KENNEDY, MONDALE, EAGLETON, PROUTY, JAVITS, DOMINICK, MURPHY, SCHWEIKER, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 514) to extend programs of assistance for elementary and secondary education, and for other purposes, submit to the Senate a report of the committee on the conference and recommend its adoption by the Senate.

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a new text. The House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, with an amendment which is a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment.

In this brief opening statement I shall not attempt to deal with each point of substantive difference, of which there were approximately 100, while an actual count of technical differences would bring the number to well over the thousand mark. Rather, I shall touch upon the major points of difference and their disposition. At the conclusion of my oral statement, I will insert into the RECORD a detailed discussion of the conference action.

TERM OF THE BILL

The Senate amendment to the House bill provided for an extension of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and the other matters contained in H.R. 514, for a period of 4 years with provision for contingent extension for 1 extra year. The House bill contained a 2-year extension, with no provision for contingent extension. Both bodies receded from their respective positions, and the conference report contains a 3-year extension, with a provision for contingent extension for 1 additional year.

The longer term was deemed necessary in light of the need of the local school officials for leadtime in their planning and budgeting. The already legislated authority for forward funding by the Appropriations Committee would, if implemented, mean that for the next 3 school years, the local school officials will have the needed time to plan imaginatively.

The retention of the provision for a contingent extension was discussed at length. The Senate conferees held firm to the view that such a provision was necessary to insure continuity of operation if for some reason the needed authorization legislation was not completed prior to the work of the Appropriations Committee. The managers on the part of the House objected to the contingent authorization provision and only accepted it with a provision that such authority would become inoperative if the Congress had passed or rejected a bill on the related subject matter or if either body passed a resolution which would nullify the contingent extension. This ingenious compromise was one of the many contributions of the senior Senator from New York to try to bring to resolution the differences in the conference.

INCREASE IN LOW INCOME FACTOR

The Senate amendment but not the House bill contained an increase in the low income factor, by which title I ESEA entitlements are figured, from the present $3,000 factor to $4,000 to commence in fiscal year 1973. This amendment was adopted to reflect a more meaningful low-income level, which is necessitated by the general rise in the costs of education and the cost of living. The managers on the part of the House accepted the Senate amendment.

COMPARABILITY

The Senate amendment contained a provision which would have required the State and local funds to be so used in title I project areas as to provide services in those areas which are at least comparable to the services provided from such funds in nontitle I project areas. The language of the conference report differs from that of the Senate amendment substantially. During the course of the conference it was found that the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare had issued a guideline on the subject of comparability which raised questions with respect to the meaning of comparability. Those aspects of that guideline which dealt with teachers' salaries raised the most controversy. The language of the conference report requires State and local funds to be used in the district of a local agency to provide services in title I project areas which, when considered as a whole, are at least comparable to State and local services in nonproject areas. By the phrase "as a whole" the conferees intend that all the services available to students must be taken into consideration—books, equipment, and instructional staff. Salaries of instructional staff are to be considered only to the extent that salaries are a measure of services available to students. Salary increments based on length of service are not intended to be a measure of the service available. The language of the report also contains two provisos: First, a finding of noncompliance with the comparability requirement cannot be used to affect payments to any local educational agency prior to fiscal year 1973, and second, reporting on comparability is regulated by law. On this latter point, the Senate amendment left reporting to the discretion of the Commissioner, the conference report controls reporting by requiring that a report be filed by July 1, 1971, and July 1 of each subsequent year. These changes in the language of the Senate amendment require a revision of HEW policies on comparability accordingly.

CONSOLIDATION OF EDUCATION PROGRAMS

The Senate amendment contained a provision consolidating part A of title III of the National Defense Education Act of 1958 and section 12 of the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965. The House bill contained a provision consolidating titles II and III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and titles III–A and V–A of the National Defense Education Act. The conference discussed the various provisions which were offered for consolidation and their effect on ongoing programs. The House Members were adamant in their support of a larger consolidation provision than that contained in the Senate bill. Both Houses receded with an amendment which consolidates title V–A of the National Defense Education Act into title III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. The Senate accepted this form of consolidation as one which was the most viable in light of the strongly held positions of each body.

Prior to its agreement respecting consolidation, the conference had adopted a modification of the Senate amendment which authorized a 15-percent set-aside of the title III ESEA funds for special projects by the Commissioner. The consolidation contains the set-aside. The conferees wish to make clear that there is no intention that presently operated projects be disrupted because of the set-aside. In cases where 2- or 3-year commitments have been made for local projects, the Commissioner is expected to honor those commitments in the selecton of the specal projects. The managers on the part of the Senate wish to make clear that the 15-percent set-aside is not a discretionary fund. Applications are to be approved in the same manner as they were prior to June 30, 1969. The set-aside is not an authorization of a new program but a continuation of the earlier set-aside.

GENERAL EDUCATION PROVISIONS ACT

The Senate bill but not the House bill contained a new title which in effect consolidated all the applicable law which controlled the administration of education programs. The Senate conferees believed this was a most important amendment for it makes administration of such programs simpler and puts into one body of law the provisions with which the administrators at Federal, State, and local levels must deal.

The House conferees, recognizing the validity of the Senate position, accepted in general, with minor amendments, the Senate position.

PROHIBITION AGAINST FEDERAL CONTROL OF EDUCATION

The Senate amendment contained the following provision, the language set in italic was added to the provision on the Senate floor and can be collectively known as the Ervin amendment.

PROHIBITION AGAINST FEDERAL CONTROL OF EDUCATION

SEC. 422. No provision of any law which authorizes appropriations for any applicable program (or respecting the administration of any such program), unless expressly provided for therein, shall be construed to authorize any department, agency, officer or employee of the executive branch of the United States to exercise any direction, supervision, or control of the curriculum, program of instruction, administration, or personnel of any educational instution, school, or school system, or over the selection of library resources, textbooks, or other printed or published instructional materials by any educational institution or school system, or to require the assignment or transportation of students or teachers in order to overcome racial imbalance or alter racial composition.

The House adamantly refused to accept the language amending the basic provision. Discussions indicated that there was fear that acceptance of the additional language would impede any further compliance action under the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The Senate conferees attempted to maintain the Senate position but were unsuccessful. However, the House managers did recede from their position with an amendment and accepted the Senate language as printed above. It deletes the Ervin language and also lists the law this section is applicable to.

ADULT BASIC EDUCATION

The Senate amendment but not the House bill contained a new title III which amended the present law pertaining to adult basic education and redirects that area of Federal assistance so that a complete program of education for adults from the basic grades through high school will now be available. Previous law only spoke of basic literacy. The House receded from its position and accepted the complete Senate amendment.

CONSOLIDATION OF STATE ADMINISTRATION FUNDS

The Senate amendment authorized the Commissioner of Education to make a consolidated grant of State administrative funds for education programs, except those authorized by title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and the Education of the Handicapped Act. The Senate receded on this point with the result that legislative history is created to the effect that no consolidation grants may be made. It is understood that the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has proceeded to make these consolidated grants without statutory authority in anticipation of the enactment of the Senate amendment. This is an unfortunate presumption on the part of HEW. I am sure that reversal of policies will cause some disruption at the State level which would not have occurred if the Department had waited for final action on the bill.

POLICY WITH RESPECT TO THE APPLICATION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF FEDERAL LAW—STENNIS AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment provides that guidelines and criteria established under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and section 182 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1966 shall be applied uniformly in all regions of the United States in dealing with conditions of segregation by race whether de jure or de facto in the schools of the local educational agencies of any State without regard to the origin or cause of such segregation. The House bill contained no comparable provision.

It was on this provision that the conference had its greatest difficulties. The House conferees absolutely refused to accept the original Stennis language. The Senate conferees held firm to the Stennis amendment language and indicated to the House conferees that in its opinion only a minor amendment to the Stennis language would be acceptable to the Senate. Various provisions were offered to the Senate by the House, some of which had been rejected by the Senate in its floor action on this matter. The language contained in the conference report is, we believe, the only means by which such an amendment would have been accepted by the House. For example, in the action immediately prior to acceptance of this provision the Senate offered the original Stennis language to the House and this was rejected by the House.

As brought before the Senate the conference report provides that it is the policy of the United States that such guidelines and criteria dealing with conditions of segregation by race, whether de jure or de facto, in the schools of the local educational agencies of any State shall be applied unformly in all regions of the United States whatever the origin or cause of such segregation. It provides that such uniformity refers to one policy applied uniformly to de jure segregation wherever found and such other policy as may be provided pursuant to law applied uniformly to de facto segregation wherever found. It is stated that nothing in the section can be construed to diminish the obligation of responsible officials to enforce or comply with such guidelines and criteria in order to eliminate discrimination in federally assisted programs and activities as required by title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

The Senate amendment further provides that it is the sense of Congress that the Departments of Justice and of Health, Education, and Welfare should request such additional funds as may be necessary to apply the policy described above throughout the United States. This provision, which has no counterpart in the House bill, is included in the conference report.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in the RECORD there be printed an additional statement containing the discussion of other actions of the conference committee.

There being no objection the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OTHER PROVISIONS

The following is a statement of other differences respecting provisions of the conference report which were not included in the Senate amendment and provisions which are not in the conference report which were contained in the Senate amendment.

Section 102(b) of the Senate amendment contained a provision which barred the use of 1970 census data for the purposes of establishing entitlements under title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act prior to January 1, 1973. The House receded to the Senate amendment on this point with an amendment which made the date July 1, 1972.

The Senate amendment contained two provisions requiring public hearings with respect to applications under title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. The House receded with respect to these two provisions with an amendment which requires that local educational agencies make applications and all pertinent documents related to applications available to parents and the general public and that all evaluations and reports be made available to the public.

The House bill contained a provision which authorized bonuses for teachers in schools serving high concentrations of educationally deprived children. The Senate receded from its difference with the House bill with the understanding that salary bonuses should be available only as a part of a title I project upon application in the same manner as any other title I project and that salary bonus projects would only be used in schools in which there was an extremely high concentration of children from low income families.

The Senate amendment contained a provision which provided for State advisory councils to advise the States with respect to the administration of the title I program. The Senate receded from its position on this amendment.

The Senate revised title V of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act considerably by adding new programs of grants to local educational agencies and grants for planning and evaluation of education programs as well as the establishment of Councils on Quality in Education. These revisions were accepted by the conference with two modifications. Those provisions of the Senate amendment which authorized a set-aside of funds for use by the Commissioner were deleted and the provision of the Senate amendment which required the establishment of State advisory councils was made optional with the States.

The Senate amendment contained several amendments relating to special programs for gifted and talented children. These amendments were accepted by the conference.

The House bill contained a provision which revises the Federal administration section of ESEA. The revision places primary control of coordination within the Office of Education. The conference agreed to the House provision.

The Senate amendment contained a new program authorizing grants to local educational agencies to support demonstration projects designed to improve nutrition and health services in schools having high concentrations of children from low income families. This program is intended to be administered in conjunction with title I of ESEA. The conference report contains the Senate provision.

The Senate amendment also contained a provision which authorized the Commissioner to make grants to State and local educational agencies and other educational and research agencies and organizations for research and demonstration projects relating to juvenile delinquency and education services in correctional institutions. The House receded from its difference with the Senate amendment on this point.

The Senate amendment contained provisions to expand the impact areas program to include certain refugee children and children residing in low rent public housing as federally connected children. The conference report retains the language of the Senate amendment in both instances. The conferees agreed to the revision with respect to low rent public housing which provides a separate line item in the budget for payments on the basis of entitlements using computations of children residing with parents working on low-rent housing property. As adopted, there will be two means by which the appropriations will be made available for those entitlements. (1) If an appropriation exceeds the amount necessary to pay entitlements in their entirety without counting children from low rent public housing any excess shall be available for payments on the basis of the latter entitlements and (2) if the appropriations act makes a special line item for payments for entitlements for children residing in low rent public housing then the appropriation shall be used solely for such entitlement.

The Senate amendment also contained provisions related to minimum eligibility under Public Law 815, and school construction assistance where the immunity of certain Federal property from taxation creates a substantial and continuing impairment of their ability to provide minimum school facilities. The conference report retains both of these provisions.

The Senate amendment also contained a declaration of policy that applications on the basis of Indian children contained in P.L. 815 should be given a priority for funding at least equal to that given to applications under section 10 of P.L. 815.

The Senate amendment contained a general provision related to parental and community involvement. The conference report contains the provision but it has been modified by deleting language relating to community involvement.

The Senate amendment contained a provision which authorized a set-aside of one percent of all education programs for evaluation of education programs. The Senate receded from its position on this point with an amendment which limited the amount of money which could be used from appropriations for planning and evaluation of $25 million for any fiscal year.

The Senate amendment extended and expanded provisions of present law relating to cancellation and repayment of student loans for certain public service. The House receded from its disagreement with an amendment which continues cancellation of National Defense Student Loans with respect to teaching in the same manner as is provided in present law and expands such provision to include service in the Armed Forces of the United States. The conference report contains no amendment respecting repayment of insured student loans.

The Senate amendment contained a section which provided for the relief of St. John's College with respect to certain grants made under title II of the Higher Education Act of 1965. This provision is not contained in the conference report. The Senate receded with the understanding that similar legislation would be introduced as a private bill.

The Senate amendment contained two sections creating national commissions to study problems of funding education programs. One commission was to be appointed by the Commissioner of Education to study the financing of elementary and secondary education, while the other was a commission appointed by the President to study advance funding for education programs. The conference report contains one national commission to be appointed by the Commissioner which will study the financing of elementary and secondary education. Such study may include the question of advance funding. This commission is intended to be a replacement of that which was created by executive order of the President.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the conferees worked with much diligence on this massive bill. It was, we believe, an excellent bill in the form that it left the Senate and was considerably strengthened by the agreements made in conference.

I should like at this point to thank each conferee and express my gratitude to Mr. PERKINS, chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee and his conferees for their kindness in the long sessions which we took part in.

I would urge the Senate to accept without amendment the conference report.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, as a member of the conference committee on H.R. 514, a bill to extend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and other related provisions, I am pleased that the conference report is now before the Senate for consideration. Much deliberation and accommodation on both sides have gone into this bill, particularly since the Senate version of H.R. 514 encompassed what had been contained in four separate House bills.

I am particularly gratified that nearly all of the provisions I have sponsored on behalf of the administration or myself, have been maintained with little or no modification. This is testament to the merit of these provisions, and the deliberative abilities of the Senate conferees. I am very appreciative of the efforts of my Senate colleagues and believe they should be commended for their untiring efforts to produce a most meaningful piece of legislation.

Although I do not wish to elaborate on all the provisions I sponsored, I would like to mention them in the order they appear in the bill, with specific comments on those most important.

Within the first section amending the Elementary and Secondary Education Act itself are several important items pertaining to title I services for disadvantaged students. Three deal with designation of responsibility and additional services for handicapped or institutionalized neglected and delinquent children. Several others refer to improvements in granting and reporting procedures, such as basing grants for migratory children on the number to be served, using the most recent data available for grant applications, and requiring that reports mention relevant research or replication studies as well as be in accordance with specific performance criteria. All these provisions should make the grant application process more efficient and the reporting process more useful to administrators or other interested persons.

One provision that I did not sponsor, but with which the Senate side was greatly concerned, is the prohibition against supplanting State and local funds with Federal funds and the concomitant requirement that State and local funds be used to provide substantially comparable services in title I and nontitle I schools. The purpose of this twofold provision is to insure that title I funds are targeted to the neediest students for provision of supplemental services to overcome the handicap of being disadvantaged.

The Senate has long been concerned that these funds are not adequately concentrated on those that need them most and are very often used for the benefit of nontitle I students instead. One troublesome way in which this can be done completely disregards congressional intent. Many school districts use their State and local funds for the better schools and then use Federal funds in title I schools to make them comparable after using Federal funds. However, the whole purpose of giving supplementary funds is thwarted and for this reason the comparability provision was devised to make local schools comparable before the infusion of Federal funds.

Although the provision does not take effect as soon as might be possible in many areas of the country, I do recognize the hardship that will be caused in those districts most out of step presently. While rapid transition should be encouraged with as much flexibility as possible, I believe the Congress and the Office of Education should stress the intent and benefit of the provision. We need rapid improvement to title I to demonstrate its effectiveness more positively so that the concept can be expanded.

The consolidation of several State grant programs was a major subject of discussion by the conference for the Senate and the House had taken views quite opposed to each other. A compromise agreement combines title III of ESEA for supplementary centers and services with title V–A of NDEA for guidance, counseling and testing services. I believe this consolidation not only increases the flexibility and efficiency of State operations, but also demonstrates the effectiveness of the concept for future legislation consolidation.

Representing a State that has many people of French Canadian background, I have become increasingly interested in programs for bilingual education. Two provisions I sponsored will make the program more effective by increasing the membership of the advisory committee and by allowing more Indian children to participate. At the present time, only Indian children in reservation schools operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs are eligible. At the request of Senators FANNIN and GOLDWATER, I sponsored an administration compromise that will continue the eligibility of these students and also allow children from reservation schools operated by the Indian tribes themselves to participate.

Another area in which I have long been interested concerns education of those in correctional institutions. I am very pleased that Senator NELSON'S recommendation for extension of research and demonstration programs for these students was accepted in the final version of the bill.

Because of pending reform of the impact aid programs, I had been opposed to changes in existing formulas, but find that the modifications accepted by the conference are quite workable. Payments will now be made for an additional category of students—those who reside in low-rent public housing. Previously I had objected on the grounds that low-rent public housing is not an adequate indication of need and would distort appropriations in an unfair manner. However, setting a priority so that payments for these children will not be made until all other obligations have been fulfilled is more equitable.

Another modification of existing law in which I concur deals with adult education. At the present time, adults may receive education up to the eighth grade level. The provision has been modified to provide for education to the equivalency of a full high school education. I believe the change will increase each State's flexibility to meet local needs and I know how greatly this change was desired in my own State of Vermont.

Within title V of the bill, we have created a new general provisions section pertaining to all education legislation. The efforts of the committee to consolidate and make more efficient existing provisions is most commendable and I am grateful that several of the provisions I sponsored are contained in this section. The major ones concern parental involvement and dissemination of information.

As a long-time sponsor of legislation to provide loan forgiveness for education loans under certain circumstances, I am pleased that the conference maintained much of the original Senate bill. Extension of loan forgiveness to the guaranteed student loan program was rejected on the basis that it might detract from the success of the program and on this basis, I concur.

Title VI contains a codification of existing law for the handicapped. Again, I am pleased with the thrust for better operation of education programs and improved legislative clarity. Also, I am pleased to see that the Senate version of a separate program for children with learning disabilities was retained. I believe this temporary separation will give increased focus to the need for new programs and at the same time prevent funds for other handicapped children from being diluted. I look forward to the day when there has been sufficient acceptance of the problem and development of programs so that the definition of handicapped children can be expanded and all programs expanded to include them.

Title VIII contains several miscellaneous provisions such as extended authorization of the advisory council under EPDA, expansion of Teacher Corps corrections education programs, creation of an advisory council on research and development and consolidation of two other State matching grant programs. This consolidation comprises title III of NDEA and section 12 of the National Foundation for the Arts and Humanities, both of which provide funds for educational materials. Again, I believe in the concept of consolidating similar programs to increase flexibility and efficiency.

In summation, I ask my colleagues in the Senate to vote for passage of the conference committee report. The legislation it recommends is greatly needed, for much of the current statutory authority expires this June. In addition, we have made many substantive changes for improvement based upon monitoring and analysis of the operation of these programs. It is my hope that the benefits of the changes we recommended will soon be forthcoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the will of the Senate?

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PELL. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I join the Senator from Vermont in expressing my deep admiration for the manner and the effectiveness of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The task of the conference committee was difficult and complicated. Anyone looking at the differences between the Senate bill and the House bill realizes how difficult and complicated a matter it was.

I think we have come out with an excellent education bill. We did not get all that we wanted, but I doubt that there have been many conferences that have sustained more of the Senate's position than this conference has.

I note that in 13 specific ways we sustained the Senate's position. In another eight matters, we sustained most of the Senate's position. And in two positions, we necessarily yielded completely to the House.

For example, we held the title I provision contained in the Senate version increasing the low income factor to $4,000, and authorizing extra payments to school districts with high concentrations of disadvantaged students.

We held the Senate position prohibiting the use of title I funds supplanting non-Federal funds in schools.

We sustained the Senate position in increasing the authorizations for titles II, III, V, VI, VII, VIII, and vocational education.

We sustained the Senate position on the gifted and talented children provisions.

We sustained the Senate provision concerning the addition of public housing to impact aid assistance.

We sustained the Brooke school desegregation amendment.

We sustained the teacher corps improvements.

We sustained the programs for children with specific learning disability, so strongly urged by the Senator from Texas (Mr. YARBOROUGH).

We sustained the new school nutrition and health demonstration program.

We sustained the Senate position on authority to carry over unexpended funds.

We sustained the Senate provision providing bilingual eligibility for Indian schools, including Rough Rock.

We sustained the Senate provision on planning and evaluation grants.

We sustained the Senate position on migrant education provisions.

These and other Senate positions were accepted without change in conference.

In addition to that, we sustained most of the Senate provisions affecting the length of the bill. We reached agreement on a 3-year extension with an additional year contingency extension for forward funding.

We were forced to compromise on comparability provisions affecting title I, the services; we developed a compromise on public information provisions, on consolidation of titles, adult education, parental involvement, loan forgiveness, and the Stennis amendment.

In two respects we accepted the House position without change. One would provide bonus salary payments for service in title I schools with a heavy concentration of title students; the other deleted an amendment adding the words "or alter racial composition."

I doubt there have been many conferences with as many differences in which the Senate prevailed in as many instances of a fundamental nature as in this conference.

Mr. PELL. I thank the Senator from Minnesota for bringing up this very valid point because we usually consider we have done pretty well if we come back with half a loaf. I know many of us have seen favorite amendments of our own disappear or come back greatly watered down. But in this case I think we brought back to the Senate considerably more than half a loaf. I would not indicate that the House rolled over and accepted these ideas, they were hard fought for they were based on new concepts, which in many cases, the House Conferees accepted after explanation.

In connection with the controversial Stennis amendment, I think we did our best. We did not get the language word for word, but we got a great deal of it. While it is not what I personally would like to have seen brought back, what we on the Senate side would like to have brought back, it is the best that could be brought back and not have the conference fall apart completely.

For this reason, as manager of the bill, I stand very proud of this conference report and I urge that the Senate accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I would not want to embarrass any of my colleagues who disagree with me. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I realize that the conferees tried to adopt the Senate language of the Stennis amendment as modified by my proposal, but that it failed. Unfortunately, it is my personal opinion that the language of the conferees, as finally adopted, especially section 2(b), is much worse than the situation that prevailed before the Stennis amendment was adopted by this body. As a matter of fact, the conferees would have been much better off if they had dropped the entire section instead of modifying it the way they have.

The conferees, it seems to me, lost a great opportunity to make it clear to this Nation that de facto segregation must be fought as aggressively as de jure segregation.

I am following this debate most carefully. At a later time in the debate, I shall have more to say at length. But as far as I am concerned personally, I find the language of 2(b) completely unacceptable.

Mr. PELL. I understand the views of the Senator from Connecticut, but here, just as in any conference report—and I have gone through this experience myself—I find a portion of the report unacceptable, but then one has to bear in mind that we have perhaps lost sight of the main thrust of this bill. It is an education bill, and I would plead with the Senator from Connecticut to support the conference report, the overall good in the bill, as of greater value than the harm, to his viewpoint, on this issue.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, may I say I am sorry that this development is taking place, because I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that the basic education bill is an excellent one. But today, we cannot divorce the problem of desegregation from education. As a matter of fact, the President, in his message today, specifically points out that he is going to ask to have set aside this year $\frac{1}{2}$ billion for schools that are suffering from segregation policies. So it is obvious that the President, too, believes that this entire problem is important.

I know the conferees tried. I kept in touch with the conferees, and I do not question for a moment the bona fides of the Senate conferees.

But I think I should point out to the conferees that what they did accept—and their intentions, I am sure, were proper—was worse than if they had dropped the entire section. I shall have much more to say on this proposal at a later time during this discussion, but I think on the first day of the discussion, I should make it clear that I think this is a very, very bad proposal. It does very little good whatsoever in trying to solve the entire problem of de facto and de jure segregation.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, there are certain questions that come to my mind that I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island, who is the manager of the bill—and by the way, Mr. President, I want to commend very highly the work of the Senator from Rhode Island. I have seen many bills handled here, and his way of handling the entire bill, when he presented it to the Senate, I thought was excellent. He has a good understanding of the matter, he is reasonable, and he is considerate, and I commend him very highly. I am not flattering him when I say I think he is a credit to the Senate.

Mr. PELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STENNIS. This is a difficult bill. I appreciate the courtesies the Senator has extended to me personally in connection with the amendment here, and the interest he showed in some conversations we had during the conference, where he was not talking out of school in the least, but at the same time he was very considerate, and I am most grateful to him.

Mr. PELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator from Rhode Island, to what extent does the Senator think the first part of the conferees' amendment—that is, the part that the Senate passed by a vote of 56 to 36—what part of the Senate's position is still reflected in the amendment as modified by the conferees? I just ask the Senator's opinion about it. What part is still in it; what part of the Senate amendment is still in the conference committee's amendment?

Mr. PELL. As I see it, that portion of the thrust of the Senate amendment which is to the effect that the applicable laws should be applied uniformly all over the United States, without discrimination against southerners or the South; That main thrust is still in the bill, and very much in it.

Mr. STENNIS. Does not the Senator think, though, the main thrust being directed toward segregation wherever found, does not the Senator think that item (b) here, under the present form of the amendment, goes back to the old dual track or double track, and creates one kind of segregation and then another kind of segregation, and leaves one exposed and the other protected? How does the Senator escape that conclusion?

Mr. PELL. This would be the area of compromise, I would think, that before the Stennis amendment was adopted, the whole question was fuzzy. It is my understanding that the Supreme Court had ruled one type of segregation permissible and the other kind not.

Mr. STENNIS. Will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. PELL. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. The Senator made the statement that the Supreme Court had ruled that one kind of segregation was legal. Did the Supreme Court make an actual ruling on that?

Mr. PELL. I am not a lawyer, as the Senator knows.

Mr. STENNIS. Yes.

Mr. PELL. I believe that the Supreme Court had ruled that de facto segregation was not illegal; I think that might have been a more felicitous way of expressing my thoughts.

Mr. STENNIS. I do not know of a case where they have made a direct ruling to that effect, that de facto segregation was legal. I have been hoping that they would rule on the matter, but directly they have not decided a case.

I think they have declined to pass on several cases. The writ of certiorari, as we lawyers say, was denied; that means they declined to have the records sent up and certified, and hear the case on its merits.

Before the Senator proceeded, I thought that point should be made.

Mr. PELL. But then we in the conference recognized that the South has been treated unfairly, from the viewpoint that in areas where there may have been a de facto segregation pattern, the courts would have ruled against the South just because it was the South, for there was a presumption that such segregation was de jure.

As I understand our amendment, it now means that an appeal can be made, that the segregation does not result from a dual school system or from laws that existed after reconstruction, but is the result of living patterns, then the efforts to desegregate schools in that fact pattern would be illegal, and it could not be done.

This is what I would think would be a midway position between the situation as it existed before the Stennis amendment was adopted and the Stennis position, which is what we as conferees should seek.

Mr. STENNIS. I repeat that I do not know of any case where the Supreme Court has directly taken up a matter of so-called de facto segregation and passed on it, and held it to be legal or illegal. I expressed the desire, in the debate here before, that they would, but I do not think they have ruled on that point yet.

Was the Senator present when I read the figures about the extent of integration in my State of Mississippi, where I gave the figures that covered all the districts except 30, and covered all the Negro students except, in round numbers, 30,000?

Mr. PELL. I was, and they are very striking figures indeed.

Mr. STENNIS. I pointed out that 50.4 percent attend either majority white schools under HEW monitored voluntary plans, or schools which have been integrated by court order based on HEW approved plans.

The Senator realizes, does he not, that the conference report leaves us still under the hatchet, and still guilty of all these alleged wrongs, and we will be monitored and policed, and followed day and night, whereas it exempts States like Pennsylvania, which, for illustration, has only 27 percent of its black students in majority white schools, or New York, with only 32 percent, California, with only 22 percent, and Illinois, with only 13 percent? I believe that the Senator's sense of justice and right makes him regret that the committee amendment leaves that situation unattended to. Is that correct?

Mr. PELL. I see the problem; and, looking ahead, the Senator may be correct. But speaking just from the standpoint of equity—and I am not as deeply grounded in these matters as is the Senator from Mississippi—there is also inequity when one must consider the past. I do think that the history of the past and the wrongs of the past—while we would like to wash them out and start anew can be forgotten. The pendulum swings, and we cannot stop it in midair. By adding part B to the Stennis amendment, we are trying to make sure that in the South those areas with de facto segregation are treated as fairly as other portions of the country with the same type of segregation.

Quite honestly—and I think the Senator knows my personal admiration for him—I do think that one cannot, either from the viewpoint of fairness or equity, wipe off the blackboard the last couple of hundred years. And we are not without sin in the North.

However, the history of a dual school system and its results up to the present day must also be recognized.

Mr. STENNIS. The Senator has said he is not a lawyer, but he is well advised in this matter. In what way does the committee amendment change the law or change the rule? It is a policy matter. In what way does the committee amendment change the rule?

Mr. PELL. Going back to the original Stennis amendment, does it change the law or does it change policy?

Mr. STENNIS. It changed the rules.

Mr. PELL. It changed policy, but not law. We are talking about law, not policy.

Mr. STENNIS. The present policy or rules that HEW follows—in what way does the Senator's amendment change them?

Mr. PELL. Under the Stennis amendment, as originally adopted, its application to specific fact situations was not clear.

Mr. STENNIS. The amendment the Senate adopted has not been adopted finally, so I am talking about policies that now exist and are being carried out by HEW. In what way does the committee amendment change those rules or policies? I do not know of any way, myself. I do not think it does, if weight is given to paragraph (b).

Mr. PELL. I think that one of the points the Senator made in his speeches and in his words at the time of the adoption of the Stennis amendment was that the South, no matter what the cause of segregation, was treated unfairly in comparison with the North. What the conference report does is to say that in the South when segregation is from the same cause as in the North—Chicago, New York, or wherever it is—then it will be treated the same way. I think this is an addition or a change.

Mr. STENNIS. I do not know of any complaint I made, and I never did say that the Court decided a case solely because it was in the South. I said the Court and HEW seized upon these old laws as a ground to just hold you guilty, with the presumption of guilt. But when they got into Indiana and into New York and other States that had these laws at one time or another, and certainly long enough to have contributed some to these community patterns—I recall that one of them did not repeal its law until 1949—when they got into those States, HEW never really followed up. I do not know of any case the courts have had. That is my complaint—the presumption of guilt applied to us and the presumption of innocence applied elsewhere. And that same rule will come right out of the committee amendment, whether the Senator likes it or not.

Mr. PELL. Let me give the Senator an example of what I am talking about.

If a suburb had been built up outside of Atlanta and it was a recent suburb, starting in the mid-fifties, there would be no grounds for HEW to move into that area, because the dual school system would have ended long before that suburb had even been built; and the segregation that occurred there, regrettable as it would be, would be the result of living patterns.

Mr. STENNIS. The Supreme Court has passed on no case in which it found them innocent. All kinds of charges are made about gerrymandering, and those conditions exist in the North.

Mr. PELL. Exactly.

Mr. STENNIS. Very few of them have been followed and run down; whereas, you create and perpetuate this presumption of innocence here and protect this gross segregation outside the South. I do not mean the Senator personally. But the reason is that the people in those States do not want their schools torn up; and the gentlemen here, representing them, have their viewpoint. I think that is the main reason. That does not impugn their integrity. But that is what the problem is, and it is a problem everywhere in the South and in the North—most of the States in the North.

The Senator's amendment again creates this dual system, travels in two directions at the same time, gives one place immunity and convicts all the South, unless it happens to be some area, as the Senator said, that came into being after 1954. I do not think the Supreme Court or any other court has ever held one of them in violation.

Mr. PELL. I think the reverse of it is that under this amendment, if the Senate adopts the report—the HEW will be more compelled to search out those areas where efforts have been made to gerrymander school districts, in the North as in the South. I think this would be one of the effects of the adoption of this conference report.

Mr. STENNIS. With all deference to the Senator, I do not see where in the world HEW gets any impetus or any directions or any instructions under the committee amendment, unless it be a suburb somewhere in the South that, according to the Senator's argument, they have been told to leave alone.

This is tragic. Let me point out the whole burden of the committee's argument, as I understand it, that the courts have not passed on de facto segregation.

This is not a court sitting here today. This is a part of Congress. Congress has passed on these matters. We have the Civil Rights Act of 1964. When it was passed, I said it would have to be obeyed, and I still say that, even though outside the South they found a way to get around it, and I will develop that later. But we are not a court, and we are not going to be a court. We are Congress. We make these policies; we appropriate the money. Why cannot Congress move into a field, exercise some of its own responsibility, pass policies or laws to which the executive branch has to conform when it operates in that field? Why do they have to wait and wait for the courts to invade that field? Congress cannot go in, contrary to a constitutional mandate of the Court. I do not advocate that, and never have, but they have not passed on these matters, so that this is a field where Congress has the responsibility. Let us not put it on the ground that because the Court has not got into it, that we should not get into it. Let us say that we do not stand for it, that we do not think it should apply in the so-called de facto segregation, and we will pass a policy resolution here saying that you are not to go in.

I want to address myself to asking the Senator's opinion as to how is HEW going to operate under section (b) of his amendment?

Mr. PELL. What this means is, that in desegregation activities they will now recognize areas in the South where there is de facto segregation, where it does not come from the past history of events. They will also search in the North more vigilantly and look for areas where there has been collution among the electorate, the school boards, or the governmental bodies to try gerrymandering the school districts. I think that will be the effect of paragraph (b).

Mr. STENNIS. Well, Senator, we have been putting some amendments of some kind to appropriation bills—I mean, I know that to be a fact because I have been a part of it—and I think my figures are correct, that in all of that, we have gotten two administrative actions initiated by HEW and there has been only one action, so far as I can recall now, by the Department of Justice that went to its ultimate end. There are a few others pending and a few have been filed here during this administration.

But, on the other hand, there is case after case after case that I have read about in the newspapers where there has been some probing but never any action. An outstanding one in Chicago, where 4 years ago they sent a notice out there—some clerk in HEW, I suppose he thought they meant what they said, and he gave them notice, that they would have to mend their ways as to segregation. Mayor Daley came down here or sent a telegram—I do not know which—and it was swept under the rug at the White House. It is still there, that case.

Let me give one more case. Last year, in Chicago, they notified them that they had to integrate the teachers, and the teachers said that they would not do it. Their union spokesman said they would not do it. The school board offered them $1,000 bonus to accept a new assignment, but they would not take that. They wrote some of their representatives here to pay the bill, $44 million, I believe it was, and nothing has been done about it. Now we see those things happening, going on and on and on, year after year after year, and still HEW and the Department of Justice men are going all over the South all of the time, telling the superintendents there who are trying to comply, "You have got to come up to that quota or that percentage."

They will deny that later, but I know they have been saying those things, together with use of the utmost vigilance and surveillance and police power, and now when we come up here they say, "Oh, the Supreme Court has not passed on de facto segregation," so we are right back where we started with this amendment.

Mr. PELL. In the Chicago case, as the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) brought out, you could have, even after the Supreme Court ruled de facto segregation illegal, you could have mechanical problems, geographical problems, where there is such a heavy concentration of one minority group in a 30- by 20-mile area, that you would have to have more buses than General Motors can produce, practically, to move the students around.

To my mind, you have a rule of reason here, what we are seeking to do is improve conditions, to bring about practical integration—we cannot achieve 100 percent racial balance—but we can try to move along with the times. That is what this amendment would do.

Mr. STENNIS. Well, the Senator did not mean to argue now that the Supreme Court held that the so-called de facto segregation in Chicago was illegal? We are not writing that off by saying that it would be too big a thing to undertake, are we? The Senator would expect them to obey the law, would he not?

Mr. PELL. I would expect them to, but it would be a tough one to work out.

Mr. STENNIS. Would it be any tougher in any other part of the country? What about Charlotte, N.C., where 20,000 children were ordered bused from one side of the city to the other?

Mr. PELL. As a nonlawyer, but as an amateur historian, I do think there is a difference in equity between the patterns in the different areas in the country. Should we follow the free will of the human being when his will on this matter developed as a result of laws which were discriminatory.

Mr. STENNIS. How long does the Senator think that situation—that penalty which he has just outlined should prevail? How long should it apply to our children?

Mr. PELL. It should, in equity, have ended in 1865, I guess. It should not exist now.

Mr. STENNIS. I mean the penalty now on our children. We cannot erase history. That century has passed. I am talking about the penalty applied now, with all the terrific disruption in our schools. If the Senator does not believe there is terrific disruption among the faculty and the children, he should go and see for himself. How long are these children, who were not even born until 8 or 10 years ago—how long must that group suffer?

Mr. PELL. I would hope not at all. I would hope we could change human nature and that the problems would iron themselves out; but, in the meantime, we are left with the Supreme Court's rulings which we follow here. There is a difference.

(At this point Mr. GRAVEL took the chair as Presiding Officer.)

Mr. STENNIS. Does the Senator advocate that the Supreme Court's holding on de facto segregation is legal or illegal?

Mr. PELL. I would like to see the day come when the Supreme Court would rule de facto segregation illegal, too.

Mr. STENNIS. Does the Senator advocate that now? He says he hopes the day will come. How long must we wait, Senator?

Mr. PELL. Well, speaking as a modest amateur historian—I am not a soothsayer—I just do not know. I think it would be impossible to work that out now.

Mr. STENNIS. One hundred years?

Mr. PELL. I just do not know.

Mr. STENNIS. Was not one part of the reasoning of the Court's decision in 1954 that colored children—black children, as they would rather be called now—would get a better education and fare better in a mixed group, in a mixed society, in a mixed school? Was that not a great part of the reasoning of that case?

Mr. PELL. It was also the conclusion of a Professor Coleman in his report as well.

Mr. STENNIS. Well, but that was a part of the Court's reasoning, was it not?

Mr. PELL. I am informed that it was.

Mr. STENNIS. That benefit—why deny that benefit to all the children in Chicago, Detroit, Pennsylvania, and New York, and all of these other places?

Mr. PELL. I would like to give them that benefit.

Mr. STENNIS. The Senator has an amendment here that will not do a thing about it, but will perpetuate segregation in the areas of those States. Why is the Senator consigning those black children to this defect, this default, or this added burden in life, and restrict the advantages of integration to just one area of the country?

Mr. PELL. I have sought to make the point that under this language we are not singling out one section of the country. That if the same set of circumstances occurred in other States, and we make the policy nationwide, then it would be treated in the same manner.

Mr. STENNIS. That is what the original amendment undertook a start in—just a start. Now, under the Senator's amendment, what is Mr. Finch going to do? I have never said anything except something complimentary about Mr. Finch. He has the worst job in the city except that of the President of the United States. I do not try to discredit him, but if he is quoted directly by a recent news item—and I think he was—which was published in the Washington Post on March 2, 1970.

He said the Nixon administration, "is confused by what the courts have said. There are a number of areas where the Supreme Court has not spoken at all. They have never said what a unitary system is, he continued."

He said:

> They still cling to the distinction between de jure (by law or formal regulation) and de facto segregation, which I happen to believe as a lawyer is no longer valid.
>
> I think segregation or racial isolation, whatever it appears, is one and the same.

Does the Senator agree with the last point?

Mr. PELL. As a matter of fact, it is one and the same. The causes for it may be different, but it is a fact.

Mr. STENNIS. And as far as the children are concerned, they ought not to go back to history to determine whether they will have the benefits of integration.

Mr. PELL. No. But we have to follow the law. And this is what the courts have ruled.

Mr. STENNIS. Let us leave the courts out, because we can do this ourselves. We are not restricted by the courts in this field, not at all. That is what Mr. Finch said.

Mr. Finch said:

> I think segregation or racial isolation, whatever it appears, is one and the same. We have a very confused set of decisions—that go to both ends of the spectrum with regard to the question of busing, for example.

Does the Senator agree with that point? There is no entrapment about my questions.

Mr. PELL. The questions are confusing.

Mr. STENNIS. I read further:

> Finch said of the Charlotte school system: "Then you have problems like Charlotte . . . which I think are totally unrealistic, because they say that you shall take the percentages in the district as a whole and apply those and force those on each district—or each school within that district.
>
> "And in the case of Charlotte, they have to buy 400 new buses . . . when you have that kind of a situation, that's not the best of your resources because you're desperately trying to keep the doors open, to pay faculty, to pay janitors. But beyond that it's not the best educational experience, because to haul young children, for an hour or more, across long distances . . . means that they can't get any tutoring after school, the parents can't—have great difficulty—in getting to the teacher to talk about their child . . ."

That is just old, common horsesense. That is said by the Secretary of HEW. He does not believe in these extreme demands of the courts. That is not Stennis criticizing the court. It is Secretary Finch telling what it means to the people and to the children.

I think Mr. Finch is right. I think we have an obsession here. We are trying to rush these people, children included, in order to destroy the school system. But we say, "Don't touch any schools outside of the South."

And the Senator comes here today and discusses doing it by the amendment.

It is not fair. It is not right. And somewhere, sometime this wrong will be corrected.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I understand the feelings and the conviction of the Senator. I do not think I am an unfair man. However, I do not agree with his views.

Mr. STENNIS. I was not suggesting that the Senator is unfair.

Mr. PELL. This is a point of disagreement. I know the situation in Mississippi is very different from that in the State of Rhode Island. But basically I stick to the language we have. And the Senate may well sustain the Senator from Mississippi in his view. However, I would hope not.

Mr. STENNIS. I was not suggesting that the Senator is unfair at all. I think the basic concept of the amendment as amended perpetuates an unfairness that has been going on and brings about very unfair results to the children—the black children, the white children, the parents, and the teachers. It does this by an extreme application of integration.

I am not arguing about integration. I know it is here. And it is here to stay. But this is an obsession with some.

Mr. President, I am really surprised that in these premises time after time—and I am not referring to any individual Senator—we protect the massive segregation that exists in these States beyond the South.

The courts will not touch them, or have not. And so far Congress has not touched them.

Let us not blame it on the Court. This is a legislative matter that we are dealing with here.

I thank the Senator. I admire his handling of the bill and the hard work he has done all this year.

Mr. President, I have remarks to make that are more or less along the same lines that I have made before.

This amendment gives this entire matter a new start.

As fine and respected and loyal as the members of the conference were to their obligation as conferees, it made it doubly hard on them to make the strongest fight that could be made for the Senate amendment when really they were honestly on the other side and so argued and voted on the floor.

That was known by the other conferees. I do not blame them one bit. I point out that that was the handicap they were under.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I will yield to the Senator in a minute. However, let me finish my thought on this matter.

The House conferees that the Senate conferees were up against knew how these conferees had voted. It is just one of these things in the legislative formula of passing a law. I do not blame them one bit.

I was told consistently that the conferees would stand by the Senate position. And I think they meant it. I was told repeatedly by some of the conferees of the argument made by the Senator from New York. I think he is to be commended.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I thank my colleague.

I shall debate the issue concerning which the Senator from Mississippi has asked questions of the Senator from Rhode Island. The Senator from Rhode Island is not a lawyer. There are very great legal connotations involved here. I will not do that at this time, because I would not want to interrupt the Senator.

I asked the Senator to yield so that I might state a fact which should be of interest.

There were four Senate conferees who voted for the Stennis amendment. They were Senators YARBOROUGH, RANDOLPH, PELL, and MURPHY. The only Representative from a southern State was Representative RUTH, of North Carolina. He signed the conference report.

I thought that was a fact which should be before the Senate.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator. I want to make it clear that I am not attacking any individual conferee. I know what they were up against.

We have talked about the confusion here and talked about not knowing what the amendment meant that the Senate passed originally.

We talk about these court opinions. With all deference to the conference committee, this being just a policy matter anyway—they could not get the Senate amendment adopted in conference and they were forced to resort to other means—when they left in the language of the Senate amendment and then wrote this paragraph 2, they really created a confusion.

My humble opinion is that if a court were passing on this legislation—should it become law, which I hope it will not—a court just could not place a judicial opinion on that basis, except in one way. They would have to say that the preponderant intent is expressed by paragraph (a) and, "therefore, we follow paragraph (a)." All they would have to say is that the preponderant intent is carried in paragraph (b), and then they would say, "We will follow paragraph (b)."

They could not straddle and base any ruling upon both of those sections at the same time because they contradict each other.

The first paragraph, paragraph (a), states:

> It is the policy of the United States that guidelines and criteria established . . . whether de jure or de facto in the schools of the local education agencies of any State shall be applied uniformly in all regions of the United States whatever the origin or cause of such segregation.

It does not say one region; it says "all regions of the United States whatever the origin or cause of such segregation."

That strikes out that history clause. It was written for that purpose. Those words were attacked on the floor of the Senate and by a large majority those words were kept:

> Whatever the origin or cause of that policy.

That is what the Senate adopted. The conferees left that provision in the bill.

Now, subparagraph (b) states:

> Such uniformity refers to one policy applied uniformly to de jure segregation wherever found and such other policy as may be provided pursuant to law applied uniformly to de facto segregation wherever found.

Two policies, going back to the same old track, the same old dual system, the some old two-way street—

> Such other policy as may be provided pursuant to law applied uniformly to de facto segregation wherever found.

Two kinds of segregration restored; two kinds of policy formulated, when the first section of the same provision states that there shall be one policy regardless of the type of segregation required uniformly to all areas of the Nation.

Now, with all deference to everyone, if anyone can reconcile those two sections in logic and common sense, I have not found it to be so. I do not believe that it can be done. That is why I say a court would have to take one or the other.

HEW—and I am not referring particularly to Mr. Finch, but HEW—can take either one they want. I can tell Senators the one they are following. Generally they are following (b). I do not doubt they might have written that paragraph in here, after being requested to do so, of course, because they would not intrude. They would do that if requested. I do not know. I am not saying they did. But it sounds so much like them. It is the pattern we are trying to get changed and modified a little.

I know what HEW is going to do. They are going to tell the people of the South, "The Congress made us do this and made us write this in black and white."

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. STENNIS. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island for a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be corrected to include the name of Representative ROMAN PUCINSKI as one of the conferees on the part of the House in the report filed this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STENNIS. So, Mr. President, let us not be mistaken. I am speaking now to the 64 Members of this body beyond the Deep South, from States in which this rule, which we live under, has not been applied, but they, nevertheless, said, "We are willing to take it in our area of the country in a sense of fairness." I want them to know what this amendment does. There is a different point of view from the other side, it is true, but I want them to know how this matter fits in, in my mind at least. I have certainly been connected with it for a long time and certainly I have been working on this matter for a long time, although many others have worked on it also. I deserve no more credit than many others but I am familiar with it and in my mind and in my heart I know there is not a thing in the world to paragraph (b) except the same old formula, ritual, and practice that has been followed so far by HEW for many administrations. Try as Congress could with some mild proviso, they have gone out of bounds on this section.

I know that in some areas it is politically unpopular to try to enforce any rule that tries to destroy segregation. I think some people are trying to continue to protect it. I do not know that it will ever be destroyed, not in our time. I do not know why the Supreme Court over and over again refuses to pass on that matter, even though in my humble opinion they have had plenty of chances on that same question outside the South on so-called de facto segregation.

I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Mississippi. Earlier this morning a point was made by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) that actually the addition of section (b) here, to which the Senator has just referred, such uniformity refers to one policy applied uniformly to de jure segregation wherever found, and such other policy as may be provided pursuant to law applied uniformly to de facto segregation wherever found.

In essence, if I recall correctly, I think the point made by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina was that by adding this language to the conference report the Congress has, in effect, reestablished segregation as the policy of the Congress. I think the reasoning went along these lines; that with the adoption of the Stennis amendment, the Senate, in effect, said that it was the finding and belief of members of this body—as I recall the vote was around 50 to 30.

Mr. STENNIS. Fifty-six to thirty-six.

Mr. HANSEN. Fifty-six to thirty-six. That if segregation is exercised, as a great many believe it is—and the old concept of separate but equal, having been struck down by the court, no longer can apply in this country—then, with the leadership provided by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) the country at long last had faced up to the facts and said that if the law of the land is that segregation no longer can be tolerated, the Senate has, in effect, said, "We will see that segregation is dealt with by the Federal Government uniformly without respect to any historical relevance or without respect to anything else."

I think what the Senator was saying could be compared to our efforts to strike down a certain disease. If I may, for the purposes of illustration, carry the analogy forward, I would say that the disease perhaps could be communicated in two or more ways. It could be communicated by a vector, by a mosquito. It could also be communicated by a germ that could be passed through the air from one person to another.

As I understand it, the Federal Government was instructed by the actions of the Senate that, it does not matter how this disease was communicated; we do not think it is good; we are going to bring the full force and effect of the Government to bear to see that it is stopped.

I was hoping that that would be the policy of this Congress, just as I felt that what the distinguished Senator from South Carolina said had great validity. At the moment when we passed the measure by a vote of 56 to 36 we said, "We are not going any longer to be blinded by what brings about segregation, whether it be de jure or de facto.

If it is not good, we are going to see that, so far as the actions of the Federal Government are concerned, we will do what we can to stop it."

Now with the addition of subparagraph (b), it seems to me, as the Senator from Mississippi has so clearly pointed out, we have in section 2, two subsections (a) and (b), which cannot be reconciled one with the other. Either one is right or the other is right. They cannot both be right.

We have said in subsection (a)—

Whether de jure or de facto in the schools of the local educational agencies of any State shall be applied uniformly in all regions of the United States whatever the origin or cause of such segregation.

That, it seems to me, is abundantly clear. It seems to me to state a policy which I helped the Senate to enact by a vote of 56 to 36, because I thought it was right. I think it is right for this Government to say, as a matter of an expression of public policy, that we should apply the laws of this country uniformly to all 50 of the States. I can see no reason at all to make any distinction other than that they shall be applied uniformly to all 50 States.

To get back to the example I was making about the disease, it seems to me that we are about to pass a law which says if the disease happens to be measles, and you contract it by a vector, we will do something about it, but if you get it in any other manner, we will not do anything about it. That is what it seems to me subsection (b) of section 2 now says.

Having just said that we are going to see that the laws of this country are going to be applied uniformly in all 50 States against something the Supreme Court of the United States has said must no longer be tolerated, we now turn around and, with doubletalk, present an impossible situation, I would think, for any court to find sense in it by adding subsection (b) to subsection (a).

Does the Senator think it will make one whit of difference to a little black child, to a little Indian child, or to a little white child to be in a school where certain policies are enforced or are not enforced simply because his presence happens to reflect de facto or de jure segregation, insofar as the long-range objectives that hopefully will come from that educational experience are concerned?

Mr. STENNIS. Not a bit of difference in the world, as the Senator has so clearly put it. It could not possibly make any difference. This amendment abandons the idea of bringing to those children whatever benefits they would get out of the mixed schools, and it has gone off and been based on historical grounds that have no relevance whatever to education.

Mr. HANSEN. Can it also be said that, actually, despite all the rhetoric, despite all the discussions, of what the Supreme Court may do or may not do—and, if I recall correctly, and I hope I do not misquote my distinguished colleague from Rhode Island, I think he said earlier today that, hopefully, the Congress of the United States would pass laws which the Supreme Court would find constitutional—Was that essentially what my distinguished colleague said?

Mr. PELL. That is correct.

Mr. HANSEN. I thank my distinguished friend.

I simply want to say that I believe it should be the responsibility of the Congress—and it shall be my objective—to try to look at this country of ours, to try to look at the problems that are presented to us, and to try to pass such laws as we feel may be in the public interest, and that we shall not be overly concerned always with trying to anticipate what the Supreme Court may say. I am old enough, as I am certain most Members here are, to know that the Supreme Court, down through the course of history, has decided one way once, and then another. Oftentimes, our learned scholars have said that the Supreme Court may be a couple of decades behind the popular sentiment, the national will, but sooner or later it seems that the Court has a way of reflecting what a majority of the people feel must be done.

With that thought in mind, with that observation in mind, it occurs to me that our objective should be: What may we do better to bring about that equality of opportunity, that equality of individual rights, which will make for the greatest possible achievement, individually and collectively, we can have in these United States?

Sometimes, to the surprise of many Members of Congress, actions by the Congress have been struck down as unconstitutional. If we were to be circumscribed in our actions by what we thought the Court might do, I would say we would lose sight of real objectives. Although obviously we will have to be answerable, our laws will have to be subjected, when they are brought before the Court, to the impartial, searing light of examination by the Supreme Court, I do not think our objective ought always to be to try to anticipate what the Court may say on a matter, but, rather, to address ourselves to the problems that are important to the people of this country.

I think that is what we have been doing here, and it seems to me that, having taken such a courageous step forward, having responded to the fairness, the courage, and the objectivity of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), in following his lead, and having said we will no longer have a policy in this country spelled out by the Congress of the United States which will bring about an automatic type of segregation, which I submit subsection (b) would bring about, we will have taken a backward step now, if we adopt the language that has been brought forward by the conferees.

When I say these things, I mean to imply no criticism at all for the very able and dedicated leadership that was presented to the conference by the leader of the Senate conferees, my very good friend the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), but rather to say that I hope we will not do what we are now asked to do, because I think it would be a step in the wrong direction.

I believe that if segregation is an evil, the laws of this country and the full force of the executive branch of the Government—and I have not yet had an opportunity to read the President's message—should seek to correct it. I would hope, first of all, that if there is an evil—and in the opinion of the Court there is one—I would hope we would do whatever we can to make these laws apply everywhere equally, just as the Senator's amendment so clearly prescribed would be done; and second, that we will give all of our children the assurance they are going to be treated fairly, that whether they live in the South or in the West, in Detroit or in New York, the same laws that apply to one section of the country are going to apply in every other section.

I think if we do this, we will have taken a major step forward in carrying out the mandate of our times.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, the Senator has made a splendid statement. I subscribe to it wholeheartedly. I think he has made a major contribution to the debate.

Mr. HANSEN. If the Senator will yield a bit further——

Mr. STENNIS. Yes, excuse me. I thought the Senator had finished.

Mr. HANSEN. Well, I had, but I am reminded that I inserted in the RECORD some few weeks ago a rather lengthy column by Vermont Royster published in the Wall Street Journal, which discussed, as I recall, in considerable detail the proposition of the immorality of imposing a desegregation order on young children—school children—which we would not think of imposing upon older citizens. His excellent article prompts us to observe: We are insisting that our schoolchildren, our little children, be treated in a manner that we would not tolerate 5 minutes if the Supreme Court of the land, or this Congress or anyone else in authority, were to say that the same policy and the same principle shall be imposed upon adult people.

Mr. Royster went on to point out what, in his judgement, is wrong with efforts to integrate our society by applying these very harsh measures to the schools of this country; and he asked, if segregation is an evil, would it not be just as defensible to say to adults living in a community, "We have to have a certain degree of racial balance here, so you cannot continue to live in this part of the city; the court is going to tell you to pack up lock, stock, and barrel, and move out to another part of the country"?

That is the point he made.

How long would my distinguished colleague from Mississippi expect that the people of this country would tolerate such a proposal, if one were ever to be made, either by the Court, by Congress, or by any other authority? Does my friend think for a moment that any person in the United States, in peacetime, or in wartime either, for that matter, would willingly submit to such an order or edict?

The last time that I can recall that such a thing did occur was back in World War II, when we said to our Japanese-American citizens, "You cannot live here; we are at war with Japan, so we are going to move you out." The legal scholars, as I recall, are still debating the legality of that move; and I have no doubt in my own mind that, had it not been that we were at war and that the overwhelming sentiment in this country supported the Government in its position, a good legal test could have been made of that, and it would have been struck down by the courts of this country as an unwarranted invasion into the rights of citizens.

But nevertheless, to get back to Vermont Royster, he makes the point that adults would not tolerate for one moment a court ordering them to leave one place and move to another place in order to achieve a certain degree of racial balance. The immorality of such an action would be too patent—too obvious—to be tolerated.

But I think that is precisely what we are saying to our schoolchildren, these little youngsters who are subjected to all of the frustrations and the tensions and the anxieties that may cause them many problems. Do we need to add to all of those things, which are part of growing up, yet another dimension, which I think can be most damaging of all, by uprooting them from their own communities, their own homes, their own friends—those youngsters of many races with whom they have grown up—and moving them out, taking them by bus, certainly oftentimes involving a considerable amount of time, to be transported to another part of the city, so as to achieve a racial balance among schoolchildren, that I cannot believe would be tolerated for 5 minutes if we were to try to apply the same techniques to grown, mature people?

Mr. STENNIS. The Senator has spoken well again. I thank him very much for the part he has taken in the debate. He understands human nature and the practical side of life very well.

I wish more of our Members had a chance to see the real results that this busing has caused the children in the tearing of little neighbor children apart and sending them off to different schools, and also the teachers, in invading the province of their contracts and the professional prerogatives of that great profession that is second only to the ministry itself.

Mr. President, I was referring a few minutes ago to the confusion that I thought this amendment, as written now, would bring about, with the double-edged operating blades that it has. I was impressed tremendously by remarks made by Chief Justice Burger, in a case that was decided on March 9, 1970, since the original debate on the amendment in this Chamber, which was in February.

This was in the case of Northcross against Board of Education of Memphis, Tenn., city schools. The Supreme Court sent that case back. Chief Justice Burger made these special remarks:

> Save for one factor, I would grant the writ and set the case for expedited argument at a special sitting, if necessary.

He went on and concurred in the results, but he gave his reasons why he saw other points in it. He said:

> I would do this on the basis that the time has come to clear up what seems to be a confusion, genuine or stimulated, concerning this court's prior mandate.

I say that this is relevant here, directly involved in this debate. We are told so many things to do and what not to do and are given so many orders and so much policing in our area of the country, although it is not involved elsewhere, that here is the Chief Justice of the United States saying that the time has come to clear up confusion. He cites those cases, and then he makes this statement in that brief opinion:

> From what is now before us in this case, it is not clear what issues might be raised or developed on argument. As soon as possible, however, we ought to resolve some of the basic practical problems when they are appropriately presented, including—

It is very unusual for a Chief Justice to make a statement such as this about the Court—> whether as a constitutional matter any particular racial balance must be achieved in the schools, to what extent school districts and zones may or must be altered as a constitutional matter, to what extent transportation may or must be provided to achieve the ends sought by prior holdings of this court.

I am sure that any reasonable person who thought about it would have assumed that these matters have already been decided.

If the Chief Justice of the United States says there is confusion and the Court has not decided matters it should, how can they be understood by a little school board way out yonder in Timbuktu, five men elected to the board, serving without a salary, in a school district in which the assessed valuation perhaps is not over $5 million, where the superintendent perhaps is the executive member of that board, and they have one lawyer? Under a penalty of contempt of court—I know what I am talking about—these ladies and men have to make grave decisions as to what they will do about running their schools and the court proceedings against them, when the matter is so confused that the Chief Justice of the United States says that these matters ought to be decided.

It is downright ridiculous, the requirements that are being imposed on these little school boards, with their limited opportunities, without their knowledge of what the law is, without the resources to have these questions researched. Here is the Chief Justice of the United States saying "confusion," and it is confusion compounded.

Still, when the Senate, by a 56-to-36 vote says we ought to have at least a uniform policy, the same old bugaboo is raised for more confusion. They say, "No, we have to have two policies—one for the North and one for the South." I just cannot understand it. I do not know how far we are going.

I do not want to detain the Senate, but I have four cases which I will present before this debate is over.

These are four cases that have been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and Chief Justice Burger is Chief Justice of the United States. These cases have come to the Supreme Court from areas outside the South, and for some reason they have rejected them, they have not passed on them. I do not know why. I do not impute any bad motives to them. But here is the Chief Justice crying for decisions, and I think de facto segregation is the big thing involved in every one of them.

If they are going to hold that nothing will be done about it, they owe it to the country to say so. If they are going to hold that it is illegal, I respectfully say that they owe it to the country to say so. I think that is one of the things to which Chief Justice Burger was referring. He has said that other matters are involved. I hope it means something that the Court is going to move out of this field, which he called a field of confusion, and bring more common sense along with more law to bear on this insoluable problem. You people from other areas of the country do not know how it is, but you know enough about it to decide that you do not want it, and you are fighting hard to keep in the deep freeze your segregated schools.

Mr. President, the original amendment requiring that there be one national policy on segregation applied equally throughout the Nation, as I have said before, was adopted by this body by a vote of 56 to 36. That amendment made clear and definite the intent of the Senate to set a single national school desegregation policy to be enforced uniformly in every section of the United States.

The issue throughout the debate on that amendment was, simply: Should there be a single national policy; and if so, what should that policy be?

The debate really started on January 27, when the amendment was submitted, and it continued off and on until February 18, when the Senate voted overwhelmingly that there should be one national policy, that that policy should be "that guidelines and criteria established pursuant to title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and section 182 of the Elementary and Secondary Educational Amendments of 1966 dealing with conditions of segregation by race, whether de jure or de facto, in the schools of the local educational agencies of any State shall be applied uniformly in all regions of the United States whatever the origin or cause of such segregation."

The words "de facto" and "de jure" were added there through an amendment—a very timely amendment—by the Senator from Connecticut. Then, another amendment sought to strike out the words appearing therein after the words "United States," and that amendment was rejected. So we had the proposition of making all kinds of segregation one so far as policy was concerned.

The proposition now before the Senate, in the conference report, is as different from what the Senate voted on February 18 as night is different from day. The conference report proposes that there shall not be a single policy but that there shall be two policies. It provides one policy for what is described or classified as de jure segregation and another for what is described as de facto segregation.

The fact that the conference report proposes to establish two policies is bad, but it is worse that one of the policies established—the policy relating to de facto segregation—is established without definition or even a suggestion of a definition. In fact, that issue is completely evaded by a declaration that the de facto policy shall be whatever is provided "pursuant to law." The report, therefore, not only rejects the original proposition established by the Senate amendment, but it would, if adopted, legalize the inequity the Senate sought to correct.

Mr. President, I think there is a good chance that if the court is passing on that section (b), should it be adopted—which I hope it will not, and I believe it will not—then I believe that clause, right there, would knock it out and be the basis for holding that it had no meaning.

In addition, the failure to define the remedy for de facto segregation compounds the confusion that has made equal application of the law difficult, if not impossible.

The duplicitous policy of having one integration standard in the North and another in the South has confounded every public official from the school superintendents to the President of the United States.

I read from one of Secretary Finch's recent statements a few minutes ago, that someone had brought in a statement from the President today—I have not had a chance to read it yet, but I know that he found a lot of the facts there that were not to his liking and a lot of conflicting, duplicitous policies that he has had to deal with. This merely adds to it. This original amendment was just a beginning, a light brightly lit, that would help to lead the way.

School officials in the South are at a complete loss to understand the content of the national policy or the method of its application.

The President said on March 21, 1970, as reported by the Washington Evening Star of that date:

> The law at all levels is confused.

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Mr. Robert Finch, said on March 2, as reported by the Washington Post:

> The Nixon administration is confused by what the courts have said. There are a number of areas where the court has not spoken at all.

He went on to say:

> They (meaning the courts) still cling to the distinction between de jure and de facto segregation which I happen to believe, as a lawyer, is not longer valid. I think segregation, or racial isolation, everywhere it appears to be one and the same. We have a very confused set of decisions. . . .

With all deference, this amendment brings forward all the confusion, all of the uncertainty, and all of the duplicity that we have been finding here. The people outside the South cannot feel it or realize it, that we have been having in connection with this problem.

Chief Justice Burger said in the opinion in Northcross et al. against Board of Education of the Memphis, Tenn., city schools et al. handed down March 19, 1970:

> . . . the time has come to clear up what seems to be a confusion, genuine or simulated, concerning this Court's prior mandates.

That is a highly extraordinary statement to come from the Chief Justice, and a proper one, though.

The confusion referred to by these high officials and which exists throughout the public school system is mainly caused by the failure of Congress to set forth a clear and definite national policy.

The way it has been applied is almost the same as if one had written another section to it and gave the order, "You shall apply this only in the South." I do not have to say anything more about the court's decisions. I just let the Chief Justice's remarks speak for themselves.

In the original amendment adopted by the Senate on February 18, the Senate spoke clearly, firmly, and plainly.

The Senate said there should be one policy, uniformly enforced throughout the Nation and that policy should be that guidelines and criteria established pursuant to title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and section 182 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1966 dealing with conditions of segregation by race whether de jure or de facto should be the same in the schools of the local educational agencies of any State without regard to the origin or cause of such segregation.

That language is clear. The intent of that language is clear. Simply stated, it says it is national policy to deal with segregation wherever and whenever it occurs under the same rules.

We were talking about the granting of money, something specially within the jurisdiction of Congress. Still this report comes back from the conference to say, "Well, the Supreme Court has not passed on de facto segregation." The court does not have to pass on de facto segregation—whatever it is—prior to Congress' adopting whatever rules it wants to adopt with reference to the granting of Federal aid to education. That is all involved in the amendment. It relates solely to the Federal grants on aid to education.

If the proposal in the conference report is adopted it will by law establish two policies: One for de jure segregation, however that may be defined and applied; and another for de facto segregation, "as may be provided pursuant to law."

If adopted, the conference report will give official status to the present practice of enforcing desegregation in one part of the country, while ignoring and overlooking it in another part of the Nation.

Now this is not hard law. It is a statement of policy, but, nevertheless, it has official status. If it should become law, our friends here who have changed the amendment, some Senators here who are trying to keep the "great hand" from reaching their segregated schools, will cite this report and every word in it to back up their position, if this should pass.

The record of the Senate is heavy with facts collected and verified by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare that show the extent of segregation in the North. The location of the figures by States in the RECORD is listed on page 1266 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 27, 1970. The figures show indisputably that segregation in the North in many places is worse than in many places of the South.

Facts available since those figures were compiled show the schools of the southern and border States are far more integrated today than those in the northern and western States.

For example, in Mississippi 50.4 percent of the 223,784 Negro students attend either majority white schools in HEW monitored "voluntary plan" districts or school districts which have been integrated under court order, based upon HEW-approved plans. These figures do not include the 30 school districts where Federal funds have been terminated and for which HEW figures are not compiled.

This compares with an average of 27.6 percent for the 32 Northern and Western States. The percentage of Illinois is 13.6 percent—22.5 percent in California, 32.3 percent in New York, 20.6 percent in Michigan, 27.3 percent in Nebraska, 27.7 percent in Ohio, 27.5 percent in Pennsylvania, and 30 percent in Indiana.

During the debate on this amendment the segregated conditions of the North were stated and emphasized repeatedly. The conditions were condemned by Senators representing the North as well as by Senators representing the South. Segregated conditions in the North were described as "deplorable."

The failure to move against segregated conditions in the North while moving vigorously in the South was described as "monumental hypocrisy."

After full debate the Senate moved with courage, logic, and a deep sense of fairness to establish a doctrine of equity laying down the rule that every citizen in this country should be treated the same under like circumstances.

Mr. President, let us not be mistaken about it. If the Senate adopts the conference report, it will have repudiated the action it took on February 18 in establishing equal treatment for all people under the law.

There is no other way, as I have said, to read those two sections together, from a legal standpoint, at least, without finding one contradicting the other.

There was no way for paragraph (b) to have life and at the same time for paragraph (a) to have life.

This applies primarily to HEW and would give HEW a choice, to follow (a) or follow (b). However, we know what they will follow. They will follow (b). They will follow (b) because they have followed it all along and they would run into a stone wall if they tried to apply (a) with (b) in existence—outside of the South.

It will not only condone but will place the stamp of official approval upon the inequities that were so vigorously condemned on the Senate floor less than 60 days ago. The question is simple. Will the Senate reverse itself?

That is the question and that is the only question. It can be painted and varnished, and explained and discussed, with ambiguous language but the issue is clear. Will the Senate stand firm in its opposition to and condemnation of "monumental hypocrisy"?

Mr. President, I do not want to take too much of the time of the Senate. This is a matter of the gravest concern. It has had the utmost attention of the Senate. When we were here in February with this amendment, the burden was on those who proposed the amendment to make out a case, to bring forth the facts and the logic and conditions and figures that would make out a case.

I had very little part in that, but when that debate was over, the vote was 56 to 36 in favor of the amendment.

I would just make a calculation here and point out that those who voted in favor represent approximately 60 percent of those present and voting.

It is a large percentage of the membership in favor of the amendment on a vote on a subject matter of that kind. It was the first one that had been decided from that viewpoint since the Supreme Court decision of 1954.

I cite that to show that the Senators felt conditions called for a change.

The amendment swept through this Chamber like a spring breeze. Now the presumption is still in favor of that amendment because it passed the Senate by such an overwhelming vote. The burden is on those who propose new remedies. And I respectfully submit they have not carried the burden.

They kept the Senate amendment in here. I do not know why unless it is part of the two rule system or for sentimental reasons. However, if we follow (b) and put it in there, we would cancel out a great part of what the Senate did a little over 30 days ago.

Mr. President, I have the cases I referred to as well as other remarks. However, I will speak later.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, first, I compliment the Senator upon continuing his good fight, his good battle which he won so effectively in the Senate by a vote of 56 to 36 just a short while ago.

I cannot understand why the conferees from the Senate permitted this amendment to stay in the bill at all, while at the same time they were permitting it to be so mutilated as to make it read and mean something entirely different from what the Senator's original amendment meant.

I call attention to several facts. One is that seven of the conferees of the House did not sign this conference report.

They were Mrs. GREEN of Oregon, Mr. ASHBROOK, Mr. BELL of California, Mr. ERLENBORN, Mr. SCHERLE, Mr. DELLENBACK, and Mr. ESCH.

That indicates anything but full concurrence on the part of the conferees of the two Houses on this particular matter.

Mr. President, I want to go much further than that. First, I want to say that I completely agree with the distinguished Senator from Mississippi that the insertion of subsection (b) in this amendment changes it entirely from its original form when it did prescribe uniformity in the treatment of desegregation, regardless of how it may have arisen and regardless of whether it was de jure or de facto. It changes it entirely by prescribing nonuniformity, two rules of uniformity in the treatment of segregasalutary end which the Senate had desired to accomplish in the Senate by the adoption of the amendment, this mutilated amendment brings about exactly the opposite result because it does prescribe complete nonuniformity in subsection (b), which I will now read for the RECORD:

> Such uniformity refers to one policy applied uniformly to de jure segregation wherever found and such other policy as may be provided pursuant to law applied uniformly to de facto segregation wherever found.

That makes it very clear that the uniformity prescribed is to be two kinds of uniformity affecting the two different fields. It seems to me that instead of bringing order out of confusion that has existed, this changed amendment brings even greater disunity and even greater confusion.

I wish to speak briefly upon one aspect of the matter that I do not believe the distinguished Senator from Mississippi mentioned, and I wish to get his views. He stated very truthfully that the meaning of de facto segregation was not described by this conference amendment. But assuming de facto segregation means segregation brought about by residential patterns—and that apparently is what the President thinks judging by his message received today, and that is what frequently has been described on this floor as de facto segregation—I am calling attention to the fact that it must apply in the South as well as in the North.

We have segregation that does result from residential patterns in such cities as Louisville, Memphis, Atlanta, Richmond, New Orleans, Jacksonville, Miami, Tampa, and many other cities which the Senator well knows, including the city of Houston, with more than 1 million people in that city.

It seems to me, therefore, that this modified amendment prescribing two kinds of uniformity, instead of uniformity which by its very meaning requires a single interpretation, now prescribes two different kinds of uniformity and will probably bring about in the Southland two different types of enforcement of law.

It seems to me if anything could be more unfair, as well as more calculated to make for greater confusion than even now exists, it would be to have the rural counties, and the counties where the county seats are small towns, affected by one meaning of the uniformity and to have the cities where large groups of Negro people and white people live in separate areas of those cities, affected by a different type of law and a different interpretation of the law applied to them.

I cannot help but think in terms of my own State. It seems to me it would be highly unfortunate and unfair to have the smaller counties in my State and the rural counties in my State, some of which are rather large in terms of population—one of which is the county I live in, which has about a quarter of a million people and is still a rural county—have to obey and have enforced one interpretation of these laws against segregation, and to have the larger counties where there are large cities—and I am thinking now particularly of Jacksonville and Miami—free from the law as interpreted in the rural counties and, instead, subjected to another interpretation of the law.

The city of Jacksonville has something like 110,000 Negro citizens. They live almost entirely in one area of that city on the north side of the St. Johns River. The area south of the St. Johns River is almost entirely inhabited by white residents. It seems to me it would be very unfortunate and very unfair to have the areas in that city of Jacksonville which are inhabited entirely by Negroes or entirely by white people held to be de facto segregated—and there are a great many schools in each of those areas, colored schools in one area and white schools in another area—and yet to have the surrounding counties, much less able to deal with this particular problem than the city of Jacksonville, subjected to another interpretation of the law. I cannot think of anything more unfair or unfortunate than to have such a result.

My question to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi is this. If de facto segregation is held to be that segregation resulting from residential patterns, as I think most of us believe it to be, will it not, by that very fact, bring about a result under which two types of law enforcement, two types of interpretation of the laws against segregation in the schools, will be enforced, even in the Southern States where there are large cities having large residential groups of colored people or white people living together; and, therefore, neighborhood schools in those areas that are segregated either white or colored? Will it not bring about two types of enforcement and will it not bring about two types of laws, even in the Southland?

Mr. STENNIS. Certainly, something like that is in prospect. No one can tell what form it will take now. This is not confined just to the South. We have migrations in various cities. This migrating includes colored people, too. We have the busing problem in some of the western cities that we know about where school boards have been defeated when they came up for reelection. It compounds and confuses the problem.

There must be one general overall policy and that must be and I think it should be declared by Congress and in very emphatic terms. We did make a start in that amendment. Something will have to be sustained by the court. We cannot go on as we have been.

I think the Senator from Florida has made that very clear and I commend him for it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. STENNIS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, it seems to me the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the case affecting Charlotte, N.C., indicates rather clearly, although the decision is not yet written to so declare, that this very point is bothering members of our Supreme Court. Otherwise, I cannot see why they would have refused to apply to Mecklenburg County and the city of Charlotte the same rules they have applied in other decisions to more rural counties.

I think the RECORD should show that this very unfortunately worded amendment, as it comes back from conference, is fraught with grave problems and grave possibilities, not solely with respect to the North, East, and West, but also with respect to the South, where I think instead of having something that could be called unitary, we are going to have a dual type interpretation and enforcement which will make vastly worse the confusion already existing.

I want to congratulate the Senator for protesting vigorously upon this rewriting of the amendment, which is offering exactly the opposite objective from that which he intended and that which was approved by a large vote of the Senate.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator for his comments. I want to make one correction in what he said. This is not my amendment. This is our amendment. Fifty-six Senators voted to have it adopted. I hope even more Senators this time will vote to sustain it.

Mr. President, unless a Senator wants the floor, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Hackney, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2601) to reorganize the courts of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; that the House insisted upon its amendments, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. ABERNETHY, Mr. DOWDY, Mr. CABELL, Mr. NELSEN, Mr. HARSHA, Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia, and Mr. HOGAN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 15728) to authorize the extension of certain naval vessel loans now in existence and new loans, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H.R. 11959), to amend chapters 31, 34, and 35 of title 38, United States Code, in order to increase the rates of vocational rehabilitation, education assistance, and special training allowance paid to eligible veterans and persons under such chapters; to amend chapters 34, 35, and 36 of such title to make certain improvements in the educational programs for eligible veterans and dependents; and for other purposes; and it was signed by the Acting President pro tempore (Mr. METCALF).

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 15728) to authorize the extension of certain naval vessel loans now in existence and new loans, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

EXTENSION OF PROGRAMS OF ASSISTANCE FOR ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 514) to extend programs of assistance for elementary and secondary education, and for other purposes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I have heard with very great interest the concerns expressed by the Senator from Mississippi about what we did in the conference. As one of the conferees who undertook to try to negotiate this matter with the House of Representatives on the Stennis amendment—an amendment which I opposed, but which as a conferee I was in conscience and in duty bound to defend to the utmost, and which in all conscience I feel I did—I should like, first, to make this point, which I think is very important:

Lest the Senate have some contrary impression, four of the Senate conferees had voted for Senator STENNIS' amendment notwithstanding the debate and the controversy which was engendered, and all four of them signed the conference report: Senators YARBOROUGH, RANDOLPH, PROUTY, and MURPHY. A member of the House conferees from the South, Representative RUTH, of North Carolina, who ardently espoused the Stennis amendment in conference, also signed the conference report.

Mr. President, I should like to address myself first, because I, too, think it was of great significance, to an astute and lawyer-like question asked by the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS), and that is: "What did you preserve of my amendment in this compromise?"

Mr. President, I think we preserved a great deal. Indeed, I think we preserved everything. In the first place, the concern expressed in the Stennis amendment was that there should be uniformity of enforcement; and that, because it was a statement of policy and not a law, meant not only that the laws would be uniformly applied—which we all understand, and which did not need a policy declaration—but that manpower used, effort exerted, and emphasis in the executive department, and all such things would be borne in mind in laying on evenly, as it were, North and South alike, with respect to the desegregation of public school systems.

That was certainly preserved. There is no question whatever about this matter of uniformity; and because it is a policy statement, uniformity means far more than it would mean if it were simply an operating statute.

Second, Mr. President, we took account of the fact that the state of the law would develop, and that, whereas the Supreme Court had not yet ruled on the issue of de facto segregation—and that is really racial imbalance; as a matter of fact, that was admitted here in the course of the debate on the Stennis amendment, that both terms meant exactly the same thing—but as the Supreme Court had not yet determined that that was unlawful or unconstitutional, we took account of the fact that the law might develop in that way, and we took account of the fact that Chief Justice Burger had, indeed, called on the Supreme Court to take up a case of that kind on a write of certiorari—it having denied such writs heretofore, by the way, as the Senator from Mississippi properly noted.

Mr. President, the much maligned part (b) of this compromise deals with precisely that question. It says, for practical purposes, that the Federal law is expanded to include de facto segregation of any kind, wherever found, North or South; that the policy of uniform administration should apply to de facto segregation to the extent that it becomes unlawful, as the law progresses in the future. So I think that is a very clear accomplishment.

My third point, which I think is most important of all to Senator STENNIS and to his colleagues who so vigorously and successfully fought for the Stennis amendment, is the preservation, in clause (a), of the language which reads "whatever the origin or cause of such segregation."

That, I think, Mr. President, is a very big concession which was obtained by the Senate conferees; because, with all respect, I do not agree with the Senator from Mississippi—and I have the privilege of disagreeing because I, too, am a lawyer—that clauses (a) and (b) are antagonistic, and that the courts will choose (a) or (b).

On the contrary, it is hornbook law that the courts will do their utmost to reconcile (a) and (b), and obey them both if they can. I believe they properly can, and I think the key to the matter is this phrase, "whatever the origin or cause of such segregation."

I do not see anything whatever in item (b) which is inconsistent with that policy declaration.

Mr. President, what does that mean?

That means, in my judgment, that the courts will now cease to look for the origin of the segregation, which, in the South—because that is where it has been, in contemporary times—were dual school systems, and will, as it were, call them as it sees them.

In other words, if you have a situation of segregation which is attributable to the dual system, or its remains or vestiges—obviously a dual school system is unlawful now, so that we cannot say that the courts can act only if the system exists now, because it is unlawful now, and the court will not take action except to redress unlawful things—the courts have held a right to look at the system and say that the segregation arises from the fact that at one time they ran a dual school system, and therefore, to undo that wrong, they will make the following remedy—but the courts can no longer assume it. The courts can no longer assume, as I see the meaning of this policy statement, that because there was at one time a dual school system, then it follows as a matter of law—we lawyers use the words "ipso facto"—that the segregated system is the result of that dual school system.

This, as a matter of fact, will complicate proof for the Department of Justice. It will certainly, in fact, cause a uniformity of application of the policy, which is all we passed on here, to both North and South, and in my judgment the Senate gained a great deal more than the other body, with all respect to them, in respect to this vital matter, which goes to the actual taste, color, and nature of the desegregation of public school systems of the South, and I think equally with regard to the origin or cause of such segregation. When the court extends the doctrine to include de facto segregation, in whatever form it may extend it, it will also apply there, and again the court will not assume that because a housing pattern or a working pattern is involved, that that immediately takes it outside the law, but the court will go through, because it will disregard the origin, and actually try to determine whether or not the segregation actually is, as it were, manmade in one way or another, by gerrymandering school districts or as the result of some other educational policy.

There again, from both the negative point of view—that is, of treating the South differently—and the positive point of view—that is, of approaching the thing more vigorously in the North—I think this policy statement will help accomplish both.

Finally, Mr. President, one thing that is omitted in Senator STENNIS' very eloquent and powerful argument made a little while ago is that this is a policy declaration. It is not a law. If we wish, Mr. President, to deal with de facto segregation by law, Senator STENNIS is absolutely correct: We have the right. The courts may declare it unconstitutional. That is possible. They may declare that education is a matter for the States, that it is beyond our reach in terms of the application of Federal law, and that all we can do is condition the use of money on whatever our ideas are, but we cannot actually direct State school systems as to how they shall organize and operate.

That may very well be. But even in conditioning the use of money, we could deal with de facto segregation, and say, "None of this money can be used, or it can be used only under given conditions, when, as a matter of fact, there is a preponderant pattern of one race or the other in given school systems."

We could set a percentage—which is what we tried to do in New York, by the way—and certain guidelines with which we had a great deal of trouble when Dr. Allen, now the Commissioner of Education, was our education commissioner in New York. So we could set percentages. But if you get into that, then you have to go a lot further than anybody around here seems to be willing to go. For one, you are face to face with the busing issue. There is simply no way to desegregate areas where you have a heavy concentration, for example, of black population in the core cities except by busing, and you have to face that head on. You have to face a definition of what is a segregated school system de facto, and there you come into the issue of percentages.

You have to face the issue which the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK) and the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOPER) have always sought to lead us on—the issue of the quality of education. Is it really a fact that this type of segregation does what the Supreme Court found de jure segregation did in the Brown case—to wit, depreciate the quality of education of the individual, or at least have that capability?

All this is a far more complex question than the Senate has yet been willing to deal wtih. I will say, as an ardent advocate of desegregation, that I would be very pleased if the Senate really came to grips with that as a matter of law and tried to decide what is and what is not good educational policy in terms of Federal money, where you have school systems which have concentrations of population in a given area so that the concentration reflects itself in the school population in individual school districts. I doubt very much that the advocates of the Stennis amendment want to get into that, because it would lead right into all the things to which they have been opposed.

So, really, when Senator STENNIS proposed his amendment, he was proposing a compromise; he was proposing a policy declaration because, obviously, those of that point of view were unwilling to get into a statutory declaration which would have to be infinitely more specific and have to face the stern realities which you have to face if you are going to deal with what is called de facto segregation.

I respectfully submit that in working out a policy declaration, the conferees have preserved far more than they have given up. As I see it, the only thing they have really given up from the original Stennis amendment is the failure of the original Stennis amendment to recognize that it was a policy which was not adjusted to the size of the law, that the policy went beyond the law. What the compromise did was to say that the policy will go the extent of the law, and if the law grows, it will go that far, too, but it will not go beyond the law. I cannot see how, in logic, one can fault that kind of compromise.

Where we are dealing with law, we have no right to make policy, except based upon the law we have a right to apply. We are not a legislature of unlimited powers. We have a very sharp circumscription of our powers according to the Constitution.

So it seems to me that we followed out the logic of the Stennis amendment in the compromise we made, and I feel that we gave up, in terms of what the Senate wanted by a majority vote, a lot less than we got. I feel that the conferees have brought home the essential thrust of the Stennis amendment, insofar as it has any right to go, which is to the extent that we have any power—to wit, the law, the Federal law, whether it is made in court or made here in statute.

I was very much a party to this effort, which went on for days, as the Senate knows, and was very hard fought.

In closing, I would like to testify to my feeling—and I make myself the example A—that I really felt deeply impressed in conscience with the obligation of being a conferee on an amendment which I was against, strongly against, and, it seems to me, made me even more vigilant than I otherwise would have been and less disposed than I otherwise would have been to give up anything on it. I felt the duty to stick by it far more tenaciously than one does normally in a conference, whether on my own amendment or anybody else's, because I understood the background and the quality of the obligation we had undertaken as trustees. I deeply believe, in all conscience, that we brought back to the Senate the essential thrust, as Senator PELL put it, of the Stennis amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator has spoken of following the reasoning of the Stennis amendment to its logical conclusion.

I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from New York if this is not conceivable, following the reasoning of the conference committee to its logical conclusion, the conference committee feeling and reporting that the uniformity required by the Stennis amendment should not be applied to cases of de facto segregation? Is it not conceivable that all presently segregated schools, if there be any, might become desegregated to the extent required by the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court and for those desegregated schools to become resegregated, therefore becoming de facto segregated? Is it not conceivable, then, that there would be no integration in this country, inasmuch as de facto segregation has not been ruled unconstitutional?

Mr. JAVITS. No, I do not believe that, because I believe that the factual situation—that is, the mat on which we lay this template—is not that kind of mat. That is even true, in my judgment, in the areas of the country from which I come. I think that in New York we have really striven very ardently and honestly to give a better opportunity to the children—mainly black children and Puerto Rican children—but we are by no means perfect. But I am sure that there are areas in this country where much better could be done and where the template even laid down there, if we did have some law on de facto segregation, would result in an improvement in terms of desegregation of schools. But I feel that in many areas of the country there has been a considerable mixture of the racial pattern of living; that modern means of transportation no longer make it necessary to have a little red schoolhouse on the corner. Educational centers, educational parks, the system of concentrating grades in a given school—all of this can be used to great advantage to accomplish the purpose of trying to raise the quality of education by the admixture of children who are concentrated in one place.

Therefore, I cannot accept the proposition that the whole wheel would run full turn and that, having desegregated, you would resegregate because of living patterns.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator take the position, then, that the de facto segregation that exists in the State of New York should not be covered by the uniform standards and uniform policies provided by the Stennis amendment?

Mr. JAVITS. I do not take that at all, so long as the segregation in the State of New York is in any way unlawful.

Mr. ALLEN. That begs the question.

Mr. JAVITS. I do not beg the question at all. If the Supreme Court in any way extends its doctrine to New York or any other State, then the Supreme Court, or the local courts, can reach into that State and tell us how to do it better than we are doing it, and I would accept that. As a matter of fact, I would welcome it. But I say that is no excuse for staying the hand of the Supreme Court in areas to which the law does apply and applying it uniformly. That is why I said what I did about the question of presumption. I think that has been the complaint. I think that is one of the big things which remains and which the Stennis amendment has brought back.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, Mr. President (Mr. BELLMON), the Senator, then, would wish to wait for a Supreme Court ruling that the segregation which exists in the city and the State of New York is unlawful before attacking that problem?

Mr. JAVITS. No. The Senator is not saying that at all. On the contrary, I am doing everything humanly possible, and many others are, who are operating in this field. I said on the floor that when my State passed a law which inhibited local school boards from ordering busing to correct racial imbalance, unless it was an elected school board, that I am opposed to it and I would join with the others in efforts to undo it. I am pleased with the efforts made under Mr. James E. Allen, Jr., when he was our commissioner. I am pleased with the efforts of the courts which have issued decrees in the situation and I shall help to support them in every way I can. All I say is, right now, it is beyond the reach of Federal law or the authority of the States, but I welcome it. In the absence of it, I do not see how we can make a policy which goes further than this authority to decide cases bearing on State or Federal law.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator states he would welcome Federal law, and where we have an opportunity by adopting the Stennis amendment unadulterated, to have Federal law on the subject. I am delighted to learn, however, that the distinguished Senator from New York favors State action above Federal action and to that extent the junior Senator from Alabama is in hearty accord with the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. May I comment on both points. The Senator has put his finger on exactly the right spot when he says that I would welcome Federal law. I welcome Federal law, but the Stennis amendment is not Federal law. If the Stennis amendment were Federal law, then this argument could not be made because that would be the law. It may be declared unconstitutional, but it would be the law. But, it is not. It is a policy. What the conferees have recognized is that we cannot extend the policy of government beyond the Government's authority, and the Government's authority is either law or decision. This was, I think, proper. That is why I think I can say proper, because we have carried out the only thing the Stennis amendment could do. It is a statement of policy. It is not Federal law. Therefore, the policy cannot go beyond the law.

The other part, as to my favoring State action, I favor and approve of State action. I favor it in this instance, in this area, there is no Federal law. I believe, personally, that the Supreme Court is going to move into this area. I really believe that. I think that perhaps this amendment, if the Senate approves it and the House approves it, may very well be the incentive to do that. But it will be an incentive. It is not a statute. The Senator from Mississippi was at perfect liberty to bring a body of law to deal with de facto segregation.

We could have fought it one way or the other, but it would have been in law, what was brought in in conference and approved. The point is, we cannot have it both ways. If we have a statement of policy it cannot go beyond law. If we want to make law, we have to face the hard realism of the right of law, which is enforceable and practical as a law which we must face frontally. The problem of busing faces it frontally. We cannot avoid that, if we want to write a law on the subject.

That is why we have a statement of policy here and not a law. I hope very much that we all understand each other on that score, that this is not a law, that it is a statement of policy. The fundamental belief—my belief as a conferee—and others here who are interested—they can correct me if I am wrong—but this policy represents a policy within the confines of policy—to wit, within the confines of law or decision. But we cannot have a policy which itself makes the law. That is all we recognized as conferees in writing the compromise we did.

Mr. ALLEN. Then the distinguished Senator is not in favor of applying the same desegregation policies to de facto segregation as are applied to de jure segregation?

Mr. JAVITS. I cannot accept that conclusion at all, but I have to apply it in the way in which it can be applied, whoever is there to apply it. Right now, in the present state of law, only the States have power in respect to de facto segregation, because they control educational assistance. Thus, I am doing my utmost to motivate my State, as I am sure other Senators are on that score.

As to the interposition of a Federal law, I would have joined issue on that gladly. As to the practical details of working it out, I think any of my dug-in opponents would not charge me with the thought that I would not join in that. But I would oppose it and would say that I am against it because it would strike at my part of the country.

The Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOPER) has an amendment to the bill which went rather directly to my part of the country and I had to accept it. I am sorry about that, but that is it.

The President has put troops into the New York post office, although he did not put them into other post offices, which is too bad. New York has the largest post office in the country. The postal workers there are very angry at what they consider to be great injustice. We have to accept that. I feel the same way about this. If we had a law that had been properly stated, I am sure that we could all join issue on it and work on the details, but I would have no objection to it in principle.

Mr. ALLEN. Then the Senator still wants that policy to apply in the State of New York?

Mr. JAVITS. I want that policy applied in my State. I just say that the Federal Government is in no position to apply it without basis of authority. It has no basis of authority. Therefore, I must do my utmost to get it applied through an agency of the State. I am not pleading for any exemption.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator, then, in that respect, is an ardent states righter?

Mr. JAVITS. I do not think it would warrant that conclusion, but we cannot argue these things with absolute finality.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. DOMINICK. I have listened to this colloquy with great interest because I find myself very much on the side of the Senator from New York, but for totally different reasons.

The Senator from Alabama was talking about whether we were in favor of or against a Federal law dealing with de facto segregation. I am against. I will say flat out that I am against it. I have been a strong advocate of civil rights both prior to and since I first held public office, so far as legislation is concerned. The idea of requiring blacks who have moved into an area because of fair housing laws, or who desire to reside together, or whatever, to be bused out of that area and taken to a school outside the neighborhood is wrong from their point of view, and wrong from any other point of view.

Thus, I feel that for totally different reasons than those cited by the Senator from New York, we came out with the compromise we did. It is a solution which is viable. We are saying to the country as a whole that the South is not going to be the South, that the North is not going to be North, and that the West is not going to be West, but that we are all going to be part of one country. Wherever there is de jure segregation we will apply one policy uniformly around the country. Wherever there is de facto segregation—when it is determined what that is, what it means, whether it has anything to do with the quality of education and whether it should be illegal—once that is determined, we will apply uniform rules there as well. It seems to me that this makes eminently good sense.

If we had maintained the position that the Senate had passed originally in the Stennis amendment, to which I was opposed, we would have done great harm to our efforts to improve the quality of education around the country.

Mr. ALLEN. I appreciate the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK). With all due respect to his statement, I do not believe that the conference committee has come up with anything new, except that they have certainly emasculated the provisions of the Stennis amendment. Actually, what the conference committee has done by adding subsection (b) is to write into the law what is presently being carried out as the policy of HEW—maintaining two sets of rules—one for the South and one for the North.

The Stennis amendment sought to have only one rule to attack the problem. The problem is not whether we will have de jure segregation or de facto segregation. The problem is segregation.

Senators have talked about the evil of segregation and the fact that it should not be permitted. All that the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi has done and all that the Senate did in passing that amendment by an overwhelming vote was to say that we will attack the problem of segregation. It is a problem that we want to solve.

And whatever the Federal policy is with regard to desegregation and whatever the Federal policy is with regard to eliminating segregation, we will follow that with respect to all school systems no matter how that segregation came about.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I think the Senator is oversimplifying the situation.

Desegregation has never meant, so far as I know, that we must be required to forcibly integrate the races even if they do not want to do so.

Mr. ALLEN. That is where the Senator is wrong. That is what the Supreme Court holds at this time. It did not hold that in 1954.

Mr. DOMINICK. Desegregation has been interpreted continuously since 1954 to mean that one must have the right to go into any public facility whether it be in public accommodations or schools or anything else.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish the Senator were correctly stating the law. If he were, this whole debate would crumble and we would all proceed to adjourn for the holidays and hear no more about this matter.

I stand for freedom of choice. But the Supreme Court unfortunately has said in cases coming before it that the freedom of choice plan has not met the requirements of the Supreme Court, it has not done the integration job. Therefore, on the facts presented to the Supreme Court, the freedom of choice plan was stricken down, not because it was freedom of choice, but because it did not get the job done.

Mr. DOMINICK. The Senator as usual has a quick and astute mind. But, if I may say so, most of the problems involving freedom of choice have involved someone else's freedom of choice.

How do the people in that area want their children educated? If they want them educated in other schools, they should have the right to do so.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly that right is being offered. We had countless amendments offered on the floor which would guarantee that right to the people of this country.

Since the distinguished Senator from Colorado has joined in the colloquy, I would like to ask him, since he, too, was a member of the conference committee, the question that I propounded to the distinguished Senator from New York.

That question involves the fact that if de facto segregation is going to be allowed to remain in status quo and not to be interferred with by the terms of the Stennis amendment, as amended by the conference report, until the Supreme Court strikes down de facto segregation, is it not possible that segregated schools in this country complying—as I feel the school systems throughout the South are seeking in good faith to comply—with the mandate of the Supreme Court, if those systems do desegregate to the point that their actions do meet the tests required by the Supreme Court, and after meeting those tests, if these school systems once again become segregated, thereby coming under the unique rule involving de facto segregation and all we had in this country was de facto segregation, still not outlawed by the Supreme Court, is it not conceivable that under the reasoning of the conference committee we could end up in this country with all segregated schools again? I assume that the distinguished Senator from Colorado does not want that.

Mr. DOMINICK. I will try to address myself to the question, as I understand it. It is in fact, as I see it, one of the major issues which will be faced by the new Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity. It is the basic question where assuming we have a strong fair housing law—and to me this is one of the most important fields in civil rights—if as a matter of choice, one elects within his economic ability to move into a certain area because that is where his friends are and where he wants his children to go to school, should his children then be required to attend school in another neighborhood because of someone's argument that it would enable them to get a better education?

I do not know the answer to that question. This is an issue that the select committee should examine.

I think the Senator has proposed an excellent question. We've got to examine it. I hope that after the select committee has hearings and gone into it thoroughly, we can give a more complete answer. However, I am not convinced the mere fact that we forcibly put whites and blacks together in one school necessarily improves the results in that school.

Mr. ALLEN. I certainly agree with the distinguished Senator. I thank the Senator for his very candid and frank answer.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the Senator from California (Mr. MURPHY) who has been such a valuable member of the Education Subcommittee and who has contributed so much to the education programs of the country, has once again authored a creative program in response to the urban and rural education crisis that exists in some of our Nation's schools.

Senator MURPHY has succeeded in writing into law a major new education program. I am referring to the new part C, title I, which basically incorporates the Urban and Rural Education Act, which was introduced by Senator MURPHY last year. The Senator has prepared remarks on this measure and I ask unanimous consent that the remarks and insertion be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement and insertion were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR MURPHY'S URBAN AND RURAL EDUCATION ACT INCLUDED IN ESEA EXTENSION

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I am pleased that the conference committee included as a new part C to title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act the Urban and Rural Education Act, which I introduced on July 15, 1969.

There has been a great deal of discussion across the country regarding the educational crisis that exists in certain urban and rural schools. I believe that the Urban and Rural Education Act is a needed response to the educational distress signals that have been received from these urban and rural areas.

This program calling for special grants for urban and rural schools serving the highest concentration of low-income families provides for a 30-percent add-on or additional resources to title I for identified school districts. The measure incorporated in the final conference report is identical to the measure that passed the Senate in February.

I ask unanimous consent that my floor statement of February 17 discussing the Senate provisions and the modifications made to the original bill, S. 2625, be printed in the RECORD. In addition, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate committee report language discussing this program be printed. Also, I ask unanimous consent that my statement of July 15, 1969, when I introduced S. 2625, the Urban and Rural Education Act be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, I am also deeply indebted to these educators and the educational organizations who worked with me and who strongly supported this measure.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR GEORGE MURPHY, FEBRUARY 17, 1970

Mr. President. First, I want to congratulate Senator Pell for his work in bringing this comprehensive education bill to the Senate. This bill, H.R. 514, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1969, is a complex bill with the report accompanying the measure running over 400 pages in length. The measure is a product of extensive hearings and long executive sessions where many amendments were considered. The result, I believe, is a bill that should be supported by the full Senate. I strongly urge its enactment.

There are many provisions of the bill which I am interested and which I strongly support, such as adult education, the new Gifted and Talented Children program, which I cosponsored, the extension of the Teacher Corps program, the codification and extension of the handicapped programs, the supplemental centers, improvements in the migrant education program, the provisions strengthening state and local education agencies, vocational education, the new authority for evaluation of education efforts, and, of course, the extension of the impacted-aid program. I am particularly pleased with the extension of two programs, which are very dear to my heart, and which I believe are so promising. I am referring to the dropout prevention and bilingual programs. Only recently I wrote the conferees of the Labor-HEW Appropriations bill uring that the $25 million level for the bilingual program be retained and that dropout prevention program funds be increased. I was greatly honored that the President of the United States did see fit to single out my program, the dropout prevention program, by requesting that an additional $10 million be provided for this high priority effort.

Today, Mr. President, I will limit my discussion to what I regard the most significant amendment or new program in the bill. I am referring to the incorporation by the Committee of the Urban and Rural Education Act, S. 2625, which I introduced on July 15, 1969, as a new Part C of Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. I drafted S. 2625 in response to the educational crisis which I believe exists in certain urban and rural school districts across the country. S. 2625 provides a thirty per cent "add on" for the first year and a forty per cent "add on" for second and subsequent years to school districts in both urban and rural America having large numbers or high percentages of children from low-income families. In an accompanying floor statement, I documented how these districts reached the educational and fiscal crisis that they face today. I traced the changes that have taken place across the country in the past two decades, changes I believe we must understand, if we are to adequately deal with the education problems that are confronting our country.

Mr. President, as initially introduced, S. 2625 would have provided additional assistance to school districts where——the number of disadvantaged Title I children was double the national rate of low-income children; or —the number of Title I children was 5000 or more.

These tests were modified in Committee so that to the urban tests of 5000 or more Title I youngsters was added the requirement that that number had to constitute at least five per cent of the total children in the school district.

The rural test—double the national average of Title I youngsters—which would have been thirty-one per cent, was changed so as to now require that the number of Title I children is at least twenty per cent of the total children in the school district. To take care of those cases where local educational agencies miss qualifying under the formula by a relatively small number of children, a total of three per cent for the first year and five per cent for the second and succeeding years of all sums made available under this program is set aside. The initial bill provided for three per cent initially and four per cent for succeeding years. An amendment by Senator Prouty raises the four per cent to five per cent. Under this "relief provision," a local educational agency which narrowly misses qualifying under the above formula may receive a grant under this part if the state educational agency determines in accordance with the standards and criteria established by the Commissioner of Education, that such local educational agency has an urgent need for financial assistance to meet the special educational needs of educationally-deprived children.

I have written various requirements into this Part C program, namely, that funds under this Part will be used solely in preschool programs or elementary schools serving the highest concentration of children from low-income families. The rationale for this requirement was adopted by the Committee as noted in the Committee's discussion of this requirement:

"The Committee believes that Title I funds should be focused on the early years of education. This requirement in Part C was adopted by the Committee on the basis of growing evidence which indicates that the early years of education are of paramount importance in a child's development. Reports based on the experience of classroom teachers and other observers indicate that in general it is extremely difficult to reach the level of achievement at the secondary level if the quality of education at the elementary level has been poor.

"Experience under other federal programs, such as the Job Corps, attest to the difficulty and the great expense of remedial education compared to the expense of education to prevent the need for remedial education. The committee believes that a focus on educational deficiencies at the pre-school and elementary years, the preventive approach, is more likely to be effective and less expensive than expenditures for compensatory education at the secondary level."

In addition, local educational agencies are required to use these additional funds in schools within the district having the greatest need. That is, in those schools having the highest concentration of children from low-income families. One of the criticisms voiced frequently regarding Title I funds is that the district is spreading such funds too thinly to get maximum results. Commenting on the need for concentration of Title I funds, the Fourth Annual Report of the National Advisory Council of the Education of Disadvantaged Children concluded:

"Success with these children (Title I), in sum, requires a concentration of services on a limited number of children."

The Council urged the "adherence to the principles of concentrating funds where the need is the greatest so that a limited number of dollars can have a genuine impact rather than being dissipated in laudable but inconclusive evidence."

Similarly, Mr. President, California's Title I evaluation report for 1967–68 says: "Characteristic of the most successful programs was their concentration of services on a limited number of objectives and a limited number of specifically identified children." The recent California Title I evaluation report for 1968–69 says that the importance of concentrating services comes out louder and clearer from an examination of the individual school districts' reports. I quote: "The most successful programs are those that concentrated services on a limited number of objectives and a limited number of specifically identified children. These projects focused on a few activities, adequately funded. However, there are still widespread cases of ineffective projects which attempted to carry out too many, often unrelated, activities with insufficient funds and scattered the activities over too many children so that the concentration of services was inadequate to improve student achievement level significantly."

I also believe it is important to point out the important requirements spelled out in Section 141(a)(12). This requires school districts desiring to take advantage of the Part C add on to—after the first year—develop a comprehensive plan for meeting the specific educational needs of educationally-deprived children. Included within the comprehensive plan must be provisions spelling out the specific objectives of the program, provisions assuring the effective use of all funds under Title I, and provisions setting forth the criteria and procedures, including objective measures of educational achievements, that will be used to evaluate at least annually the extent to which the objectives of the plan are met.

